And in our daily lives we need to remember that God's greatest prophets and apostles were not ashamed to testify for their Lord before kings and great ones of the earth. The influence of riches and high birth is very powerful, so let us not forget, while evangelising the masses, to do our utmost to influence those who are vulgarly called "the upper ten."

THE SINCERITY OF FAITH.*

By Rev. ANDREW MURRAY.

"I believe; help Thou mine unbelief."—Mark ix. 24.

The Word of God attaches great value to sincerity. It is on this account that the desire of many to be sincere in their faith is justifiable. And for the fear and disquietude which arises from this desire they have also well-founded reasons, in the consistent testimony of the Word of God as well as in experience. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and it is desperately sick; who can know it?" (Jer. xvii. 9).

Frequently, however, there are great mistakes made, alike with respect to what true sincerity is, and the means by which it is obtained and increased. As to the first of these points—what true sincerity is—many think that sincerity consists in a distinct feeling that they have surrendered themselves to the Lord with a strong faith and a fervent love. This is by no means what the Word of God intends by sincerity.

Sincerity is that attitude of the soul in virtue of which we present ourselves to the Lord just as we are, neither better nor worse. A man is insincere who makes himself out other than he really is or feels. It is on this account that the words of the father of the possessed child, quoted above, are such a glorious example of sincerity. He wished to believe, but felt unbelief still too strong with him. What, then, shall be done? He presents himself to the Lord just as he is. He knows that his desire is to trust in Jesus; but he does not know whether there be more unbelief than faith in his heart. What shall he do? Shall he mourn over the unbelief that is still in him? Or shall he just wait on till he feels that he has believed well and fully? No; not one of these things, for they will afford him no help. Just as he is, he goes to Jesus, and with childlike sincerity and simplicity he pours out his heart before Him: "Lord, I believe; but, alas! there is still too much unbelief; come to the help of my distrustfulness."

And this teaches us further what is the only means of being delivered from insincerity. The father felt that there was still in him an element that was waiting to believe, but he goes with it to Jesus. He makes it known to Him in the expectation that, in spite of his distrust, He will have mercy upon him and rescue him from it. How utterly different is this conduct from that of so many seeking souls. How often they continue, year after year, mourning over insincerity, longing for sincerity, and yet they make no progress. Ask them if it be not true that they make no advance, but rather go on in their misery. And they know not, and they hearken not, when it is said to them that this is genuine sincerity—to present ourselves just as we are, with all our unbelief. They ought to know that this is the only way to healing; to give ourselves to the Saviour, with the little beginnings of good,—although they are but a desire to believe,—and that, too, in spite of a great preponderance of double-heartedness, and worldly-mindedness, and unbelief. Yes; to mourn our unbelief, in dealing actually with Jesus—that is true sincerity.

Poor soul, who hast so long remained apart from the Lord from dread of being insincere, and hast hereby grieved both the Lord and thyself, even although thou shouldest feel that of the hundred elements in you there are ninety and nine of unbelief, and only one of feeble desire to believe, go with it to Jesus: that is sincerity. Continue every day also to pour out your heart before the Lord: fight the good fight against remaining insincerity and distrust at Jesus' feet. That is the only place where you can overcome. "Lord, I believe; I will believe as well as I can; I do so. I believe at last that Thou art Jesus, the Helper of the wretched; come to the help of my distrustfulness." As you thus pray and strive every day, you will soon obtain the victory and the blessing. As for him who does not thus pray, he may be sure at least of this, that, so long as he remains apart from Jesus, no more sincerity shall come. No; sincerity is the outpouring of the heart before the Lord, and is nowhere obtained but in intercourse with Him and through His friendly grace.

WORK OF GRACE IN GLASGOW.

Trinity Free Church is now recognised as one of the great centres in Glasgow for furthering home mission enterprise. Her existence is traceable altogether to aggressive effort, and her prosperity is due to the way in which she has prosecuted purely territorial work. The work to which we are about to refer is not, therefore, new to the congregation. A continuous ingathering from the lapsed has marked the history of this people, but there have been special seasons of blessing, when souls came flocking to Christ as doves to their windows.

Mrs. Baeyertz commenced a special Mission on Sabbath, the 2nd September, and closed it on Monday, 17th. The interest from the commencement was very deep and widespread, and this is the more remarkable from the fact that Mrs. Baeyertz is a practical stranger in Glasgow. The meetings on the opening day of the Mission taxed the large church to its utmost capacity. During the week a Bible-reading was arranged each day at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. At these meetings the numbers increased till they reached 800. The crowds of people who came out each evening were such as to literally pack the edifice, which holds about 1500. Many, indeed, had to be turned away, so great was the interest manifested. The closing day of the Mission was the most remarkable of all the course. Meetings were held at 12 noon, 3 afternoon, and at 8 evening. The two meetings in the earlier part of the day were well attended; the evening one, however, was the most wonderful ever witnessed in this church. Admission to the evening meeting was by ticket only, and though another church on the opposite side of the street—nearly as large as Trinity—had been secured, both places were again packed about an hour before the time for commencing, and hundreds left outside unable to gain admission.

Some aspects of this special Mission are worthy of note. Mrs. Baeyertz is a highly-cultured lady of exceptional gifts in expounding Scripture, and draws largely, as might be expected, from the Old Testament. Her messages are pregnant with Gospel truth, and altogether void of sensationalism.

A very encouraging feature of the work has been the voluntary way in which many persons left the large gatherings to meet in an adjoining hall to inquire the way of salvation and life. As many as fifty anxious persons in one night have met along with Christians in order to be helped. Hundreds, we believe, have been savingly blessed during the Mission.

The closing meeting of the Mission was undoubtedly the most impressive of all. The meeting was principally for Christians, and nearly 3000 persons must have been present in the two churches.

A "holiness" meeting was held at nine o'clock, which lasted about an hour. About a thousand persons waited for the ostensible purpose of surrendering all to the Lord Jesus. It was a time of wonderful power and of spiritual nearness to the Master Himself.

All the workers in the congregation are in good heart, and are praying God that soon a man may be sent as pastor over the flock. The church was rendered vacant a few months ago by the translation of Rev. J. J. Mackay to Hull.

SAILORS IN MONTE VIDEO.

Mr. Thomas McCarthy, the missionary, has come home on a short visit, and desires to return with sufficient means to enable him to procure a good strong mission boat for work among seamen afloat. A great work is to be done in this far-away port, where so much shipping business is transacted, and where ships of all nationalities gather. But as yet there is no mission-boat to carry the glad tidings of peace on board.

The home ashore is barely kept going, notwithstanding the labours of Mr. McCarthy, who works at his own trade, trying hard to make ends meet. It is the first port where shipwrecked crews from all parts of the southern seas land, awaiting transmission to England. The home is greatly used by the men of H.M. ships of war.

About £50 are needed for the boat, of which £10 have been contributed in loving memory of Lieut. Fieldes, H.M.S. Bramble, who died out there. Books for library, copies of Christian periodicals, tracts, wall texts, etc., will be gladly received by Mr. E. W. Matthews, Sailors' Institute, Mercers-street, Shadwell, E.

"CHURCHES TO THE FRONT."

Dear Sir and Brother,—In The Christian of March 29, 1894, was an editorial entitled "Missionary Methods," and in the following issue of April 5 was another, called "The Messengers of the Churches." These have interested me because of the clear statement given to some important principles. I have taken the liberty to send them to one of the home papers in America.

A few years ago Dr. T. P. Crawford, of the Southern American Baptists, an aged missionary in North China, wrote and published a small tract, entitled "Churches to the Front." In the spring of 1892 Rev. D. H. Herring, for six years a missionary of the Southern Baptists in Shanghai, returned to America with the object of enlisting Churches more directly in mission work, and to establish a close relation between the missionary on the field and some local church at home. Mr. Herring found some opposition to his plans, but succeeded in enlisting many churches in this direct work. I send you a copy of the prospectus which he circulated freely among the churches. This will give you a good explanation of the principles underlying the movement. Last fall he returned to China with the writer and two other new men for China.

We are all being supported here by local churches. I find thus far, as you stated, that the sympathy and constant interest manifested by my churches help me in the work here, and I believe from their expressions that they are more interested than ever—that a real living spiritual interest in the salvation of the world has taken deep hold upon them, and also has taken a practical shape. In every case, out of near a hundred, the contributions have been increased from three to five times, and even more, over what they have ever been in those same churches.

Besides the three new missionaries who came with Mr. Herring last fall, there are eight on the field who have joined the movement, who were before connected with the Foreign Mission Board of the Interior Baptist Conference. The movement was first termed the Baptist Interior Mission, but has come to be called the "Gospel Mission." I send you a copy of an appeal recently issued by the missionaries here. We have already heard of several who expect to join us next fall, and are praying for one hundred. We are hopeful that God will give them to us.

Meantime, two men in the western part of the United States have decided to begin a Mission in the Argentine Republic of South America on these same lines. As you will see, the prominence of the local church, with its direct participation in mission work, small salaries, and a simple preaching of the Gospel by the missionaries on the field, making no use of "subsidy" as a possible inducement to unite with the Church, are the main features of this Mission. We feel that our work is hopeful. All the twelve missionaries of the Gospel Mission are now in Shantung Province, North China, and are trying to move westward into the interior as fast as possible. I only send you these as information about our work, which seemed to me to be so much akin to the principles which were set forth in the editorials.—I am, yours very truly.

A HOME FOR MISSIONARIES.

Sympathising with the difficulties felt by missionaries with families, while at home on furlough, in obtaining a suitable house, a lady opened last year a house in Maida Vale, in which such missionaries may, on arriving, find a welcome, and all ready for them; a nursery and garden for the children, where the little ones can be left in happiness and safety while the parents rest, or attend to business.

This lady's health having given way, she has been ordered to winter in the South of France, and thus has had to place the home on a business footing. Two ladies will be in charge, one as lady superintendent; the other, who will assist her, has had hospital training, which will be valuable in cases of sickness as so many arrive in shattered health. The house is for missionaries of any Protestant society, and for their use at other times than on arriving, if desired, but not to reside in for any length of time, as that would prevent it being of use to fresh arrivals. Single lady missionaries are also welcome. Terms will be sent to missionaries desiring particulars, on application to the lady superintendent, 16, Upper Hamilton-terrace, N.W.

EDINBURGH CASTLE, LIMEHOUSE.

During the past two months Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver, sons of the veteran evangelist, Richard Weaver, have conducted a mission at Dr. Barnardo's "People's Church," the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse. In many respects it has been a most memorable one. From the commencement it was evident that the "good hand of the Lord" was with the young evangelists. Doubtless the regard for their aged father was an element in their favour, but it was soon manifest that the people flocked to hear the young men for their own sakes. As the weeks passed by, the congregations, always large, so grew that the spacious gallery, which has not been used, except on special occasions, for years, was opened; the last two Sundays saw every seat in the immense building occupied, and many standing. Indeed, on Sunday last it was impossible to seat all who came, and an overflow meeting was held in the smaller hall, where about 250 persons were addressed by Mr. Buckle (of Nottingham), Mr. F. Weaver, and the secretary of the mission.

It is impossible to tabulate the results of such a mission, but it may be stated that nearly 300 names were taken in the inquiry-rooms, not including those of the many boys and girls in the Homes who professed to trust Christ. Many backsliders have been restored, and the church as a whole has been quickened and strengthened.

The mission of these two young brethren was brought to a fitting termination by a praise and thanksgiving meeting held on Monday evening. The large hall at the "Castle" was filled with an eager congregation, and there was manifest a hearty spirit of gratitude to God for the prosperity and blessing which has been vouchsafed during the past weeks.

Dr. Barnardo expressed his great pleasure at the many manifest evidences of the good which has been wrought among all classes of people who have been attending the services. A few days ago, for instance, he came across a group of boys from one of his Homes eagerly talking together, and on going up to them was greeted by several with exclamations of joy at having found Christ at the meetings. A good many young men and young women, too, had accepted the Gospel message, and one family of seven, aged from sixteen to thirty, had all received the Word of God, and were now rejoicing in salvation.

Going on to ask how it was that the labours of these young brethren had borne such good results, Dr. Barnardo said that first of all he was impressed with the fact that they were intensely in earnest, and they spoke and sung of what they had themselves experienced and believed to the bottom of their hearts. Then also he felt they were men of one idea, that idea being to glorify God by persuading the people to follow Him. Another thing which had been very evident was that they were men of prayer—that was the inner secret of their power over the people. He felt more and more how necessary it was for Christian workers to spend much time alone with God in private. They were to be workers, not only for God, but had to work together with Him.

After a solo by Mr. Frank Weaver, a short address was given to the young converts by Mr. Geo. Morgan, who urged that if they were going to be "steadfast and unmovable" it must be by "always abounding in the work of the Lord." Richard Weaver, who spoke with much of his old-time force and vigour, followed with some helpful words of exhortation on the text "Watch and pray." Speaking specially to new converts, he told them that they would have tremendous forces to contend against—the world, the flesh, and the devil—and he counselled them earnestly to keep close to Christ and to strive hard against all temptation.

At the close Mr. Bewley Weaver, in speaking a few farewell words, pleaded with those who had been halting between two opinions, to come to a decision to follow Christ; and in response to his invitation some thirty—mostly young people—rose in their seats to indicate their desire for prayer. An after-meeting was held, when many more were personally spoken to, and the workers were cheered by a number resolving to enter upon the new life of faith in Christ and service to God.

TO SEND CHILDREN TO JAIL is to destroy their self-respect, in itself an evil of the gravest kind. It tends to ruin their chances in the labour market for life.—Lord Norton.

Y.W.C.A. IN IRELAND.

The eleventh annual conference of the Irish Y.W.C.A. opened on Thursday evening, September 27, with a conversazione at the Central Institute, 76, Harcourt-street, Dublin. About eighty secretaries and workers assembled. Mrs. S. H. Smith, president, welcomed all present. Hon. G. Kinnaird spoke on the three special branches of women's work in India—(1) Educational. (2) Evangelistic. (3) Medical. She showed that the things God purposes for us, joy and peace (John xv. 11; xvi. 1-33), are to be shared and given forth to others.

Mrs. E. W. Moore pointed out the attitude in which we should stand to work for God, with hearts opened as Lydia's, lips opened, eyes opened, face opened, so as to shine for Christ. Then doors of usefulness will be opened, either at home or in foreign lands.

The devotional meeting on Friday morning was held in the Friends' Meeting House, Eustace-street. Mrs. Smith presided, and gave the motto words, "Onward, upward, looking like children to a Father; heavenward to the Home prepared by Him for true faithful servants."

Miss St. George Nugent addressed the meeting on Christ as Intercessor, hearing and praying for us always; knowing us each by name; bearing our needs on his heart, unchangeable in love.

At the noon meeting Mrs. E. W. Moore spoke on "Conditions of Growth of Y.W.C.A." Text, Is. xlviii. 14. Spirituality, necessity to put Christ first; sympathy with both souls and bodies; practical business habits, organisation, method; adaptability, suiting lines of work to locality; consideration, not to clash with labour of others; missionary spirit, prayer, loving aid for the needy.

Mrs. J. R. Fowler gave information on the department for technical education, in connection with the Y.W.C.A., which Mrs. Howlett hopes shortly to set on foot. Many women and girls are now unemployed because unemployable.

Hon. G. Kinnaird spoke on London methods of work—classes in institutes, educational organisation; and the definite claim of God for special service of Prayer Union members. She also brought forward the aims and uses of the home study department.

Miss Hayes reported on the Rutland-square Institute and Home, needing £50 to meet necessary expenses. A sale of work is contemplated for this object in December. Miss Wilson gave testimony to the blessing of God on the Central Institute, 76, Harcourt-street. Miss Gage-Brown told of the Deaconess Training Home, 31, Mount Pleasant-square, which has already sent several ladies to the mission field, and bids farewell to three more this autumn. Miss Connor goes with Bishop Stuart to Persia, Miss Tredennick to China, Miss Chambers to India. Miss Reynolds spoke of holiday home work at Portrush, Kilkee, Greystones, etc. Mrs. Barcroft, co. Tyrone, represented district referees and their various spheres of labour among factory girls, country girls, and scattered rural districts. Miss Laura Barter related some beautiful instances of blessing received through junior branches, and noticed the importance of winning children for Christ.

At the afternoon meeting, Hon. G. Kinnaird pointed out the various needs of Y.W.C.A. work in India, and pleaded for more consecrated ladies to devote themselves to Europeans, Eurasians, Christian Indians, children, and young people, specially at Bombay, Lahore, Lucknow, and Benares.

Miss Barter spoke on "The Power of an Endless Life" needed to touch dead souls and awaken dead places. God wills his servants to scatter, from Babel to Jerusalem, bearing his Gospel to those without; not to take in only, as an Irish bog, but to give forth, as tilled fields; claiming Christ's power as sufficient for every need.

Hon. Mrs. Waller gave her experience of the wants of India, gained by twelve years' residence in that empire. Mrs. Moore addressed the meeting on the needs of workers—training, upholding, willingness to take trouble for others, and have sympathy with them. God wants "cunning workmen," not careless triflers. Every builder of the Temple had his own appointed task. God's work is perfect, and He wants us to be satisfied with nothing less than the best we can give Him. Look to Jesus for daily help.

At 8 p.m. a helpful address to workers was given by Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, on Luke xv., the lost piece of silver.

A missionary meeting was held on Saturday. An account of the results of the missionary meeting last year was given, and letters from China, pleading for more workers, read. Miss Wilson told of the mission work done by the members of Harcourt-street branch; Miss Townsend, from Benares, gave a most touching address on India's needs, and striking accounts of conversions effected, and openings found everywhere; Miss Hessie Newcomb pleaded for China, where thousands of heathen may be counted for one Christian, and hearts are sick with hope deferred; Miss Hamilton, from Drogheda, now for eight years a worker in Japan, told of work among women there; Miss Porter, from Cork, just returned from the same country, spoke of young men led from infidelity to serve the living God, and referred to the great difficulty of meeting the agnostic spirit abroad among educated Japanese; Miss Brandon, nineteen years in Massulipitam, gave a most interesting account of work there; Miss Chambers, soon starting for India, spoke briefly, and Miss Laura Barter pleaded for South America, the "neglected continent."

Y.P.S.C.E. CONVENTION.

On Saturday last, in connection with the Manchester and District Union of the C.E. Society, a Convention was held in the Oldham-road Independent Chapel, Manchester. The proceedings began at 3.30. After some remarks by the president, Rev. J. E. Roberts, Union Chapel, Manchester, Mr. W. H. Clement Pugsley, of Bolton, read a paper on "Denominational Loyalty." He pointed out that the "Endeavour" did not strive to break down denominational barriers, but rather so to train the young that they would regard members of other denominations more sympathetically. Rev. D. W. Roberts, of Warrington, gave a paper on "Faithfulness in Little Things." He said he counted nothing little; everything was necessary, and therefore important and great. In Christian Endeavour and all Christian life, the things which seemed smallest were as necessary as the great ones. We live but one day at a time, we perform but one act at a time, we take one step only at a time. Let each be done faithfully, and counted great for Christ's sake.

Rev. J. K. Kirby, of Glossop, read a paper on "Systematic Giving to God." He urged all to lay by a portion—what portion must be settled between God and the individual—for direct Christian work. The workpeople in some of our Lancashire towns could raise a great holiday fund—in one case as much as £80,000—by contributing weekly for that purpose. If Christians would follow this example, and put by regularly some amount for the extension of Christ's kingdom, there would always be sufficient means forthcoming.

The evening meeting began at six o'clock, when Mr. S. Massey, of Openshaw, presided. Reports were rendered by the secretaries of the various local associations, after which Mr. Massey gave an address, in the course of which he said he had recently parted from one starting on his journey to a distant land, there to labour for the sake of those who were living in darkness. There were many such workers, and their need for support was great. Endeavourers should be strong in sympathy and prayer, selecting some district or worker, and thus having fellowship directly with those in the mission field.

Rev. H. W. Turner, of Bolton, gave an address on "Our Field of Work." It was as wide as Christian life. There were two elements in Christian growth—(1) Regular, systematic, prayerful study of the Bible; (2) Prayer. In the rush of life to-day there was a danger of prayer being omitted. But there was a negative side also. There must be resistance of those evils which tend to pull down Christian character.

Then followed an address by Rev. George Hack on "Our Sources of Power." Mr. Hack included in his list "holiness of life," "prayer," and "being endued with the Holy Ghost." He dealt mainly with the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and gave examples from Scripture.

IF TEACHERS PERSIST in trying to force pupils into some form of character and work, which the parents prefer, instead of helping them to grow into what God made them for, the aim of true education is absolutely defeated.—Froebel.

MR. LANE IN AIRDRIE.

The history of the mission recently held in Airdrie by Mr. Lane may help Christian brethren in the safe use of after-meetings. The mission was arranged for by the Airdrie United Evangelistic Committee, which is composed of ten of the thirteen ministers of the town and two representatives from each of their congregations. We have had visits from the most eminent evangelists in the field, who held after-meetings according to their own methods. We found, however, that, after each mission, the ministers had many names given them as those of professed converts who had been but slightly moved and gave no evidence of a real saving change. This was hurtful to evangelism, as well as to the people who had been dealt with, who, in many cases, become worse, morally and spiritually, after the injudicious treatment. We resolved, therefore, when we asked the services of Mr. Lane, to get him to be very strict in his dealings with the anxious. We were graciously led in requesting him to be our missioner, under the circumstances. He is a strong man in every way, in body, intellect, Bible knowledge, patience, faith, will, and Christian courtesy. He has a splendid grip of Puritan theology, and is clear of fads or petty expositions of the passing hour. Ministers and people listened to his Bible-readings with pleasure.

The after-meetings were made mainly prayer-meetings, at which all who wished prayer on their behalf were asked to signify it, while others stood up, and in their own words declared that they took Christ as their Saviour. Again, inquirers were requested to meet Mr. Lane in side rooms, to which some always went. The result has been that there is now a large number of what appear to be genuine conversions, many of which have been discovered by Christian workers after Mr. Lane had left us. We have pledged Mr. Lane to try to return to us when opportunity favours. Wm. Gillespie.

CITY YOUNG MEN.

Mr. W. R. Lane concluded on Monday evening a most successful nine days' mission at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. Hundreds of City young men have heard the Gospel; very many have yielded to its claims, and have accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour and King. The meetings were confined to young men, and were well attended. About three hundred were present at the closing meeting, when Mr. Lane narrated the story of his conversion while in the Coldstream Guards.

The themes chosen by the evangelist were well varied: the exceeding sinfulness of sin; the dilemma of Pilate—"What shall I do with Jesus?"; the fatal fascination of Herod; the awful realities of the judgment, thus reaching the susceptibilities of many different minds and experiences. The result was manifest, night by night; when an opportunity was given to those desiring to come to a definite conclusion, or to make further inquiry, to adjourn to another room for conversation, very many availed themselves of the opportunity.

One of the most gratifying features of the Mission has been that a band of young men desiring to serve God has been gathered together in more than one of the large City houses, who will, we have no doubt, prove mutually helpful in their resolve henceforth to serve the Lord. There has been throughout the Mission a very hearty union and co-operation on the part of the members and the officers of Exeter Hall and Aldersgate-street, now happily united into one Association under one committee. Under the impulse and blessing derived from this Mission, it is proposed to carry forward the winter's work with earnest and united prayer and effort.

THE FOX-AND-KNOT AND HATFIELD-STREET MISSIONS report that the Sunday-schools, with an increased number of children, have been sustained by an earnest band of voluntary workers. The mission services for adults have been well attended. The usefulness of such an institution as this is made more and more manifest; its modest and unostentatious work has proved a boon to the poor. The young and old have been instructed in the gospel of the grace of God, and the aged and infirm comforted. The committee, assured of the blessings resulting from such an important work, invite an increased measure of support. The secretary is Mr. G. B. Poole, 42, Charterhouse-street, E.C.

A CONGREGATIONAL LANDMARK.

At the opening services held last week in connection with the new Congregational Church at Stroud Green, N., some important points were emphasised, which are of more than local interest. Dr. Parker, preaching in the afternoon, declared that the pulpit could never lose its power so long as it was faithful to its vocation, to deliver the great message of reconciliation and atonement, and to preach the Gospel of love and liberty.

Mr. Albert Spicer, who presided at the evening meeting, urged that "church meetings" should be made of wider usefulness by being held at an hour most suited to the majority of members, even (if necessary) upon Sunday; and be occupied, not exclusively, with internal church matters, most of which could with safety be left for the deacons to transact, but with questions relating to the real spiritual life of the whole church; and to hear accounts of what is being done for God in the missionary, evangelistic, and social world.

Rev. Hardy Harwood, of Union Chapel, Islington, commended the young people who, when married, move out from City churches to the suburbs, to the care of suburban Christians, who would thus reap from the sowing of their brethren nearer town.

Rev. Alfred Rowland, as pastor of Park Chapel, Crouch End, which had given up several of its members to form the nucleus of the one now being opened, deprecated the criticism at home of the services of the Lord's Day. He thought it inspired in the younger members of the family a lack of reverence and confidence, as well as diminishing the good effects of the day's ministry.

Rev. E. Griffith-Jones, the minister of the new church, referred with satisfaction to his four years' work in the locality, and rejoiced in the prevailing unity and harmony which had made of many families one spiritual home. He pointed to the living interest taken in his church in home and foreign missionary work as a hopeful sign, and warmly endorsed the chairman's warning against the "new temptation which beset a new and larger church" of the social and friendly element being diminished.

Rev. Chas. Brown spoke of the cordiality which had always existed between his neighbouring Baptist church and "Mount View," as manifested in the interchange of pulpits, and in many other ways. He felt strongly that a church can only be spiritually powerful in proportion as it exalts the atoning work of Christ as the only source of salvation.

The friends of the Mount View church have raised over £5000 of the £9000 required. It is interesting to note that the nett proceeds of the sale of Finsbury-square Chapel, amounting to £500, have been contributed by the trustees to this undertaking, which thus becomes a memorial of that old Congregational landmark.

POLICE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The workers and delegates of the International Christian Police Association gathered last week at Bath for the autumnal conference. On Wednesday evening a well-attended gathering, open to the public, was held in the Banqueting Room of the Guildhall. The chairman, Mr. Albert Head, explained the object of the Association, which is to unite all Christian policemen in the effort to win their unconverted comrades for Christ, and to bring a knowledge of his full salvation to members of the force throughout the world. Branches are now flourishing in America, China, Japan, Ceylon, Africa, and the Australian colonies, so that they were justly termed "International." Mr. Head also spoke of the Police Institute in London, the Seaside Home at Brighton, and the Southern Provincial Orphanage connected with the C.P.A. as institutions needing and meriting hearty public support.

Other speakers at the conference were Rev. J. G. Mantle (of Bristol), Mrs. Amanda Smith, Mr. Hamilton (of Bath), and Mr. Jackson (of Mildmay). Their messages were owned of God to the salvation of some, while many Christians were refreshed in spirit.

THE OPIUM CRISIS.—A reception meeting, to welcome to England the Indian anti-opium deputation, will be held in the Lower Exeter Hall on Thursday evening next week. Friends desiring tickets of admission can obtain them on application to Mr. Maurice Gregory, 31, Paternoster-square, London.

FOREIGN MISSIONS CLUB.

A company has been formed to carry on the Foreign Missions Club, 149 and 151, Highbury Newpark, N., which exists for the benefit of intending, present, and retired foreign missionaries, home friends of both sexes and all denominations being also eligible for membership. The club provides an intelligence department through which outgoing missionaries may obtain information about the necessary outfit; a commission agency; and a residential club at which missionaries and their families and other friends may be accommodated at cheap rates. The purpose of including home workers among the members is that missionaries may not suffer that separation from Christian intercourse which is often their lot abroad, and is not always removed when they return home. The experiment has been a great success. The Club has near five hundred members, of whom 206 are or have been foreign missionaries.

The Church Missionary Intelligencer, calling attention to this useful institution, says:—"For C.M.S. missionaries the Missionary Leaves Association fulfils part of the functions of this club, and ought to be better supported than it is. But the provision of a cheap and good home and depôt supplies a gap in missionary economy. The young missionary coming up to London and detained until the time of sailing, and the veteran on furlough who has no friends in London, would both be helped by such an establishment as this. In C.M.S. circles much is done through the generosity of private friends, but there is room for such an organisation."

MR. HENRY VARLEY AT NEW CROSS.

Under the auspices of the New Cross and Brockley Y.M.C.A., Mr. Varley has held a most successful five days' Mission for men in New Cross. The largest hall in the district was secured for the meetings. Fully one thousand men were present at the opening meeting on Sunday week, and listened most attentively to a powerful address on Social Purity. From the rapt attention given and remarks made by many, it was evident that a very deep impression had been made upon the hearts and consciences of not a few. The meetings were continued during the week, the Gospel being faithfully and powerfully preached. They were attended each evening by hundreds of men, culminating on Thursday evening in a large gathering at which fully one thousand people were present.

The ministers of the neighbourhood, both Church and Nonconformist, have most willingly assisted as far as possible, and have shown their hearty appreciation of this effort to reach the young men of New Cross. During the after meetings many rose to their feet as a testimony to their having accepted the Lord Jesus Christ. It is felt by all that a deep and lasting impression has been made upon the hearts of hundreds of the men who crowded night after night to hear the truth declared with no uncertain sound. On Wednesday the subject was "The Atonement an Absolute Necessity." Fully 600 men were present, and, at the close of the address, the great majority of these rose up to testify their personal faith in this important truth. We render all praise to Him alone, whose presence we believe was with us throughout the mission. G. H.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Many servants of God in Southampton and the neighbourhood, seeing the powers of evil around, and feeling their need of fresh power from on high for the conflict, have agreed to meet together for two days' prayer and communion with God, in Shaftesbury Hall. Wednesday, Oct. 17, Communion with God; Thursday, Oct. 18, Fitness for Service. Meetings at 11, 3.30, and 7.

CHINAMEN, as is well known, condemn the opium habit, even although they may themselves fall victims to the indulgence. In an article on "The Evils of Opium in China" in The Missionary Herald for October, Rev. G. B. Farthing says: "The man that has been long sought for in inland China has been found at last! He was discovered by Dr. Edwards, and I am sure he will not mind my telling you about it. The man is a native who can tell of advantages to be derived from the opium habit! Said he: 'There are distinct advantages from the use of opium, for when a user of it comes to be carried out to burial he will be an easy burden for the bearers, since opium shrivels a man up so; and more than that, an opium smoker never need fear that he will lose his sight or hearing.' When asked how that could be, he replied, 'Because he will not live long enough. Loss of sight and hearing are defects of age, but an opium user dies early, and therefore escapes those evils.' It is such a novel experience to have found a Chinaman give evidence in favour of opium that I cannot withhold it from you, as I have so constantly asserted that such an individual did not exist."

CONFERENCE AT OXFORD.

OCT. 29 to NOV. 1.

A conference for the promotion of practical Christianity will be held, God willing, in the University Examination Schools in Oxford, October 30, 31, and November 1, 1894, preceded by a preparatory meeting, on Monday, October 29, at 8 p.m.

Mr. Robert Wilson, Broughton Grange, Cockermouth, who will preside, says in the letter of invitation:—"All who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity are invited to attend, that we may together humble ourselves before God, conscious of our need as his children of a deepening of spiritual life, and more conformity to our Lord and Master, and obedience to the requirements of his holy Word in our daily walk. That Word declares that 'His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him;'—then let us, as his dependent and loving children, come to Him in simple trust, and together ask this promised fulness of blessing; and that our hearts, afresh cleansed in the atoning blood of Jesus, may be meet temples for the Great Cleanser Himself to abide in and keep clean, conforming us in all things to his will and image, by the power of the Holy Spirit. It is no new teaching: 'Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts.' We need not go far to find a reason for lack of power for service, individually and as Churches. Let us in humiliation before God for the past, seek the fulness of his Spirit, that we may glorify Him. May the dear brethren who are sent to break the bread of life to us, be themselves taught of God, and upheld by our prayers."

PROGRAMME OF CONFERENCE.

Opening meeting in the Examination Schools, Monday, October 29, 8 to 9.30 p.m.; address by Prebendary Webb-Peploe. Daily prayer meeting, 7 to 8 a.m., in the Hall of the Y.M.C.A., George-street, October 29 to November 2. Bible Reading by Rev. Hubert Brooke, Reading, 3 p.m., Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. General meeting, Tuesday, 8 to 9.30 p.m., addresses by Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, Cambridge, and Dr. E. E. Jenkins, honorary secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. Wednesday, addresses by Rev. E. W. Moore, Wimbledon, and Rev. Charles Inwood, Belfast. Thursday, addresses by Rev. Charles Inwood and Rev. G. H. C. McGregor, London. After-meetings each day, conducted by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins.

NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

A very interesting series of meetings, arranged by the West London Auxiliary, was brought to a conclusion on Monday week by a gathering at the Langham Hotel. The large drawing-room of the hotel was quite filled by missionaries and their friends, and several who came late were unable to find room. The chair was taken by Rev. A. Connell, B.D., minister of Regent-square Presbyterian Church, and addresses were delivered by Miss Jennings and Miss Jay, both from Tangier.

Miss Jennings's work lay principally at the hospital and in itineration among the villages, while Miss Jay's efforts have been directed to a most interesting effort to bring the children to the Saviour, and to teach them thus early the way of life. So far the visible results have been few, and the adversaries many; but the missionaries expressed themselves as full of hope and trust in God. The Chairman addressed to them words of encouragement that will long be remembered, and earnestly commended them and their work to the Lord in prayer.

THE ST. NATHANIEL'S RAGGED SCHOOLS. Windsor, Liverpool, have been, under the care of Rev. R. Hobson, made the means of rescuing, educating, and comforting hundreds of little children who, through no fault of their own, have experienced in the keenest manner the bodily suffering proceeding from cold and hunger. That such schools should have liberal support there is no questioning. All who labour in connection with them are voluntary workers who, for their dear Lord's sake, love the little ones whom He loveth, and who would have them brought unto Him that He might bless them.

THE MISSION TO FRENCH PRIESTS.—Professor Bertrand, head of the work among French priests (86, Boulevard Bineau, Neuilly), writes that he is trying to help an ex-priest, who is spiritual and sincere, and who says: "I cannot remain a priest, because in the Romish Church all seems to me fanaticism, despotism, and hypocrisy. I cannot be a Protestant evangelist, because I am not sufficiently instructed; and I should be unduly aggressive against Romanism—my hatred and disgust are so great. Pity me!" This man is supporting himself by wood-chopping, till something can be found for him.

YOUNG WOMEN AND DRINK.

Dear Sir,—Every well-wisher of our country must feel his heart saddened at the manifest increase of drinking amongst women. A few years back no respectable woman would let herself be seen entering a public-house, but now well-dressed women of all ages may be seen every day and at all hours going in and out of public-houses. It is a matter of common observation in the streets of London. Another great evil is the licence granted to confectioners and refreshment houses, as well as the comparative privacy afforded by the saloon bars of the gin palaces.

But the other day a phase of this question which I had scarcely thought of or realised was brought under my notice, viz. the increase of drinking amongst our young women. A worker of considerable experience assured me that the habit of drinking is alarmingly on the increase amongst our girls, and that at some business houses it is a common experience for the young women to return at night in a state of intoxication. Two business houses were named to me where to her knowledge this takes place. The refreshment house was mentioned which the employees of one of the shops in question frequent to obtain the drink, and I was assured that every confectioner's shop of any size for miles round has a licence for supplying intoxicants.

The way in which many employers care for the young men and women in their establishments would seem to justify the conclusion that the evil practices referred to are exceptional; but it may be that they are more general, and that they take place without the employers' knowledge. Little good will be done by minimising or closing our eyes to the evil.

It is surely necessary that the attention of our legislators, temperance reformers, and Christian workers should be more directed to this aspect of the drink curse. Drink has debased our men; it is now debasing our womanhood. Trusting that the insertion of this letter may help to stem the evil, I enclose my card and beg to remain, yours truly, Veritas.

TRAINING COLLEGE, DUNOON, N.B.

The students of this college have had a very busy summer, chiefly in open-air work. As the funds have been provided, the building is now well furnished, and is full of students. The present session has begun with twenty-four, and others are soon to enter. Steps have been taken to place the whole property into the hands of trustees, who will have full power to appoint a new principal in the event of death. The college is thus made into a public concern, and will now be recognised as one of our public institutions. The principal, Rev. Duncan Macgregor, has gathered around him not only a large band of students, but also effective teachers.

A ladies' department is to be added, and ladies who wish training for medical mission or other form of Christian work can now apply. In addition to medicine, ladies will have the same curriculum as the male students. As a new building has been taken in addition to the regular college, accommodation is being provided for an additional number of students.

The course of study includes Hebrew, Greek, German, French, systematic theology, exegesis, homiletics, English literature, church history, moral philosophy, and practical training.

The standard of admission is consecration to Christ's service and recognised ability, and the length of the curriculum depends on the student. The college seeks to turn out preachers of the Gospel, and devotes its chief strength to giving mastery of the Bible and spiritual power. If students wish university degrees, facilities are given to secure such at Glasgow University, but the bulk of the students are not aiming at any such distinction.

As the college is supplying a felt need, the number of applications is very great. A strong desire is felt to secure Dr. Culross in connection with the college, and it is earnestly hoped he may yet see his way to accept a post in it. Ministers who have likely young men of the various Evangelical denominations are urged to bring the college before their attention.

A full report of the college work from the beginning is about to be issued, which will show how wonderfully God has provided for the needs of the college.

THE NORTH LONDON EVANGELICAL PREACHERS' ASSOCIATION aims at uniting lay preachers belonging to Baptist and Congregational Churches, and organises means for their education and help. The lectures for the present term are held in New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, and deal with homiletics, sermon material, and theology. The list of lecturers includes Professor Gould, Revs. W. Pierce, W. Stevenson, L. H. Parsons, and A. Rowlands. Particulars of the Association and its work may be had from Mr. H. Worrall, 51, Landrock-road, Ferme Park, Hornsey, N.

Letters to the Editor.

INQUIRIES.

Dear Sir,—Can your readers inform me of the best book, not expensive, to place in the hands of those who are dealt with in our inquiry meetings, adapted to the mental capacity of working people, servants, and those not possessing much education? —Yours truly, Ransome Wallis.

Berthons, Walthamstow.

Dear Sir,—I should be greatly obliged if some of your readers who are distributors of Gospel books and tracts, would give me the titles of those which they have found to be the means of the conversion of souls.

I am desirous of procuring some attractive booklets which people in a good social position would be willing to accept and read.

Any hints, gained by experience, respecting the distribution of Gospel literature would be greatly valued.—Yours faithfully, S.

Eastbourne.

Sir,—Can any of your readers furnish me with a copy, or tell me where I can obtain a copy, of "The Pastor of Kilsyth," referred to in "The Memoirs of the Rev. W. C. Burns"? The book referred to contains information respecting a marvellous outpouring of the Holy Spirit in and around Kilsyth during the favoured days of R. M. McCheyne, Burns, the Bonars, Haldane, and others.

Would that a like manifestation of God's saving power might be vouchsafed to many of our country parishes, of which it may be truly said, "Is God a stranger in the land?" Could not some wealthy Christian take in hand the reprinting of this and other like books which the Lord has blessed, and send them as presents to some of the clergy, who are constantly asking, "What shall we do with the masses?"—I am, your obliged servant,

F. R. A. Hoare.

The Vicarage, Castle Gresley, Burton-on-Trent.

"THE ASCENT OF MAN."

Dear Sir,—In the last of the papers (August 30) by your correspondent, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., on the "Ascent of Man," the following occurs:—"It was the 'God of Gaps,' to use Professor Drummond's not very reverent language." On page 426 of "The Ascent of Man," the sentence runs thus:—"There are reverent minds who ceaselessly scan the fields of nature and the books of science, in search of gaps—gaps which they will fill up with God. As if God lived in gaps." I think this cannot mean irreverence.—Yours sincerely, S. R.

OUTDOOR PREACHING IN CORK.

Sir,—As one who is deeply interested in the evangelising of my Catholic fellow countrymen and women, I have attended many of these outdoor services, and can with a grateful heart testify to the good they are doing, not only in saving souls, but in breaking down prejudices born of ignorance of what Protestants believe in and wish others to become the happy possessors of.

Often and often while the address was being given, I have watched the effects it was having upon male and female alike. It is true that now and again I saw features that portrayed an amount of enmity that was very distressful, but on the other hand it is equally true that one and another was drinking in the words with a thirst that was delightful and encouraging to see.

I have stood myself as a pillar for a young Roman Catholic woman to shield herself behind, and hear the address from. I have seen men of the same persuasion listening with rapt attention to every word that was falling from the lips of the preacher. I have seen scenes in connection with outdoor preaching that can never be erased from the mind. Groups of children standing around the organ, singing as loudly as they could some of the hymns that we are all so well acquainted with, such as—

"Are you coming home to-night?"

"At the Cross, at the Cross, where I first saw the light," and others.

Even some of those who at first seem to be the most opposed to the Gospel are often the very first to enquire "the way of salvation." B. W.

Dublin.

THE MISSIONARY BUREAU.—On Tuesday the missionary hour at the noon prayer meeting, Aldersgate-street, was led by three young men going to India under the auspices of the Missionary Bureau. These were Messrs. Cullen, of Glasgow, and Cherritt, of Dorset, who, with Mr. T. Smith, are going to the far North-eastern frontier for work among the Manipuris. Mr. F. V. Crawford, who is going to work among the Gonds of Central India, also spoke enthusiastically and with power.

HANKOW.—In the October issue of China's Millions, Mrs. Howard Taylor (née Geraldine Guinness), writing on her return to inland China, says:—"During the few days of our sojourn in Hankow, it was deeply interesting to see something of the work carried on in that great and important centre. Mr. David Hill, of the Wesleyan Mission, was away visiting out-stations, but we lunched with Dr. Griffith John, of the London Missionary Society, who seemed brighter and occupied in labours more abundant than ever. He almost made us feel as though Hankow were the most delighting and important sphere in the whole Empire. Thank God for such men and for their noble work!"

The memorial stone of the new building of the Croydon Association will be laid on November 17, when Lord Kinnaird and Mr. F. J. Horniman will take part.

Thus far this year 150 new members have been received into the Covington, Ky., Association. An effort is being made to secure a paid-up membership of six hundred by December 31.

The Association in Honolulu, in the Hawaiian Islands, has just celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary. The membership is 274, and last year the average attendance at the rooms was 150 daily.

Guinness, and Dr. Barnardo. A series of lantern slides illustrating the work of the Y.M.C.A. was shown by Dr. Gerard Smith.

Mr. Frank How has resigned the position of honorary financier secretary of the Finsbury Park Association. In that capacity he has ably served the association for nearly two years, and has succeeded in reducing the debt from £168 to £85. Mr. T. Fenwick Greves now joins Mr. Yeoman as joint hon. sec., and they are looking forward hopefully to a successful winter session.

The Association in the City of Mexico is paying paying particular attention to stimulating the use and study of the Bible in the southern republic. A regular Sunday afternoon Bible meeting is held under the direction of Mr. R. B. Keys, auditor of the Mexican National Railroad, and General Secretary Gaston is taking an active interest in extending the work of the Scriptural Union in Mexico.

The open-air meetings of the Y.M.C.A. in the Grunewald, the great park near Berlin (started in 1889), have been held this summer every Sunday since May 20. In this rainy summer the attendance has sometimes suffered a little from the weather, but never has any disturbance taken place. Generally, a good number of people remained to listen to the short Gospel addresses, and the blessing was visible.—Evangelical Christendom.

The members of the Stratford Y.M.C.A. mission band and open-air workers met to take tea together on Tuesday week to inaugurate the winter's work of the mission band, and the closing of the summer's campaign of the open-air work. After tea, the workers adjourned to the sitting-room, which was well filled, and were addressed by the Rev. J. H. Monti on "The Second Coming of Christ," Mr. C. Boardman, and others.

The Western and South Midland District Unions held their annual conference at Trowbridge on September 25. Mr. J. Ponyton-Haden presided over the morning session, and Mr. J. E. Wakefield, of Taunton, over the afternoon session, when a debt of £30 existing on the local Association was liquidated. Sir George Williams presided over a large public meeting in the evening, in which part was taken by Mr. Robinson Souttar, Messrs. W. H. Seagram, E. E. Evans, and others.

At the Percy Institute, 18, Percy Circus, extensive renovations have been carried out, and the classroom has been altered to give more accommodation. The Wednesday evening services have been removed at the Central Institute, 316, Regent-street. Mr. H. Maynard, Rev. E. A. Stuart, Dr. Harry Guinness, and Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow are announced to give addresses during October.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

At Bristol, the C.E.S. Ebenezer Primitive Methodist Chapel has celebrated its first anniversary.

At Lincoln, the Monk's-road Baptist Y.P.S.C.E. third anniversary proved a time of spiritual blessing.

The Myrtle-street, Liverpool, Baptist Society's Sunshine Committee held lately another "Ragamuffin" tea. About fifty ragged children were gathered from the streets and taken to Sefton Park, where an enjoyable evening was spent.

The Wellhouse Moravian Society celebrated lately its third anniversary. Addresses were given by Revs. J. E. Zippel, Galbraith of Brighouse, W. Titterington of Wyke, J. Barlow of Baildon, J. Connor of Heckmondwike, and Mr. George Aspinall.

The monthly consecration meeting of the Albert-street Church C.E. Society, Belfast, was held on Monday week. On the roll being called there was a touching incident as the name of an earnest and beloved member was called for the last time, Miss Collins having gone to her reward. References were made to her life and character.

The Golden Rule suggests that all county C.E. conventions conclude with an evangelistic effort. The convention programme should be so formed as to lead up to this climax. The recent convention of the San Diego County Christian Endeavour Union resulted in nine conversions, besides the number that no man can tell of indirect conversions. As a result of the convention, moreover, two new societies were formed.

At a recent prayer-meeting of the Society at South Parade Chapel, Leeds, Mrs. Thompson, the oldest member of the Church, was present. The leader's address was on "True growth, what it is, and how to get it." Subsequently, Mrs. Thompson stated that she was in her eightieth year, and that the following day would be the sixtieth anniversary of the day on which she publicly professed herself, in baptism, one of Christ's followers.

At Bath, the Countess of Huntingdon's Y.P.S.C.E. lately celebrated its second anniversary; the pastor preached special sermons to the active members, and to the associates. In the afternoon, those members who were not engaged in other Christian work rallied round a banner bearing the name of the Society, and conducted an open-air service in the park. After the evening services the Endeavourers conducted an evangelistic service, when several decided for Christ. On Monday, a united meeting was held, and addresses were given by Rev. T. R. Dan, Messrs. S. E. Morris and Shephard.

An interesting letter has been received telling how Christian Endeavour is penetrating into the heart of the Dark Continent. Dr. W. H. Leslie, a medical missionary at Banza Manteke, is starting a promising society in the church which was the scene of the labours of Henry Richards, the Congo hero. A successful series of monthly open-air meetings in connection with the four local societies in Langholm, Dumfriesshire, have just been brought to a close. The principal address was generally given by a local minister or leading Christian, the Endeavourers helping by testimony in word and song.

IRISH NOTES.

Miss Annie Wills, daughter of the rector of Rathkeale, co. Limerick, has sailed for Burmah, to act as a missionary in the country under the Bishop of Rangoon.

An appeal has been issued by Rev. Dr. Nicholas, vice-president of the Methodist Conference, to observe the first Friday in October as a day of special intercession on behalf of foreign missions.

Successful meetings, under the auspices of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, have been held in Waterford, when earnest addresses were delivered by Miss Hanna, of Belfast, and Miss McLean.

The street preachers are still receiving scandalous treatment in Galway and Athlone. Whenever they appear on the streets of these towns they are beset with a howling mob, who apparently thirst for their blood.

During the past month Rev. Henry Mahony, deputation secretary of the South American Missionary Society, preached in several churches, and addressed a large number of public meetings throughout Ireland in aid of the society mentioned.

THE ALDENHAM INSTITUTE, Goldington-crescent, St. Pancras, was reopened on Saturday evening for the winter session. Sir George Williams, who presided, said that the Institute was conferring benefits upon its members. Whilst congratulating the prize-winners, he could not help pointing out that it was not the gaining of the prize, but the struggle for the prize, that brought out their faculties. Professor Barrett spoke of the educational work being done in the classes. Lady Williams distributed the prizes and certificates to the successful students.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A meeting for the deepening of spiritual life is to be held next month among ministers in the north of Scotland. Much blessing has resulted from similar gatherings in past years.

The three weeks' mission of Mr. Thompson, evangelist, in Paisley, is proving a great success. So crowded have the meetings in Hope Hall been during the first week that the Free High Church has been secured for the next fortnight.

There has been some movement in the Anderston district of Glasgow, and a number of conversions have cheered the hearts of workers in mission-halls and churches. Open-air services have been largely attended, and have been much blessed.

At the annual meeting of the Dundee Y.M.C.A. last week a membership of 549 was reported. The Bible-class was reported as being in a hopeful condition, with a rising attendance. The lodging-house band has been active in visitation and Gospel work, while general evangelistic work has been vigorously prosecuted.

At the last Free Assembly Rev. Alex. Lee, of Nairn, was appointed for special work in connection with the Highlands and islands. He has now relinquished his Nairn charge, and was entertained at a public breakfast last week, when many friends expressed appreciation of his sixteen years' fruitful service in the community.

A meeting was held in Perth last week to consider what could be done in improving the condition of the children of tramps and tinkers throughout the country. It was stated that a lady had offered her services as a missionary among this nomadic class, and a sub-committee was appointed to devise the best manner of reaching them.

Many Sunday-school teachers learned a memorable practical lesson in how to teach, from a blackboard lecture given by Mr. J. W. Arthur, at the S.S. Convention at Alloa, to a large audience. Some of Mr. Arthur's ingenious methods of presenting truth pictorially were quite new to most of those present, and were very suggestive.

The United Presbyterian Church Presbytery of Edinburgh have inaugurated a series of missionary services in the churches of the city. They are being largely attended, and will continue for three successive Sabbaths. It is hoped that in this way the interest of the people in spreading the Gospel throughout the world will be greatly stimulated.

As the fruit of the labours of Mrs. Baeyertz, Mr. John Currie, and Mr. Lazenby, in Cowcaddens Church, Glasgow, during two months, 300 professedly anxious souls have been conversed with. In addition to those joining other churches, fifty-three are being received into the fellowship of Cowcaddens Church, after giving an intelligent account of their conversion to God.

The annual Christian Convention on Keswick lines was held in Glasgow from 24th to 27th September, and was largely attended, especially on the closing day, which was a public holiday in the city. The speakers included Rev. C. G. Moore, Rev. G. C. Grubb, Capt. Baring, and others, and the teaching throughout was in every way helpful and stimulating. Much thankfulness was expressed for the fine weather and bright sunshine of the week.

The death of the widow of the late Principal Candlish, of the New College, Edinburgh, is much regretted all over the Free Church. She was a true helpmeet to her noble husband, who for long led the Free Church, and did so much for Evangelical religion by his ministry in Free St. George's, Edinburgh. Her funeral was attended by many of the leading men of the Free Church, and the principal mourner was her son, Professor Candlish, of the Free Church College, Glasgow.

At Douglas Support, the residence of Rev. Sholto Douglas, there was held a most interesting conference on the Second Advent. Addresses were given in the forenoon by Dr. Bullinger and Dr. R. Anderson, of London. After luncheon an animated conversation was kept up by the ministers who were invited to the meeting, most of whom came from the surrounding districts, where Mr. Douglas has several missionaries employed at his own expense. His labours on behalf of the mining population are attended with most gratifying results.

One result of the prolonged coal strike is seen in the large proportion of men—labourers and tradesmen—coming to the Sabbath morning breakfasts in Glasgow. Out of an audience of nearly 2000 adults, which is the usual attendance, three-fourths at present are men. The opportunity of preaching the glad tidings of salvation to so many souls is heartily embraced week by week by the workers of the United Evangelistic Association, one of the city ministers, a director of the Association, or an evangelist coming to address the assemblage each Sunday, after the tea and bread have been partaken of.

PERSONALIA.

Dr. Arthur T. Pierson has been preaching in September in the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

Rev. James Stalker, D.D.—Our American brethren are anticipating that Dr. Stalker will pay a second visit to the States next summer.

Mr. T. Lewes Sayer is not for the present resuming evangelistic work, being compelled to take every precaution during the winter months.

Pastor Stockmayer is now on his way to Shanghai for special work. He is accompanied by his wife as well as Mrs. Baxter and Miss Charlotte Murray.

The Bishop of Ripon had a severe attack of indisposition last week; though somewhat better, he is improving only slowly, and has been recommended by his medical adviser not to undertake public duties for the present.

Dr. F. E. Clark, after spending a few weeks in Germany and Scandinavia, hopes to reach England about Dec. 1. He will probably spend about a fortnight in this country, and address a number of Christian Endeavour meetings in various centres.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.—Many warm friends will doubtless read with much interest the account of Mr. Hughes's Italian journey, which has begun to appear in the Methodist Times. Mr. Hughes expresses the hope that he will be once more at his post in London at the beginning of next year.

Dr. Parker, after an absence of seven weeks, resumed his ministry at the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct, on Sunday, preaching morning and evening to crowded congregations. He maintained that churches and ministers ought to see more of one another. Scotland and England should intervisit, and both should intervisit with China and Japan and Madagascar.

Mr. J. G. Govan, director of the Faith Mission, was married to Miss A. Martin at Thornton, Fife, on September 28. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Geo. Grubb, and was witnessed by a large concourse of friends from the various parts of Scotland worked by the mission. Miss Martin was a worker in the mission in its earlier days, and for some years has been engaged in Christian work in England.

The late Canon Hoare.—Enlargement of the South-Eastern College, Ramsgate, a Protestant and Evangelical institution in which the late Canon was warmly interested, having become necessary, it is proposed that the new building be called "The Canon Hoare Memorial Wing." Many who valued the Canon's teaching will be glad to aid in raising this memorial of his work. Rev. E. D. Stead, Falmer Rectory, Lewes, is one of the hon. secretaries.

President H. R. Reynolds, of Cheshunt College, has been confined to his room for some days, and has been attended by his brother (Dr. Russell Reynolds, President of the Royal College of Physicians), on whose advice all his engagements have been cancelled. This includes the paper on "The Reciprocal Bearings of Christian Doctrine and Christian Missions," which he was to have read next month at an assembly of the Hertfordshire Congregational Union, to be held at North Finchley.

Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell will address a series of meetings throughout the country, on their recent observations concerning the use of opium in India, China, Straits Settlements and elsewhere. The meetings will begin at Manchester Free Trade Hall on Monday, October 29. Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell are expected to speak in the same hall on the preceding night (Sunday), in connection with the Manchester Wesleyan Missions. Meetings are also to be held at Birmingham, Liverpool, Sheffield, Leeds, Hull, Middlesbrough, Newcastle, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dublin, Belfast, Cardiff, Swansea, Bristol, Plymouth, Portsmouth, and possibly in some other towns, the concluding meeting taking the form of a great demonstration in London.

PRAYERS BY PURCHASE.—In the latest issue of Le Christianisme, Pasteur E. Borel-Brun, of the Evangelical Society of France, describes a visit recently paid to Arpajon, a village near Aurillac, Cantal, on the occasion of the festival of the patron saint. According to custom there was at each celebration of the mass a "renage," or sale of prayers, at fifty centimes per pound! An abbé went through the pews of the crowded church, carrying a plate, and as money was placed upon it, he cried, "M. —— one pound. Mdme. —— two pounds; money paid." The priest seated in the pulpit repeated the words aloud, and from time to time announced the ever-growing total of the pounds of prayers, and the money paid in purchasing them. Another priest, seated at the foot of the pulpit, duly made a note of the names and the orders. M. Borel-Brun concludes his article:—"In the third century of our era, Arpajon was Roman; afterwards it became Pagan. What progress have we made since?"

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. W. Grove has been labouring at Landport, Portsmouth, with encouraging results.

Mr. James Wharton has concluded a successful eight days' mission at the Gospel Hall, Oldham. Souls have been saved and believers blessed.

Mr. A. A. Harmer has conducted an eighteen days' mission at Enon Chapel, Monkwearmouth, Sunderland, during the past month. The mission was helpful to Christians, and many came out as inquirers. He is now holding a good mission at Southwell, Notts.

Royston.—A mission was conducted by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes from Sept. 23 to 30 in connection with the Congregational churches, Royston. There were about twenty well-attended services; many were greatly helped in the Christian life, and some confessed Christ.

Rev. T. L. Johnson has concluded, with many tokens of blessing, a mission in Kensington Hall, Bristol. The farewell meeting on Tuesday week was largely attended, and over thirty professed to have received blessing. Mr. Johnson has now commenced an eight days' mission at the Y.M.C.A., Saffron Walden, for which he desires prayer.

Rev. John Pugh, of Cardiff, begins on Sunday a fortnight's evangelistic work in Kentish Town. He will be one of the speakers at an Evangelistic Conference to be held in Regent-square Church on Tuesday, the 9th. It may not be generally known that Mr. Pugh is doing a remarkable evangelistic work in South Wales. It is but three years since he first broke ground, and already there are about twenty centres of evangelistic work in the South Wales district.

Camberwell.—Mr. Meade, of the Evangelisation Society, conducted a four nights' mission from Sunday, 23rd, to Wednesday, 26th, at the Albany Institute and mission, 345, Albany-road, S.E. Previous to the mission most of the houses in the neighbourhood were visited, and invitations given, and during the mission a number of open-air invitation services were held. Time will make known how much blessing has resulted from these services. The workers have been greatly built up and strengthened, and a number of strangers were brought within sound of the Gospel.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken has concluded a revisit to the village of Great Glenn, near Leicester. The services were largely attended, and were accompanied by the Divine power of the Holy Ghost. It was especially felt that He was present as the Sanctifier, and it is believed that many who were brought to the knowledge of Christ as their Saviour during the successful mission held by Mr. Aitken eighteen months ago have opened their hearts to receive the fulness of the Spirit. Prayer is requested that the Christians may be led forth in aggressive work for their Divine Master.

THE LORD'S DAY IN SWITZERLAND.—At the annual meeting, at Lausanne, of the Swiss Society for the Sanctification of Sunday, it was shown that well-directed efforts are incessantly being made to rescue the Sabbath day from the working week. Operatives are claiming the right of periodical rest, and in many cases the concession has been made. M. Duluz, of Geneva, who made report on the subject, rejoiced in the progress of the cause, but stated with sadness that to many the day of rest is simply made an occasion of dissipation. Sunday fêtes of all kinds are multiplying, and in many cases they begin at the same hour as divine worship. Christians were urged by example and influence to stem the tide of Sabbath desecration, to sanctify the day for the sake of their spiritual health, and for the welfare of their families and the community in general. Pasteur J. A. Porret, of Geneva, preached a stimulating sermon from Isaiah lviii. 13-14.

ORPHAN HOME FOR LITTLE GIRLS, Burgos House, Sydenham-road North, Croydon.—The superintendent, Mrs. Smith, writes in the ninth year's report: "The number of children in residence has averaged forty, fourteen have been admitted, and twelve have left; five of these we have placed in situations as domestic servants. The Home purse has frequently been quite empty, and we have depended upon daily supplies for daily needs. Sometimes we are advised to reduce expenses by sending away some of the children, but which should it be? The tiny child who has been snatched from all the horrors of life on the streets; the motherless little ones, whose neglected condition when brought to us showed only too plainly that in losing mother they had lost all that makes home to a child; the children of widows struggling to gain a livelihood for their other children; the deserted children for whom no one ever makes an inquiry, who appear not to have a friend in the world but ourselves? Can we turn these helpless little ones away from the safe and happy home they now enjoy, into the hard, cold world?"

OBITUARY.

MR. JOHN WRIGHT.

The founder of the well-known printing and publishing firm at Bristol, who has just passed away at the age of ninety, was originally a member of the Society of Friends of Tewkesbury. A publisher and author, he was brought into intimacy with Southey, Coleridge, Cottle, and John Foster. He started the first penny newspaper in Bristol, and he was the author of a Protestant pamphlet which attained a large circulation. He joined the Church of England and was an ardent Protestant.

REV. W. F. NEWTON, M.A.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. William Fretwell Newton, Rector of Wambrook, Dorset, which took place at his Rectory on Wednesday, September 19, on his sixty-eighth birthday. Mr. Newton had held the living of Wambrook since July, 1888, previous to which he was full of earnest and fruitful labours as Vicar of St. Mark's, Preston. He was a warm supporter of all evangelical effort, and his loss will be much felt. Mr. Newton was in failing health for more than two years. He is survived by a widow, three sons, and one daughter.

PROFESSOR F. R. CHESHIRE.

This devoted temperance worker and writer passed away on the 17th ult., aged sixty. As an educationalist he did good service, also as a Christian worker in Camden Town and Acton. In 1880 he commenced his career as lecturer of the National Temperance League, a work that he entered upon with his whole heart, and continued with untiring assiduity and remarkable success for fourteen and a-half years. During that time he delivered upwards of 2100 illustrated lectures in metropolitan schools, which were highly valued by the teachers as well as by the young people to whom they were specifically addressed.

MRS. P. T. FORSYTH.

Many will hear with deep regret of the death of Mrs. Forsyth, wife of Rev. P. T. Forsyth, who has just entered on the pastorate of Emmanuel Church, Cambridge, which occurred on Saturday week, after a few hours' illness, from an attack of paralysis. On the morning of the previous day she enjoyed a drive with a friend, and was very bright and cheerful—in the very best of spirits. A correspondent says:—"She had only been with us (at Cambridge) a few days, and but few of our people had seen her. She seemed so bright, and had struck an affectionate chord in our people's hearts. We can scarcely realise it, and our sympathy goes out in full measure to Mr. Forsyth."

REV. JAMES MARTIN, BELFAST.

Much regret is felt by a wide circle of friends in Belfast and the North of Ireland at the death of Rev. Jas. Martin, minister of Eglinton-street Presbyterian Church, Belfast, who passed away last Friday, after an illness of only three days. Deceased, who was the brother of Rev. Professor Todd Martin, D.D., Moderator of the General Assembly, was a native of Rathfriland, co. Down, and spent the whole of his ministerial life in Belfast. When his church was built, Eglinton-street, where it stands, was then in the suburbs, but it is now almost in the very centre of the city. Here Mr. Martin collected a large and devoted congregation, and went about his work with zeal and ability. He was a very unassuming, modest man, and always manifested a most friendly disposition towards ministers and members of other denominations. He was an earnest Evangelical preacher, but he specially excelled as a pastor. Some few months ago the present Lord Mayor of Belfast stated in a public meeting in Belfast that he owed almost everything he possessed to Mr. Martin, inasmuch as owing to the interest he took in him when many years before he came as a poor lad into the city, he was saved from moral shipwreck. His widow, Mrs. Martin, is the author of several interesting books. Death resulted from an affection of the lungs, and his end was very peaceful.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a month's mission in the Tolbooth Hall, Glasgow, from October 1, by Mr. W. Monro Collings.—For Gospel services at Twyford (Berks) next month, in connection with the "Country Towns Mission."—For a three days' spiritual life conference to be held in Rotterdam, October 22, 24, and 25.—For a week's services at Congregational Chapel, Frampton-on-Severn, to commence (D.V.) October 6, to be conducted by Messrs. Jas. Fielding and Oper Rodway.—For our only son just commencing business life, that God's blessing may rest upon him.—That God may bless the visit of Lord Radstock to Birmingham (October 6 to 15), to the conversion of many souls to Christ and blessing to his people.—For special Gospel work among sailors in Glasgow this week.

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Bo-Peep, Vol. 1894 (2s. 6d. Cassell & Co.) For the little ones this is simply a delightful treasury of picture, story, and rhyme. It will be a welcome present in many homes.

The publications of Messrs. Partridge & Co. are among the most attractive, andappeal to young and old alike. The Mother's Companion is one of the best magazines for the home, and the bound volume has complete stories, bright sketches, and articles of practical utility for womankind. The Family Friend is an old acquaintance, and as good as ever in all its departments. The Friendly Visitor, with its large type, should be remembered by those who would present a good book to aged people. All these volumes are admirably produced, the illustrations being many and of high artistic merit. They cost 1s. 6d., 2s., or 2s. 6d. each, according to the style of binding. For the little folks The Children's Friend is all that could be desired. Boys and girls alike should be the better for reading it. For children of younger years, The Infant's Magazine is the very thing—covers and contents being cheery and gay. (1s. 6d., 2s., and 2s. 6d., according to binding.) Finally, The Band of Hope Review (1s. and 2s.) deserves a good word; while The British Workman (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d.) is both useful and attractive.

GEOLOGY AND HISTORY.

The Meeting Place of Geology and History. By Sir J. William Dawson, LL.D., F.R.S. (5s. Religious Tract Society.) This very useful little work gives a clear statement of the many interesting facts bearing on the debatable ground intervening between the later part of the geological record and the beginnings of history, sacred and secular. As a geologist, the author speaks with authority, and as a scholar and theologian he shows wide knowledge. In the concluding paragraph, he writes: "Enough has been said to indicate the remarkable manner in which the history in Genesis has anticipated modern discovery, and to show that this ancient book is in every way trustworthy, and as remote as possible from the myths and legends of ancient heathenism, while it shows the historical origin of beliefs which in more or less corrupted forms lie at the foundations of the oldest religions of the Gentiles, and find their true significance in that of the Hebrews. To the Christian the record in Genesis has a still higher value, as constituting those historical groundworks of the plan of salvation to which our Lord Himself so often referred, and on which He founded so much of his teaching." We trust this very instructive volume will have many readers.

The Book of Judges, by Charles Lett Feltoe, M.A., has been added to the "Scripture Hand-books" series. (1s. 6d. Nisbet.) It is evidently the result of careful study.

Both Worlds Barred, by Sidney Kean. (3s. 6d. Fisher Unwin.) A slight story, in the course of which several discussions on religious matters are introduced. The writer shows promise of able work, but having apparently no definite conviction, he leads his readers nowhere.

Guide to Employment in the Civil Service.—A new edition has been published of this useful little book. It seems quite "up to date," giving information about subjects to be studied, and fees to be paid, as well as presenting specimen examination papers. (1s. 6d. Cassell & Co.).

The Wesleyan Methodist Magazine is a very attractive monthly. The most important contribution to the October issue is Dr. Dallinger's "Popular Notes on Science," in which Professor Drummond's "Ascent of Man" is criticised, some highly artistic engravings accompanying the article. (6d. C. H. Kelly.)

Experience is an excellent quarterly. The new issue contains stimulating and instructive papers by Professor G. G. Findlay, and Revs. G. A. Bennetts and C. Inwood, consecration and assurance being the subject-matter of the contents. The selections from writers of the past and present on experimental religion are chosen with care and judgment. (4d. C. H. Kelly.)

The Vision and the Call is a volume of sermons by Rev. J. M. Gibbon. (Elliot Stock.) The discourse which furnishes the title is founded on Acts xvi. 8-10, and was preached last year in aid of the Baptist Missionary Society. A remarkable freshness pervades the book; two of the most striking sermons dealing with "The Christian at Play" and "Conferring the Collection."

Memoir of Rev. Dr. Verner M. White. By Rev. V. M. White. (4d. G. Philip & Son.) In brief compass, and in a pleasing style, the son sketches with many a tender touch the career and testimony of the departed father. There is a capital portrait. Some account is given of the resolute stand he took, and the sacrifices he made for what he deemed to be Bible truth and principles.

Things to Come for October contains addresses on prophetic subjects by Mr. Geo. F. Trench, of Ireland, Pastor Stearns, of Philadelphia, and Pastor Fuller Gooch, of London; and contributions on Scripture and its exposition by Mr. Alex. Stewart (Glasgow), and Dr. Robert Anderson. The notes on Jewish movements and spiritualistic developments are an interesting feature. (1d. Hawkins).

Cassell's New Popular Educator.—The publication of this very excellent work in monthly parts, is an event on which young people of limited means may well be congratulated. The first part introduces to the study of several sciences and languages, the whole being fully illustrated. This issue is a great improvement upon the old Educator, which so many thousands of thoughtful people have found of service. (6d. each part. Cassells.)

The Work of the Holy Spirit. Thirteen sermons by Rev. S. C. Lowry, M.A., vicar of North Holmwood, Dorking. The importance of the subject is duly appreciated, and the treatment is simple. Though not an extreme Churchman, the author assigns to baptism and confirmation a place and virtue more easy of accommodation to ecclesiastical systems than of being deduced and proved from New Testament teaching. (Skeffington.)

Health and Condition in the Active and Sedentary. By N. E. Yorke-Davies, L.R.C.P., M.R.C.S. (Sampson Low). A plain, practical book on the secret of the enjoyment of good health. The author does not profess to write as a total abstainer, but the whole drift of his teaching inculcates the careful avoidance of strong drink as an insidious foe to good health. Beyond this, the open secret is found in proper food, good air, and sufficient exercise.

Temperance Publications. The Church of England Temperance Society, 4, Sanctuary, S.W., has issued some excellent handbooks, including Alcohol: Its Effects on Body and Mind, by W. Taylor (2s. 6d.), being three courses of lessons suitable for the instruction of Bands of Hope; The Rescue of Helena Hadley, a temperance story, by Mrs. Stevenson (1s.); and a number of tracts and manuals which will prove of real service to leaders and helpers in Band of Hope work.

When the Sun Riseth. By Harriet E. Colvile. (5s. Nisbet.) These chapters are addressed to those who are seeking the light, as well as to young believers. In an earnest faithful spirit the writer deals with souls in whom anxiety has been awakened, points to the sure refuge in Christ, and leads on to the primary lessons of the Christian life. The left hand pages throughout the volume are filled with Scripture passages bearing on the theme in hand. We believe the book will be of real service to many.

China's Millions (Morgan and Scott) for October, opens with an article by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, entitled "The Secret of Fruitfulness," being lessons from John xv. Here are counsels of great importance, expressed in words which the Holy Spirit teacheth. Among the other contents are "Seven Years in a Northern City," by C. H. Judd; "Wang: a Chinese Christian," by Rev. W. W. Cassels; "A Visit to a Mongol Village," by Miss G. M. Muir; and "Through the Heart of China," by Mrs. Howard Taylor (née Geraldine Guinness).

The Family Prayer-Book. Edited by Canon Garbett and Rev. Samuel Martin (7s. 6d. Cassell & Co.). Those who use such helps in prayer will welcome this re-issue of a work of tried value, and containing the choice thoughts of devoted and well-taught men of God. The Dean of Canterbury contributes an introduction on prayer and family devotion. Morning and evening portions of Scripture are suggested for each day of the year, together with prayers, Evangelical and spiritual in tone. The volume is well illustrated, clearly printed, and strongly bound.

Bagster's New Comprehensive Teachers' Bibles. Bagster's Bibles are known and valued far and wide, and require neither commendation nor detailed description. Suffice it that the firm is bringing out a new series at easy prices. The nonpareil edition, now on our table—French seal, yapped, and round corners, with valuable notes, concordance and atlas, and illustrated by a set of coloured plates depicting ancient customs and dress, the tabernacle and temple, types of character and so on—is published at 9s. It is a good opportunity for the teacher or student to secure a useful edition of the Bible. (S. Bagster & Sons.)

Christmas Booklets are already making their appearance. Mr. W. G. Wheeler, Paternoster Row, has issued a number, very attractive both in style and contents. Here and Hereafter, a poem by Caroline Tickner; and An Hour with Thee, by Lucy Larcom (6d. each), will be favourites with contemplative Christians. Smaller illuminated booklets, also beautifully produced, are entitled: I Shall be Satisfied, God Knoweth, The Song of Faith (by Paul Gerhardt), and The Father's Love (4d. each). The collection includes several other poetical leaflets, in tasteful chromo-lithographed covers.

The Evolution of Spiritual Man, by William M. Lisle, professes to show that "the law of evolution is not only not opposed to Evangelical Christianity, but a strong confirmation of it." We do not admit the basal assumption, so we cannot sympathise with the argument constructed upon it. By way of showing that the same methods are followed in the spiritual world as in the natural world, thus putting Christianity on a natural basis, the author adduces many striking analogies and correspondences, and powerfully sets forth many evangelical truths. The theme has attractions, and the writing is characterised by terseness and force. But we regret to say that strict correctness of statement is sometimes sacrificed to the terseness of style; while the theory propounded is a qualification of spiritual existence rather than an adequate explanation of it. (Silver, Burdett & Co., Boston, Mass.)

The Protestant Churchman.—The October issue contains accounts of good work in various parts. (Protestant Reformation Society, Berners-street.)

Very attractive wall calendars for 1895 are The Fireside and the Home Words, both of them printed in colours. They will be especially useful to Christians worshipping according to the forms of the Church of England.

Brotherly Communion with the Foreign Protestant Churches, desired and cultivated by the highest and best of the divines of the Church of England. This address by the late Dean Goode has been re-issued, with a preface by Rev. Dr. Bullinger. It is a publication which deserves attention now that reunion is being so widely discussed. (6d. Nisbet.)

WORK IN CAPE TOWN.

Mr. P. Whitwell, who has for nearly three years been engaged in Gospel work in Cape Town and suburbs, writes to us: "I am about to begin Bible carriage work in Cape Colony—a work in which I spent two seasons before leaving England. I propose visiting from house to house, and accepting all open doors for preaching and teaching. I am not connected with any society, but the fellowship of believers has supplied the wants of myself and family. I hope to spread the light by selling Bibles, in English, Dutch, German, and Kaffir, and other books of a sound character.

"I have a young converts' meeting every Wednesday evening, with an encouraging attendance. One thing we are praying for is a revival from above over the whole of South Africa, and we have faith to believe that it is on the way."

Mr. Whitwell's address is: "Care of Mr. Southall, 60, Plein-street, Cape Town."

RESCUE WORK AT POPLAR.

In the multiplication of new agencies some of the older missions, which have been working quietly for many years, are apt to be overlooked. One of these is the Rescue Home at Poplar, E., conducted with Christian tenderness and untiring devotion by Mrs. Wilkes, who says in a recent letter:—"I have lost many friends by death, and new ones are (for an old lady who seldom goes anywhere) hard to make. A very quiet work goes on, and I see the fruit of my labours often in mended lives and grateful hearts. I praise God for health and courage to hold on."

THE VICTORIA INSTITUTE is a very useful organisation, forming a bond of sympathy and union between Christian scientists and philosophers, and those who would profit by their thought and researches. It has been instrumental in producing a long series of volumes of Transactions. The latest (second) quarterly part of vol. xxvii. contains several important discussions, including, "How the Waters of the Ocean became Salt," by Professor Hull; and "The List of Sheshonq at Karnak," which names the towns which Sheshonq I. took, or professed to take, during his campaign against Rehoboam. This important sculpture, which is accompanied by a map, is described in detail by Professor G. Maspero, and an English translation is given by Rev. H. G. Tomkins. There is also a valuable article by Dr. A. J. Schofield, entitled, "An Inquiry into the Formation of Habit in Man." In each case remarks by well-known scholars are appended. The address of the Institute is, 8, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The resignation is announced of Rev. C. H. V. Gollmer, C.M.S. missionary at Nazareth.

A new church was opened on Thursday for the growing district of Kirkham, Wesham.

Archdeacon Bardsley has declined the important charge of Spofforth offered him, as he feels his work lies in Bradford.

Rev. A. T. Warne, B.A., curate-in-charge of the mission church of St. Barnabas, Poulton-le-Sands, has accepted the rectory of Quernmore.

The Dean of Canterbury, who has returned to his work in excellent health, is taking his full part in the services, and preaching in the village churches.

The work in the populous parish of Aston, Birmingham, is being carried on with great vigour. A new mission hall (the third in the parish) was opened last week.

Canon Edmonds, the well-known authority on Bible translational work, is giving a course of lectures at Kingsbridge on "The Spread of the Bible in the World."

The Duke and Duchess of Devonshire have laid the foundation-stone of a new church at Barrow Hill, Staveley, near the extensive works of the Staveley Coal and Iron Company.

The Dean of Durham having announced his intention to resign the deanery early in November, Dr. G. W. Kitchin, now Dean of Winchester, has been appointed to succeed him.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone, on Thursday, gave an address on missionary work amongst the heathen and native Christians in that part of the country, at the residence of Sir Matthew Dodsworth, The Cedars, Harrogate.

Not long ago a missionary meeting was held of deaf and dumb people at South Shields, when Rev. H. E. Fox, of Durham, gave a lecture on Uganda. The lecture was "interpreted" to the audience, who appreciated it keenly.

The short weekly mid-day services on Wednesdays in St. Swithin's Church have been resumed. Addresses during October will be given by the Bishop of Honduras, Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot, Revs. Henry Sharpe, B.D., and C. H. Banning.

The C.M.S. has accepted an offer of service from Mr. Arthur C. Clarke, B.A., Emmanuel College, Cambridge. Mr. Richard Maynard and Miss M. Searle, of the Victoria (New South Wales) Association, have also been accepted as missionaries of the Society.

All Evangelical ministers are asked to observe November 4 as Protestant Sunday. The Protestant Defence Brigade are putting forth great efforts to secure as many sermons as possible. Mr. John Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row, will be glad to hear from clergy and ministers of other denominations who decide to join the movement.

The Record states that many of the farmers in Kent, being solicitous about the religious interests of the grotesque colonies which hop-picking brings into their midst, arrange for open-air services to be held near the huts, tents, or barns, as the case may be, which either the vicar, a missionary, or sometimes the farmer himself will conduct. Very frequently there is a large attendance at these gatherings.

Thanks to the untiring energy and unique personality of the new vicar, Rev. Ernest N. Sharpe, things are moving forward most encouragingly in Emmanuel Parish, West Hampstead, the Evangelical traditions of the church being fully maintained. Should the congregations increase at the present rate, and the influence of the church thus extend, Mr. Sharpe (who is at present without a colleague) will very soon be confronted with that always trying problem of enlarging the building.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. James Andrews has celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his pastorate at Woburn.

Rev. Henry Harries, of Clapton-park, having recovered from the injury to his leg, has resumed his duties.

Rev. James T. Davies, who has entered on the pastorate at Bethnal Green, is preaching to large congregations.

The Highbury Church, Bristol, has, at its annual collection for the London Missionary Society, raised £969.

An old Baptist chapel at Chesterton, near Newcastle-under-Lyme, has been acquired by the Congregationalists.

The two East-end churches, Mile-end-road and Sion, united in February, are now known as the Brunswick Congregational Church, Whitechapel-road. Rev. T. P. Lansdown (late of Cricklewood) has accepted the pastorate.

At the autumnal meeting of the Liverpool district of the Lancashire Congregational Union, held at Ashton-in-Makerfield on Tuesday, an address was delivered by Rev. E. R. Barrett, B.A., Liverpool, on "The Reunion of the Churches, but not via Grindelwald."

Canon Fremantle preached at Crossbrook-street, Cheshunt, on Sunday week, speaking to a crowded congregation on "The Duties of Christians to Public and Social Life." The pastor, Rev. David Thomas, said one such example of catholicity was worth a hundred sermons on Christian Union.

Miss Evans, of Bristol, gave a lecture on Vivisection, on Wednesday week, in the Congregational church, Keswick. Miss Evans showed how, from a scientific point of view the good results claimed by supporters of vivisection were fruitless and misleading. She also defended the rights of dumb animals.

At the recognition of Rev. W. G. Greig at Thames Ditton, the vicar (Rev. E. H. Rogers) delivered an address, in which he expressed his gratification at the advances which had, in past years, been made towards complete religious equality. He hoped to see the day when all would be allowed to meet at the same communion table.

Miss Ellen Sadler, a member of Park Church, Crouch End (Rev. A. Rowland), being about to leave for China, to join her father, Rev. James Sadler, at Amoy in the work of the London Missionary Society, a largely-attended valedictory meeting was held on Monday evening in the Corbin Hall of Park Chapel, when she was publicly set apart for foreign mission work.

The Northern Division of the Devonshire Union held its meetings last week, when Mr. G. A. Billson, M.P., delivered an address on "The Mission of the Free Churches to Maintain the Principles of Protestantism in the Face of the Widespread Sacerdotalism which Prevails To-day." Rev. C. Deeble read a paper on "The Inner Life of the Churches: Is it What it Ought to Be?" Rev. Urijah R. Thomas gave an address on "The Reserve of Force which Lies Unutilised in Our Churches."

The London Missionary Society held its anniversary services in Leeds last week. The Sunday services were well attended. Revs. W. R. Le Quesne (Calcutta); Jas. Chalmers (New Guinea); and W. Owen (Wuchang) preached. Last Sunday evening Mr. Chalmers, who occupied Queen-street pulpit, instead of taking a text, gave an account of his experiences as a missionary in New Guinea, and thrilled his congregation as he told of the narrow escapes he had had from being killed and eaten by cannibals.

Dr. Herber Evans, preaching at the jubilee of Albion Church, Southampton, on "Who is to Possess the Future?" urged that power always moves in the direction of hope. A kind of educated paganism cannot win the future, for it has no hope. Would the so-called "advanced thinkers" possess the future? If so, it is time to write another book, "Is Life Worth Living?" Look at the increase of suicides—eighteen recorded the other day in one London newspaper, nine in a single day in Vienna. Life is becoming burdensome. Poets are singing, "It is better not to be." Philosophers are saying the best thing that could happen would be cessation of life. That is what it comes to without Christ, who alone has hope for all, and who will possess the future without a rival.

Calls.—Rev. Thomas Charke, to Horbury, Notting Hill; Rev. W. H. Muncaster, of Beccles, to Mayers Green, West Bromwich; Rev. W. Johnstone, of Kirkstall, to Holywell Green, Halifax.

Resignations.—Rev. Frank Lansdown, of Chard; Rev. R. Jackson, of Petworth; Rev. G. Walker, of Long Melford.

BAPTIST.

Rev. J. J. Knight, of Cardiff, has entered on the pastorate at Broad-street, Ross.

A ten days' mission has been concluded by Mr. Henry Thorne in Mount Pleasant Church, Northampton.

Rev. Walter Hackney, the well-known pastor of Graham-street Church, Birmingham, whose serious illness we noticed last week, is now out of danger.

Rev. F. J. Flatt has completed a six years' pastorate at West-street Chapel, Dunstable. He begins his labours at Boxmoor, Herts, on Sunday next.

Northcote-road Church, Wandsworth-common, reports the addition of 107 members during the year, making a total of 278 received during the present pastorate, and a present membership of 438.

A sad affair is reported from Colwyn Bay, on the North Wales coast. Rev. E. C. Evans, Welsh Baptist minister, was walking by the seashore, when he was seized with a fit of coughing, and fell down and expired immediately.

At a committee meeting of the Missionary Society, the question of the removal of the Delhi Training Institution for native preachers to a more healthy position came up for consideration, and steps were taken for immediate action.

On Sunday afternoons, Pastor H. E. Stone, of Abbey-road, St. John's Wood, has commenced a series of services at the Eyre Arms Hall, Finchley-road. The hall was filled at the opening service, and several well-known local workers were present.

With a view to reach those not regularly attending a place of worship, the members of Immanuel Church, Southsea, closed their chapel on Sunday week, and held the service in Victoria Hall, a spacious building in the centre of the town, where the pastor, Rev. John Kemp, preached to a large audience.

Rev. R. H. Carson Graham reports his safe arrival at San Salvador, and the fairly good health of Rev. T. and Mrs. Lewis, the missionaries in charge. According to most recent intelligence, over 250 children are being daily taught in the schools, and the people in several towns are begging for teachers.

The annual meeting of the Birmingham auxiliary of the Baptist Missionary Society was held last week at Carr's-lane Chapel. Rev. J. Jenkyn Brown presided. Rev. R. D. Darby said the expense of missions could cause no wonder when it was remembered that it took £3 or £4 to get half-a-crown's worth of goods to some of the inland mission stations.

Calls.—Rev. Robert Frame to Ebenezer, Birkenhead; Mr. John Andrews to Malden, Ampthill; Rev. D. Chinnery to Melbourne, Derbyshire.

Resignation.—Rev. W. Woods, of George-street, Nottingham.

METHODIST.

A united mission is to be held in the Huddersfield Wesleyan chapels in February next.

The New Connexion Methodists are making extensive preparations for the celebration of their centenary.

Great preparations are being made in Manchester for the United Wesleyans' Mission, to be held from November 2.

Rev. W. H. Tindall recommenced for the season, on Sunday evening, 7 p.m., his lantern services in Craven Chapel.

A revival is watering the Free Methodist Churches around, Swindon. Souls are being converted at the different places, and the societies are being quickened.

There are now eight sisters connected with Bowron House who are devoting their time to special evangelistic work, and another is about to be called to the work.

Rev. W. E. Soothill and Mrs. Soothill, accompanied by Mr. Woolfenden, sailed for China on Saturday. Valedictory services were held at Rochdale and Liverpool.

A successful twelve days' mission has just been conducted by Rev. George Hooper, Connexional evangelist, at Swainegreen Chapel, Bradford. The chapel has been filled on week evenings.

The leading missionary of the Zambezi Missionary party, Rev. R. Buckenham, has met with an accident. He was better when the news was sent, and the committee hope to receive more reassuring news by an early mail.

The third annual meeting of the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society was held on Monday evening in the Saloon Room of the Mission House. The President of the Conference took the chair, and Revs. C. H. Kelly, H. J. Piggott, and J. A. Vanes were the speakers.

Rev. R. Culley has written his Annual Letter to Sunday scholars and young people for Children's Day. The letter, entitled "The Right Step," is published by the Wesleyan Sunday-school Union. From 70,000 to 100,000 of Mr. Culley's letters have been annually sold during the last five years. He has a special gift in writing for young people, a most difficult kind of work.

The anniversary of the Irwell-street Mission, Manchester, was a triumphant success last week, in spite of the surrounding hot-bed of Roman Catholicism and the terrible effects of drink and sin. The Sunday services were well attended; it was a most encouraging sight to those who knew Irwell-street in the good old times to see the grand old chapel so well filled again. The meeting on Monday was equally successful.

During recent years Llanrwst has sustained severe losses in the deaths of many of its gifted and consecrated men. The record of Llanrwst for preachers of originality and power, of mighty men of prayer, is probably unequalled in Wales. "Dr. Owen," as he was affectionately called, ranked for years among the first of Welsh preachers. His sermons were original, and characterised by extensive reading, accurate knowledge of human knowledge, and ardent loyalty to Evangelical truth. After a long and honoured career this good worker has passed away, and the church has sustained another serious loss.

PRESBYTERIAN.

There is a proposal to commence Presbyterian services at Folkestone and Ramsgate.

The Marquis of Zetland has promised to contribute the sum necessary to free the Presbyterian Church at Redcar from debt.

Rev. J. Boone Cantley, a probationer of the Irish Presbyterian Church, has been ordained as colleague and successor to Rev. J. G. Potter.

The anniversary services in connection with the Finchley Church were held last Sunday in the morning by Rev. Henry Crombie, and in the evening by Rev. Dr. J. Monro Gibson.

The College Jubilee in November will likewise mark the close of the first half-century of the Church's revived existence. It is proposed in connection to have an exhibition of portraits, MSS., and other objects of personal or historical interest connected with Presbyterianism in England.

Rev. Alexander Connell has resumed his ministry at Regent-square Church after his vacation. It is now a year since he settled at Regent-square, and he testifies to having been greatly encouraged in his work there, many young people especially having identified themselves with the congregation.

Calls.—Rev. J. Victor Logan, of Sunderland, to Jarrow; Rev. J. Todd, of Duns, to Moffat; Rev. J. A. Anderson, of Ballywater, to West Calder; Rev. A. S. Martin to Scone parish church.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Charles D. Terrell and wife, of India, have been giving a description of their work at Sehore, C.P., to a meeting of Friends in Bristol. The meeting-house was crowded, and there was a warm interest taken in the proceedings.

John T. Dorland has been addressing the Friends of Darlington on "Some Present-day Needs of the Society of Friends," and in doing so has spoken some searching truths for all. The need for greater liberality was spoken of, and we were reminded that we owed, not OWNED, our wealth.

A remarkable opening for the Gospel is reported from Tung Chwan Fu, China, a district that it has seemed impossible to reach before; but way has been opened through the attendance of R. J. Davidson to give medical relief to a sick old man, who lived at Yang Tao Chi. Friends, it is hoped, will "enter the open door" in the name of Christ.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Only the Indians now remain in England out of the great force present at the Jubilee gatherings.

Special S.A. devotional meetings are now being held every Wednesday afternoon at Steine House, Brighton.

There are now connected with the social wing thirty different industries carried on in London and provincial workshops and factories of the S.A.

In the United States, which General Booth is now visiting, there are 532 corps, 1000 officers, five rescue homes, four food shelters, and fourteen slum posts.

The Hon. Cecil Rhodes, Prime Minister for Cape Colony, has undertaken through Sir Gordon and Lady Sprigg, to furnish the new Salvation Army Home in Cape Town for discharged prisoners. The cost will be over £100.

During the past week six men have been fixed up in permanent situations through the agency of the S.A. Labour Exchange, and forty-eight with temporary work. The number of applications from employers for men continues to increase.

Headquarters is making an appeal for foreign coins to be sent to them in Self-Denial Week. In past years at this particular time large sums have been received in this way, and money practically useless here in England thus put to good account.

Notes and Comments.

In this issue we give the closing instalment of Rev. F. B. Meyer's exposition of the life of Jeremiah. The chapters, collected in book form and carefully revised, will be published in the course of next month. Mr. Meyer will now resume his exposition of the Gospel by John, from chapter xiii. onwards. The first twelve chapters have already been dealt with.

The disturbed condition of the East may well lead Christians to pray for missionaries' lives to be spared, for native Christians to be kept true to the faith, and for all things to be so ordered and governed as to further the spread of the Gospel of peace. Great changes are sure to follow on this tremendous upheaval.

We hope the address on "Present-Day Unbelief," given before the recent Evangelical Alliance Conference by Dr. E. E. Jenkins, and which appears at length on pp. 12 and 13 of our present issue, will receive a careful perusal by all our working readers. The judicious spirit in which Dr. Jenkins deals with the subject is eminently worthy of consideration.

The possibility of living a Christian life separate from this "present evil age" is not increased by the tendency there is to municipalise and nationalise certain forms of trade and sources of income. We cannot believe that the municipalisation of trams which are used on Sundays will be a comfortable arrangement for the consciences of some Christian ratepayers. The nationalisation of railways, if ever effected, will trouble some who object both to be the owners of refreshment bars for the sale of intoxicating drinks, and of trains which run on Sundays. The adoption of the Gothenburg system would bring every Christian ratepayer into the position of part owner and manager of public-houses. It is in these big concerns that conscience is swamped.

At the meetings of the Baptist Union, Rev. A. W. H. Streuli, of Manchester, is reported to have said that "a great deal too much was made of the need of money, while the harvest was ready to be reaped without it. They should go to Christ's methods, and speak to men and women by the wayside and in the public street, in the market-place and in their hovels." Now we believe that a good deal of this kind of work is being done, though none too much, but we think Mr. Streuli is altogether right as to the money. We know some who would not think of voting a penny unless it were actually in the exchequer of a missionary society or in a probable estimate of moneys likely to be received; yet the work is there to be done and the workers to do it. Faith seems to have no place in their system of life. Fancy Mr. Müller refusing an orphan on the ground that he did not think his probable income would justify him in receiving him!

The following paragraph from the American correspondent of The Rock ought to have some meaning for those who will presently be voting for the London School Board election:—

> On Sunday, September 2, many of the Roman Catholic priests in New York City warned their congregations from their pulpits against the public schools, and some went so far as in the Confessional to threaten excommunication where parents continue to send their children to them. One lady was turned out of the Roman Catholic Church very recently in New York because she chose to retain her independence on this question.

Whatever course Romanists may take, it is ultimately for the purpose of obtaining the use of public money for teaching Romanist doctrine.

Archdeacon Farrar said in a recent lecture at Rome, that the first epoch of literature covered six centuries of patristic literature, wherein the supremacy of goodness was conspicuous as opposed to genius and learning. It boasted no historian, no satirist, and no philosopher; it was never so weak, but never so irresistible in its weakness. The Gospel only satisfied the spiritual needs of man; purity and hope were the keynotes of the writings of that age, intellectually at a low level; "ebullient gladness was their unique original secret." This gladness was also the note of the Reformation and of the Evangelical Revival of the last century. The hymns of Germany and of our own country are evidence. A great revival is always attended with an outburst of song from the souls which have been made glad in God.

The puerilities of the High Church party in the matter of dress and ceremonial are amusing or sad, just as you choose to look at them. Dr. Sinker says in The Thinker that he found himself in a church where he heard from the pulpit that "the sequence of liturgical colours was almost, and the leading ecclesiastical vestments quite, of apostolic date." For proof, it was instanced that St. Paul had left his "chasuble" behind him at Troas, and wished for the return of so necessary an article! The general view of antiquity was that the apostle meant his cloak. He was an old man, and the year was waning. "Do thy diligence to come before winter," he urges Timothy. An old man in prison, exposed to the keenness of a Roman winter, might well desire this protection.

We know an old lady who was visited by her High Church vicar, when she first went to reside in his parish, and was threatened with the doom of exclusion from heaven if she did not abandon her Nonconformist church. She met his threat with some wise Christian words. Her daughter, driven one day into his church by stress of weather, heard a sermon from a young curate, on the subject of vestments! It is well to keep in mind what Dr. Sinker says, that no man coming to the subject with unbiassed mind can, he thinks, for a moment doubt that the dress of the early clergy has been gradually and slowly evolved out of the dress of ordinary life, until it became at first merely old-fashioned, and at length purely official; after which, mainly after the age of Charlemagne, and the great development in the power of the Church, the system of increasing elaboration and pomp went steadily on. As an illustration of the truth of Dr. Sinker's contention, readers may see what the Imperial Dictionary says under the word "chasuble."

> Another instance of the union between Church and Stage. Since the country-cousin season set in more than fifty church choirs have had their annual treat at the Royal Aquarium, and in some cases advantage has been taken of the proximity of Westminster Abbey to combine a visit to both edifices. These parties, personally conducted by the clergy, have come from many parts.

Surely the clergy might find some better entertainment for their choirs than taking them to such exhibitions as the Aquarium affords. If the reality is like the pictures on the walls, the outside of the place would appear to be the right side for such as wish to keep themselves "unspotted from the world."

We should imagine that Congregationalists will feel some amazement as they read in last week's Independent the account of the opening services of Christ Church, Wimbledon:—

> Before the service commenced the pastor, Rev. D Blomfield James, Dr. Hunter, of Glasgow, and other ministers, walked in procession from the vestry wearing their black robes and academical hoods, the former two occupying seats in the chairs at the Lord's Table. The offertory having been taken, the "sidesmen" proceeded to the chancel step two by two, where the pastor received the money in the alms dish, afterwards depositing it on the "holy table." Dr. Hunter standing before the table, then pronounced the benediction, afterwards spending a few moments in prayer with his back to the congregation.

Let our Nonconformist friends remember what the Ritualists say: "It is the ritual that teaches; we attach no importance to the sermon."

Why sermons are uninteresting, and why some hearers leave churches before the sermon begins, is the subject on which Canon Diggle writes in The Churchman. He thinks that one of the causes why ordinary sermons are uninteresting is the self-sufficiency of the preacher, not to say his vanity, especially if he has the gift of ready speech, and has in consequence taken no pains to prepare for his solemn work. He says, very truly, that "vanity is destructive of persuasiveness...Humility is the best advocate of every high and sacred cause. The pulpit is the platform of God. A vain man, full of himself, never appears such a monstrous spectacle as when standing upon and speaking from the platform of God." Now this is all very true so far as it goes, but is not the root need of every preacher a hearty enjoyment of the truth he is preaching, and a deep conviction that God has sent him to preach it? Vanity and idleness and self cannot thrive in that atmosphere.

When Canon Diggle goes on to magnify the office of the preacher we are entirely with him, though we cannot agree altogether with the manner of magnifying it which he commends. He says that the teachings of all ages of Christian history conspire with the teachings of the Bible and the Church to magnify the office of preaching as a powerful instrument in controlling the destinies of mankind.

It is one of the first duties of every true preacher to endue himself, by an earnest study of these teachings, with high conceptions both of the nature of his office and of the responsibilities belonging to it...Abasing himself, he will magnify his office. He will summon to his aid every art which can make his preaching tell. Beauty and force of diction, etc., etc.

Now we maintain that this is just the point where so many make a fatal mistake. There is a natural purity and beauty of style which accompanies thought much as the beauty and fragrance of a rose come from a rose tree, but that is a very different thing from labour intended to make preaching tell. Paul, if we rightly understand him, distinctly avoided these rhetorical devices, this preaching with enticing words of man's wisdom, lest the faith of the hearers should stand in the wisdom of man rather than in the power of God.

Cardinal Vaughan has provoked a discussion in The Times on Anglican "orders." He claims for Romish priests, and for them alone, (1) the power "to change bread and wine, so that in their place Jesus Christ becomes truly and substantially present on the altar," to be offered up by said priest as a eucharistic sacrifice to God; and (2) the power "to forgive the sins of men with a Divine efficacy." He proceeds to deny these powers to ministers of the Church of England, and his contention in this respect is corroborated by the fact that a large number (we hope the large majority) of the ministers of that Church do not claim any such faculty or power. For once we are in agreement with the Cardinal: Anglican "orders" confer no supernatural powers. We go further, and challenge the production of any evidence that Roman Catholic "orders" confer "supernatural powers."

The ascended Lord gave to his Church apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministering; He appointed no priests, instituted no empowering or qualifying "orders." About man-made institutions it is well that there should be dispute; but concerning New Testament teaching on the Gospel ministry there can be but little discussion. The claims of Rome and those who pretend to do her mock miracles are manifestly absurd and misleading; and not only contrary to Scripture and reason, but blasphemous in the highest degree, as they exploit the attributes of the Eternal God, diminish the grandeur of the atoning work of Christ, and arrogate the crown-rights of the alone Saviour of men. And for what? That "the Church," as carnal men view it, may have somewhat wherein to boast, and with which to hold in bondage the bodies and souls of men.

Dr. Döllinger's addresses on historical and literary subjects contain passages full of instruction for present times. Knowing well, as he did, the spirit of a dominant church, he could say with great force:—

Genuine, complete equality, as a sentiment prevailing over and penetrating the whole of society, is impossible so long as one church is continually threatening another and ceaselessly proclaiming, as the heathen did to the Christians of old: "Non licet esse vos; your very existence is an evil; whenever the time comes we shall again use all our endeavours for your extermination." So long as such sentiments are entertained by one church, others will not lay aside their arms, and instead of true peace there can never be more than a truce. Thus the question still confronts us which for 1800 years has remained unsolved; the great dispute is still far from being at an end. In America, it is true, scarcely anyone would think seriously of the possibility of a retrograde movement; but it is otherwise in Europe. The tenacity of purpose in those master spirits who set before them the endeavour to bring practice once more into conformity with their theory must not be underrated. The final result cannot be doubtful to anyone capable of understanding the unchanging laws of history.

History has been written in vain, if we do not read the purpose of Rome to be the same as ever. Dr. Döllinger's words have also a wider application.

Public Worship and Prophesying.

By Sir CHARLES KING, Bart.

Since the so-called "Catholic Revival" in the Anglican Church, preaching is too often regarded as of secondary importance, and those who urge that it must ever occupy an honoured place in public worship are so frequently reminded that "preaching is not everything," that it is well to search our Bibles, and see, if not "everything," what it is, and what its place should be in our public services. "To the law and to the testimony," and not to the vain traditions of men, our appeal must ever lie, and if religious teachers "speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them" (Isa. viii. 20).

Although the order of Christian public worship has not been prescribed in the New Testament, yet the great object that Christians should have in view in all their public assemblies for worship is very clearly shown by Paul (1 Cor. xiv.) to be mutual edification. "Seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the Church" (v. 12). All through the chapter the Apostle insists on this as the grand desideratum. His last injunction in the chapter (v. 40), "Let all things be done decently and in order," is often quoted to defend some bit of man-invented ritual, while the "Let all things be done unto edifying" (v. 26) is ignored.

The means of edification are declared by the divinely-inspired apostle to be "prophesying." "He that prophesieth edifieth the church" (v. 4); "Greater is he that prophesieth . . . . that the Church may receive edifying" (v. 5). "Utter by the tongue words easy to be understood" (v. 9); "in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding that I might teach others" (v. 19).

"Prophesying," in the sense of teaching or preaching was a spiritual gift in the Jewish Church as well as in the Christian, and to this part of the prophetic office the Apostle here alludes, "He that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort" (v. 3). Faithful Gospel preaching edifies, or builds up, believers on their most holy faith, exhorts unbelievers to flee from the wrath to come, and comforts the feeble and sorrowful. The effect of such prophesying on one who entered the meeting an unbeliever, or unlearned (i.e., in the faith), would be conviction of sin, and confession with the mouth (v. 24, 25).

No marvel if such blessed effects flow from this spiritual gift, that the Apostle, who exclaimed, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the Gospel" (1 Cor. ix. 16), should exhort his converts to "desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy" (1 Cor. xiv. 1), "covet to prophesy" (v. 39), and to Timothy his most solemn charge is, "Preach the Word" (2 Tim. iv. 1, 2).

From the foregoing and many other passages, it is evident that "the ministry of the Word" (Acts vi. 4) is an indispensable part of public worship, and no one who is not "apt to teach" (1 Tim. iii. 2), no matter what his other gifts and Christian graces may be, is qualified for the ministry. If "by the foolishness of preaching it pleased God to save them that believe" (1 Cor. i. 21), what a solemn responsibility rests on all not to undervalue this the most important branch of ministry.

The Lord is glorified where souls are saved, and his people edified and comforted, and it matters not how splendid the church building, how large the congregation, how "hearty" the services, how beautiful the singing and music, how frequent "the celebrations," and how large the roll of communicants, where these results do not attend the services; and of how many such houses throughout Christendom may it not be sadly but too truly said, "It seemeth to me there is, as it were, a plague in the house" (Lev. xiv. 35).

COLPORTAGE AT THE SEA-SIDE.

Several of the agents of the Christian Colportage Association have been labouring at various sea-side resorts, both amongst visitors and residents. Some of them have sent very cheering reports. Mr. Evans, who visited Bridlington, writes:—

"I sold during August 1433 copies and portions of the Scriptures, and more Gospel books than in past years. I was greatly cheered this year when a man came to my stall to tell me that he bought 'Heavenly Love,' from me in 1891, and had been so wishing to see me to tell me it had been the means of his conversion; that he had sent it to his family, and God used the book to the conversion of six of them.

"One day, a young man was speaking on the sands against the Children's Special Service Mission, trying to set others against the work. I overheard him talking, got hold of him and spoke to him about his soul, and gave him the little book, 'No Doubts.' The next day he came to me pointing out some passages in it, and said 'That's me! That's me!' and so on. I had a further earnest talk with him, and sold him 'Duncan Matheson,' and God used that book to his conversion. I have received a very nice letter from him since, telling me he has joined a Church and is now a Sunday-school teacher."

Another colporteur writes from Herne Bay:—"I am glad to be able to report much blessing on the work. One lady came up to my stall, and, seeing 'Grace and Truth,' spoke of the blessing she and two or three of her lady friends had received by the reading of it. Another lady spoke of 'The Saint and his Saviour.' She said it was a continual feast to her soul. I have heard a good many speak of the good done by the penny books. One lady, yesterday, spoke of 'Promoted,' and bought some to give away. I am glad to say that over 300 Bibles and Testaments have been sold this month."

HEBREW-CHRISTIAN TESTIMONY TO ISRAEL.

In the new issue of The Scattered Nation (2d. Morgan & Scott), the Occasional Record of Hebrew-Christian Testimony to Israel, conducted by Revs. C. A. Schönberger and D. Baron, we read:—"We have of late used the post for reaching the more independent class of Jews all over London. In an 'Open Letter' we bring before them the claims of Christ, and reasons why we, as Jews, not only believe on Him, but devote our life in the service of his Gospel." The letter is a model of what such communications should be. The writers say:—"With your shibboleth, 'God is One,' a Unity, you think to be true Israelites; but a true Israelite seeks, above everything, to be One with God! To this end is Jesus come—that we should be one with God." Mr. Baron gives further extracts from his journal during his last continental tour, some of the incidents related being deeply interesting. Another booklet by Mr. Baron is The Present Attitude of the Jews in Relation to Christianity. (1d.) It gives a bird's-eye view of the Jewish people. Every page will interest helpers of the mission to Israel. Mr. Baron's address is 23, Grove-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

THE GREAT TROUBLER.—The only disturber of men, of families, cities, kingdoms, worlds, is sin. There is no such troubler, no such traitor to any State, as the wilfully wicked man; no such enemy to the public as the enemy of God.—Wogan.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

A CLOUDED SUNSET.

"Therefore to whom turn I but to Thee, the ineffable Name?
Builder and Maker Thou of houses not made with hands!
What! have fear of change from Thee who art ever the same!
Doubt that thy power can fill the heart that thy power expands?
There never shall be one lost Good! What was, shall live as before;
The Evil is null, is nought, is silence implying sound;
What was good, shall be good, with for evil so much good more;
On the earth the broken arcs—in the heaven a perfect round!" Browning.

If the closing verses of the Book of Jeremiah were written by his own hand, he must have lived for twenty years after the fall of Jerusalem; but they partook of the same infinite sadness as the forty years of his public ministry. It would appear that so far as his outward lot was concerned, the prophet Jeremiah spent a life of more unrelieved sadness than has perhaps fallen to the lot of any other, with the exception of the Divine Lord. This was so apparent to the Jewish commentators on the prophecies of Isaiah, that they applied to him the words of the fifty-third chapter, which tell the story of the Man of Sorrows, who was acquainted with grief, and stood as a sheep dumb before her shearers. Of course, in the light of Calvary, we see the depths of substitutionary suffering in those inimitable words which no mortal could ever realise; but it is nevertheless significant that in any sense they were deemed applicable to Jeremiah.

His sufferings may be classed under three divisions—those recited in the Book of Lamentations, and connected with the Fall of Jerusalem; those connected with the murder of Gedaliah, and the flight into Egypt; and those of the exile there. But amid the salt brine of these bitter experiences, there was always welling up a spring of hope and peace. Oppressed on every side, but not straitened; perplexed, yet not unto despair; pursued, yet not forsaken; smitten down, yet not destroyed; always delivered unto death, yet passing through death into the true life, sure that the Lord would not cast off for ever, but though He caused grief, He would have compassion, according to the multitude of his mercies.

I.—THE DESOLATE CITY.

It is only latterly that any question has been raised as to the authorship of the Book of Lamentations. In the text no author is named, and these exquisite elegiacs have descended to us anonymously. But a very old tradition ascribes them to our prophet. In the Septuagint translation, made in the year 280 B.C., the following introduction is prefixed to the book: "It came to pass, after Israel was taken captive, and Jerusalem made desolate, Jeremiah sat weeping, and lamented this lamentation over Jerusalem." To this the Vulgate adds, "in bitterness of heart-sighing and crying." The cave in which Jeremiah is said to have written them is still shown on the western side of the city; and every Friday the Jews assemble to recite as his these plaintive words, at their wailing-place in Jerusalem, where a few of the old stones still remain. There is no good reason, therefore, for dissociating the Book of Lamentations from the authorship of Jeremiah.

This being so, what a flood of light is cast upon the desolate scene when Nebuzar-adan had completed his work of destruction, and the long lines of captives were already far on their way to Babylon! How many went into exile we have no means of knowing; the number would probably amount to several thousands, principally of the wealthier classes. Only the poor of the people were left to cultivate the land, that it might not revert to an absolute desert. But the population would probably be very sparse, a few peasants scattered over the sites which had teemed with crowds.

The city sat solitary which had been full of people. She had become as a widow. Night and day it seemed to the eye of her patriot lovers as though she were weeping sore, and her tears were upon her cheeks; the holy fire was extinct upon her altars; pilgrims no longer traversed the ways of Zion to attend the appointed feasts; her gates had sunk into the ground; and her habitations were pitilessly destroyed by fire. How often would Jeremiah pass mournfully amid the blackened ruins! Here was the site of the altar; there of the most holy place. That was the palace of David; this the new palace that Jehoiakim had made for himself, with its wide windows and heavy coatings of vermillion; yonder was the court of the guard, where he had suffered so many months of confinement; and there, again, was the place where he had so often stood to warn his people of their sins.

Above and around, nature preserved the unbroken round of her seasons and months, of day and night. The old mountains which had stood around the city in the days of David and Hezekiah glowed with the morning light, and softened in the darkening shadows of the night. The sun arose over Olivet and set in the western sea. The panorama of hill and valley which lay around like the undulations of a sea of rock, spread itself in its accustomed strength and beauty; for Zion had always been beautiful in her situation. But upon the site of the virgin daughter of Zion the stillness of death had fallen, broken only by the cry of jackal and wild dog.

What all this meant to Jeremiah words fail to say. No truer heart ever beat in patriot's bosom. What Phocion felt for Athens, what Savonarola for Florence, what the elder Pitt for England, amid the catastrophes that darkened his latter days—that in a concentrated form must Jeremiah, whose love for country was so intimately bound up with his religious life, have felt and suffered. Anticipating the words of One who in after days was to sit on the same mountain and look across the valley, he might have said, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee! how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate!"

II.—GEDALIAH'S MURDER.

Nebuchadnezzar and his chiefs had evidently been kept closely informed of the state of parties during the siege of Jerusalem; and the king gave definite instructions to his chief officers to take special precautions for the safety of Jeremiah. When the upper city fell into their hands, they sent and took him out of the court of the guard; and he was brought in chains among the other captives to Ramah, about five miles north of Jerusalem.

In a remarkable address which the captain of the guard made to Jeremiah, he acknowledged the retributive justice of Jehovah—one of the many traces of the real religiousness that gave a tone and bearing to these men by which they are altogether removed from the category of ordinary heathen. "The Lord thy God pronounced this evil upon this place, and the Lord hath brought it, and done according as He spake; because ye have sinned against the Lord, and have not obeyed his voice, therefore this thing is come upon you."

The chains were then struck from off his fettered hands, and liberty was given him either to accompany the rest of the people to Babylon, or to go where he chose throughout the land. Ultimately, as he seemed to hesitate as to which direction to take, the Chaldean general urged him to make his home with Gedaliah, to strengthen his hands, and give him the benefit of his counsel in the difficult task to which he had been appointed. Thus again he turned from rest and ease to take the rough path of duty.

Gedaliah was the grandson of Shaphan, king Josiah's secretary, and son of Ahikam, who had been sent to inquire of the prophetess Huldah concerning the newly found book of the law. On a former occasion the hand of Ahikam had rescued Jeremiah from the nobles. Evidently the whole family was bound by the strongest, tenderest ties to the servant of God, imbued with the spirit, and governed by the policy which he enunciated. These principles Gedaliah had consistently followed; and they marked him out, in the judgment of Nebuchadnezzar, as the fittest to be entrusted with the reins of government, and to exert some kind of authority over the scattered remnant. To him, therefore, Jeremiah came, with an allowance of victuals and other marks of the esteem in which the conquerors regarded him.

For a brief interval all went well. The new governor took up his residence at Mizpah, an old fort which Asa had erected three hundred years before, to check the invasion of Baasha. The town stood on a rocky eminence; but the castle was supplied with water from a deep well. Chaldean soldiers gave the show of authority and stability to Gedaliah's rule. To Mizpah the scattered remnant of the Jews began to look with hope. The captains of the forces which were in the fields still holding out, as roving bands, against the conqueror, hastened to swear allegiance to the representative of the Jewish state, and the Jews who had fled to Moab, Edom, and other surrounding peoples, returned out of all places whither they had been driven, and they came to the land of Judah to Gedaliah unto Mizpah.

How glad must Jeremiah have been to see this nucleus of order spreading its influence through the surrounding chaos and confusion; and with what eagerness he must have used all the influence he possessed to aid in the establishment of Gedaliah's authority! The fair dream, however, was rudely dissipated by the treacherous murder of Gedaliah, who seems to have been eminently fitted for his post, by Ishmael, the son of Nethaniah. In the midst of a feast given by the unsuspecting governor, he was slain with the sword, together with all the Jews that were with him and the Chaldean garrison. On the second day after, the red-handed murderers, still thirsting for blood, slew seventy pilgrims who were on their way to weep amid the ruins of Jerusalem, and lay offerings on the site of the ruined altar. The deep well of the keep was choked with bodies, and shortly afterwards Ishmael carried off the king's daughters and all the people that had gathered around Gedaliah, and started with them for the Court of Baalis, the king of the children of Ammon, who was an accomplice in the plot.

It was a bitter disappointment; and to none would the grief of it have been more poignant than to Jeremiah, who in the demolition of this last attempt to effect the peaceable settlement of his country, saw the irreconcileable antagonism of his people against the reign of the King of Babylon. This he knew must last for at least seventy years.

The people themselves appear to have lost heart: for though Johanan and other of the captains of roving bands pursued Ishmael and delivered from his hand all the captives he had taken, and recovered the women and the children, yet none of them dared to return to Mizpah; but like shepherdless sheep, harried by dogs, driven, draggled, panting, and terrified, they resolved to quit their land, and retire southwards, with the intention of fleeing into the land of Egypt, with which during the later days of their national history they had maintained close relations.

They carried Jeremiah with them. They had confidence in his prayers and in his veracity, since his predictions had been verified so often by the event. They knew he stood high in the favour of the Court of Babylon. They believed that his prayers prevailed with God. And, therefore, they regarded him as a shield and defence; a noble representative of the highest hopes and traditions of their people; one in whom the statesman, sage, and prophet mingled in equal proportion.

Halting at the caravanserai of Chimham, whose name recalls David's flight from and return to Jerusalem, the spot where travellers left the frontiers of Palestine for Egypt, the people earnestly debated whether they should go forward or return. They came also to Jeremiah, and asked him to give himself to prayer, that the Lord his God should show them the way wherein they should walk, and the thing they should do. They professed their willingness to be guided entirely by the voice of God, though in this they were probably not sincere. They dealt deceitfully against their own souls by appearing to desire only God's ways; whilst, in point of fact, they were determined to enter into Egypt.

For ten days Jeremiah gave himself to prayer. Then the word of the Lord came unto him, and he summoned the people around him to declare it. Speaking in the name of the Most High, he said: "If ye will still abide in this land, there will He build you, and not pull you down; He will plant you, and not pluck you up. Be not afraid of the king of Babylon, for He is with you to save you, and to deliver you out of his hand." If, on the other hand, they persisted in going into the land of Egypt, in the hope that they would see no more war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor have hunger of bread, then they would be overtaken there by the sword, the famine, and the pestilence; they would be an execration, an astonishment, a curse, and a reproach; and they should never again see their native land. As he spoke he seems to have been sadly aware that during the ten days devoted to intercession on their behalf the prepossession in favour of Egypt had been growing, and that his words would not avail to stay the strong current which was bearing them thither.

So it befel. When he had made an end of peaking all the words wherewith the Lord had sent him to them, the chiefs accused him of speaking falsely, and of misrepresenting the Divine word. Not willing to accuse him flatly of treachery, they suggested that Baruch, who was still accompanying him as his faithful friend, had incited him to urge the return to Canaan with the view of betraying them into the hand of the Chaldeans for death or exile. So the terrified people persued their way to Egypt, and settled at Tahpanhes, which was ten miles across the frontier.

Almost the last ingredient of bitterness in Jeremiah's cup must have been furnished by this pertinacious obstinacy, which would not be controlled by his word, which resisted his entreaties, and suggested that his advice was tinctured by treachery to their best interests. How terrible that they should malign and misunderstand the man who had spent forty years of consistent public ministry in efforts to save them from the effects of evil counsel, and to recall them to a simple and absolute faith in the God of their fathers!

III.—EGYPT.

His life of protest was not yet complete. No sooner had the people settled in their new home than he was led to take great stones in his hand and lay them beneath the mortar in some brickwork which was being laid down at the entry of Pharaoh's palace in Tahpanhes. "On these stones," he said, "the King of Babylon shall set his throne, and spread out his royal pavilion upon them. He shall smite the land of Egypt, and kindle a fire in the houses of its gods, and array himself in her spoils, as easily as a shepherd throws his outer garment around his shoulders. The obelisks of Heliopolis will be also burnt with fire. To have come here, therefore, is not to escape the dreaded foe, but to throw yourselves into his arms."

Some years must have followed of which we have no record, and during which the great king was engaged in the siege of Tyre, and therefore unable to pursue his plans against Pharaoh. During this time the Jews scattered over a wide extent of territory, so that colonies were formed in Upper as well as Lower Egypt, all of which became deeply infected with the prevailing idolatries and customs around them. Notwithstanding all the bitter experiences which had befallen them in consequence of their idolatries, they burnt incense unto the gods of Egypt, and repeated the abominations which had brought such disaster and suffering upon their nation.

Taking advantage, therefore, of a great convocation at some idolatrous festival, Jeremiah warned them of the inevitable fate which must overtake them in Egypt, as it had befallen them in Jerusalem. "Behold," said the faithful prophet, "God will punish you who dwell in the land of Egypt as He punished Jerusalem, by sword, by famine, and by pestilence; so that none of the remnant of Judah, which are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall escape, or remain, or return to the land of Judah to dwell there."

A severe altercation then ensued. The men indignantly protested that they would still burn incense unto the queen of heaven as they had done in the streets of Jerusalem; and they even ascribed the evils that had befallen them to their discontinuance of this custom. Jeremiah, on the other hand, grey with age, his face marred with suffering, an old man now, did not hesitate to insist, in the name of the God he served so faithfully, that the sufferings of the people were due, not to their discontinuance of idolatry, but to their persistence in its unholy rites. "Because ye have burned incense and sinned against the Lord, and have not walked in his law, his statutes or his testimonies, therefore is this evil happened unto you, as it is this day." He went on to predict the invasion of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar, which took place in the year B.C. 568, and which resulted, as Josephus tells us, in the carrying off to Babylon of the remnant of Jews who had, against Jeremiah's advice, fled there for refuge. So it was proved whose word should stand, God's or theirs.

Through all these dark and painful experiences, the soul of Jeremiah quieted itself as a weaned babe. When he said his strength was perished, still his expectation was from the Lord. When his soul remembered its wormwood and gall, he recalled to mind the covenant, ordered in all things, and sure; therefore he had hope. The Lord was his portion, and he hoped and quietly waited for the salvation of God. He knew that God would not cast off for ever; but though He caused grief, yet He would have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies. He knew that his Redeemer lived, who would arise for his cause, and render a recompense to his foes. He looked far away beyond the mist of years, and saw the expiry of the sentence of captivity; the return of his people; the rebuilding of the city; the holy and blessed condition of its inhabitants; the glorious reign of the Branch, the scion of David's stock; the new covenant, before which the old should vanish away. Probably, therefore, his days were not all dark; but aglow with the first rays of the Sun of Righteousness, smiting the Alpine peaks of his holy and loyal spirit. The Comforter must have come to him. God, who comforteth those that are cast down, must have spoken words of balm and tender peace. Never yet in the history of the world has He permitted his servants to sink in unrelieved and hopeless midnight. Unto the upright there always arises light in the darkness. The gloomiest hours that ever brooded over the Son of Man broke up with the cry, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

If these words should be read by some whose life, like Jeremiah's, has been draped with curtains of sombre hue, shutting out the glad light of day, who have trodden the path of sorrow and the valley of shadow, let them know that nothing brings men into such intimate relationship with the Spirit of God, and that to none does the Infinite One stoop so closely, as to those that are sore broken on the wheel of affliction. It is only when we fall into the ground and die, that we cease to abide alone, and begin to bear much fruit. Do not try to feel resigned. Will resignation. Submit yourself under the mighty hand of God. If you can say nothing else, fill your nights and days with the cry or sob of "Father, not my will, but thine be done." Never doubt the love of God. Never suppose for a moment that He has forgotten or forsaken. Never yield to the suggestion of the adversary that the harvests which you are to garner could have been procured at any less cost. As for God, his way is perfect, and He makes our way perfect.

Scripture says nothing about the death of Jeremiah. Whether it took place, as Christian tradition affirms, by stoning in Egypt, or whether he breathed out his soul beneath the faithful tendance of Baruch, in some quiet chamber of death, we cannot tell. The Bible makes comparatively little of death-scenes, that it may throw into greater prominence the prolonged narrative of the One Death, which has abolished death. God's chief interest is focussed on the life and work of his servants. What they did, said, and suffered, is more to Him than how they surrendered their lives at his bidding. Indeed, to know how a man has lived is to make us largely indifferent of information regarding his last hours. The sculptured column projects its shaft in perfect symmetry upward from the earth, though we may not be able to follow it because the mass of waving verdure veils it from our gaze. But we know it is beautiful, and in perfect harmony with all we behold.

But how gladly did the prophet close his eyes upon the wreck that sin had wrought on the chosen people, and open them on the land where neither sin, nor death, nor the sight and sound of war break the perfect rest! What a look of surprise and rapture must have settled upon the worn face, the expression of the last glad vision of the soul, as it passed out from the body of corruption, worn and weary with the long conflict, to hear the "Well done" and welcome of God.

PLATELAYERS.—Miss Ballard, Walton-on-Thames, Surrey, hon. sec. of the Mission to Platelayers, writes, asking the sympathy and interest of our readers in the work. She hopes that some will undertake to supply these men with monthly packets of Gospel literature, and be a friend to them. The effort is connected with the Railway Mission. There are the names of hundreds of men in the book, with no one to supply them with packets.

THE NEGLECTED RICH.—With reference to the recent communications on this subject, Mr. J. R. Mackenzie, secretary of the Monthly Tract Society, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., writes drawing attention to the operations of the Society, which are directed to the spiritual welfare of the well-to-do classes of the community. A new tract is sent each month through the post to many persons in that station of life, and numerous instances of blessing have resulted.

"TO SERVE THE LIVING...GOD."

AT SALISBURY CONFERENCE.—BY COL. MORTON.

My first attempt is to remind you that He to whom we have turned from idols to serve is alive. "He was dead, but alive again." He says: "Fear not, I am the first and the last, and the Living One; and I was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, and I have the keys of death and of Hades" (Rev. i. 18, R.V.). (Mark the transposition in the revised rendering.)

Many of us—I certainly—have often forgotten this obvious truth, that God is living, at least the practice of many comes very far short of their belief, if judged by their every-day lives. Moses (Deut. v. 26), David (1 Sam. xvii. 26-36, Ps. xlii. 2, Ps. lxxxiv. 2), Hezekiah (Isa. xxxvii. 4), Jeremiah (x. 1-11) were fully persuaded of this all-important fact. Even the heathen kings, Nebuchadnezzar and Darius, were effectually taught it. Blessed be God, we as believers in his dear Son, in spite of living below our privileges, not only may know the living God, but, far better still, have our dwelling place in God (Ps. xc. 1, and xci. 1); yea! are indeed the temple of the living God, and know ourselves to be the children of the living God (Hos. 1-10; Rom. ix. 25, 26), by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, our Melchizedek, who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life! What privileges are ours!

To serve this living God is our delight as well as our privilege. Because we are sons, we are servants. In 2 Tim. ii. the gradation is from son to servant, v. 1, son; v. 2, trustee; v. 3, good soldier; v. 5, athlete; v. 6, husbandman; v. 15, workman; v. 21, vessel; v. 24, the culminating point, servant. This service is perfect freedom because it proceeds from love, and from a right conception of Him we serve.

In Matt. xxv. 24, we read of a life wrecked from the beginning, only because of a wrong conception of the character of the Master. Here are the four steps:—(1) I knew Thee, Lord! (2) I was afraid and went and buried my talent. (3) The obvious sequence. (4) Take therefore the talent from him. Cast him out.

Notice the four grades of the good and faithful servants:—(1) I knew Thee as manifested in thy dear Son. (2) I lovingly laid out my talents for Thee. (3) Give him more. (4) Lead him into the joy of his Lord. In this parable of the entrusted Talents we see the bondage of the slave, in contrast with the joyous service of the free man. I like the crest of the Moravian Church, an ox, between an altar and a plough, "Sacrifice or Service—ready, Lord, for either!"

But, it may be asked—With what shall I serve? Rom. xii. 12 informs us. As priests in God's Temple it is meet that we present a sacrifice. The sacrifice—our bodies, and that our rational service. Mr. Wilkinson says he never asks anyone now—Is your soul saved? He asks—Are you saved? Body, soul, and spirit, everything about you! But where am I to get an example of such service? Isa. xlii. is the only reply, BEHOLD MY SERVANT. His service was perfect, and He is our only model and example.

One last thought I should like to pass on to you, which I got from Rev. D. B. Hankin at the reopening of the Mildmay Cottage Hospital lately. He said to this effect, "And are you willing to work for the Lord alone, unknown, unthanked, and unpraised by men? God's true servants have always been ready to take this place. We read of the twelve apostles, and we know about some of them, but I really cannot conceive who James, the son of Alphæus, and Lebbæus, whose surname was Thaddæus, were, or what they did! But then I read in Rev. xxi. 14 that "the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb!"

The Master praises—what are men?

PUTNEY.—A meeting in support of the Lord's Day Rest Association, was held last week in the Werter-road Chapel. Mr. Thos. Wheatley said that "It is computed that 100,000 sermons are delivered in England and Wales on the Lord's day, and 7,000,000 scholars are instructed by 700,000 teachers in addition. Is England prepared to sacrifice this vast agency in the inculcation of morality?" Before closing, he related an experiment made by continental physicians on the effect of continuous labour, and maintained that the rest of the one day in seven was necessary for the physical frame.

ON THE LORD'S SUPPER.

By Dr. ALEXANDER MACLAREN.*

". . . . Ye do show the Lord's death till He come."
1 Cor. xi. 26.

These words occur in the course of the oldest narrative of the institution of the Lord's Supper. The Apostle declares that he received his information directly from Jesus Christ. So that we have here an independent witness to the facts. The testimony carries us back beyond the date of the earliest of our existing Gospels, and brings us within five-and-twenty years of the Crucifixion. By that early period, then, the Lord's Supper was universally observed; and not only so, but it had been in existence long enough to have been corrupted. The corruptions are instructive, as is also the apostolic method of dealing with them.

The abuses to which the Apostle refers, and which are his sole reason for mentioning the Lord's Supper at all, are mainly two, both of which cast great light on the earliest forms of the ordinance. Some Corinthians were accustomed to make it an occasion for gluttony and intoxication, and some were accustomed to eat, as the Apostle says, "their own supper," so breaking the unity which the rite was in part intended to express.

How would it have been possible for abuses of that sort to arise, unless the first form of the observance of the Lord's Supper had been associated with a common meal, and the domestic aspect been prominent in it? And how would individual hurry in partaking each one of his own supper have been possible, if there had been present an officiating priest to do his magic ere the rite could be observed? It is a strange picture, to our eyes, which necessarily arises from the consideration of these two abuses. And it is a long road from the upper room where the Corinthian Church met, to the "tremendous sacrifice of the Mass."

The Apostle's way of dealing with the abuses is quite as remarkable as they are, and quite as illuminative, as I think, as to the true significance and sacredness of this ordinance. I simply take the words before us as they lie, noting the three points which he emphasises in order to enforce his doctrine of the sanctity of the Lord's Supper. It is a proclamation. It is a proclamation of the death of Christ. It is a proclamation perpetually "till He come." That is all, and he thinks it is enough.

Throughout this whole context there is not a single word that goes beyond such a conception of the Lord's Supper. It is a memorial, and, as the Apostle says in the text, the reason why it is a memorial is because it is a proclamation. Or, to put it in other words, by the rite we declare to ourselves and to others the Christian facts, and the declaration helps us to bring them to mind, and to feed upon Him whom they reveal to us.

Nothing beyond that lies in this context. And the omission of any reference to anything unique, mystical—still more, supernatural—in the rite, is all the more remarkable if you remember the purpose that induced the Apostle to speak about it at all—viz., to rebuke irreverence, and to elevate the notions of the Corinthian Christians as to the sanctity of the ordinance. If he had shared the ideas of the people who call themselves his "successors," how could he have refrained from using that conclusive argument, when his purpose was to enforce the sacredness of the rite? The only reason why he did not use it was because he never dreamt of it, nor had it ever entered into the horizon of the Christian consciousness of his day. The sacredness lies in the proclamation which it makes, and that is sacredness enough. . . . .

"Ye do show the Lord's death." Now I need not remind you, I suppose, that there is perhaps no better evidence of an historical fact than the almost contemporaneous origin, and continuous duration, of some commemorative symbolical act, as the history of all nations may tell us. And it should be taken fairly into account, in estimating the historical evidence for the veracity of the Gospel narratives, that almost simultaneously with the events which they profess to record there sprang up, and there has continued to exist ever since, this rite. So I claim this long-practised rite, which can be traced up almost to the open grave of the Master, as a very strong attestation of the historical veracity of the Gospel narratives. Thus, in the lowest sense, we do proclaim the Lord's death.

But the force of the words goes far beyond that. Note, then, and give to it due importance in your conception of what the Gospel truth and Christ's teachings are, the fact that He Himself chose out from all his history his death as the thing which day by day loving hearts were to remember, and hungry souls were to feed on. Why was that? Why was it that He passed by all the rest and fixed on that? It seems to me that the ordinance of the Lord's Supper ought to exercise the influence of a barrier against all attempts to minimise or to diminish the significance and the importance of Christ's death. What do churches which have ceased to proclaim the full doctrine that the death of Christ is the life of the world, do with that rite? They neglect it, or let it drop into desuetude, or explain it away by all sorts of obviously insufficient explanations. But there it stands. Not his words of gentleness; not his deeds of power; not his teachings of wisdom and of truth; not his revelation of God by the beauty of a perfected humanity and the patience of inexhaustible tenderness, are what He desires to be remembered by; but that death upon the cross. Surely, that indicates a unique influence and power as residing there.

And that same conviction is enforced if we remember that the showing of the Lord's death, which is accomplished in this rite, shows it under very distinct conditions, explanatory of its meaning and power. For the duplication of the memorials into the bread and the wine taken separately indidates a death by violence; and the language of the institution

POINTS US TO DEEP MYSTERIES

—the body "broken for you"—and the "blood shed for the remission of sins." The same idea is conveyed by the associations which our Lord was careful to establish between this feast of the Christian Church and the Passover feast of the Jewish. He swept aside the sacrifice that was made for the redemption of Israel from the captivity of Egypt, and He said "Forget the shadow and remember the substance; forget the sacrifice that was made of the Lamb, unbroken in bone, and remember the other of Him whose body was given for you, the Lamb of God, the Passover for the sins of the world."

"Till He come." All symbolical worship carries in itself the witness of its own cessation, and points onward to the time when it shall not be needed. It is, so to speak, a concession to sense; it is a confession of weakness. It is, if not inconsistent with, at least in some measure incongruous with, the highest genius of the Christian dispensation. That is no reason for precipitate dispensing with external form. No man can judge another in regard of that matter. There is need for a great deal more charity, both on the side of those who incline to the Quaker freedom from all ritual, and of those who incline by natural disposition to the other side, than is usually practised. It is no proof of spiritual immaturity to try to do without the help of external rites. It is no proof of spiritual immaturity to cleave to them, if only it be distinctly understood that the whole value of them lies, not in what they are, but in what they signify. But still the existence of symbolical worship is a prophecy of its own cessation. It digs its own grave, as it were; and just because here we need the bread and wine to help us to remember the death, the taking of these, in compliance with that temporary necessity, itself carries our thoughts, or ought to carry them, onward to the time when, Christ Himself being present with his Church, and we sitting at his table in his kingdom, the symbols shall be no more needed. "I saw no temple therein." "Ye do show . . . till He come."

The one question for us all is, "Do I feed upon Jesus Christ? Do I discern that body as broken for and given to me? Do I know that my sins are remitted by the shedding of his blood?" No participation in outward rites will bring or sustain the spiritual life. Partaking of Jesus Christ alone can do that, and rites help us to partake of Him in the measure in which they bring his death to heart and mind, and so help faith to grasp it as the means of our salvation. His solemn words, "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life," are degraded when they are understood as referring to the external ordinance. In the same conversation He Himself interpreted them when he said, "He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life." "Believe and thou hast eaten," said Augustine. "Eat, and ye shall live for ever," says Jesus Christ.

A PROTESTANT SICILIAN CHURCH.

A Protestant place of worship has been built and opened in the intensely Romish town of Girgenti, in the Sicilian province of that name. Pastor O. Golia-Mauro, whose "Sketches from Sicily" have interested our readers, sends an account of the many hindrances that were interposed by the priests and their abettors; nevertheless, the church was duly opened. In speaking of the opening, the pastor says:—

It was only after surmounting a good many obstacles that the opening of our place of worship really took place. Large printed bills announced the event throughout the town, but what difficulty they caused! The printers generally refused to print them: the only one who could be induced to undertake the order (and that solely for the little sum it would bring him), said, "I will print them because it is my trade, but I shall be one of the first to tear them down from the walls after." We were obliged to have them posted up at three o'clock in the morning.

That day it poured in torrents, whilst a terrible wind was blowing; nevertheless, our hall was nearly filled. Amongst those present, spies, sent by the priests, were not wanting. They came to hear—so they thought—the insults which the pastor would utter against them. But they were vastly mistaken in their supposition, for these were not even alluded to. The sermon was simply an evangelical explanation of the words of Paul, "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified" (1 Cor. ii. 2), chosen as a programme of the teaching that was to ensue.

A demonstration was organised against us under the direction of a certain fanatical employé, one really famed for his drunkenness and immorality. They commenced by placing opposite our door a madonna, before which on nine consecutive evenings—to the sound of music and the light of large bonfires—all the lowest of the low of the population of Girgenti met together to sing to the Virgin and to invoke curses on the Protestants. On the evening of our services several hundreds of people assembled outside, and vying in their screams and shouts with the tambourines, trumpets, and fiddles which some were playing, cried to the top of their voices, "Long live the Spotless Mary." As I approached to enter the church, the crowd, with hands up, shouted as one man, "Long live Mary, down with the Protestant Pastor." Our entrance was obstructed, and even stones began to fly around our heads.

I thought it then best to call the Carabinier (military police), three of whom immediately came upon the scene. Noise and disorder still continued as before, but we were enabled by their assistance to proceed with our service as usual, and with the doors wider open than ever. The following day I went to see the Prefect, who received me with cordiality, and finding my demands perfectly just, and according to the laws of the land, promised to give his attention to the affair. I also paid a similar visit to the captain of the Carabinieri, with the result that each evening for more than a week after (during which time the demonstrations went on in very much the same outrageous manner), the entrance to the church was guarded by four or six policemen, and the Sunday evening there were even some inside. Nevertheless one night the accomplices of the priests—more clever than the police—succeeded in breaking four of our windows, and during one service they set fire to a great quantity of straw, and threw it inside the entrance, with the hope of igniting the building.

It is easy then to understand that after such popular uproars the Nicodemuses began to hold back, nevertheless the cause of Christ, through the means of a public place of worship—has made a great step in advance in Girgenti.

HOUSE OF REST.—The monthly gatherings at the House of Rest, St. John's Wood, were resumed on Friday. Throughout the day the meetings were earnest and helpful. Rev. Sydenham L. Dixon, fresh from mountain scenes, took as a foundation text Exodus xxiv. 11, and gave an address, in which his recent experiences were spiritualised, and practically applied. After the prayer-meeting Dr. Kate Bushnell delivered a remarkable address, in which the attainments of the Christian, and their full consecration and devotion to God's service, were described in burning words, which went straight to the hearts of all present.

Present Day Unbelief,

AND HOW TO MEET IT.

By REV. DR. EBENEZER JENKINS.

I do not think that the disciples of the faith have any reason to be alarmed either at the character or the prevalency of modern unbelief. There has been a scepticism distinguishing every age of the Christian Church. Sometimes it has been sullen and inert. Where the spirit of the times has been revolutionary, and the minds of men have been in conflict with political change, the dogmas of the Church have generally slept in peace, and unbelief has simply existed as the passive condition of iniquity and ungodliness. At other times it has assumed the active form of inquiry and discussion, especially at the close of a great national struggle or a great war, when the boundaries of empires have been re-adjusted, and perhaps a nation has been liberated from bondage, and new forms of government have been introduced and established. When the old has been compelled to give place to the new, when the ancient landmarks of political doctrine and privilege have been removed, it was inevitable that the Church would not be allowed to escape.

Although Christianity is the mother of freedom, the restraints of her laws, and, it must be confessed, certain ecclesiastical errors of her leaders, have favoured the impression that religion has discouraged intellectual freedom and frowned upon the impulses of advancement. To this it must be added that there is in the human heart a natural dislike to any law that professes to be Divine. St. Paul's account of this enmity satisfies us: "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; and he cannot know them, because they are spiritually judged" (1 Cor. ii. 14). Those who decline to accept Paul's teaching may explain, if they can, how it comes to pass that every mind which thinks at all is conscious of a rebel sentiment against the authority of God and the inner standard of conscience. This in-born repugnance has not only inspired the scepticism which has always assailed the Biblical doctrines of the Church, but has made an honest and impartial examination of those doctrines well-nigh impossible.

At any rate the opposition to Christianity has been conducted in a spirit so combative and remorseless, that nothing has escaped the rigour of every available test. In the attempts to overthrow the faith there have been

TWO FORCES AT WORK.

There is the scholarship and speculation of the learned examining the teaching of revelation, and there is the persecution of rulers testing the fidelity of its witnesses. These two forces, with little variation, have consistently attacked the Church from the beginning. They resisted the testimony and embittered the ministry of our Lord: they assumed incredible activity and fierceness during the career of the Apostles. How remarkable that this first age was the dispensation of miracles; of those very evidences the absence of which in after times was the alleged ground and justification of unbelief. Even the resurrection of our Lord, the most carefully and luminously attested of all the miracles, was disputed by contemporaries, not to mention the fact that where unbelief was inspired and supported by the jealousy of the reigning power, or the pride of the prevailing school of thought, no miracle, however strikingly manifest, was able to shake it; it was simply invincible.

In the discussion of our subject this fact must always be present to our mind. The revelation of Christ belongs not to the ordinary sphere of thought, where propositions are considered upon their merits, and the understanding yields or refuses its assent, according to the proofs by which they are supported. Christian truth is admitted to the mind by another law than mere intellectual apprehension. There are certain dispositions of the heart which

into the processes of intellectual acquisition. There is sympathy with the doctrine presented; there is a willingness to conform to the results of conviction, if conviction should follow; there is that kind of humility and frankness which are the steps of a child's way to knowledge: all these must animate the study of Christian evidence. Our Lord's teaching on this subject is equally precise and profound: "He that willeth to do the will of Him that sent Me, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak from Myself" (John vii. 17). Of similar import is another passage: "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven" (Matt. xviii. 3).

Unbelief is very much the same in every age. There is popular infidelity, which is not so much an intellectual temper as an aspect of enmity to Christ, for there is in it neither sincerity nor learning; and there is serious scepticism, the unbelief of honest minds, which in many cases is a mere halt on the road to faith, but in some few instances is a despairing inability to arbitrate between the contending claims of a certain class of propositions, an infirmity which, very curiously, exists in minds carefully trained and of eminent endowments. These defeated inquiries merit our earnest sympathy, and may be left to his care who is touched with the feeling of every infirmity, be it intellectual or constitutional, that impedes an honest effort to attain a knowledge of the truth. They are not so far from the Kingdom of God as we are apt to imagine.

But while unbelief, as thus classified, is, in principle, the same in all generations, its particular aspect is determined by the character of the age in which it prevails. The unbelief of the masses is tinctured by the doctrines and spirit of contemporary leaders of thought; those doctrines are travestied by the popular drama or novel. The atheism which is gravely proclaimed and defended in the treatise is parodied by the wits of the tavern, and finds its way to the jests and laughter of the comic theatre. We may select an example from the reign of Queen Anne, when literature commanded the same eminence as that which science has achieved in our own time.

THE FLIPPANT, SCOFFING SPIRIT

which infected the unbelief of the people in the beginning of the 18th century descended to them from the speculations of a deistic philosophy and the writings of literary men. It came at last to be considered that the Christian religion was so palpably a human fabrication that its pretensions hardly merited a serious research. The apology of Bishop Butler for writing his Analogy reminds one of the irony of Swift. These are his words, and the attitude of present-day unbelief gives them peculiar significance:—

> It is come, I know not how, to be taken for granted by many persons that Christianity is not so much as a subject of inquiry, but that it is now at length discovered to be fictitious. And accordingly they treat it as if in the present age this were an agreed point among all people of discernment, and nothing remained but to set it up as a principal subject of mirth and ridicule, as it were, by way of reprisals for its having so long interrupted the pleasures of the world.

Those who take a gloomy view of the strength of modern infidelity, and see in the great names that support it, and in the popular forms in which it is made intelligible and attractive to the public, the prospect of another reign of atheism, may remember that following the date of the Analogy there swept over the Churches of England and Scotland that wonderful revival of spiritual life which was awakened by the ministry of Wesley, Whitefield, and others. Christianity rose up like a giant refreshed, and became suddenly triumphant, scattering the prejudices, the arguments, and the resentments of infidelity like chaff, not through the learned defence of apologists such as Butler, Bentley, and Barrow, to whose labours all honour be ascribed, but through the unadorned proclamation of the tidings of grace, accompanied by the ancient power that gave irresistible effect to the simple preaching of the first witnesses of the Cross. New churches sprang up in a night, like Jonah's gourd, but, not like that ephemeron, did they perish in a night, for they are flourishing still.

And yet the unbelief of this day is supposed to present a more formidable front than the scepticism of the last century, or, indeed, of any preceding age. This is partly due to the advance of science; not that there is, or can be, any antagonism between science and Christian truth: for truth is one. Science is the knowledge of facts respecting nature. The methods and resources of inquiry into natural phenomena have enabled scientific men to attain results so new, unexpected, and far-reaching, that the public mind is bewildered by their brilliancy. The students of nature, in seeking for exact knowledge, live themselves in a world of speculation, in certain regions of which only their imagination can attend them, and this pioneer faculty is the inspiration and sometimes the guide of their researches. It is only natural, therefore, that the authority of science, unimpeachable in its own proper domain, should be made to extend to questions that lie outside the rigid walks of scientific analysis.

CHRISTIANITY DOES NOT TEACH SCIENCE,

but the books upon which her revelations are based affirm the history of supernatural events. Science denies the miracle: there is nothing new in this repudiation: the miracle has been denied from the beginning. But if it be maintained that science has adduced any stronger reason for its rejection than that which was debated in the old controversy, we absolutely deny it. It was always insisted that a miracle was impossible. But what was meant by the impossibility of its occurrence? Only this, that what are called the laws of nature must have an unbroken and undeviating ordinance—that nature knows nothing of any suspension of law. Science by illustrating this fact has given it completeness and impressiveness, but she can add nothing to it. Science cannot say that there is no mind above nature; some of her disciples have said it in her name; but in doing it they abuse her authority, and descend from the high province of exact knowledge to the level of speculation.

But while we have nothing to fear from the progress of science, while we rejoice in that progress, and applaud the labours of those whose genius, diligence, and patience have so marvellously extended the boundaries of discovery, it is no less true that popular unbelief has been fortified by what has appeared to be a new authority. People who do not think and cannot reason have an impression that at last science has disposed of revelation; that the hard facts which recent researches have brought to light have dissipated the halo of Divinity with which the imagination of its followers have encircled the Bible, and left the inspired writings bare of any merit other than that of a merely human composition.

This impression has been strengthened by the agnosticism to which certain men of science have imagined themselves driven. Names of scientific renown are caught up and quoted in vindication of an infidel rejection of the Word of God. Literature is pressed into this unhallowed service. Journals are devoted to the propagation of anti-Christian doubt, and novels of considerable artistic merit bring sceptical doctrines into our families, and diffuse them through our circulating libraries.

To those of us who are contending in the great fight of faith the unbelief of working-men is a subject of absorbing solicitude. This Alliance from its foundation has conceived a deep practical interest in the religious welfare of the working classes. I am satisfied that infidelity has no serious hold of the artisans of England. Theirs is for the most part

A NEGATIVE INFIDELITY.

It is not the infidelity of conviction, but of apathy. Their intelligence is just now concerned with politics and with trade combinations. That brutal insensibility and selfish narrowness that used to be marked features in their life are beginning to disappear; and we may often detect in their conduct the presence of large and generous sentiments.

In their clubs the democratic spirit will sometimes prompt them to assume an attitude towards the Christian faith, and emphatically the Christian ministry, which they are ready to disavow if you meet them alone, or visit them in their homes, especially if there happen to rest upon their family the shadow of sickness or bereavement. Their relation to the Church has been rendered more hopeful through the Temperance movement. It is not merely that great numbers of them have been delivered from the debasing tyranny of the public-house; but new habits of sobriety and thrift have awakened self-respect and personal responsibility, and this change has been strengthened and confirmed by themselves engaging in temperance work. This is not only a social renovation, it is a great moral triumph, and is spreading through the crowded city populations of the land. We may, I think, gratefully accept it as advancing the solution of a deep and intricate problem, How to get the artisans of the country and their families into the Church.

We have spoken of present-day unbelief as fortified by what is supposed to be a new authority, the discoveries of science and the countenance of scientific men: we have indicated the measure and the importance of that authority. But the Church itself, the guardian and the exponent of the faith, is in danger of becoming, unwittingly, a minister of unbelief. I am not going to discuss the principles what is known as the Higher Criticism. I do not ink I am called to enter within the precincts of at controversy. I admire the earnest and con-ientious learning that presides over the sacred erature of the Church. There has always been, ere will always continue to be, schools of thought presenting departments of theological research, d different fashions of ecclesiastical taste, not cessarily opposed to each other, but all aiming to press the mind of God, or to improve the edifica-n of public worship. We cannot forget, however, at sometimes these divisions, instead of building the faith of the Church,

HAVE IMPERILLED ITS SAFETY,

d but for the ever-following guardianship of the ngel of the Covenant, the strife of those who bear e Ark of the Lord would long since have de-royed it.

The conflicting views now current among theo-gical leaders on the historical books of the Bible, d on the character of the inspiration pervading it, ve given a kind of poignancy to popular unbelief. hose who have always doubted the supernatural thority of the Word of God, on the common ound of their hostility to everything divine, will fect to see in the disputes of the Church a con-mation of their suspicions. People of this class rely acquaint themselves with the merits of these estions. They are content to imagine that their sistance of the claims of the Bible acquires some ality and importance when men who are the ap-inted interpreters of the Bible cannot agree as to e nature of these claims.

In meeting present-day unbelief the pulpit occu-es our front rank of defence. I am convinced that attacking unbelief from the pulpit is to PREACH RIST. I doubt the wisdom of making the pulpit a ofessor's chair for the purpose, for instance, of fending the Biblical account of the creation from e Darwinian theory of Evolution, or maintaining e accuracy of the sacred writers against the iticism of those who impugn their inspiration. If minister attempt this method of controversy he ould be a great master in it. An imperfect ndling of a sceptical position in the presence of a ngregation will probably add to the number of believers, and even when the treatment of the bject is able and conclusive the tendency of such eaching is to disturb rather than settle the faith the hearers.

At the same time a minister's studies should in-ude, if possible, the whole literature of polemics: r there are many young men and women, the hope the Church, who apply to him for help as they ould consult an oracle. Moreover, the pastor who eps abreast of the learning of the day, and is miliar with the currents of popular doubt, will derstand the intellectual and spiritual needs of s hearers, will anticipate their difficulties by sym-thy, and meet them rather by informal teaching an by logical and technical treatment. I am eaking only of the functions of the pulpit where e limits of a discourse will not admit of an aborate refutation of infidelity, and if the preacher ave his work half done, with the chance of never tempting the other half—perhaps the most impor-nt division of the argument—his congregation will left in a far worse plight than he found them. he simple and direct preaching of the Cross, the tting forth of Jesus, present in every mind, to ring the evidence of that presence to the doubter, sufficient to meet the ordinary unbelief of an sembly, which is probably little more than that adness to faith which no argument can quicken. he assurance of the understanding must come ter all from the demonstration of the Spirit.

But the preacher is linked to his people and to e community by another bond than that of the lpit. He is intimately related to the family, and ere are the children of the Christian home, which almost variably escape the sermon. The most perni-ous impressions will secretly thrive even in our lect families, awakened or fed by the current terature of fiction and journalism. The pastor ust study the children of his flock, or much of his ublic labour will be thrown away. He must cquire their confidence, guide their reading, invite e disclosure of their sceptical misgivings, and escue them from the insidious drift of popular nfidelity.

We have described the unbelief of working-men as something which vanishes when you touch it, but you cannot touch it without first knowing where it lies; and here again private intercourse will do more than preaching. It is everything at first, for, as a rule, working-men do not attend public worship. The attraction that conquers their reluctance is not an ornate service, or a musical entertainment, or a festive tea-meeting, or a Sunday afternoon talk on politics and socialism. Methods like these are just now widely adopted, and not altogether without result.

But they fail for the most part to win the genuine artisan. He is proud and shy, and carries within his heart an ancient prejudice against the parson, the Bible, and the Church—a prejudice inherited and made almost impregnable by the habits and surroundings of his life. And yet, strong and firm as it is, it rests neither upon conviction nor experience. He does not know the parson, he does not read the Bible, he does not enter a church. But a prejudice in which there is no intelligence is not impregnable. Approach the working man with sympathetic respect, show him the friend and not the patron, visit his family, let him see the practical side of Christianity, which is the beautiful gate of the temple, and he will enter in. Let him see the love, the tenderness, and the majesty of Jesus, and, falling down, he will worship God, and acknowledge that God is with you of a truth.

THE LITERATURE OF CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE,

whether in the form of elaborate treatises, sermons, or pamphlets, has done good service in defence of the faith; but unless some new position is assumed by our adversaries demanding an immediate reply, I do not think that very much is to be gained just now by learned apologies. The best way of dealing with those who attack the Word of God is to get them to read it. As the Bible increases the number of its students, it diminishes the number of its enemies. Whether the Revised Versions of the Old and New Testament will take the place in the churches of the land which they were designed to fill may be a matter of doubt; but there can be no question that the labours of the revisers have already borne precious fruit in giving a new stimulus to Bible-reading, resulting in a vast increase in the circulation of the Scriptures.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.

THE capacity of the Fo'c's'le was taxed to its utmost at the last muster of the C.L.B.C., and several had to be refused admittance on account of its crowded state. A blessed time was experienced throughout the meeting. Miss Child gave out the text for the month, "Jesus Himself drew near and went with them." She followed with a few facts about the progress of the work, amongst other items of interest mentioning the presence of one who had within a few hours narrowly escaped death, through his ship colliding with another off Dover, and of one who had lately been at death's door through severe illness.

Rev. John Jameson, of Arundel-square Congregational Church, gave a most practical address on "What it is to be a Christian," which roused the enthusiasm of the seafaring crowd. A deeply moving sight was the presence of a number of people who had been brought to a consistent Christian life through the preaching of Mr. Jameson some years ago when a co-worker with Rev. Peter Thompson. It was indeed heartstirring to hear the testimonies from one and other in rapid succession after Mr. Jameson's address. Amongst them was Captain Blackburne, who lately sacrificed a good position on account of the opium trade.

Much prayer was offered for forthcoming special meetings in connection with the Christian Lifeboat Crew; for many members now laid aside through illness, and for the work of the Lord in the various ports.

"STOPPED BY THE FROST!"—Preaching at Bournemouth upon the subject of "Christian Enthusiasm," Rev. J. Ossian Davies drew a practical lesson from the temporary cessation of work caused by the frost when his church was in course of enlargement. Even so does aggressive work in many a church and the zeal of many a young Christian suddenly or gradually come to a standstill, not for lack of material, workers, or means, but because a spiritual frost has set in.

MISS STEER'S MISSION.

A MOST interesting and sympathetic sketch of the work done in connection with Miss Mary H. Steer's Home for Girls appears in The Sunday Magazine for October. The writer, Miss Mary P. Bolton, after describing different branches of the work, says:—

The success of Miss Steer's work has been due to the fact that, though she is dealing with masses of children, they have each been felt by her to be living, sentient human beings, each with the possibility within her for a good and useful future—each with a soul to cultivate, a heart to develop, a mind to train. To illustrate the wonderful result that training has produced, take as an instance the forty-three children which Miss Steer has received from the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children alone. I am able to say that in no solitary instance has her training failed in its development of the good in a child, however degraded it had become both in mind and in body, owing to the conditions in which it lived.

And it must be understood that Miss Steer does not pick and choose just which cases and what children she will take—the same Society is able to tell that not once in the ten years of its existence has Miss Steer ever refused to take a child from its care, whatever difficulties have encompassed that case, however loathsome has been that child's history. It is a child; it is a girl child in danger—this suffices with Miss Steer, troubled though she is with the sadly mundane yet absolutely needful question to continually confront, that of ways and means.

Never has the taking a child into her heart and into her Home been a matter dependent on how much or how little will be paid with it. That it should need guarding and caring for and protecting, if only from itself, this suffices as an all-powerful claim on Miss Steer's devotion, and gives that child a free entrance into her ever-open door.

It is sad, when the great good done by Miss Steer in this her labour of love is considered, to know how terribly the difficulties of this most difficult of work are increased by the endeavour to make ends meet, the constant living by a faith which, great even though it be, has frequently been tested to the utmost by the lack of the wherewithal to carry on this big undertaking for another week. Yet faith like Miss Steer's has brought its reward, and help has come in the hour of need.

In the simple daily services in the little chapel of the Home is to be found the root of much of the good work that is being done. It is here the girls gradually and well-nigh imperceptibly come to understand what is the groundwork of the love, with patience, the bright, hopeful faith with which they are surrounded. No girl in these Homes says what we have so often heard young folks say, and say drearily and wearily, "We don't like good people because they are not kind." Somehow or other one quite understands and even sympathises with the plaint of such children. Without kindness "goodness" is worth little—the words mean the same thing—but far too often in the upbringing of children this fact seems to be lost sight of.

Miss Steer's girls, however, love the good people about them because they are kind, and by realising, slowly enough it may be, this goodness in the kindness it prompts, they are led to try and serve their Father up in heaven, because Miss Steer serves Him and because He makes her so kind.

THE "LIBERATOR" RELIEF FUND.—Rev. J. Stockwell Watts writes from 16, Farringdon-street, E.C.:—"Some 500 of the most aged and destitute 'Liberator' victims, who are over 70 years of age, have, by the liberality of the donors to this fund, been placed beyond the reach of want, and relieved of anxiety as to their future subsistence. Sufficient money has been invested for their benefit in Consols, which will be wholly expended in providing half-yearly grants for them, as a substitute for their lost dividends as long as they live. But we are compelled to be very apprehensive, owing to the serious falling off in the contributions, as to the ultimate fate of many hundreds of others between sixty and seventy years of age, most of whom are widows and lone women, all destitute, or nearly so, and often invalids. For the past two years the fund has supplied the wherewithal for their existence, but unless many further and substantial donations are forthcoming, these folk must inevitably spend their last days in the workhouse; a fate against which they have striven hard all their lives."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 14.—ZEPHANIAH II.

The Way of Escape (1-3).—The prophet addresses the nation as having no feeling, no desire, and bids the people gather in religious assemblies to seek God, that so they may escape the day of doom which would scatter them as the wind does the chaff. They had not sought the Lord (chap. i. 6), but if they were to do so, meekly seeking his mercy, they would be hid in the day of his anger (1 Peter iv. 17, 18).

The Fate of the Philistines (4-7).—The prophet adduces the fate of neighbouring peoples as an argument why the ungodly should repent. Noonday is the hour of Oriental sleep, the attack, therefore, would be unexpected. Gath had been already destroyed, now Ekron should be obliterated. (5) Another name for the Philistines, because they had sprung from Crete. (6) Instead of large cities and a dense population, the region should be given up to wandering shepherds. (7) The captivity of Israel would be turned again, and they would inherit the land of their ancient foes, but which by covenant was theirs.

The Fate of Moab, Ammon, and Ethiopia (8-12).—God listens to the reproaches of those that hate his people. He may have long patience, but ultimately He will avenge their cause. As these nations had occupied the land of Judah, so they would be given up to nettles and salt. (11) What a striking phrase, "famished idols," as though God would deprive them of their sacrifices and they would die of hunger. (12) Ethiopia stands for Egypt, and represents the southern oppressors of Israel.

The Fate of Assyria (13-15).—Nineveh was destroyed by Babylonians, and ever since the once mighty city has been an utter desolation. The pelican and the porcupine, which are better renderings than cormorant and bittern, cry amid the ruins, and the highly-carved ornamental cedar work is open to the winds of heaven. Nothing seemed so unlikely as that this mighty city, sixty miles in circumference, should thus utterly perish. Let London and New York, and cities like them, beware.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15.—ZEPHANIAH III.

The Sins of Jerusalem (1-7).—Uninfluenced by the punishment of other nations, Jerusalem pursues her course of sin, morally impure, oppressive, refusing instruction, estranged from God, with princes and judges that devoured all they could, with light and treacherous prophets, with priests whose pollutions did violence to the law they professed to maintain. What a picture is this! (5) Yet in the midst of all God was indwelling his beloved city. Morning by morning He dispensed justice. He was constantly, by his prophets, shedding the light of holiness through the city, but the people refused conviction. Is it not thus He lives in our hearts, remonstrating against the evil and trying to win us to a better life? The just Lord was in the midst, but the unjust knew no shame. (6, 7) The judgments on other nations ought to have warned Jerusalem, and thus she would have escaped her fate.

The Day of Vengeance followed by Reformation (8-13).—Awful judgments were on their way, like fire to purge the chosen people, and they would not fail of their destined aim. Their speech would be rid of all mention of idols. They would serve God with one consent. Though dispersed to Egypt, thence they would bring an offering. (11) True contrition follows restoration. (12) It is when we are afflicted and poor that faith is most buoyant. (13) Purged from iniquity, loving truth, those who have passed through the cleansing fires would have at length a time of respite; like a flock they would lie in pastures, fearless of harm.

Golden Days (14-20).—If you are passing through times of fiery trial, learn the lesson carefully, and solace yourself by anticipating the golden sunlight that shall lie upon your path in coming days. Song and shouting, gladness and joy; judgments taken away and enemies cast out; the King come, and evil gone, the mighty God so glad, so near. In his love not mentioning the past; in his joy, singing; in his might, bringing back the captivity, so that those who halt are saved, and He gets Himself a name in all the earth.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16.—HAGGAI I.

Zerubbabel is the Sheshbazzar of Ezra i. 8. He was of the royal line, and appointed governor by Cyrus. Josedech was son of Seraiah, high priest when Jerusalem was taken (2 Kings xxv. 18-21). Haggai means festive.

The Neglected Temple (1-4).—On their return from Babylon, the Jews set themselves to rebuild their homes, leaving the temple of God in ruins. They pretended that they were so interrupted by their enemies that the time had not come; therefore Haggai, and a few months after him Zechariah, were sent to stir them up. Cieled, i.e., wainscotted, indicates the luxury of their homes in dire contrast to the Temple yet level with the ground.

Encouragements to Build (5-11).—The depressed condition of Israel was due, the prophet said, to their neglect of God's house. Reflect, consider, ponder, whether you have not lost rather than gained by making your own interests first. However hard we work, it is to no profit apart from God's blessing. Men who think they cannot afford time or money for God's work, and who concentrate all their energy on self-aggrandisement, will sooner or later rue it. Their savings will leak away, their money-bags have holes, their harvests fail, whereas those that live for God lose nothing. Their boats are given back filled with fish.

The Resumption of Temple-building (12-15).—How much one earnest voice can do! Assured of God's presence and favour, in three weeks the whole land awoke. But note the co-operation of God's Spirit with the words of his servant, "the Lord stirred up." Let us ever seek and rely on the Divine co-operation.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17.—HAGGAI II.

The Glory of the Second House (1-9).—People were disposed to mourn over the inferiority of the new temple to the first. (4) Such mourning weakened them; hence the summons to be strong. When God is beside us, and his presence is realised, we touch the source of strength. If Christ is really within, there is nothing we are not strong enough to do or bear. (5) How wonderful that in spite of all their rebellion and exile, God's spirit was still among them. God cannot break his covenant promise. (6, 7) Quoted Heb. xii. 26-28. This little while was about 517 years—but short in the estimation of the Eternal. This shaking may refer to political revolution, or the overthrow of the Jewish Levitical system. The earth may refer to the former, the heaven to the latter. As great commotions ushered in the first, similar ones shall the second advent. Though men do not realise it, the one cry of the human heart is for Christ. The anguish around us to-day, the wars and rumours of wars, revolution and tumult, are but the birth-throes of his advent. (8) God had something better than metal for the adorning of the second temple. (9) Where God's glory comes, there is peace. Apply this to your heart and life, and ask that through conviction and renunciation the desire of the soul should come to you, bringing glory, wealth, and peace.

The Rewards of Obedience (10-23).—Two months after the foregoing, the prophet again remonstrated with the people for still neglecting the temple, though they appear to have maintained religious rites. (12) As the holy flesh did not sanctify what it touched, so religious observance did not compensate for neglecting the Temple, but their neglect of the Temple would make their religious service unclean. (14, &c.) The earnest toils of the people had met with perpetual unsuccess because God was against them. Bad harvests should drive us, as a nation, to consider our ways. (19) There was no seed in the barn because it had just been sown; the fruit trees also had as yet not flowered or fruited; all, therefore awaited God's word to turn out well or ill; and if the people repented, from the moment of their doing so He would bless them. (20-23) Amid all the convulsion described (ii. 7), the Jews would be preserved, and their safety guaranteed, as the seal is guarded by the Oriental with jealous care.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18.—ZECHARIAH I.

Calls to Repentance (1-7).—Two months after Haggai began to prophesy, and one month after the recommencement of the Temple (Hag. i. 1), Zechariah opened his ministry. His name means, One whom Jehovah remembers. We need to preach the same message to successive generations. If it has failed with the fathers we must reiterate it to the children; if it has succeeded in bringing the fathers to repentance, the work has to be recommenced when they have passed away. Amid the death of the great and good, God's Word stands for ever. Oh that it might take hold of us! No man ever turned to God, but he found God's face towards him. "When he was yet a great way off," etc.

The Warrior-Angel (8-11).—The "deep bottom" is the valley; the "red horse" is the type of war; "piebald," of times of unsettlement; "white," of peace. God's angels, after patrolling the world, bring news that all is at peace. This was realised after the fall of Babylon. How good to know that angels counterwork Satan (Job i. 7).

The Angel Pleadings (12-17).—The angels plead out of love for men. The argument was that, if all the earth was quiet there was no reason why Jerusalem should not be restored. Comforting words were spoken in reply. The heathen whom God had used against his people, had overstepped the limit. He was now about to stretch out his measuring line for rebuilding the chosen city.

The Erasing of the hostile Horns (18-21).—The four horns represent the enemies of Judah from the four corners of the earth, or, perhaps, the four great kingdoms of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. Their work was done, and they were to be sawn off; so shall all the enemies of God's people perish, whilst they that trust Him shall be comforted.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 19.—ZECHARIAH II.

The Measuring of the City (1-3).—The measurer was probably an angel, and his action indicates God's care of and interest in the ruins of his beloved city. One angel bade another address Zechariah with words of cheer.

The Protection of Jehovah (4-5).—Jerusalem would need no walls, because God would be around her as well as within her temple and shrine. So it is with each believer. The Holy One is within you, filling and possessing you, but He is also around you like a wall of flame. Reckon on this, and believe that evil is powerless to reach you so long as you abide in God.

An Invitation to Return (6-9).—Israel was still largely in exile in the lands north of Palestine. (7) We must appropriate and act on the Divine announcement. (8) God is not content with restoring the glory of Jerusalem, He commissions the prophet to proclaim the punishment of the nations that had led his people captive. How carefully is the eye guarded by brows and lashes and lid; so God cares for his own.

The Effect on the Nations (10-13).—When God is in the midst of his people, He exercises a strong attractive force. (11) These are probably the words of the Messiah, the great reward of God; one fulfilment was in his incarnation. (13) The reverent hush that pervades mankind is a fit tribute to the majesty and beauty of our God. So may our hearts hush their strivings and cryings in his presence!

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20.—ZECHARIAH III.

The Restored Priesthood (1-7).—In Joshua the whole people, rescued from destruction as a brand from the fire, stands before God's Angel, which is probably the second person in the Holy Trinity. Satan is the accuser of the brethren. How glad we should be to learn that he is cast out (Rev. xii. 10). Satan probably urged the uselessness of rebuilding the temple, since the people, and especially the priesthood, were too sinful to be able to offer acceptable sacrifice or service. (4) But by the grace of God these impediments are removed, the stains are blotted from Joshua's robes, and the mitre is replaced on his head. (5) With many authorities it is better to read he for I. So in Christ, the Church, and each member of it, stands accepted before God. Whatever may be our conscious condition, in Him we are without spot.

The Branch (8-10).—Joshua and his fellows were welcomed to have free access into the palace of the Great King, and to stand among his attendants. (8) They were men for a sign (see R.V.). The Branch is Jesus (Isa. iv. 2, Luke i. 78). (9) This stone may have been in the first instance the foundation of the New Temple, zealously watched by Divine Providence, but how surely it refers to Jesus Christ (Psa. cxviii. 22; Isa. xxviii. 16; Dan. ii. 45; Matt. xxi. 42). "That day" was that on which Jesus died. Many as your sins may have been, in the twinkling of an eye, if you turn to Christ, they will be put away. And then the blessed peace comes, and the desire to win others.

PROTESTANT WORK IN SHOREDITCH.

May I bring before your readers the work which our new branch of the Protestant Alliance is doing in Shoreditch and neighbourhood? Your readers should know that ours is a very hotbed of clerical sacerdotalism, assumptive and presumptive, but that, though this clericalism has had some twenty-five or thirty years' start of us, our new Protestant branch is arranging efforts which shall open the eyes of the people to the true character of the Ritualistic movement which has, all around us, developed so insidiously.

The Roman Catholic lectures in our Shoreditch Town Hall were followed up with reply lectures, and we have been keeping up various activities indoors and outdoors since, while enrolling members in our branch. We have put the subscription as low as 1s. in order to secure the hearty earnestness of working men, and we are obtaining the result at which we aimed. But for effective work we must apply outside our membership for help.

Our committee is arranging for an important conference of ministers and Protestant workers, and we have other plans for action during the coming months. Our hon. treasurer is Mr. Thomas W. Cook, 205, Kingsland-road, N.E., who will thankfully acknowledge any contributions. Among our vice-presidents are Rev. W. Cuff, Rev. Archibald G. Brown, Rev. Philip Reynolds, Lord Robert Montague, General Sir Robert Phayre, Surgeon-General Partridge, and others.

We shall be glad, also, to receive parcels of Protestant literature for distribution by our "Tract Band" through this district, so heavily mined by insidious Romanists, or special contributions for the purchase of such literature.

I am, sir, yours very truly,

James Wallis Rouse, Hon. Sec.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

OCTOBER 21.

A Sabbath in Capernaum (Mark i. 21-34).

Golden Text, verse 22.

(21) See where and how Jesus spent the Sabbath day. In the synagogue, the place where God was worshipped, and his word was read and expounded. The ruins of a synagogue have lately been discovered at Capernaum, probably the very one in which Christ taught. The walls were 10ft. thick, and nearly 75ft. long, and 57ft. wide. Four rows of columns divided it into five aisles. It is almost certain that this is the synagogue built by the Roman Centurion (Luke vii. 4, 5), and in which our Lord uttered some of his most memorable words. "Straightway" is a word which Mark frequently uses, for he describes Jesus as the active servant of God. The corruptions associated with the worship of the synagogue did not cause Him to hesitate. The faults of others should never be urged as an excuse for our own disobedience and neglect.

(32) Both the substance and the manner of his teaching surprised the people. The Scribes, on whom devolved largely the work of writing the Scriptures, were also their expounders and interpreters. But their teaching was a cold and lifeless repetition of what others had taught. Jesus was the embodiment of his teaching. He neither stated opinions nor asked the opinions of others. There was no appeal from that which He said. How do we treat his teaching? To ignore it is impossible. But we may, like the people at Capernaum, admire and wonder, yet not accept and obey.

(23-28) The words of Jesus are enforced by his works. (1) A distressing case (23). Apparently, the man was quiet enough until brought into contact with Jesus. It was the demon within that prompted the cry (24). There are beings who have become so confirmed in their wickedness that the very presence of Jesus is a torment to them. That is the awful end to which sin leads if unrepented of. By frequent yielding to sin man may bring himself into that condition. Beware of the beginnings of evil. (2) A glorious victory (25-28). It was obtained by the Word of Christ. As He taught with authority, so He healed with authority.

Note, the salvation was for the man, not for the demon. Christ has still power to deal with the sins that may possess us. Yet the demon does not willingly relinquish his hold upon the man (26). Satan never loses his prey without a struggle. Sins never seem to bind us so securely as when we try to escape from them. Are you finding this to be true? Still trust your Great Deliverer. The people connected the miracle with the doctrine (27). Christ muzzled the unclean spirit when it testified of Him; but He constrained the people to bear their witness. Their exclamation leaves them without excuse if they do not accept Him.

(29-31) From the synagogue Jesus went with his four disciples into the house of Peter. It has been pointed out that Peter, unlike his boasted successors, had a wife. The most faithful followers of Jesus have no promise of exemption from sickness. Yet they have in Jesus the very best possible sick visitor. The fever was as much under the control of Jesus as was the demon He had just cast out. The cure was immediate and complete. A helpless invalid was changed by the word and touch of Christ into an active servant. Is there not a parable in this miracle? There are in his house still many who are useless, because spiritually diseased. Jesus has the same power to-day. He not only gives life, but gives "life more abundantly."

(32-34) The works of the day have helped to spread abroad the fame of Jesus. But his fame only brings Him more work. The needy press to Him, and are carried to Him by their friends. How true a picture of what takes place still! The rich, the self-satisfied, the proud, pass Him by; but the poor, the distressed, the consciously sinful and helpless, need Him. Their number, and the variety of their diseases caused Him no difficulty. No needy soul ever came to Him in vain. As He could heal "all manner of disease," so He can save from all sorts of sin. Do you know your need? Have you brought it to Jesus? If not, will you do so now?

JAPAN.—A correspondent of the Boston Congregationalist says that all forms of educational and evangelistic work temporarily suffer because of the war. If the regular lines of missionary activity are to be continued, supplies from abroad must be more than usually generous during the next few months. Summer schools are half deserted, summer vacations shortened, many forms of business are at a standstill, churches find it well-nigh impossible to collect money for their running expenses, and all schools are counting on reduced numbers in the autumn.

NELLIE'S PRAYER.

I had noticed Nellie for some time. She sat two pews in front of me, and I had often felt I ought to speak to her, but was afraid she might not like it. One Sunday evening Nellie sat in the pew alone. She was a bright-looking girl about seventeen years of age. All through the service I felt that God wished me to speak to her that night.

At the close of the service I went and asked if she would join my Bible-class, if she did not already belong to one. She looked surprised but pleased, and said she would like to if her mother would allow her; she promised to give me an answer the following Sunday. Her mother consented, and Nellie became a very regular attendant at my week night Bible-class. The intense interest she seemed to take in all that was said attracted me, and made me wish to know more of her than was possible during the hour spent in class. So I asked her to come and have tea with me on a certain afternoon. I did not understand why her face brightened, as she eagerly answered, "Thank you, I shall be so pleased."

She came, and after we had spent some time together I began speaking of the class and of certain girls who were whole-hearted in Christ's service. By-and-by I ventured to ask, "Are you trusting in the Lord Jesus, Nellie?" Her eyes filled with tears as she replied, "No; but I long to. Before I came here I asked God to let you speak to me of Him, and tell me how I might become his believing child; and I do thank Him for hearing my prayer." How I enjoyed telling that dear girl of Christ's willingness to save, of his finished work, of his love for sinners, etc., only those who have experienced the joy of such blessed work can understand. She was soon able to trust his word and rejoice in the fact that God for Christ's sake had forgiven her.

She afterwards told me the following story, which seems to me a wonderful instance of God's hearing and answering prayer. "Two years ago I read 'The Wide, Wide World.' It made a deep impression upon me, and every day since I have prayed that God would send me a 'Miss Alice' to speak to me of Jesus. When you came to me that Sunday night a few weeks ago, I wondered if you were the 'Miss Alice' I was praying might come. The night you invited me to come here I had been praying all day that you might ask me; and when I knew I was coming I prayed that you might speak to me of Jesus, and tell me how I could find Him. He has answered every prayer, and now that I am his I mean to work for Him, and be a 'Miss Alice' myself."

Nellie is now one of the brightest Christians I know, and has had the joy of leading many to the Saviour she found as we knelt together in my room four years ago. M. W.

ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS, COLCHESTER.—We understand (says The Daily Chronicle) that Sir Savile Crossley, Bart., has purchased from the Salvation Army, at a cost of £3000, and most generously presented to the above institution, the house known as Oceanville, Clacton-on-Sea, for use as a seaside home for their patients. It is admirably suited for this purpose, has a commanding view of the sea, and stands in its own grounds of nearly an acre. As it is the house in which Mrs. Booth died, the Salvation Army were only induced to part with it in consideration of the good object for which it was intended to be used. For some time the need of a seaside home has been greatly felt by the board of directors, and it will prove a most valuable acquisition to the resources of the asylum.

WORK AMONG FRENCH CHILDREN.

Pantin is a manufacturing town, north-east of Paris, with about 20,000 inhabitants. There are distilleries, perfumeries, and a large tobacco factory. In this last alone 900 women are employed, almost all of them mothers of families. The children are left to themselves, and as the men are often out of work the woman maintains the whole family. They earn from four to five francs a day, and might live well if they would only try. But alas! alcohol, disorder, and bad management make paupers of many.

I had been at Pantin some weeks, asking the Lord what He would have me do, when my duty was shown to me. On February 6 I saw crowds of children in the streets, and they behaved so wildly that I felt great pity for them. I hired a room, and on March 18 opened Sunday and Thursday schools. Many came, and I have now about 200 names in my book. There is an average attendance of fifty on Thursdays; on Sundays but few come. I soon found out that I could not keep them on Thursdays unless I interested them, so I bought some dolls for the girls to dress, and for the boys I provided drawing-books, slates, painting, books, etc., and playthings for the little ones. The elder boys and girls have charge of their little brothers and sisters, so we must take them all together. I pay some women to help me to teach the girls to sew, and they remain for the instruction.

Many Alsatians live in this place, and, being a German myself, I invited them to German meetings. I also, with the help of a friend, began a French meeting on Thursday evening. Now I can say there is a door open and I look and ask for help. I want speakers, witnesses for Jesus Christ.

I have been living in France for over twenty years, and I love the people. The Government schools are over full. I have been told they have not seats enough for the children. The Roman Catholic schools have also many children, but many parents would not send them if they knew where to put them. There is room for a Protestant school. A kindergarten for the little ones is very urgent.

WRECKS.

As the avalanche on an Alpine plain,
The hurricane bursts on the placid main;
The raven pinions of night and cloud
Envelope the deep in an ebon shroud;
Sea upon sea sweep over the deck
Of a helpless, rudderless, shattered wreck,
Fighting for life with the storm and tide,
Like a Christless soul at the Jordan's side.

Next morning the hull is yet in view,
One lonely speck on a sea of blue;
Around and afar as the eye can sweep
Is a shoreless, waveless, silent deep.
Must she sink at last in the calm and light?
Will no succouring sail appear in sight?
Must she perish, steadily, surely, soon,
Like a thoughtless soul in the Gospel noon?

At eve, a shout in the rising gale
Rings over the sea, "A sail! a sail!"
With mariner spirit, in danger true,
The passing vessel has saved the crew—
Saved from a tomb in the yawning tide;
Saved to return to the old fireside!
Saved like sinners escaped the flood
Of eternal death in the Ark of God.

FRANCIS-STREET MISSION, MARYLAND POINT, E.—The annual report says:—"House-to-house visitation is not the least important and hopeful part of the missionary's labours. It is only by means of this branch of the work that he can come into close contact with the people in the district, and acquaint himself with those who are living in open neglect of God and his salvation. Good work has been carried on at the Mission Hall. The Gospel meetings held on Sunday and Thursday evenings have been largely attended, and the missionary's heart has been made glad in witnessing the manifestation of God's grace in the salvation of souls. Open-air meetings have been held in the back streets during fine weather, and these have often been well attended. Visits to the lodging houses are regularly made and meetings held in most of them." The hon. sec. of the mission is Mr. John Easson, 122, Windsor-road, Forest Gate, E.

Who are Israel?

Dear Sir,—I might reply to Mr. H. D. Brown's very surprising paper on the above subject, by repeating what the late Dr. Adolph Saphir said in his last published work, "The Divine Unity of Holy Scripture":—

> You Gentile believers think you make a great concession when you speak of the Jews as God's ancient people. They are not his ancient people: they are his present people; they are his future people; they are his everlasting people; they are his only people.

This witness is true. Nationally God has not taken up any other people that ever lived upon the face of the earth, and He never will. It is true He is taking out a people for the name of Christ in this era out of all the nations, thus forming the Body, the Church of the living God; but that is a procedure not analogous to, but in the strongest contrast with, his past dealings and future purposes in Israel.

When Abraham had manifested complete obedience to the will of God in the offering up of Isaac, God gave him a double promise (Gen. xxii. 17): "I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the seashore." This is not the same thought repeated, but is a promise of a spiritual seed and of a natural seed, both numberless. All who "are of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham" (Gal. iii. 9); but to the earthly people, the Jews, are plenty of promises (including the promise of the Land), which are for this people alone. I may call myself a child of the father of the faithful, but that never will make me nationally a Jew.

May I venture upon a homely illustration? Most Scotchmen believe in the efficacy of oatmeal porridge and the Shorter Catechism; disbelief in the advantages of these wholesome things will not turn a Scotchman into an Englishman, nor will their acceptance by an Englishman thereby convert him into a Scotchman. A Jew who remains in unbelief respecting Jesus of Nazareth does not cease to be a Jew, nor forfeit his share in unfulfilled promises of earthly blessing to the chosen people; nor does a Gentile, on becoming a believer, thereby serve himself heir to a piece of land in Palestine, or to a share in the special glories that await Israel when Christ comes to reign over his kinsmen according to the flesh. Nor need a Gentile believer crave any such blessing, for he is to reign with Christ not upon the earth but over the earth; and, as a portion of the blood-bought Church, has a far higher destiny than even restored and prosperous Israel. Let us keep in mind the clear distinction made in 1 Cor. x. 32 between "the Jew, the Gentile, and the Church of God."

It may help to clear up the question of Israel's peculiar greatness as an earthly people if I simply quote a few texts of Scripture:—

> Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my son, my firstborn.—Exo. iv. 22.
> O Israel, who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord!—Deut. xxxiii. 29.
> You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities.—Amos iii. 2.
> Did ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live?—Deut. iv. 33.
> He showed his Word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation.—Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20.
> What advantage, then, hath the Jew? . . . first of all that they were entrusted with the oracles of God.—Rom. iii. 1, 2.
> Whose is the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers; and of whom is Christ as concerning the flesh, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen.—Rom. ix. 4, 5.
> Did God cast off his people? God forbid . . . God did not cast off his people which He foreknew.—Rom. xi. 1, 2.
> And so all Israel shall be saved, even as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer; He shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob.—Rom. xi. 26.
> In those days ten men shall lay hold, out of all languages of the nations, even shall lay hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you.—Zech. viii. 23.
> Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem. The Lord hath taken away thy judgments, He hath cast out thine enemy; the King of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee; thou shalt not see evil any more.—Zeph. iii. 14, 15.

Everyone who is even moderately acquainted with "dispensational truth" (which Mr. Brown so strangely invokes to establish his position) will concur with me in claiming each of the above texts as referring distinctly to the Jewish people, and not to Christians of this or any other age. An age is certainly coming—it may be very nigh at hand—when assuredly "all Israel will be saved." So soon as they have looked upon Him whom their forefathers pierced, and see in Him the King of Glory, then and not till then, when God has "set his King upon his holy hill of Zion," will He "give Him the heathen for his inheritance" (Psa. ii. 6, 8); then, and not till then, when He has "built again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down," will "the residue of men seek after the Lord and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called" (Acts xv. 16, 17). It is a vain dream to expect the conversion of the world until Christ's return; no promise can be produced to encourage such a hope; as one has well and briefly put it, God's order in the conversion of men to Christ is—in this age some Jews, some Gentiles, in the age to come all the Jews, all the Gentiles; and let us remember it is "to the Jew first."

Mr. Wilkinson aptly puts the case in some such words as these: "Just now the Jewish train is shunted to a siding, whilst the Gospel express goes along, picking up passengers here and there. But by-and-by the Jewish train will get again upon the main line, and take up passengers at every station." "The Lord hasten it in his time."

Yours sincerely, James E. Mathieson.

Dear Sir,—It is not my intention or desire to reopen the above question. I can only refer your readers to what I have already written, but your insertion of the note which I scribbled in pencil on the margin of the proof of Mr. Brown's letter, which was shown to me when I was in a hurry at a meeting in the City, and which had reference only to one paragraph in that letter, and was not intended for insertion, will, I fear, mislead some into the belief that I otherwise accept Mr. Brown's analysis of what I had said as a fair one, or that I am any nearer regarding his position in reference to this subject as Scripturally or logically tenable.

Mr. Brown utterly ignores the fact that there are specific promises to the nation of Israel as a nation, which hold true to them in spite of their present condition of temporary banishment from the land and the presence of God, and that some of these promises—for instance, those which guarantee their preservation as a nation for ever, etc., which are given to no other people—are being fulfilled now, even "while they remain in unbelief," because Jehovah ever abideth faithful, and because "the purpose of God, according to election, might stand, not of works, but of Him that calleth."

Mr. Brown seems to me to raise an alarm quite unnecessarily. No sober-minded Christian denies an equal share to Gentile believers in every blessing in the Old Testament, which is of a spiritual nature. I think I made this sufficiently plain in my reply which has already appeared. The question is whether believers can claim these blessings by the name of Israel or only in the name of Christ, and in virtue of an unconditional covenant made with Abraham before circumcision, when he was no more a Jew than he was a Gentile; and whether an enlarged scope of application of spiritual promises in the Old Testament excludes, or in the least affects the position of Israel in relation to the purpose of God. Even those of us who, by God's grace, are now believers from among the Jews, feel that our access to spiritual blessing is not in the name of Israel, but in the alone name of Our Saviour, and I submit that the loose use and interpretation of the name "Israel" by Gentile believers, except in the ideal sense, is unwarranted by anything in the Word of God, and can only tend to confusion in the interpretation of Scripture.—I remain, dear Sir, yours sincerely in the service of Christ,

David Baron.

EACH-END-HILL VILLAGE, situated between Folkestone and Lyminge, has long been without a church, chapel, or mission hall, but lately mission work has been carried on by the Folkestone Y.M.C.A. (two of whom walk the distance, six miles, each Sunday) during the last two and a-half years, at the request of some of the residents. The meetings have been held in one of the cottages, with the kind co-operation of the occupants, but the space is now quite inadequate. Frequent testimonies have been given of blessing received. During this season efforts have been made to have a hall erected large enough for the requirements, and for that purpose about £100 has been collected. The site has been presented to the association by Mr. H. Rigden, Lyminge. Should the balance, about £45, yet needed, be obtained, the opening gathering will take place within three weeks.—A. Reid, secretary, Church-street, Folkestone, Kent, will gladly give particulars.

WITH THE HOP-PICKERS.

For the twelfth season the hop yards of Hereford and Worcester have been visited through the agency of Mr. T. S. Heley, of Wing, Leighton Buzzard. Starting with pony and trap from his home, he and his party visited between forty and fifty villages, missioning the entire way. Owing to a recent accident, Mr. Heley had to turn back, leaving the more arduous work of walking in the hop district to Mr. John Jones, of Shepherd's Bush, the writer, and others. Tracts were distributed from crib to crib, and the Gospel preached in 145 hop yards, some 12,450 persons being thus reached.

We found Christians from Malvern, Hereford, and Bromyard were holding Sunday services in a few farms near these centres, but the general complaint was, "Nobody has been to us." At our appearance, the cry was frequently, "We've been talking about you," or "We thought no one was going to bring us a bit of reading." "Somebody thinks of us if we are poor hop-pickers," said another.

That these tracts are valued we had ample testimony, many telling us they still had last year's. "My mother had a tract given her in the hop yard, and she kept it in her prayer-book for years, and when she died somebody else had the prayer-book, tract and all." So said one poor woman.

Another woman came after us, saying, "Give us a little book, only a little 'un to put in a letter."

Meetings were held in the yards as frequently as possible, sometimes in the dinner-hour, or while the people worked. One such would have made a picture for an artist. We stood among the wires and strings, now superseding the poles, beautiful hops swayed overhead, a row of pickers stretched as far as the eye could penetrate; other rows were on our right and left. The men who cut the hops stood close around, leaning on their long hooks, as the words were proclaimed, "All we like sheep," etc. So attentive were the listeners, especially the men, that there seemed danger of the work being hindered. After a similar meeting we heard a voice say, "I'd far rather hear that than cursing and swearing."

A wet Sunday provided us with grand meetings at the buildings. Flour, fruit, dough, and tins of meat stood upon the table, but at our coming the company put themselves in church shape without a word. Bare-footed and dripping gipsy children were called in, and as the rain fell outside and on the roof, we spoke of Christ, the Ark, an open door, safety and shelter for all who would enter. At closing we sang:—

> Oh think of the home over there!

A solemn feeling pervaded us all as we read the last verse and mentioned that a dear young man, who had been with us twelve months before on that spot, was now "over there."

Another meeting by the light of a huge fire on the evening of that day was also a blessed time, as we sang in the glow and flicker,

> There is a fountain filled with blood.

At the close of the meeting one of the pickers came to us and volunteered to speak a word for Jesus, accompanying us through the rain and darkness to another farm, where he told of his mother, who, though poor, left him a blessed legacy in her dying words, "Follow me." William Luff.

CAMPANA, SOUTH AMERICA.

We still have to report progress. There are only a few of us here who own Christ as Lord, yet we have reason to praise God that our work has not been in vain. Our Sunday evening services are well attended, and the word is preached with power by earnest brethren. We often get the sailors of the boats which put in here with coal for the Rosario Railway to attend these meetings, and when convenient we hold services on board the boats. Quite a number have been induced to lead sober lives.

Our Sunday-school is very flourishing, and more than 75 per cent. of the English children attend. The lessons learnt are taken to the homes, and often to the hearts of those who otherwise keep aloof from religious influences. Our Band of Hope is also well attended. Our Bible-class on Wednesdays is the best meeting of the week. We should be glad to receive any books of an interesting character for the little ones, as such books are very hard to get here.

NORTH AFRICA MISSIONARIES.

Taking advantage of the presence in England of a rather larger number than usual of missionaries on furlough, the Council of the North Africa Missions arranged for a two-day conference, to be held between themselves and their fellow-workers, at which important questions bearing upon the practical work of the labourers could be fully discussed. The meetings were private, and, through the kindness of Col. Morton, were held on Wednesday and Thursday of last week in one of the rooms of the Mildmay Conference Hall. Workers were present from each of the countries embraced within the sphere of the Mission, viz., Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Tripoli, and Egypt.

On Wednesday morning, after a season of prayer, Mr. E. H. Glenny, hon. sec., who presided throughout, drew their attention to Matt. ix. 35-38. The pressing need of workers, and how to obtain them, viz., by prayer. The fact having been mentioned that no new workers had applied to be sent out to Algeria during the years '93 and '94, General Haig suggested that in view of the action of the French Government at that time, the Lord may have been answering prayer by holding back workers from that field. The subject of languages occupied the remainder of the morning session. The recent decision of the Council to give all accepted candidates twelve months' study of Arabic, under a competent master, before going out, was generally considered to be a step in the right direction.

In the afternoon, the Conference considered the question of the need of suitable hymns in Arabic, also colloquial readings, and annotated portions of Scripture. Several of the workers stated that they could use but a small proportion of the hymns at present published, for while beautiful in sentiment, they contained no saving truth. Some few hymns had been translated by Mr. M. H. Marshall, which were considered most valuable, and it was resolved to proceed with the translation of others as quickly as possible.

Reports were received from various missionaries present as to the progress made in the work, irrespective of actual cases of conversion; also how best to follow up inquirers. The subject of the desirability of sending out more suitable labourers, in view of the limited supplies of funds ,brought out from many of the missionaries present their satisfaction with the principles of the Mission, and their wish that in the future, as in the past, no candidate whom the Council judged suitable to go forth should be kept back by shortness of supplies. During the conference much prayer was called forth for an increased number of workers.

On Thursday morning some time was spent in considering the condition of the Moslem mind in relation to spiritual things, the truths most needed to be presented to them, and the best methods of presentation of truth. Mr. Michell, who has had much experience both in Tripoli and Tunis, and who has held many long discussions with their educated men, dwelt on the difficulty of finding suitable words in Arabic to convey to the native mind an adequate conception of sin. The consideration of this subject brought out many helpful suggestions in dealing with Moslems. The use of the term Sidna Aisa, as representing the Lord Jesus, was considered unsatisfactory without some further explanation, as conveying to the mind of a Mohammedan a wrong idea of Christ, presenting Him rather as a wonder-worker without in any sense conveying the idea either of his Divinity or Sonship. Mr. Michell suggested the use of another word which, used in connection with Sidna Aisa, would make it clear who was meant.

The afternoon of the second day was occupied with the consideration of the following subjects: Methods for getting into contact with the people, including systematic itinerating work; the further instruction of native converts, their occupation and support; observance of the Lord's day; the use of lantern slides in teaching. In connection with this subject it came out that in consequence of the use of pictures of Christ by the Romanists, and the great aversion of the native mind to what they consider idolatry, the workers who have lanterns do not show pictures representing the Lord. A daily public meeting for prayer and reading of the Word of God, at which natives could attend, similar to that carried on among the Spaniards of Tangier, was strongly recommended to be commenced at each of the stations. The frequency and duration of furlough, and the need of ways and means for making known the work of the Mission, brought the conference to an end.

All the workers confess that the meetings have been most helpful and refreshing, and the desire was expressed that they might prove to be but the beginning of similar gatherings in the future. Apart from the benefit derived by mutual conference with each other on these important points, the union and communion has been most delightful, and cannot but be fraught with blessing to the Moslems of North Africa. ## THE LATE REV. W. GIBSON,

OF THE PARIS WESLEYAN MISSION.

The recent death of Rev. William Gibson removed a devoted worker from the evangelical forces of France. For thirty years he gave himself, body and soul, to Gospel work across the Channel. He was a warm-hearted Methodist, and several tributes to his memory have appeared in the periodicals of the denomination.

In the current issue of Work and Workers, Rev. Dr. Rigg says:—"A holy passion, an unquenchable enthusiasm burned with a clear and unremitting light on the altar of his heart. His working days were longer by hours than those of most men, even busy and active men; his cares and anxieties were urgent and excessive. Fervour and faith had sustained him, and would have sustained him still, but that the overwrought and exhausted body yielded at length, and gave way.

"William Gibson was the son of a Methodist minister. He was converted at Woodhouse Grove School in a 'revival.' From that school he passed forward to Wesley College, where he took an active part in religious work, maintaining the warmth and fervour of his zeal throughout his period at the school. He entered the ministry in 1852, and in 1854 was assistant to Rev. John Farrar, the President of the Conference. He was appointed to Paris for his first term of residence in 1862, having previously spent five years in London circuits. After ten years' work in Paris, he returned to the English work, and spent six more years in London in the Southwark and Brixton Hill circuits. In 1878 he returned to Paris, and there he spent the remainder of his life with an ever-increasing devotion to the work, to which he had given himself with an absolute surrender. The paramount importance of France as a centre of world-wide influence was perhaps his deepest intellectual conviction; the need of the Gospel for France in order to heal its national troubles and maladies, and to make it the most powerful and central influence in the world for the leavening of humanity with the Christian truth and Christian faith, were ideas which had taken possession of his whole soul, and the force of which only increased with the increase of his knowledge and experience.

"It was his happiness to be powerfully aided by the labours and influence of his accomplished and devoted wife, the daughter of the late Rev. William B. Boyce, whose name is bound up with the history of Methodist missions throughout the world, and of his daughters. The work accomplished by himself and his family in the preparation and publication of hymns suitable for French Methodist worship, and tunebooks, and tracts, and evangelistic periodicals, has formed no mean part of what has been done in the pioneer services of Methodism in France. It may be safely affirmed that those who enter into the labours of Mr. Gibson and his circle of associates, will discover more and more, as their experience expands, how great a work of preparation has been accomplished."

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, in some hearty reminiscences, says:—"The way in which his thoughts and aspirations, his endeavours and his prayers, converged upon 'the Gospel for France' was wonderful, at times pathetic. With him all roads led—to Paris. In a far truer and deeper sense than that in which the English queen said, 'You will find Calais written upon my heart,' might it be said that France was graven upon the heart of William Gibson. Along with a gentleness that nothing could ruffle, a patience that nothing could exhaust, he had courage, perseverance, and tenacity of purpose that I have seldom, if ever, known equalled. They carried him through innumerable difficulties, they secured for him again and again the ends upon which his mind was set, and turned the seemingly impossible into accomplished fact. The sudden, the unlooked-for failure of his vital powers would seem to show that he had been spending them all along in a way he little suspected, so unaccustomed was he to consider himself, or take account of days spent in toil and nights in travel."

So speak colleagues in France as well as his friends in Great Britain. His death has been widely mourned; and on all hands prayer has been offered that God will raise up more men of a like stamp, to carry on the work of which Mr. Gibson laid the foundations.

THE OPEN-AIR IN IRELAND.

In the short space of less than two months, street preaching appears to be now fairly established in the town of Galway. The failure of the recent prosecution of Mr. R. C. Hallowes, Rector of Arklow, and of Mr. George Williams, together with the admirable conduct of the police, has doubtless been instrumental by God's blessing in putting an end to the violence of the intolerant section of the populace. Occasional hostility may from time to time manifest itself in the future, but nothing so violent as in the past need now be apprehended.

On Friday last Mr. Williams, accompanied by Messrs. Coghlan and Knapman, preached without molestation to a considerable crowd in the Market Place, and, excepting some noise from a few women and children, they had a most attentive hearing. No hand was raised to strike them; neither stones, mud, nor filth were thrown. The preachers closed with the Doxology, and returned to their home full of wonder and praise. A large force of police was present, but their services were not at any time required.

In Athlone also the hostility of the mob has greatly lessened, and it is expected that the open-air meetings in this town will be as orderly as those carried on every Sunday in the streets of Dublin, Kingstown, Arklow, and Cork. W. H. M.

REAL SELF-DENIAL.

Many will be interested in the following letter lately sent to the Secretary of a well-known South London Mission:—

"Dear Sir,—I herewith enclose postal order for five shillings towards Richmond-street new buildings, and am sorry that I am not able to send you a much larger sum. Having met with an accident, I was obliged to give up my situation last June, since which time I have only been able to earn about thirty shillings; but after hearing the plea from Mr. Olney for funds, myself and wife resolved to deny ourselves of our dinner for one week to enable us to send you the before-said amount.

"Praying that the Lord may open the hearts of some who are more blessed with this world's goods to send you all that you now require to pay for the much-needed schools.—Yours faithfully,

"D. C——r and Wife."

TWO PICTURES.

THE FIRST.

The following prose idyll recently appeared in the columns of a London daily:—

A poor widow, whose husband died some time ago from consumption, has cause to look back with gratitude to the day when a certain missionary attached to one of the metropolitan police-courts paid her a visit of consolation and assistance. The future was black with the prospect of penury and distress for herself and family, until her visitor got the children cared for by benevolent friends, and sent the mother to be trained as a nurse. Then her heart was once more buoyed up with hope. In due time she obtained her diploma, and abundant qualifications commended her readily to the medical profession. Among her patients was a lady who was stricken with fever, and whom nothing but good nursing and careful watching could possibly restore to health. These the widow gave without stint, never sparing herself so long as her charge required her help. The lady recovered, the doctors telling her candidly that it was to the nurse rather than to them that she owed her restoration. One day this week the patient wrote to the missionary and asked for an appointment, stating that she wished to make her will in favour of the nurse. The missionary advised a pause for consideration. Was she dealing justly with her relatives? "Oh, yes; the relatives were only cousins, and were all richer than she." And then the lady made her will, leaving £5000 to the poor widow and her three children, and appointing the missionary executor and trustee, with a small legacy for his trouble.

This simple little paragraph will be copied into many papers, and will be quoted in many circles, receiving from, and producing in each, just the criticism and effect to be expected, according to the moral and spiritual bias of each.

It is beautiful to think that such a living poem as this is the product of the most commercial city in the world, and of the close of the so-called weary, faithless nineteenth century! I want to know the missionary, with his voluntary and unnoticed ministry of consolation, without thought of reward other than that which all true servants of God know they have in Him, and in the comfort of his love. I want to imagine the woman who, out of the depths of poverty, "black with the prospect of penury and distress," was lifted into the heaven of hope, and into the joy of work well done, by the practical sympathy of this man of God, and showed her fitness and her gratitude by giving herself "without stint, never sparing herself," to the saving of another's life. And I want to remember the patient—the lady for whom the nurse did this—whose thanksgiving for restoration did not take the form merely of a five-pound note sent to some charity, but of permanent benefit to her who had saved her life, reaching to her children, and rewarding the humble missionary—the original channel of God's blessing to those concerned—so that, maybe, his declining years shall not be without a gleaning from the harvest he sowed for others.

I want all this, because I am told so often that there are no miracles now; there is no use in trying to educate and to teach the poor, who are so dull and so ungrateful now; and the world is very hard, the rich do not care, there is no link between them and those who serve them; everyone is for self now! I dare not forget this little story, for it is to me another proof of the power of God, even now!

THE SECOND.

My story—the story that was told me the other day—is not beautiful; it is a contrast to the other. A man was very ill, dying, they said; but he did not die, for a poor woman did her best, and nursed him back to life. The man was not poor, but he was without God. His heart was very small, and perhaps it may have been hard. He gave nothing to the one who had nursed him, and she, being very poor—it was winter—took an old coat she found in a cupboard, and being fearful of discovery, hid herself from the man whose life she had saved, and from whom she had stolen the coat.

One night—it was still winter—it came to her that she was dying. She put a little candle in her window, and then lay down in a corner on the old coat. She said to herself, "Perhaps one going by the window will notice me through that light, and I shall not die quite alone."

One did notice her. He entered, and found her very near death, so near that she was deaf to his words of hope; but not so near that she was past feeling. He stayed with her through the night, and as the grey morning dawned the black shadows gathered about the dying woman. She touched the coat, and put the watcher's hand upon it. "Yours!" she said, and died.

She was buried, and the coat came into the hands of the man who had comforted her last hours with his presence. He worked among the poor, and he gave the coat to his wife to clean and to repair. "For," said he; "it will take the place of the coat I gave to poor Peter last week. I miss it these cold nights." The woman ripped it to pieces, and as she did so there fell from out the breast-padding six pieces of thin, soiled paper. She looked at them; then showed them to her husband. "These are bank-notes," he said; "for fifty pounds apiece. There are three hundred pounds here. I must find the owner." They were very poor, and there was no clue; but all that winter the man hunted everywhere to find the owner of the notes. He told the story of the coat to everyone he met, until one day he came home and told his wife he felt ill. He had caught cold through loss of his coat, and he felt full of pain and fever. As he grew worse, he said to his wife, "If this is good-bye, dear, you must put all your trust in God. He has been very good to us. And I wish I could have found the owner of the bank-notes; but he will turn up."

He did. The next day he said he had called for a coat, and the money which he had placed in its lining; and having satisfied the poor woman and her dying husband that he was really the rightful owner, he went to the door and called a man in. "Take this person into custody," said he, "for unlawful possession. This kind of thing must be stopped."

"I think it is stopped, already," said the policeman. And it was. A beautiful smile was on the face of the rich poor man, the dying City missionary, who "was not, for God took him."

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings last week friends of the Church Missionary Society quite held Exeter Hall, and in great meetings said farewell to workers about to leave for the foreign field. The autumn "dismissals" are usually invested with enthusiastic interest, and this year the proceedings were characterised by much fervour and solemnity. The meetings were admirably described in the Record.

On Tuesday evening Sir JOHN KENNAWAY, who presided, delivered an address at once felicitous and sympathetic. He spoke of the missionaries as "our representatives" going forth to the foreign field; and, in reference to the usefulness of such a meeting, he said, "It does us good to see them face to face and to hear their voices."

Rev. F. E. WIGRAM, hon. sec. of the Society, gave some details concerning the outgoing missionaries. Of the entire party, sixty-five—twenty-eight clergymen, two doctors, two ladies, twelve laymen, and twenty-one wives of missionaries—were returning to the field; while sixty-four—fifteen clergymen, two doctors, ten ladies, twenty-six laymen, and eight wives of missionaries, and three ladies going to be married to missionaries—were new recruits.

Several of the missionaries delivered addresses, each one being timed to five minutes. Rev. A. W. BAUMANN, returning to the North-west Provinces, spoke of the open doors in India. Were we going to enter in? Rev. F. T. COLE, who is returning with his wife for the fourth time to the Santal Mission, contrasted its present prosperous state with its condition when he first knew it twenty-three years ago. Dr. EUSTACE, who, with Mrs. Eustace, is returning to the Punjab, dwelt on the privileges of mission work, and wound up with an appeal for free hospitals. Rev. H. J. SCHAFFTER, returning with Mrs. Schaffter to important educational work in South India, recalled the advice given him by Henry Wright, not to allow the secular part of educational work to overshadow the spiritual side of the Mission. Their Mission was not to civilise nor to Anglicise, but to Christianise the natives of India. Rev. R. BATEMAN spoke of the Punjab, to which he is once more returning.

The old workers having made way for the recruits, some words were spoken by Lieut.-Col. T. A. FREEMAN, who, with Mrs. Freeman, is proceeding to Western India. His theme was an appropriate one, "The Army and the University of Oxford regarded as fields from which to draw recruits." Rev. F. W. ASKWITH, who is proceeding to an educational Mission in Travancore, gave those left behind three thoughts, viz.: Pray for us; and work hard in the home parishes, so that when the natives come here they cannot point the finger of scorn at Christianity. Mr. A. C. KESTIN represented the business men, and addressed his remarks to those present who were engaged in commerce. He had himself received the call, he said, while engaged in the daily routine of official work, and although he was some time before he responded to that call, yet, thank God, he was able in the end to overcome all his difficulties. Rev. H. MOULD represented the C.M.S. College at Islington, and spoke in warm terms of the excellent training he had received there. The last outgoing missionary to address the meeting was Rev. R. S. HAYWOOD, and he appealed to Cambridge men to ponder over what had been said, and if they felt the call to offer themselves as soldiers under Christ's banner.

SEND MORE AFTER US;

Rev. T. HOUGHTON, Vicar of St. John's, Sheffield, gave the farewell address. First of all, we should not forget that when the missionaries had started for their different spheres of labour we owed them a thoughtful remembrance. At the same time we owed them sympathy: they were breaking many ties in leaving their old homes, and they expected us to sympathise with them in their troubles and trials. But there was still a third responsibility, and that was, he thought, more important than the rest, and that was that we owed them a prayerful remembrance. We should be always praying that God in his mercy would watch over our brothers and sisters in the mission-field, that He would forward their work and give them his guidance. Speaking to the missionaries themselves, Mr. Houghton urged upon them the necessity of courage.

On Wednesday evening the hall was again crowded. The outgoing workers this time were proceeding to Palestine, Africa, China, and Japan. In the course of an opening address Sir JOHN KENNAWAY said:—Just now Englishmen are thinking of the great development of energy and activity manifested by China and Japan; and though we do not know what these may portend, or how far they may affect us, we do know that the need is great for high civilising influences in those countries. When God permitted these wars and rumours of war, it behoved all his people to be more active in seizing their opportunities, amid the clash of kingdoms and the din of arms, so that the Kingdom of Christ might be advanced.

gave particulars regarding the missionaries, and as he read the roll-call each stood up. Addresses, limited to five minutes each, were then delivered by several. Canon TAYLOR SMITH, who is returning to Sierra Leone, represented West Africa. He pleaded for more helpers, and appealed especially to young people to come forward and give themselves up for Christ. Rev. J. D. THOMAS came next, representing a missionary family. The work was, he said, one of the most glorious in which any human being could be engaged. Rev. F. BURT was the only one representing East Africa. Rev. H, MORRIS, who followed, was not on the list of departures: he is kept at home by illness, and he spoke for himself and for others in a like position. Rev. J. B. WOOD represented the veterans, he having gone out first to the Yoruba Mission thirty-seven years ago. Yet it was less strongly manned now with European workers than it was then. The appeal was to the heart—"Ought not I to go?" Rev. G. C. NEVIN, bound for Japan, represented the Universities. Dr. L. G. HILL, proceeding to South China, spoke for the medical missionaries. Rev. E. HUGHELSON, going to Mid-China, represented the Islington men, and gave a somewhat humorous sketch of everyday life in the C.M. College. A stirring speech from the Rev. J. G. GARRETT, who, with Mrs. Garrett, is returning to Ceylon, brought this section of the meeting to a close.

Rev. C. H. BANNING then gave the closing address. "Whose I am, and whom I serve" was his text; sonship and service, his theme. There could be no service without sonship, and in this connection he introduced a telling reference to "the greatest and grandest" Lord Shaftesbury, whose motto, "Love—serve," was a popularising of the text. "My first resolution," said Lord Shaftesbury, at the outset of his life, "must be God's honour; my second, man's happiness; and the means, prayer and pains."

THE BLIND OF INDIA.

At the Bangalore Missionary Conference in August, Rev. J. Knowles, of Pareychaley, Travancore, introduced the subject of "Hope and Help for the Blind," and the paper which he read was given in the September issue of The Harvest Field of Madras. After describing the educational destitution of the blind, and the efforts that had been made to meet it by printing books in embossed letters, specially mentioning the work of Dr. Moon, Mr. Knowles spoke of the Braille method, which is now used in all the large blind institutions in England, France, America, Germany, Switzerland, and elsewhere, having also been adapted to Chinese. This system had at length been applied by Mr. Garthwaite and himself to the Indian languages, and the result was a scheme called the "All-India Blind Alphabet." Among other advantages possessed by this system, is the fact that it can be easily written (as well as read) by the blind. Mr. Knowles said:—

"This All-Indian alphabet furnishes a very simple method of representing any and all of the Indian vernaculars. The various letters are represented by a very simple system of raised dots upon paper. The raised dots are arranged in groups. These groups differ in the number or position of the dots, and are separated by spaces one from another. The raised dots are felt by the tips of the fingers, as the blind man passes them along the line, and he quickly learns to distinguish the dot or dots which represent the various letters, and thus reads his books.

"The Braille writing frame consists of two pieces of brass. The writing pen is simply a blunt awl. The writing frame is attached to a light wooden frame to hold the paper. The process of writing is simplicity itself. The problem to be solved in applying the sixty-three combinations of dots to the letters (or sounds, for both have to be considered) of the Indian languages was to find out which combination should be assigned to represent each letter so as to render reading and writing as easy as possible.

"There is a blind type-writer, called the Hall-Braille type-writer, by means of which a blind man can easily emboss his letters, as fast as an ordinary writer; with practice, probably a good deal faster. Similarly there is a machine for stereotyping. But there is no machine invented yet to supersede the tips of the fingers in reading. According to the census of 1891, out of a population of some 274 millions there were 458,868 blind. Including Burmah and Ceylon there will probably be about half a million, who, according to the census, are reported blind. But this number, large as it is, must be far below the real number of the blind who need to be provided for. The census takes no note whatever of the people whose sight is so seriously defective as to render them for educational purposes practically blind, and these form a very large number.

"Hitherto very little has been done for the blind in India. Miss Askwith has done good work at Palamcottah with Moon's system adapted to Tamil. There are about a score of blind of whom she takes loving care. Miss Bernard, at Poona, has, I believe, a small school for girls. So far as I know, this is all that has been attempted in India. But thanks to the timely help of the Madras Government, Mr. Garthwaite has printed first books for the blind in Telugu, Hindustani, and Tamil. Kanarese is partly printed, and the MSS. of the other principal languages of India are ready, and other works are to follow.

"There is urgent need of the establishment of a Home and School for the Blind, where suitable boys and girls may be gathered in for a few years, and given such an amount of education as they may prove themselves capable of receiving. The next step to be taken, arising immediately out of the initial work that has already been done, is the institution of such a home. Self-support is out of the question. A proportion of the expenses of site, buildings, teachers, books, is very kindly offered by the Madras Government, but food and clothing must be defrayed by relatives and voluntary contributions. There must be someone at the head of the institution in sympathy with the work, and capable of fostering it for the next five years. Such a manager would need to circulate the books, secure pupils, and provide for the teaching and for satisfactory arrangements for food, etc., so that all classes of scholars may be provided for."

In conclusion, Mr. Knowles commended the undertaking to Christian sympathy, and the conference passed a resolution recognising the value of the scheme, and supporting the establishment of an institution on a Christian basis, in which to teach the blind. The conference also declared: "That in view of Mr. Knowles' connection with the scheme, and his enthusiasm in the cause of the blind, we are of opinion no one else is so well fitted to take charge of the institution, and we earnestly hope the directors of the L.M.S. will be able to spare him for the work for the term of five years." A committee representative of the various Missionary Societies was appointed to receive and administer funds.

At a meeting of the Madras Missionary Conference the subject was further considered, and a similar resolution was passed, in which Mr. Knowles was indicated as the proper principal of the desiderated Institution for the Blind, and the directors of the L.M.S. urged to set him free to undertake this special work. Specimen books and further information regarding the enterprise may be obtained from Rev. S. M. Organe, Memorial Hall, Madras.

Rev. J. Knowles writes to us from 6, Curzon-park, Chester:—"Kindly let me make an earnest appeal for someone to come forward to help in this work. "My fellow missionaries are kind enough to think I should undertake the work, and most gladly would I do so, but I have had fourteen years' loving labour in connection with the London Missionary Society. The financial condition of the L.M.S. renders it impossible for them to take up new work, much as they sympathise with the effort. Surely the cry of these 600,000 blind will be heard by the followers of Him who came to open the blind eyes.

"It seems to me that what is really needed is a Mission to the Blind of India and the East, on the lines of the Mission to Lepers, and such a society could work with all the Evangelical societies, one missionary, acquainted with the teaching of the blind, only being needed to have charge of a small central institution for training blind teachers for the blind.

"I shall be glad to give what further help I can, but I regret to say I am ordered by the doctor complete rest, and when I am rested the directors of the L.M.S. are anxious that I should return and devote myself to the district work.

WESLEYAN EAST-END MISSION.

This anniversary, which took place on Wednesday last, was rendered even more than usually interesting by the fact that it marked the reappearance of the superintendent, Rev. Peter Thompson, after an absence through illness of nearly five months. Mr. Thompson preached at the week-night service in Stepney Temple on the second Tuesday in May, though feeling very unwell. During many weeks thereafter he had a fierce battle with disease, and for some time his life was despaired of. Happily, however, for East London, by the blessing of God and the care of his medical attendant and his beloved wife, his useful life was preserved, and after a long rest by the Northern Sea he has returned to his work looking perfectly well.

The anniversary meetings were held in the Stepney Temple, formerly known as the Seamen's Chapel, Commercial-road. They commenced with a devotional meeting at noon, over which Rev. W. H. Tindall, of the West London Mission, the founder of the Southport Convention, presided. Revs. J. Martyn Lobb (Leytonstone) and W. D. Walters (Secretary of the London Mission), with Mr. Mellor, led in prayer, and the principal address was given by Dr. F. Montague Miller, of Stoke Newington. Dr. Miller's subject, from which he drew many practical lessons for the Christian life, was the deliverance of the Israelites at the Red Sea.

A luncheon followed in the saloon behind the adjoining Book-store, Rev. Walford Green, President of the Wesleyan Conference, presiding. Mr. Thompson gave a hearty welcome to the President, whose election to the chair had, he suggested, reflected some honour upon the mission, of which he has been for many years the treasurer and a warm friend. The President, in response, referred sympathetically to Mr. Thompson's illness. He trusted that the meetings of the day would be in every way satisfactory. He would be very glad if they could get the £700 for which Mr. Thompson asked, but it would be still better if they received that baptism of the Holy Ghost for which Mr. Walters had asked in his concluding prayer that morning. Having that, they would have everything. Brief addresses followed from Revs. J. H. Hopkins (of the South London branch of the Mission), Joseph Jackson (one of Mr. Thompson's colleagues), Joseph Nettleton (of Hackney, formerly of Fiji), Mr. J. Williams Benn, M.P. for the St. George's division and a warm friend of the Mission, and Mr. Hibbard (of Stoke Newington).

The afternoon gathering in the chapel was, as usual, "the ladies' meeting." A gentleman, however, presided, in the person of Mr. W. W. Berry, of Gushmere Court, Selling. He told a touching story of a Kentish farmer, once well-to-do, the son of a magistrate, who, by reason of bad times, became bankrupt, took a situation in London at £2 a week, lost that through no fault of his own, and was at last found among the crowd clamouring for work at the dock gates. When men in such circumstances found a helping hand stretched out to relieve their temporal necessities, they were rendered willing to listen to the Gospel message.

Three of the Sisters also spoke, who devote their lives to the assistance of the poor who swarm in the district occupied by the mission. Miss Patrick had some interesting things to tell about work among the mothers at the Lycett Memorial Chapel, Mile End-road, which was only taken over by the Mission a year ago, but where the labours of Rev. John Howard and his helpers have already produced a great improvement, both in the attendance at public worship and in other respects. Miss Seddon, of St. George's, the oldest centre of the Mission, sketched an outline of the multifarious methods pursued in the whole of the Mission. These included sewing meetings, Bands of Hope, mothers' meetings (with over 800 members), six children's meetings weekly, ten open-air meetings, clothing-clubs, boys' brigades, young men's guilds, society classes, etc., etc. She had some good stories as to visible good effects produced by the Temperance and children's meetings. Miss Wilson, a Dublin lady, who has only been about a year in the Mission, gave some of her first impressions of the work. She also was able to tell of fruit reaped among the seafaring men who abound in the neighbourhood of the Old Mahogany Bar, the Mission's converted music hall. Rev. John Howard added a few words on the progress of the year at the Lycett Memorial Chapel. When he took over the work there, he found only 120 members, with none on trial for membership. Now there are 181 full members, and thirty-three on trial. He also had something to say about the work of opposing public-house and music-hall licences, in which the agents of the Mission have been very successful.

After tea Stepney Temple was crowded for the evening meeting. The gallery was occupied largely by members of the Riverside and General Labourers' Union, who had marched up with their great banners, on one of which appears full-length portraits of Rev. Peter Thompson and Rev. John Jameson, who were among their earliest friends. Many members of the Sons of the Phœnix order were also present in their regalia, and the end gallery was occupied by the Boys' Brigade. The chair was taken by Mr. Edward Hutchinson, J.P., of Liverpool, who described the life-struggles of some agricultural labourers he had come across in Devonshire, and of the way in which godliness and thrift had blessed their homes. Then came a series of short addresses of welcome home to Rev. Peter Thompson. The first speaker was Mr. Frank Brien, secretary of the Dockers' Union (St. George's and Wapping branch), who spoke with gratitude of Mr. Thompson as one who had helped those who were trying to help themselves. It was followed by two representatives of each of the four principal centres of the Mission, and the rough eloquence of these good men, several of them converted under Mr. Thompson's preaching, was most affecting. Then Rev. Joseph Jackson, the missioner at St. George's, revealed a secret. The poor members of the Mission had been making a subscription among themselves to present Mr. Thompson on his return with a thankoffering, not for himself, but for the work of the Mission, as an expression of gratitude for his restoration to health. Not a little of the amount, Mr. Jackson said, had been gathered in farthings, but the total was £80, which he handed over to the superintendent in gold. When Mr. Thompson rose to express his acknowledgments, the whole meeting cheered. His address was full of thankfulness to God for the past, and consecration for future service. Mr. J. Williams Benn, M.P., followed with a brief but effective speech.

BAPTIST UNION MEETINGS.

The meetings of the Baptist Union at Newcastle last week were characterised by a strength of purpose, which should mean much in the immediate future of the churches. The address of the president, Rev. George Short, of Salisbury, on Wednesday, had for its burden the religious instruction of the young. He made some excellent suggestions as to Sunday-school management. He said: "The Sunday-school ought to be the great medium of religious instruction for the young, irrespective of all class distinctions. If our better-to-do classes debar their young people from attendance in Sunday-schools, the Sunday-school will always be looked down upon as an institution for the less respectable and poor, and will never become the Church institution for which we plead. Further, we urge the absolute and indispensable necessity of the pastor's sympathy.

"The true pastor must not, cannot, never will, stand aloof from, much less view with indifference, a work which is so dear to the Redeemer's heart, and which enjoys such signal proofs of Divine acceptance. Everything that can be done ought to be done to raise the character of the teacher mentally, morally, spiritually. We do not need people of great intellect; but, other things being equal, the more intelligent a teacher is the better. It is a mistake to think that anyone will do for a Sunday-school teacher. He ought to be selected from the saintliest and best and wisest of the church." Speaking of the Society of Christian Endeavour, Mr. Short said:—It has hit the mean between the unquestioning receptiveness of the child and the budding intelligence of the adult. It meets the self-consciousness of youth, and yet under wise direction may guide to self-surrender to the Saviour and to identification with the church.

On Wednesday afternoon, in Westgate-road chapel, there was a conference concerning Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour. Rev. James Stuart (Watford) read a paper, in which he stated that the growth of the movement had been phenomenal. There were in all parts of the world now 33,000 branches or companies, 1400 of which were in Great Britain and Ireland. Though there were many objections urged against the movement, yet it was undoubtedly making much headway, as he considered it well deserved to do.

Rev. J. B. Morgan (Chester) opened a discussion. Those who took part in the conference included Revs. T. M. Morris (Ipswich), T. Phillips, (Kettering), and W. Stott (Battersea). All spoke in high terms of the movement, and a resolution cordially approving of it was carried unanimously.

On Thursday morning Church Extension was discussed by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., of Norwich. "Indifference to Religion" was the subject of a paper by Rev. J. R. Wood, of Holloway, who held that the programme of the Church in meeting indifference must be as broad as the programme of her Master; and the holy freemasonry of primitive Christian fellowship must be revived. Rev. J. Thew, of Leicester, gave a devotional address on "Our Fathers' God." Resolutions against slavery and the drink traffic were also passed. In the evening the closing service was held, when Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, delivered a powerful discourse based on Rom. vi. 16.

The missionary meetings excited deep interest. The sermon for young people on Tuesday morning was preached by Rev. W. J. Henderson, of Bristol, from Rom. xvi. 22. The designation and valedictory service, in Rye Hill Chapel was presided over by Mr. W. R. Rickett, treasurer of the Society, who urged every church member to have a share in giving effect to the Lord's command to "preach the Gospel to every creature." Brief addresses were delivered by each of the following missionaries going out for the first time:—Revs. C. E. Wilson, B.A., Jessore, Bengal; Thomas Watson, Barisal, Bengal; Julius MacCallum, M.A., B.D., Ceylon. The following missionaries, returning after furlough, also spoke:—Revs. Thomas Bailey, of Cuttack, Orissa; W. Carey, of Barisal; H. E. Crudgington, of Delhi, Punjaub; R. Wright Hay, of Dacca, East Bengal; W. K. Landels, of Turin, North Italy; R. M. McIntosh, of Muttra, North-West Provinces; A. E. Scrivener, of Lukolela, Upper Congo River; and A. T. Teichmann, of Perizpore, East Bengal.

In the course of a valedictory address, Dr. Glover said: "The Saviour summed up his mission, the story of his life and death, in one word, 'I have declared thy Name, and will declare it.' That is to be your business. God's habit, which you are to copy, is to be learned from Calvary. He gave up all, so to speak, to come and save us. You have learned some of his wisdom. There are no crowns truly regal that are not thorny, and no thrones, really thrones, that are not crosses. And you have learned a little of that. You go forward in a work which will bless others, but it will also bless yourselves. 'I am with you alway,' said Christ, and He reveals Himself as a kindred spirit." The valedictory prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Angus. In the afternoon the missionary sermon was preached by Rev. John Watson, M.A., of Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool.

In the evening Sir Benjamin C. Browne presided over a large public meeting, at which addresses were delivered by Revs. W. A. Wills, of Shantung, North China; F. W. Macdonald, secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society; W. K. Landels, of Turin, North Italy; and R. Wright Hay, of Dacca, Bengal. Of the Papal church in Italy Mr. Landels said:—"It is neither more nor less than a new form of the paganism of old. Many of the images of the saints, which to-day are so devoutly worshipped in the churches, are the self-same images which two thousand years ago adorned the heathen temples; and, were one of those ancient worshippers to rise from his grave and to enter one of the modern churches in Italy, he would find the worship almost exactly as he left it, the principal difference being that the gods have changed their names. Have foreign missionary societies been formed for sending the Gospel to heathen lands? Then, in the name of all that is true and just, I claim that Italy has a right to a place among the fields of labour."

A MEMORIAL CHURCH.

Dear Sir,—On this day last year Mrs. Douglas Hooper (daughter of Rev. F. Baldey, Southsea) entered into rest at Jelore, in East Africa, having laid down her young life in her endeavour to teach the poor Africans about the Lord Jesus who gave his life to save the lost. I had known her from her childhood, I had seen her great growth in spiritual life, I had noticed her desire in all things to obey her Lord's command, and it was no surprise to me when she offered herself for foreign mission work and went forth to that work in 1889. It was an intense joy to learn from time to time how God was owning her testimony to his truth at Jelore; how her consecrated life was leaving its deep impression upon the heathen around: how her beloved husband was cheered by her bright and beautiful Christian life, but it was a heavy blow when the news came that the Church militant had lost one who seemed so eminently fitted for the work to which her Lord had called her. He saw the labourer at his work and took her to his rest. He knew what was most for his glory, and so He translated her, and all we can say is "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

As I was starting for India last December I wrote to your paper stating that some of us wished to carry out her last expressed desire in regard to Jelore—viz., to erect a permanent church where the ever-increasing band of converts might meet to worship the true God. On account of the heavy expenses of the carriage of the necessary stone, etc., the cost of the church will be £600. In response to the appeal issued last December, the Lord has disposed some of his servants to send £500 towards the £600 required. I mentioned the need of a church for the converts at Jelore when I was in South India in March last, at Palamcottah and Mengnanapuram, and one dear missionary gave £5, and the native converts, etc., gave about £10. I also mentioned the need of this Church when I was in Ceylon in March, and the Christians there gave £28 13s. 5d.

I now appeal to the Christians at home to supply the needed £100, and I shall be glad if those who give will do so as a thank-offering to God for his loan of the late dear Edith Hooper to the mission work of the Church of Christ. This proposed church has the warm and loving sympathy of Bishop Tucker, Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, and others.

Edgar N. Thwaites.

CROYDON CONVENTION.—Owing to unforeseen circumstances, the proposed convention at Croydon, November 19-23, will not be held.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

MISSIONARY FAREWELLS.

A meeting was held in the City Temple on Wednesday evening of last week, under the auspices of the L.M.S., to bid farewell to twenty missionaries, some of whom are going out for the first time, others returning to the scenes of their former labours. There was a large and sympathetic audience, presided over by Dr. Parker, the devotional part of the service being conducted by Rev. H. Coley, of Camden Town.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary, in introducing the missionaries, said they were about to depart to the most important mission fields in the world, India and China, countries which of all other countries would yet prove to be the great battlefields of Christianity. He deeply regretted that they were unable at this time to make a single addition to the staff. Instead of adding thirty-three as they had hoped before their centenary, they had found it impossible to provide adequately for the accommodation of the sixty-seven already sent out. The present company, eight of whom were ladies, were merely going out to fill vacancies in the ranks.

Short speeches were delivered by a number of the missionaries, after which Dr. Parker delivered the valedictory address. He impressed upon them the necessity of making themselves thoroughly familiar with the Bible, both Old and New Testaments, without which they would be useless; no amount of infidelity could displace it. They would be wise to abstain from attaching too much importance to the mere "preaching" of the Word to those who knew nothing of the way of salvation; they should endeavour rather, by conversation and example, to convert or turn them back from the error of their ways. He reminded missionaries that they were not going out for personal ambition or a life of ease; all their powers of being, will, imagination, and desire, were to be consecrated and devoted to one end—the salvation of souls. No man could live a pure, beneficent, and holy life without winning souls; the two went together as cause and effect. They had a grand theology; let them illustrate it by a sublime morality.

Dr. Parker then announced that he would start the collection with £18 as an expression of his love and sympathy, enjoining upon all Christians who remain at home their duty of supplying sufficient pecuniary aid to those who are labouring in foreign parts. The valedictory prayer was offered by Rev. H. Harries, M.A., of Clapton Park, and the proceedings concluded with the singing of "God be with you till we meet again."

BIBLE COLPORTAGE IN IRELAND.

The annual meeting of the Irish branch of the Bible and Colportage Society was held in the Christian Union buildings on Friday last week. Mr. D. Drummond, J.P., presided, and testified to the success of the Society during past years. Mr. Boyd, the hon. sec., read the annual report, from which it appeared that through the liberality of an anonymous donor, an additional colporteur had been employed in the Dublin district; through similar generosity on the part of Mr. J. Murphy, of Dundalk, a seventh colporteur was engaged, who was now working in that district. New fields had been opened during the year with considerable success, and, on the whole, the agents had been well received everywhere.

The hon. treasurer (Mr. J. R. Fowler) appealed for more money to enable them to carry on their operations. Several colporteurs gave encouraging reports of their year's work, and testified to the encouraging demand for Bibles, and the abundant opportunities they had for reading the Scriptures to the illiterate classes of the population.

MR. S. PYALL DIPROSE has secured an ex-public house which he hopes to open as a temperance hotel in Narberth, South Wales—a small town of 1200 to 1400 inhabitants with some thirty drinking places. He feels strongly the need of Gospel temperance work in the town, and among the crowds who assemble at the hiring fairs, thirteen or fourteen of which are held in the year, attracting many from the country. Numbers of these will doubtless rejoice to find such a safe place of resort. Mr. and Mrs. Diprose are willing to undertake the rent and the cost of a manager, but need help in the initial expenses. The furnishing and fitting will cost about £200, and they trust many will be led to show fellowship in this. The address is Station Temperance Hotel, Narberth, South Wales.

TOTTENHAM DEACONESSES.

For God and his glory, for man and his good," the inspiring motive that animated the revered der, Dr. Laseron, when he started, nearly ty-eight years ago, the work which is carried on e Evangelical Protestant Deaconesses' Institu- and Hospital at Tottenham.' The death of Dr. ron six months ago involved changes in the agement of affairs, but it was gratifying to hear the new director, Mr. W. David Newton, at annual meeting on Saturday afternoon, that will be no change in the principles and ods of the Institution; first things will be first, and the primary spiritual character of ork will be maintained.

his report of the past year's work Mr. Newton ioned that the number of Sisters at present ected with the Institution, whose whole lives iven up to nursing the sick poor and the patients e hospital, is seventy-four. Forty-eight of are attached to the hospital at Tottenham, seven are in Ireland, seven in Sunderland, others working singly in Harrogate, Scar- gh, Barnsley, Farnley, Newcastle, Rochdale, alem, Sierra Leone, and the East of London. g to the enormous increase in the population ttenham and neighbourhood, the hospital work coming more essential to meet the deep need e sick and suffering poor, and no better evi- can be adduced of this need than the fact during the past year 12,350 have attended as atients, as compared with 7823 in the previous —an increase of over fifty per cent. Besides , 943 were received as in-patients, and 685 ded as dental out-patients.

e evangelistic work carried on in direct connec- with the Institution continues to grow. The ay evening Gospel service is always well ded, but want of room prevents many from g. Amongst the other agencies carried on, es the regular services in the various wards of ospital, are a Sunday-school, Y.W.C.A. Bible- s, lodging-house visitation, mothers' meetings, of Hope meetings, penny bank, &c. The g-room also affords frequent opportunities for g short services with the out-patients, whilst lying in the wards have time to ponder over ortions of God's Word read to them, and it is ng to know that many entering the Institution ently careless and indifferent have left it ng in the living Christ.

y hearty testimony was given by several s to the value and blessedness of the work of relief and spiritual ministration which is carried on by the deaconesses. Mr. J. E. eson, who presided, said that although neither or anybody else could be the successors of the es, they could in a very real way be imitators sus Christ. These devoted sisters were truly g in the footsteps of Christ, carrying, as they e gift of healing in one hand and the message l's salvation in the other.

Theodore Howard drew some practical les- rom the devoted life of Dr. Laseron, and urged ristians to strive more and more to show by daily lives, as he did, what a Christian life to be. Rev. W. Winston Haines commended the tion because of the catholicity of spirit which terises its whole management. Those of all elical denominations are lovingly welcomed s fellowship and service. Rev. T. Bagley, a er in the district for fifteen years, spoke of cases that he had personally known of homes earts being changed, as a result of the tender mpathetic ministrations of the deaconesses in visitation of the people in their own , and in tending them as patients at spital. Rev. Josiah Mee also, as a local er, spoke of the good which is being done l around the hospital, and of the plea- gave to the ministers of all denomina- assist in its work and in making known its on the sympathy of Christian people.

rring to the cost of maintenance of the l, Mr. Newton stated that, according to a cal table recently published, the cost of stration is the lowest but one of all the larger ls, and, moreover, is only a quarter the cost majority of them. He also mentioned that ires £7000 per annum for the necessary out- of the institution, and having neither capital or endowment, it is dependent entirely upon eceipts. The work is still seriously hampered burden of an outstanding debt of nearly £1800, and he earnestly appealed to friends to remove this serious obstacle. Towards this object a cheque for £100 had been received from Mr. Howard Morley, who promised to increase it to £250 if the remainder were made up before the end of the year, and Mr. John Cory had also offered £100 on the same conditions.

DR. BAEDEKER IN HUNGARY.

Dear Sir,—The time I was able to spend in that large and rapidly-rising city Buda Pesth was fully occupied. On my way from Vienna I spent a night at the ancient city of Pressburg, and had the joy of cheering fellowship with a very little flock of the Lord's own, the living fish swimming against a general stream of dead worldliness cloaked with Roman Catholic religiousness.

On Friday, Sept. 21, I arrived at Buda Pesth, the same evening Pastor Andrew Moody had announced me for a Gospel address in one of his halls. Every seat was occupied, and many had to stand, such is the spirit of hearing in that populous city, which may well be called the Chicago of the East. Pastor Moody has opened two halls for the Gospel, and twice a week these are open for "whosoever will." On Saturday morning the same enterprising servant of God took me to see the Bible carriage, which on that day was placed in one of the weekly market-places. This also is a move in the forward direction; the people from the country are thus enabled to possess themselves of the Word of God and of other religious literature.

On Saturday evening I attended a prayer-meeting in the Baptist church. Mr. Meyer, the pastor, had gone to visit other places in this vast empire, and he had requested me to occupy till he should return.

On Lord's Day morning, September 23, I had the privilege of addressing a large assembly in the Baptist church. At 11.30 Mr. Moody had announced me to hold a meeting in English in the Reformed German church; at 2 p.m., a large Sunday-school in the Baptist church; and at 5 p.m. a full congregation in the same place listened to the messages which the Lord was pleased to give. At 8 p.m. Pastor Moody's hall was again filled with a very attentive audience till about 9.30 p.m. Thus the Lord's Day was indeed a day of rest in his service.

On Monday I visited the German Hospital and Deaconesses' Home, and the large and ever-increasing school for Jewish and other children in connection with the Free Church Mission among the Jews. Scarcely anywhere have I addressed an assembly of children so closely attentive as these children of various nationalities. There were Jews, Hungarians, Slavs, Germans, but they are all being taught German; they are instructed in the Word of God pure and simple. Their attention throughout my speaking to them was very marked; and of the answers elicited about Scripture, Old and New Testament, those given by the Jewish children were the most ready and intelligent. Surely this is seed sown for the reaping by-and-by.

On Monday evening another gathering in the Baptist church filled up the day. On Tuesday I had a Bible reading in the Deaconess' Home, attented by many sick ones and also by visitors. In the evening another crowded meeting in Pastor Moody's Hall, and afterwards a meeting with the German Y.M.C.A. Wednesday was my last day, and the Hungarian Y.M.C.A. amongst students sent in an urgent request which I could not refuse. Professor Sabot, who was in London as one of the delegates to the Y.M.C.A. Congress, was my interpreter. He and some other professors present laid on me an urgent claim for the Theological University at Debreczin. They would accept no refusal, and I believe the Lord had need of me for this service also.

Instead of leaving Buda Pesth by a direct train on Thursday afternoon, I left by an early morning train for Debreczin. My arrival had been announced by telegram, and, although no preparation had been made, some of the professors did what was in their power to call an assembly of students for the evening. There were great difficulties in the way, and I was not expecting a large meeting, but to my joyful surprise some 400 young men, the cream of Hungary, and most of them the future pastors of the Reformed Church, had responded to the call. Never have I had a more appreciative audience than they were; one of the professors of divinity was my glad and ready interpreter. The grateful attention of the young men, and the address of thanks on the part of their senior was most cheering and gratifying. May the blessing of God rest upon this seed sown in the name of the Lord, and may it be multiplied for blessing throughout this needy land.

I hear the next Y.M.C.A. Congress is to take place in Buda Pesth. This will be a decided forward movement, and I trust it will gather many of the young men who are fast drifting into utter carelessness and ungodliness. Buda Pesth is a very whirlpool of sin and misery. It is only the Lord that, in the midst of such a turbulent sea, is able to keep his own in perfect peace and walking in the narrow path of righteousness and truth.

I must not omit to mention a very interesting whom I found busy at his desk writing a pamphlet on "The Light of the World." Our conversation had its centre in the Lord, and we had very many points of harmony. It is evident that the dear man has taken his stand upon the Rock, from whence he calls forth living water. A Jew, and, moreover, a Rabbi well versed in the Old Testament and in the Talmud, he has a very rich supply of truth flowing out from him. May God still sustain his servant, and use him as his witness to the many Jews in Hungary!

Interview with Rabbi Lichtenstein,

There are possibilities of Gospel labour in Hungary, which I yet hope may rouse the ambition of men who are full of love to the Lord and of zeal for his service, to yield themselves to be sent as light-bearers into the dark places of the earth.

I am now at Bucharest for a few days, seeking opportunities for sowing the seed. But the sands of my time are sinking, and will probably soon have run through my hour-glass. Pastor Meyer, of the Baptist Church, and Pastor A. Moody, of the Free Church of Scotland, also Pastor Gladischefski, of the German Reformed Church, are zealous labourers each in his sphere, but they long for helpers to join them in the vast field of the city of Buda Pesth, where sin and iniquity make rapid strides in dragging young men and women into ruin. The accounts of continued sore persecution in Russia which have reached me here are most distressing. I shall soon find out whether I shall yet once more be permitted to visit the dear tried brethren, the Stundists. Grateful of every remembrance in prayer, I am, yours sincerely,

Bucharest, Oct. 1, 1894. F. W. Baedeker.

MR. SIMS IN MILE-END.

Mr. J. J. Sims, from Toronto, Canada, has concluded a five weeks' mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. Mr. Sims' addresses were principally on the second coming of our Lord, and therefore rather of a different character to those generally delivered in the Great Assembly Hall. Although not wholly directed to the unsaved, yet Mr. Sims saw many brought to the Lord under his preaching, and backsliders were restored. Both his Sunday and week-night meetings were well attended, the latter more than usual. On Sunday, the 23rd ult., the harvest festival was held. So large were the numbers seeking admission that the upper galleries had to be opened in the morning, and in the evening thousands were turned away half an hour before the commencement. The huge building, holding 5000 persons, was packed from floor to ceiling. It was a most impressive sight.

Among other cases that came under Mr. Sims' notice was that of a man about forty-five years of age, who stated that he had been at one time a professed Christian. He joined a Freemason lodge, and at their suppers had contracted the taste for champagne, which led him into drunkenness. His wife has been compelled to leave him, and for fourteen years he had never been to a religious meeting of any kind. He came in on a Tuesday night, became interested, was brought under conviction of sin on Sunday evening, and on the following Wednesday the Lord spoke the word of power to his soul. He went away rejoicing, and delivered from the power of drink. The result of this has been that the family are now reunited, and they are all seeking to live for God.

Another man, long troubled by infidel teaching, was brought to Christ, and has since confessed Him. A middle-aged woman who had become a doubter through trouble broke down during one evening and willingly confessed Christ. Mr. Sims has received quite a number of letters from those blessed under his preaching. K.

HIGHWAY AND HEDGEROW MISSION.

Captain H. A. Bruce-Moorhouse writes to us from Wedmore, Somerset:—

"I have just come from a scene that makes me sick at heart. I am in the midst of the moor peat industry—twenty-seven hamlets around, half on the peat moor, cut off in winter, surrounded by impassable dykes. To-day, on entering a cottage, I found a dead body in an open box by a peat fire. Scarlet fever was in the house; a boy was dying, and the mother and girl sickening of the same; all were in one room. The father is now sick. Dyke water, extremely foul, was their ordinary drink—no visitor, no nurse, no Bible. Last year the black plague raged here.

"There are hundreds of people on these moors who cannot read or write; they live in two-roomed houses, and cider-drinking is their curse. In winter they are cut off from the outer world. There are about 200 cripples in the district.

"In another hamlet a child of nine years old keeps house for two younger ones, the drunken father and mother having run away. In yet another, not far off, we found a dying young woman with two children; the man is nearly always drunk. And so on, the whole place for miles is sunk in degradation. I hold twenty-one services a week in these hamlets. The vicar is very kind, and gives me his room. I have two railway carriages to use, also chapels, and there are three cottage meetings. I have an earnest young evangelist, but I want a Bible nurse (whom the vicar will gladly welcome), and a second evangelist, also Bibles, hymn-books, and means if I am to teach these poor cast-off sunless heathen, and to keep up the work in Somerset."

"CRYING FOR THE LIGHT."

Dear Sir,—You are interested in truth and must have the privilege of knowing a band of faithful Gospel preachers. This town is in a very sad condition, and if not for the sparing mercy of God must be burnt to ashes by the fiery ordeal of Divine wrath.....Is there no Abraham to intercede or Jonah to walk the streets and proclaim the sad end of these things? Are there no God-loving people to visit such localities with the bright and loving story of redeeming love? The Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation, might in this beautiful weather be preached at the corner of every street, or some public room be obtained. The people are in many cases groaning under the lash of ecclesiastical arrogance. The Real Presence and many of the other absurdities of apostate Rome occupy a prominent place in the clerical teaching.

My heart is sad and sorrowful for the serious condition of things, knowing nothing can meet the necessity of the people, but the bright and beautiful Gospel of Divine Grace, as was proclaimed from the lips of the large-hearted and faithful Apostle of the Gentiles. Cardinal Vaughan has just given us to understand how this depraved Ritualism is rapidly tending to Rome.—Yours faithfully,

One who Loves the Truth.

[We withhold the name of the town lest we should give offence. Doubtless the description would be true of many others.—Ed.]

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Dear Sir,—I am compelled by the very critical state of our finances to bring our urgent need of prompt and liberal support under the notice of your readers. Considerably over a quarter of a million free breakfasts have been provided by us for discharged prisoners during the past eighteen years. Some 6500 men and women are helped by us annually. Each year we receive 500 juvenile offenders into our four Boys' Homes, thus saving them from a career of crime by caring and providing for them in every way at a most important period of their lives.

The rents of our Homes and breakfast rooms are now due, and we are most anxious to discharge our liabilities, but our funds are absolutely exhausted. Besides all this, winter is quickly approaching, and the deserving poor and sick of our district are already needing from us that help which for more than thirty years past it has been our privilege to afford. I hope and believe it is only necessary for these facts to be generally known to lead those who are able to help us to do so immediately.

Our treasurer is Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.—Yours faithfully,

Wm. Wheatley, Superintendent,

THE TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

This hospital, designed for the treatment of disease without alcohol, has been at the service of the public for twenty-one years. The event was marked by a reception at the institution, Hampstead-road, on Monday, when a large number of friends attended. A short meeting was held, at which Dr. Benjamin Richardson, physician to the hospital, said:—

"During his connection with the hospital he had come to the conclusion, without any difficulty or hesitation, that alcohol was as little required for the treatment of disease and restoration of the body from sickness to health, as it was required for maintaining the strength of the body and its soundness of action in periods of health. During his official connection with the hospital he had had yearly 1000 cases under his care, and he could honestly say that he never, in his professional life, had seen more satisfactory results than in the non-alcoholic treatment. Acute symptoms were, in his opinion, more easily allayed; recoveries seemed to him to be shortened, and he had never detected that prostration or feebleness had been produced because alcohol was omitted."

This is weighty testimony, and it is completely supported by the statistics of the institution carefully recorded during the past twenty-one years. Such facts ought to deal a heavy blow at the custom of freely using alcohol as a curative agent. Happily this custom is becoming more and more discredited in connection with our public hospitals. A writer in The Daily News states that "the alcohol bills of all London hospitals, save one, have been reduced to a remarkable extent in recent years. Since 1862 the cost for alcohol administered to patients in Guy's Hospital has been steadily reduced from £3 9s. per bed to about nine shillings; while at University College there has been a decrease of more than 66 per cent. in the expenditure under this head."

MR. OATEY IN ACTON.

During the past few weeks a stirring mission has been in progress at Acton—a district which many have already found hard to move. On the invitation of Rev. W. A. Davis, of the Baptist Chapel, Rev. James Oatey commenced, five weeks ago, a series of services which speedily aroused great interest and called forth the sympathies of many Christians. The open-air work has doubtless contributed in no small degree to the success. This evangelist seems to have a peculiar gift for open-air preaching. On Saturday night, for example, we found hundreds of working people listening to the Gospel message, told forth in no uncertain sound. True, one or two being "in drink" tried to raise objections, but the majority listened quietly, and not a few followed Mr. Oatey and his helpers into the chapel, where a capital service was subsequently held.

The work of the Sunday opened betimes, for as early as 6 a.m. quite a large congregation mustered to hear the Word; a hearty prayer-meeting followed from seven to eight, and a lecture in the Acton Hall (the Friends'). Then came the ordinary morning service, a lecture to men (in the Congregational Hall) in the afternoon; and the evening service, when the Baptist Chapel was packed. The Word was with great power, and it is believed that many decided for Christ—certainly the spirit of conviction was very manifest. Amongst those who profess conversion are some who have been known as rough characters; while, on the other hand, about fifty children have made an open confession. So marked has been the blessing that the mission is to be continued two weeks longer. Will many pray that the last may be the best? T. P.

MR. LETHABY AT ADEN.

Writing from the Camp, Aden, Mr. William Lethaby says:—"The first month here has been a terribly trying one, physically, for myself, but I hope for Mrs. Lethaby's arrival shortly, and a little cooler weather. There is in this place a conflux of Asiatic and African natives, numbering scores of thousands; behind northwards to Kerak, and eastwards to Bahrein (where I was last year) and all the land between; and the one Free Church of Scotland Mission, founded by Keith Falconer, ten miles from here, is all that witnesses for Christ, except our Bible Society's silent missionaries. And yet the Church of God says, 'Thy Kingdom come!' How long we, nearing sixty years of age, may be able to stand this clime I know not, but our past has been a preparation for the present, and that is a great comfort."

A CHILD MUST LEARN TO OBEY, for this lies beneath all other lessons. This does not mean that the child must have hard and harsh rules.

NATIONAL RIGHTEOUSNESS.

On Sunday afternoon a series of pleasant Sunday afternoons was inaugurated in the Victoria Hall, Waterloo-road, under the auspices of the members of the Borough Polytechnic. The address was given by Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., who took for his subject "National Righteousness." He said the United Kingdom was the heart of a mighty Empire, and it was afflicted with foul diseases, which, if allowed to live, would destroy the body politic. The first duty of the politician was to find out some method by which the terrible difference between poverty and luxury could be rubbed out. If without impoverishing the rich well and good, but if the rich got richer and the poor poorer, some method of amalgamation would have to be discovered. It was computed that there were 200,000 families having a smaller income among them than was possessed by an English duke. The unemployed numbered 1,000,000, and in London alone there were half a million of people who were members of families which had not a weekly income of twenty shillings. It was the duty of the individual citizen to look into this matter.

Then there was vice. We sent the Gospel to the heathen, but we had 350,000 fallen women trampling our streets, and did not lift a little finger to prevent or cure this frightful evil. As to drunkenness, it was at the root of nearly every other vice; and it was said that about 1,000,000 of our population went to bed drunk every night. The whole financial system of the Empire was reared on drunkenness, since the main revenue was derived from sources which promoted the vice and degradation of the people. Of the evil of covetousness, he would only say that gambling was one of its manifestations. As regarded irreligion, some might ask Could not a man be moral without being religious? He might, but as a matter of fact he seldom was. The Church of Christ was herself apathetic in this matter, spending much of the money given for the spreading of the Gospel on personal extravagance, gorgeous edifices, tall steeples, stained glass windows, &c., whereas what was wanted was more vital religion, more men induced to come to Christ, so that the whole national life might be sweetened from top to bottom.

But we must not forget that the nation was only an aggregation of individuals. Only through the action of the individual could the national life be purified. The religion of Christ must be brought to bear first of all on the individual life and then on the life of the nation; for in that way, and in no other could they attain to national righteousness.

"SNOWBALL" PRAYERS—A PROTEST.

Strong objection has from time to time been taken to the collecting of money by the "Snowball" method of asking each recipient of the appeal to write two copies and send them to friends, with the request that they in turn should do the same. An attempt made to adapt the principle to prayer on behalf of a certain branch of Christian work has met, unreasonably, as we think, called forth the following protest from one to whom such a request was addressed:—

Dear Madam,—For the sake of the originator of the "Snowball" prayer, I am sorry to refuse the request contained in the letter I return. I do so upon principle, and wish to do so courteously and in love. For years I have been an active member of the Y.W.C.A. local committee, and deeply interested in home and foreign missions and all reformation work promoting God's kingdom on earth. I also believe in "provoking," or rather in stimulating, one another to love and good works, but not in whipping up by the method of letters. Rather let the originator ask for a large outpouring of the Spirit of prayer; but letters, limited to a certain number, and taxing the strength of heavily-pressed workers, involving a large outlay of postage—this mode presents itself as forcing in character. In the common pathways of life, the usual correspondence, with its many opportunities, by all means redeem them. "Snowball" collections have been exposed as a great danger and even a means of leading to fraud. Letters on the same line are too material for the holy work of intercessory prayer.

I hear that many workers have been worried over these letters, and were in doubt how to act for the best.

Believe me, with sincere regard for the motive though entire disapproval of the method,

Yours truly,

J. C. P.

"GIFT, SERVICE, AND HEADSHIP."

Dear Sir,—"As many as are led by the Spirit of d, these are sons of God." Yet there are "exhibi- ns of the flesh" in Christians, and in some ristians "lamentable" ones. Must we argue, ause of such exhibitions, that those thus failing ow not the leading of the Spirit of God, or are never by Him? I should say not.

So, in assemblies of believers, gathered (professedly) the name of the Lord Jesus, there may be "lament- e exhibitions of the flesh" (and, during twenty- r years of habitual attendance at such assemblies indicated in my previous letter, I, like Mr. man, have seen them). Am I just, therefore, in uing that they never know the guidance of God's rit, or that to gather together in the dependence aith upon the unseen Head of the Body is a thing naught and capable only of failure? I should in say not.

No Christian has yet attained unto perfection: ther, by a long way, has any Church. Yet will it found that such gatherings of believers are the ef means counselled and authorised in Holy ipture for the benefit of the entire body—and sonally, I have realised far more of blessing from h meetings than from any others I have ever ended.

May I again call attention to the Scripture but tially quoted by Mr. Seaman (Eph. iv. 11-12, vised)? "He gave some to be apostles; and ie, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, tors and teachers; for the perfecting of the nts unto the work of ministering (or service) unto the lding up of the body of Christ." The latter part the passage shows that the object of the special s from "Apostle" to "Teacher" was to perfect individual members unto their work of service in building up of the Body. There are many that e not utterance, whose office (it may be) would under the head of "helps," "governments," owing mercy," or "using hospitality," and there he more excellent way within reach of all, that Apostle finally incites unto—that of "love." The rcise of gift in assemblies should aim at stirring f each member to the fulfilling of his place in the y of Christ.

he Corinthians had excess of gift, being blessed all utterance and all knowledge"; and hence ough the lack of love), doubtless arose their ire to maintain decency and order. But the very ures prove (what is also true in the individual e), that the flesh profiteth nothing, and that only he Spirit of God can we fulfil the will of God.

o argue contrariwise is as much as saying that, ause I stumble sometimes, therefore I will walk nore at all.—Yours faithfully, A. Willcock.

ear Sir,—You were good enough to insert, in r issue of September 28, a letter of mine in answer ne of the previous week on this subject. I have communications from several persons as the lt thereof, and I fear the general impression is I intended to depreciate the exercise of what is wn as "open" ministry, and to favour what is d the "one man" principle. Some have thought "qualified" ministry meant qualification by ge training, or ordination at the hands of men. e of these thoughts were present to my mind. I many honoured friends among the section of stians to whom my remarks principally referred, should be sorry to think that they misunderstood etter or its import.

does not seem to be generally known that when ttempt was first made at Plymouth, now sixty s ago, to carry out the principles of "open" stry, no person was allowed to speak, save those e gift had been proved to be unto edifying. The t of such godly order was that believers were ted by the exercise in their midst of qualified and d ministry. Moreover, the teachers were agreed very point of doctrine taught, and consequently had the only true basis of unity, viz., unity in ruth. Indiscriminate ministry was excluded by discipline, and submission was readily accorded storal authority in accordance with the Scripture xiii. 17).

hen, later on, other meetings were established where, on professedly the same basis, discipline d to be exercised, and the result was that the ciple of "any man" ministry was introduced, and natural end was confusion. I have, myself, been nt at such meetings, where men, speaking pro- dly under the leading of the Spirit of God, have utterance to most unscriptural teaching, or, on ther hand, have wasted their hearers' time and nce by the most vapid wordiness, leaving little t that they certainly had not a gift to edification. no one interfered, perhaps because they were hy brethren, or it may be because it would be to the standing principle that each one who speaks does so in direct response to the promptings of the Holy Spirit, who, say they, is the alone President, Guide, and Controller of all their meetings.

Can we wonder that Satan should interpose to corrupt the holy practice of open ministry, seeing how profitable such varied experience would be to the Church of God to-day?

There are many who, in common with myself, would gladly welcome a return to the doctrines and practices of the Apostolic Church, both as to worship and service, but who see nothing in Christendom approaching thereto, nor, indeed, any general desire to alter the present condition of things in the professing Church. Surely it is no time for self-congratulation, or cries of Eureka! but an hour when we should seek grace of God, that we may say with those of old time, "Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord." With many thanks for your courtesy in publishing my former reply.—Very truly yours. Charles A. Seaman.

AGGRESSIVE WORK.

Dear Sir,—I read with great interest the letter in a recent issue of your paper entitled "Aggressive Work," and also the incident by Mrs. Harvey-Jellie, which forms so eloquent a comment upon it, and of the usefulness of such quiet work. It has been my growing conviction from some years' experience while spending a brief holiday at these large boarding establishments, of the great opportunity they afford of giving a Christian testimony among those whom one may meet in this way, who have perhaps little or no care for these things.

Many of us are not able, do not feel led to address a number, as some of our brethren can; but all can speak a word, which may be followed up by asking the acceptance of a booklet, which would probably be read at such a season when perhaps at no other. I have known this course encourage some other Christians in the house to do likewise, so that a centre of influence for good for the time has resulted; and He who has said "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days," has doubtless blessed the simple efforts of his servants, the result of which eternity will alone reveal.

I feel that in addition to the privilege that may be ours in winning souls for Christ, there is a solemn responsibility resting upon us as Christians when brought in the company of others in this way, if we forbear to speak of those things which belong to the hereafter, or point them to Him at whose right hand there are pleasures for evermore. A gifted Christian writer has put this very forcibly when he says: "As ships meet at sea, a moment together, when words of greeting must be spoken, and then away upon the deep, so men meet in this world; I think we should cross no man's path without hailing him, and, if he needs, giving him supplies." ## THE NEEDS OF CHINA.

Dear Sir,—I want to enforce Rev. E. N. Thwaites' appeal in your issue of March 22, on behalf of those who are still wrapped in the darkest of heathen gloom. We find them here in China as thick as he found them in India, and the missionary forces are as inadequately represented. We cannot help contrasting our old spheres of labour with our new. Then we were speaking our mother tongue fluently and easily, and we had numerous friends to stand by us. Nor were we the only workers by a long, long way. Now we are among a people of strange language, liable to make mistakes and be misunderstood. We have no friends to stand by us and no rivals in the field. Cities, towns, and villages, of 10,000, 20,000, 30,000, and 40,000 inhabitants lie around us with no churches and no workers. We speak to a people to whom our messages seem veiled. They listen to our statements, and, were they really awake, they would either go home and burn their idols and turn to the living God, or we should meet with great opposition. Our startling tidings startle them not. Surely their souls are deaf.

Were they awake, and if they knew the condition of religious life at home, how strangely they might look at us. Suppose they understood the purport of our message, that these tens of thousands of Confucianists, Buddhists, and Taoists are living at variance with the holy God, and in the nature of things can never have peace in his presence; and suppose they knew, as we know, that the disciples of Jesus, to whom has been entrusted the privilege of proclaiming salvation in his Name, have only sent out these ones and twos to teach these multitudes the way of life; and that there are hundreds more who might come, but won't or don't; and that the contributions to this work are miserably small to what is spent on self-gratification, might not they well be sceptical as to the sincerity of English Christianity?

Is there not too much false economy abroad? But know, that which is spent on self is the real waste. Why this waste on tobacco? Why that waste on drink? Why the other waste on wearisome pleasure? Waste on gay clothing; waste on luxury; waste of labour, health, talents, and time. Brethren, these things ought not so to be. Will you help to put them right?—Your fellow servant,

William Knipe.

BOOKLETS FOR ENQUIRERS.

Dear Sir,—I would advise your correspondent "S." to look over the book-tracts issued by the Religious Tract Society, under the name of the "Save the Banner" Series. I presume that he is acquainted with Newman Hall's "Come to Jesus." I have given away a great many copies of the second edition, and scarcely know anything to equal it, when the receiver is a person seriously concerned as to his salvation. Some of the Bishop of Liverpool's tracts are also admirable for their combined vigour and simplicity, which make them suitable for persons of all classes. I need not say that these are but a few out of many excellent tracts.—Yours truly, Discipulus.

[We would direct the attention of "S." to the publications of the Monthly Tract Society, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., and also to the "Golden Series" of tracts issued by the Religious Tract Society.—Ed.]

Dear Sir,—In answer to the letter of inquiry in your last issue, by Mr. Ransome Wallis, I should like to say that the books, etc., that I have found most blessed of God to inquirers and young converts have been the following:—"Grace and Truth," by W. P. Mackay (this book was used by God to the conversion of the late Bishop Hannington; see His Life, pp. 90 to 100); "All of Grace," by C. H. Spurgeon; "Safety, Certainty, and Enjoyment"; "Touchstones," by the late Bishop Oxenden; "God's Way of Peace," by Horatius Bonar.

I have also found some of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's sermons to be very largely blessed to all classes of people. The following are the numbers of some I have given away largely:—Nos. 2122, 2264, 2312, 2327, 2260, 1876, 1505, 2374. For many years I have read all the books I have named at least once every six months.—I remain, yours truly,

LAMBETH WALK MISSION.

Mr. Goodman carries on an excellent work in the needy district known as Lambeth Walk. In his new report some striking instances are given of lives being changed through the Gospel of Christ.

We read:—Mr. and Mrs. P., who at one time were fairly well off, but, alas! were brought low through the blighting curse of strong drink, went out for a stroll one Sunday night. After patrolling for some time up one street and down another, the husband said: "I've had enough of this. Let's go to Goodman's Mission Hall." In they came, looking dejected and unhappy. Whilst the Gospel address was being delivered they felt convinced they were sinners, on the "downgrade," and that the Spirit of God was striving mightily with them. Before they left, the missionary spoke to them about Jesus and his love. They left the hall condemned, and went straight home; and when he called on them he was heartily welcomed. "Come up, Mr. G., I want to see you," said the wife; and then she told him how that, after their return home from the Mission, she could not rest. Pointing to a corner in her room, she said: "There, I poured out my soul to Jesus, asked his forgiveness, and He saved me. Oh, I was so happy; my husband was looking at me all the time, and I said, when I rose from my knees, 'My dear husband, go and do as I have done, and Jesus will make you happy too.' And, blessed be his Holy Name, he went and threw himself in the same corner and cried to God for mercy. I prayed for him too, and not long afterwards he rose, rejoicing from sins forgiven."

The work is of a thorough, all-round character. Communications to the missionary should be addressed: 29, Princes-square, Kennington, S.E.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

The "Christian Harbour Lights" held a meeting on Thursday evening at the headquarters of the Society, St. George-street, London Docks, and a goodly number of sailors and others were present. Rev. G. J. Hill presided, and gave an interesting account, gleaned by a personal inspection recently made, of the Society's work amongst seamen at the various ports missioned by the Institution. There he met large numbers of sailors who were once drunkards and blasphemers, but who now were living to the praise and glory of God. Mrs. Maynard, of Wimbledon, addressed a few remarks to weary souls. Mr. Walter Radcliffe, the Society's missionary at the Isle of Man, gave a cheering report of the work carried on at the Bethel at Ramsey. Mrs. Hill spoke, and several seamen gave personal testimony to the blessing they experienced since relinquishing a life of sin they had walked in the path of sobriety and godliness. The proceedings, interest in which had been well sustained throughout, were shortly after brought to a conclusion.

THE SALISBURY CONFERENCE.

The missionary meetings held in connection with the Salisbury Conference have in past years been marked by exceptional interest, and many from these gatherings have been thrust out into service among the heathen. The Thursday afternoon at this annual gathering is usually devoted to missionary matters. At the recent conference this missionary meeting proved a season of much power. Probably many recalled the fact that last year Bishop Hill was present and moved all hearts by his burning words. Now he and his beloved wife have been called home, leaving a bright testimony and an inspiring example. While faithful voices have thus been stilled, others have been raised to continue the work, and those who spoke a few days ago at Salisbury manifested a like enthusiasm and devotion. Amongst those were Rev. Ll. Lloyd, of Foochow, China, Mr. Frank Anderson, of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Movement, Mrs. Chowdhry, an Indian lady, and Dr. Harry Guinness. The hall was crowded, great attention was manifested, and at the close several offered themselves for service as the Lord may lead.

The Praise Meeting on Friday morning was a season of great joy, as one after another testified to the blessing received during the week. Many expressed their thankfulness in a word from Scripture, or a sentence praising God for definite blessing.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites gave an address on "Steps that lead up to real praise" (1 Chron. xii. 18), "Thine are we, David, and on thy side" (ver. 21), "They helped David" (ver. 38), "They came with a perfect (sincere) heart to make David King" (ver. 39), "They were with David three days" (ver. 40), the bringing of gifts, the consecration of our all, and (ver. 40) "There was joy in Israel."

We understand that £237 13s. 3d. was given during the Conference, while £160 was promised for different objects. Many were also led to give up articles of jewellery, amongst these a gold chain, a gold pencil case, and a number of bracelets, brooches, rings, and similar ornaments.

MISS CUSACK AT CLIFTON.

At a drawing-room meeting, held in Colonel Savile's house, Clifton, on September 25, Miss Cusack gave an eloquent reply to Cardinal Vaughan's invitation to the people of England to join the Church of Rome. The large drawing-rooms were crowded. Before introducing Miss Cusack, Colonel Savile drew attention to the statement of Cardinal Vaughan that Romanists were indebted to the Ritualists for the advance of Romanism in England.

Miss Cusack, who has somewhat recovered her health during her residence abroad, spoke with a vigour and plainness which left nothing to be desired. She insisted that the control which Rome exercises over the Press to-day in England, is, after ritualistic teaching, the danger of the day, and she gave startling proofs, from documents in her possession, how this control is exercised. We regret that we cannot give a full report of a closely-reasoned address, which was listened to with the deepest attention. We understand that Miss Cusack may publish her reply to Cardinal Vaughan in pamphlet form for distribution, if Christian friends will help the expense. Her remarks on the Roman Catholic doctrine of Intention were specially appreciated, as she showed from Roman Catholic authority that it is extremely doubtful whether Rome has herself any orders. This Roman Catholic doctrine of Intention, as applied to the Sacraments, is quite different from the doctrine of Intention which teaches that you may do a bad action in order to obtain a supposed good end. It is to this doubtful system that the poor Romanist is clinging, instead of to Christ, who alone can save us. In this address of the Roman Cardinal there is not one word of Christ. Miss Cusack alluded with touching earnestness to the reports which have been extensively circulated that she intended to return to the Church of Rome. She was well aware who were the originators of these reports, and their motive, but she thought Christian friends should have written to herself, and asked if they were true, before they believed them. It was surely enough that she should have to bear the loss of all her old friends, the loss of all her property, and the sufferings, which are little known, of a convert's life, without having to bear calumnious reports, circulated by those who should have been the first to support and console her in her loneliness. She confessed that all this had the effect which Rome intended, and had discouraged her from attempting further Protestant work.

Miss Cusack has been giving addresses in Folkestone, in the Baptist Church, and in the Y.W.C.A. rooms. On Friday night she spoke in Emmanuel Church on, "Shall the Pope Rule England?" Her address, till the first week in November, will be 59, Davies-street, Berkeley-square, W.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

It is proposed to found a Baptist Theological College in Scotland.

Deputations are to be received this week by Sir George Trevelyan in favour of ten o'clock closing for public-houses all over Scotland.

During last week Mrs. Baeyertz was labouring in Alexandria, Dumbartonshire, where her preaching has been with remarkable power.

The sum of £2000 has been given to the Glasgow Evangelistic Association for the equipment of a fresh-air home for scrofulous children.

The Dundee Home Mission Union, comprising numbers of the various churches, is planning to reach the artisan non-church-going class in the city.

A good work has been done among farm servants in the districts of Dalkeith and Gorebridge during the summer vacation, by the students of the U.P. College, Edinburgh.

Revs. J. M. McCallum (Larkhall), Thomas Millar (Leith), and J. Sloan (Glasgow), are conducting a three weeks' evangelistic mission in Greenock, under the auspices of the Young Men's Guild.

Rev. James Hughes, of Kimberley, president of the Baptist Union of South Africa, is in Glasgow at present in the interests of an industrial mission he is trying to start in Mashonaland or Matabeleland.

The annual meeting of the Scottish Coast Mission was held this year in the West Free Church, Grangemouth. It was gratifying to hear that the mission station at Grangemouth has for many years been self-supporting.

The Dundee Office-bearers' Union are to take active steps to promote union between the Free and United Presbyterian churches. A letter is to be sent to all the sessions and deacons' courts of the two churches, pointing out the propriety of immediate action.

The Scottish Association for improving the condition of the people have a farm colony scheme in hand, a spot in Ayrshire having been chosen for the experiment. It is hoped in conjunction with the Social Service Union, London, to secure a visit from pastor Von Bodelschwingh, of Germany.

Some opposition to the union of the Evangelical Union Church and the Congregationalists is beginning to manifest itself. The Mid-Lanarkshire district association of the E.U. Church, by a vote of thirteen to twelve, has decided against the union. This was not anticipated, as in the annual meetings of both churches the prospects of a speedy union were considered hopeful.

The annual conference of the Evangelical Union of Scotland was held in Glasgow last week, when for the fourth time Dr. Fergus Ferguson, of that city, was elected president, to mark the fact that this year the jubilee of his ministry occurs. On the motion of Rev. George Gladstone, secretary of the Union, it was decided, by an overwhelming majority, to continue the work of arranging for a union between the Evangelical Unionists and the Congregationalists of Scotland.

On Thursday last a conversazione in connection with the Falkirk United Christian Fellowship Association, was held in the Town Hall. It appears that in Falkirk there are twelve associations attached to various congregations in the town, and every quarter these hold a united meeting. The social gathering last Thursday was marked by much unity of spirit and warmth of feeling. The chairman, Mr. James Wilson, of Bantaskin, said the united association should endeavour to secure a paid secretary, who should organise and foster the work throughout the district.

Dr. W. Landels, minister of Dublin-street Baptist Church, Edinburgh, has tendered his resignation of the pastorate. He is over seventy years of age, and although still in good vigour, he feels that he now requires comparative rest. It is nearly twelve years since he went to Edinburgh, having previously been minister of Regent Park Baptist Church, London, and his present congregation intend celebrating his ministerial jubilee at the close of this month. Two of his sons are in the ministry. His eldest, W. K. Landels, has charge of the mission work in Turin, Northern Italy, and his youngest, T. D. Landels, is settled in Newcastle-on-Tyne.

THE ARTILLERY-LANE MISSION has been labouring for twenty-two years in Spitalfields, in the heart of a dense population. The operations are thoroughly evangelistic. The services attract some of the very poorest; the Gospel is carried into the lodging-houses around, and not a few have been rescued. The Sunday-school, sewing-classes, and mothers' meeting, go on well. During the winter a Sunday morning free breakfast has been given in past years to the destitute, and much blessing has been the result. Help is much needed in view of the winter's work. The superintendent is Mrs. Finn, 29, St. Ann's-road, South Tottenham, N.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

CENTRAL SOUTH LONDON.

An enthusiastic meeting was held in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, on Monday evening, to inaugurate the Central South London C.E. Union, linking together societies in Lambeth, Kennington, and the Borough. Rev. F. B. Meyer, who has been chosen as first president of this Union, welcomed the Endeavourers to Christ Church, and expressed emphatically his sense of the valuable work the Endeavour movement is doing. When the enemy is coming in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord is raising battalions of fresh young witnesses to confront the foe. In his own tour throughout the country he had found that wherever a C.E. Society had been started it had quickened the church into fresh life and vigour.

Rev. J. Fleming followed with a rousing address on "Praise." The C.E. movement is rejuvenating the churches, and proving once more the power of Christian song and Christian joy. God is well pleased with praise—praise which is not manufactured, but born, the outburst of grateful hearts; and praise is characteristic of the C.E. movement.

Alderman Belsey, president of the British Y.P.S.C.E., dwelt on the service the Endeavour movement is rendering in holding and retaining the elder scholars, who are so apt to lapse from the Sunday-school and lose touch with the Church.

After other brief addresses, the roll of the new Union was called and heartily responded to, all present promising solemnly to devote their lives anew to the service and glory of God. The secretary of this Union is Mr. Parsons, 82, Great Bland-street, S.E.

BRIEF NOTES.

A C.E. Society is being formed at Norwood Congregational Church.

A Christian Endeavour Society has been formed at Ripon Congregational Church, and is steadily growing in numbers and interest.

A new committee adopted by the local union of Cleveland, O., is a "brotherhood committee" for work in co-operation with the Y.M.C.A.

An undenominational branch of the Y.P.S.C.E. was formed on Friday last (5th), at Caergwrle, near Wrexham. Fifteen active members joined that evening, and it is hoped that a great work will be done among the young people of the village in the winter.

The Australian colonies have been holding their Conventions, and, while distances in the island continent have thus far prevented a general Convention of all the colonies, it is hoped that one may be held next year. The growth has been especially rapid in Victoria, and the increasing interest shown by the denominations is producing its effect on the missionary activities and treasuries.

The Denominational rallies at the Convention of the Maritime Provinces, U.S.A., gave evidence of a strong determination to extend the society as widely as possible. The Disciples and Congregationalists propose to send letters urging the movement upon the attention of all of their churches not now having societies. The Presbyterians also took action toward promoting systematic giving.

It is proposed to have a rally of all the mission bands, juvenile missionary associations, and Christian Endeavour societies having regular missionary meetings in connection with Presbyterian congregations in London in St. John's Wood Church on Sunday, November 10, at 3 o'clock. Any band, C.E. Society or juvenile missionary association wishing to send delegates to this rally are asked to communicate with Miss C. Mann, 67, Fordwych-road, West Hampstead.

IRISH NOTES.

That the Dublin Soldiers' Home and Institute is highly valued is evident from the fact that last year nearly 10,000 persons availed themselves of its sleeping accommodation.

As an attempt at counteracting the baneful influence of the public-house, Rev. R. C. Phillips, Methodist minister, Tandragee, has commenced a series of Gospel Temperance meetings on Saturday nights, which are being well attended.

The chief feature of religious life in the North of Ireland last week was the Presbyterian Church Conference, which was held in Belfast, and at which addresses were delivered or papers read by such men as Professor Macalister, of Cambridge, and Rev. Dr. Marcus Dods, of Edinburgh. The conference was the first of the sort ever held in this country.

The first Irish Convention of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour was held in Belfast last week. Delegates were present from all parts of the United Kingdom, and it is believed that the convention has given a useful stimulus to the movement in Ireland. At a meeting of the Belfast Methodist Council, held the preceding week, a resolution was adopted approving of the principles of this society

EXETER HALL.

The internal alterations at Exeter Hall are now npleted, and the building is ready for the winter's rk. The principal item in the reconstruction has n a thorough overhauling of the sanitary arrange- nts, and it is stated by the authorities that it is one of the most perfectly drained buildings in ndon. This has been accomplished, however, at a t of about £2000. The kitchen appointments have n brought up to date, so that the resources of the active restaurant are on an ample basis.

Another change, important in its bearing on the gress of Association work, is the fitting up and nishing of what was formerly the newspaper m as a reading-room and social parlour combined. hioned chairs and settees have been provided in ndance, and with the electric light at call, the m is certainly as spacious, cosy, comfortable, and venient of access as could be imagined. If lonely ng men in this part of London do not avail them- es of such a delightful resort, we can only pity n. We are glad to know that the social rooms at ter Hall are in future to be open for young men Sunday evenings, so that this class will have a sant and happy rallying-point for friendly inter- se, at the time in all the week when such a place ost needed. We trust all London friends, who acquainted with young men to whom such a re would be a boon, will acquaint them of its ntages.

The Long Acre Gymnasium having been relin- hed for good reasons, the back basement of ter Hall has again been utilised for this purpose. he work of the winter session, under the vigorous etariat of Mr. J. H. Putterill, is now being hope- entered on. Dr. Pentecost will give on Wed- evenings a series of talks on "The Reasonable- of Christianity"; these are sure to attract h attention. Meetings for men on Saturday eve- s are being organised on a popular basis. The s will be varied. Canon Wilberforce, it is cted, will speak one evening on temperance. Meyer at another time will give an address on al Purity, and other well-known friends will w. Gospel addresses will be given at frequent vals, and at every meeting good music will be ren- d. Sunday evening evangelistic meetings for men also be held. Dr. Harry Guinness was the speaker Sunday evening. Of course, the usual educa- l classes will be fully sustained throughout the er.

The Exeter Hall friends have recently received a handsome and useful gift in the shape of an n of a peculiar make and quality. We under- d that at present only four replicas of this instru- t are in existence; one being in the possession of Majesty the Queen, and another at Westmin- Abbey. Each pipe produces a vox humana note, hat the general effect is that of a choir of voices. The inventor is Mr. J. Baillie Hamilton. instrument is the gift to the institution of a lady desires to remain unknown.

BRIEF NOTES.

The inaugural meeting of a new Y.M.C.A. for ningley, Leeds, was held on Tuesday evening, J. H. Slater, the president, occupying the chair.

The Brighton Association reports a very satisfactory h in the evangelistic services during the past h. The open-air workers and tract distributors eeping well to their work.

The new and elegant rooms of the Y.M.C.A. in San cisco have been formally opened. The Asso- n is forty years old, has in all its branches 1500 bers, and is growing rapidly, a goodly number g on the opening day.

Mr. George Williams has chosen, for the 1895 of the Young Men's Christian Association, the ing most appropriate text:—"Sing unto the bless his name; show forth his salvation from day." (Ps. xcvi. 2).

The autumn work of the Y.M.C.A., Stafford Rooms, are-road, was commenced on Wednesday, the st., by a reception given by Dr. Gladstone, the ent. A goodly number of friends were present, rief addresses were given by Revs. P. Smith and Carlile. The members have been much encour- ately by the blessing attending their work, but sociation is suffering from want of the necessary

The South-Western District Conference was held gnton on Wednesday, October 3. Dr. Hings- elivered an excellent presidental address, and V. H. Mills opened a discussion on "The n of our members to their respective churches, the Y.M.C.A.," advocating the fullest co- ion of the members in the work of their respec- hurches, and the maintenance of Association on lines and within limits that would enable rvice to be rendered.

Rev. F. B. Meyer resumes his weekly Bible readings for young men in the City of London Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Saturday afternoon next, 13th inst., from three to four o'clock sharp. The subjects are those chosen for the international series of Sunday-school Union lessons (afternoon series). While this serves as an admirable preparation class for teachers, the subjects are broadly treated and form excellent and interesting Bible studies for all young men. In previous winters the attendance has run up to 250 and 300 week by week.

The second summer's work in connection with the Woodchurch (Kent) Association was brought to a close on Sunday, September 30. Open-air services have been held every Sunday in Woodchurch, and also at the adjoining village of Bethersden by the secretary and members. These have been well attended and the deepest interest shown. The Association was the outcome of a tent mission held for the Evangelisation Society by Mr. John H. Cooke, when several young men were won for Christ, and with others have continued to witness to the saving power of Christ. William Trowell.

The German Baptist Young Men's Mission is a union of about 130 Associations, with about 2300 members, spread over the whole German Empire. These Associations endeavour to train all their members to activity for the Lord, each according to his ability in filling various offices, in distributing Christian literature, in inviting to the meetings, in the cultivation of singing, in Sunday-school work, and especially in the richly-blessed missions amongst sailors and soldiers. The mission amongst the soldiers has grown into a special mission of the Young Men's Associations, followed by great blessing. Visits are paid to the barracks and hospitals, Christian literature (especially the "Friedensbote," or Messenger of Peace) is distributed. Soldiers are invited, and their spiritual and temporal interests personally cared for.

The past week has been a memorable one in the history of the Hackney Association. Dr. Harry Guinness has been conducting a series of mission services, which have been blessed to the conversion of scores of young men and women. Largely-attended open-air meetings were held each night in the main street, and at the after-meeting in the Y.M.C.A. Hall many were unable to obtain admission. We believe that to a large number of Christian young men also this mission will be followed by far-reaching results. On the Wednesday afternoon Pastor Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, preached a special sermon on behalf of the Y.M.C.A. Here again crowds were unable to obtain admission. In the evening of the same day a great Y.M.C.A. demonstration was held in the Morley Hall, Hackney.

The Belfast Y.M.C.A. has, through its secretary, organised a special effort on behalf of the postal telegraph boys of that city. There is a very considerable number of boys so employed, and they received an invitation to tea at the Y.M.C.A. The meeting was largely attended, between seventy and eighty boys being present. After tea the secretary explained his proposal to have a weekly meeting for the boys alone. The proposal met with the heartiest reception at the hands of the boys, and during the past month these weekly meetings have been held, with an average attendance of between seventy and eighty. The work has been distinctly spiritual, and the results have been of a remarkable character, a large number of the boys having made an intelligent decision for Christ. The work of grace is spreading to the other employees of the post-office, and an earnest spirit of inquiry is evident amongst them.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

The monthly workers' meeting was held in the "Rest" on Friday last; it was well attended by workers and friends, as well as a good number of sailors. Mr. Isaac, the hon. sec., appealed for workers both at home and in the important branch of the mission at Zanzibar. Rev. J. G. Train, of Upper Norwood, addressed the meeting on "Buying the Opportunity" (Eph. v. 16, R.V.); we trust that many realised the solemnity of the message. Dr. Gritton spoke on "The Ministry of Bringing Together," and told some very touching incidents, showing how a sinner's heart may be drawn into touch with the Saviour's.

COLPORTAGE.—Mr. James Rennie, colporteur, Hitchin, agent of the Religious Tract and Book Society, Edinburgh, continues his important work of scattering pure literature far and wide among the villages and at fairs and markets. His statement of sales is interesting as indicating the taste for pure literature in country districts. During the past year he has sold £820 19s. worth of books and pamphlets, numbering 42,000.

THE Y.W.C.A.

An earnest spiritual work is going on at the Highbury Institute; the Sunday Bible-class is well-attended, and accommodation has been made for more boarders.

Miss Hayward and Miss Baumann, of Guildford Y.W.C.A., are proceeding to India on behalf of the Zenana Society, and on Thursday a valedictory service was held in the town.

The autumn session at the Central Institute was commenced with a social gathering, when Miss Wingate presided, and addresses were given by Miss A. R. Habershon and Mrs. Hatt Noble.

The autumn work of the Stoke Newington and Clapton branch has been inaugurated by an afternoon meeting, addressed by Miss Minchin, and a largely-attended social meeting in the evening. Mrs. Rennison presided. Mrs. Southall, Miss Miller, and Miss Heber gave addresses.

The Arbroath Association held its annual gathering on Thursday last. The annual report showed that the Association had during the past year grown both in numbers and in influence. The membership was now as follows:—Associates, 109; hon. members, 32; junior members, 99—total, 240.

The Dundee branch held last week a series of special afternoon Bible readings and evening meetings. The services were conducted by Miss Bryce-Smith, from Southport, who on Sunday had two crowded meetings, and during the week visited the Association's branch meetings with encouraging results.

At the Hampstead centre an effort is about to be made to reach the poorer girls who are to be found frequenting the neighbourhood of Hampstead Heath on Sunday evenings. Mrs. Bickersteth Cook has felt strongly the need of such an effort, and is organising a band of workers for the purpose. Invitations headed, "Happy Sunday Evenings for Working Girls," will be distributed, a cup of cocoa and slice of cake given to each girl, and a short bright meeting conducted.

The "Quiet Days" at the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, have been largely attended and the meetings have been full of interest and spiritual power. Miss Wingate has had the organising of the gatherings. Workers have attended both from London and country Y.W.C.A. centres. Among those who have presided have been Mrs. Hatt Noble, Hon. E. Kinnaird, the Countess of Chichester, and Mrs. E. W. Moore. Miss A. R. Habershon's Bible readings each morning were full of help and suggestion to Bible students. Among the speakers were Mrs. Bannister, Mrs. Percy Brown, Revs. J. A. Bevan and Darlow Serjeant. The days thus spent in waiting upon God have been felt by all present to be a time of refreshment and of equipment for service.

The rooms of the West Norwood Institute, at 299, Norwood-road, are most comfortable and inviting. A good work is being done under Mrs. Campbell, president, and Mrs. Booker, hon. secretary. In addition to the usual Sunday Bible-class, with an average attendance of thirty, a class is carried on for middle-class children, who do not attend the Sunday schools. A sewing meeting, Bible-class, social evening, reading, band meeting, etc., occupy the week evenings. Book-keeping and singing classes are to be started. A Sunday evening meeting is about to be commenced, and an effort made to bring in young women who do not attend any place of worship. Many who have been converted at the Institute are now in membership and in active work at the neighbouring churches.

A QUIET HOME.

Fifty years ago a young naval officer, Lieutenant Blackmore, was led to consider the deplorable condition of the unhappy sisters who frequent by night the London streets. His labours (as told in his book, "London by Moonlight," now out of print) led in 1844 to the opening of rooms where repentant girls might be received, and this again led in 1850 to the opening of a small family home in Camden Town.

Captain Blackmore was called to his rest in December, 1890, since which period the work has been carried on, at his special request, by his third daughter, Mrs. Blackmore-Lear, and one of his co-workers, at 1, Maygrove-road, Brondesbury, N.W., all work being done voluntarily.

On visiting this Home one day last week, we were greatly pleased with the quiet, home-like, loving spirit pervading the place. Mrs. Blackmore-Lear resides there, and superintends personally. More than 10,000 cases have passed through the Home since the work began, and about eighty since 1891.

The late Mr. A. A. Rees, of Sunderland, and his wife were helpers, and deeply interested in the work for many years, and their daughter, Mrs. Rees Williams, 58, Sutherland-avenue, is trying to carry on the help her mother began in getting subscribers, so that it may not suffer for lack of funds. ## OBITUARY.

MISS LIGHT, POONA.

In the sudden call of this earnest worker the Women's Association for Foreign Missions has sustained a great loss. Miss Light was for four years at Poona, devoting herself to work among the girls of the orphanage and the schools. She was much loved by her sister missionaries, and no less so by the young teachers and girls of the Orphanage, among whom her gentle, loving influence was a great power for good. Miss Light died on July 28 of cholera, having, it is thought, contracted the disease in the city the previous day, on the morning of which she had gone out bright and well to her work. All was done that medical skill and tender nursing could do, but after less than twenty-four hours of great suffering, borne with beautiful calmness and fortitude, she sank and entered into rest. Her death has cast a gloom over the Mission at Poona, where she will be deeply missed and lovingly remembered.

THE DEAN OF MELBOURNE.

The death is announced of Rev. H. B. Macartney, Dean of Melbourne, who has passed away at the ripe age of ninety-five, and whose son is so well known for his good work in Melbourne, and during his recent visit to this land. The aged Dean was the son of Sir John Macartney, the last Speaker of the Irish House of Commons. He was educated in Trinity College, and in 1822 was ordained to the curacy of Banagher. He sailed with Dr. Perry, the first Bishop of Melbourne, for Australia. The Bishop at once put him in charge of Heidelberg, the only place then in existence in the colony besides the capital. In 1849 he was appointed to the Archdeaconry of Geelong, the first town that was built after Melbourne. In 1851—the year of the discovery of the gold-fields—the Bishop brought him to Melbourne, and made him Dean and Vicar of St. James's Church, the cathedral of Melbourne. Having been subsequently appointed Archdeacon of Melbourne, he resigned the charge of the parish, to which, however, he returned in 1894. He had the superintendence of all the clergy and readers at the goldfields. Whilst he was a devout and loyal Churchman, he was large-hearted enough to welcome all true servants of Christ; indeed, one of his last letters was one regretting his inability through extreme age to stand by Rev. John McNeill in his mission.

REV. A. R. D'ARCY, NYMPHSFIELD.

This devoted mission preacher, whose labours have been blessed to hundreds all over the land, has been called home. Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken writes to the Record:—"The son of an Irish squire, Mr. D'Arcy was originally designed for the Army, but he found himself called to a nobler warfare, and, while still quite a young man, he decided to give his life to the ministry of the Church. Passing through St. Aidan's, he commenced work in a Derbyshire curacy, and subsequently did excellent work in the parish of Inchbrook, where his ministry brought about the erection of a mission church. It was while he was Incumbent of Nailsworth that he first began to take an interest in the work of parochial missions. It was about the time when the Church Parochial Mission Society was taking form, and all through its history he has been one of its most earnest workers, and has conducted many scores of parochial missions with much acceptance and success in connection with it. He preached the Gospel with much simplicity and directness, and with a fatherly tenderness of persuasion that won many hearts. He possessed in no ordinary degree those gifts of manly tenderness and sympathy which more than any other natural gifts seem to open the way to the human heart, and hundreds of letters that have come pouring in since his death from those to whom his ministry has been blessed bear witness to the affection felt for him by those to whom his own loving manner and words have commended the Gospel of his Master."

REV. J. W. MILLS, HULL.

Only a few weeks ago this devoted servant of Christ entered on the important charge of the Vicarage at Hull, as successor to Canon McCormick, and now he has been called to rest just as he was taking up his new work. It was only during the last few days of his life that the nature of his illness was made known. Since his induction, and before entering upon his ministerial duties, he took a short and much-needed holiday in Switzerland. He returned to Hull about three weeks ago, but it was evident that he was far from well, and at times he suffered very considerable pain. This gave rise to much anxiety on the part of the family, but no immediate danger was then apprehended, and both Mr. and Mrs. Mills were looking forward to a season of successful work at Hull during the coming winter. The Vicar was, however, compelled to take to his bed, and it was then ascertained that he was suffering from internal cancer, and on Sunday it was determined to perform an operation. This was done the same afternoon, and he passed safely through it, but the shock was very great, and at night his condition was desperate. On Monday morning it was seen that he could not recover, and his relatives were summoned. At ten o'clock he was rapidly sinking, and he passed away about two o'clock in the afternoon, after suffering greatly. He began his work at Bury St. Edmunds, then he went to Newland. In 1889 he undertook the charge of St. George's, Birmingham, where for five years he did a valuable and fruitful work. By many he will be sincerely mourned as a serious loss to the faithful Evangelical workers of the day.

It was stated that there had not been a united effort of the churches for this purpose in the last forty years. It was also voted unanimously to request Mr. Moody to take charge of the mission.

Mr. Gerald Coultas has been having special meetings in various parts of London, and has had much encouragement in his recent labours for Christ. He has been visiting in Kent during the last few days, towns and villages where spiritual darkness seems to reign and Ritualism is doing deadly work. Mr. Coultas has been invited to visit America for some missions. He asks prayer for guidance in this step.

Manchester, New Hampshire.—The Evangelical churches and Sunday-schools have completed a house-to-house visitation of all the families in the city, and have unanimously extended an invitation to Rev. B. Fay Mills to hold a series of revival meetings in the city in November. Great unanimity of feeling prevails, large congregations attend public worship, and accessions to the Sunday-school have resulted from the visitation.

Mr. Varley in Glasgow.—This evangelist is in the midst of a manifest work of grace in the capital city of Western Scotland. Many Christians flock to the Waterloo Rooms for the afternoon Bible readings, and listen eagerly to Mr. Varley's vigorous expositions. The evening meetings are also very large, especially on the Sunday evenings, when the City Hall has been used. The Word has been with power, and still greater things are looked for.

Peckham Rye.—During the summer months open-air Gospel services have been regularly held on Sunday afternoons on Peckham. They have been well-attended. Addresses have been given by local pastors and other friends, while much Gospel literature has been distributed. The meetings are now transferred for the winter season to Peckham Public Hall. Mr. C. Ward, 36, Tresco-road, Nunhead-crescent, Peckham, S.E., the hon. treasurer of the mission, will be glad to receive contributions of tracts.

Horsell.—A series of Gospel meetings has been concluded in this village. The interest from the commencement to the close of the gatherings grew and deepened nightly, so much so that it was decided to continue the services a week longer than the period originally fixed. Mr. Brown, of the Evangelisation Society, conducted the meetings for the first ten days, when he was followed by Mr. Rowland Sturt, who remained for a further period of sixteen days. Many have professed faith in Christ, and believers have been stimulated.

Surrey Tent Work.—During the past summer, Mr. Stanger, of the Evangelisation Society, has been working at tent in villages around Guildford and in many outlying parts, such as Kirdford, Dunsfold, Caston Cate, Shalford, Meade Row, Chiddingfold. Great interest has been awakened, and many who neve went to church or chapel have heard the Gospe Throughout, the mission has been characterised by desire to hear the truth, and some have "with jo accepted it." The closing meeting, though in ver unfavourable weather, was largely attended, repr sentatives from twelve miles round being present.

Luton.—A very successful ten-days' mission wa concluded at the Union Chapel, Luton, on Oct. 1, Mr. Henry Thorne. The evening meetings we remarkably well attended, and there was an utt absence of sensationalism in the methods of co ducting them. The afternoon Bible readings we much enjoyed by Christians of all denominations. large meeting for men only, and another for wome only, was each marked by great solemnity and powe A considerable number of men, women, and you people went into the inquiry rooms, many of who accepted Christ as their Saviour.

West Sussex has been visited by Mr. Alexand Clark with one of the Evangelisation Society's ten At Cowfold the people seemed at first afraid, but befo the close the meetings were well attended, and mu real blessing has been the result. P tridge Green was the last place, and to see t numbers gathered to hear the old, old story was real joy. Night by night the tent (a large one) w nearly filled, and some will bless God to all etern for the visit of the tent.

Wallingford Hiring Fair is attended by lar numbers of people. For some years Mr. and Mrs. Morgan have visited the fair, opening a Bible a book stall, and thus affording passers-by a chance obtaining cheap copies of the Scriptures as well wholesome literature. Mr. Morgan and his w have taken the opportunity of speaking to the sh people. On Sunday afternoon I accompanied th into the midst of the caravans, where a short serv was held, the platform of a menagerie serving pulpit. These waifs and strays sorely need su effort to tell them about the love of Jesus, as wandering life they lead shuts them away from ordinary means of grace.

On Sunday week there was a ve large congregation at the evening service. Moulton, of Manchester, gave an address on "Bu ing," urging his hearers to build, not upon sand, on the Rock. Towards the close Miss Eva Rob son, who by the grace of God has been conver during the Mission, spoke for the first time, urgi her kith and kin to yield themselves to their Lo This incident shows the power of the Word amon class of people so long neglected, and it is an exam of the work being carried on by the Gipsy Gos Mission. ## Notes and Comments.

THE public spirit shown last week by Mr. Coote, of the Vigilance Society, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, and other friends, in connection with the licensing of West End music halls, is to be highly commended. A certain amount of odium always attaches to those who run counter to popular tastes, especially when these tastes are degraded and degrading. Mrs. Chant, Mrs. Amos, and others, did not shrink from passing through what must have been to them a trying and humiliating ordeal, for the sake of the public good, and they deserve the heartiest thanks of all friends of common morality.

We are glad also that the Licensing Committee of the London County Council had the courage to act on the facts placed before them, and to impose most necessary and wholesome conditions of tenure on the licensees of some of the places of amusement in question. We sincerely trust that the Council as a whole will sustain the action of its committee. We have no doubt they will, if they are backed up by a strong and earnest expression of public opinion.

The supreme aim of the Y.M.C.A. is, and has been throughout its honoured history, to become a real "home to young men away from home." This being so, we hailed with much satisfaction the action of the Exeter Hall authorities in making their rooms available for lonely young men on Sunday evenings. If Exeter Hall and our Associations generally can revive or implant in the minds of young men the happy, helpful influences of Sunday evening in a Christian home, they will be fulfilling an important part of the work for which the institution was founded.

We regret, however, that the "Sunday Society," through its Hon. Sec., has been endeavouring to make capital for itself and its peculiar aims out of the forward step at Exeter Hall. Mr. Putterill, the general secretary, was prompt in refuting, through the daily Press, the idea conveyed by Mr. Judge's letter, that the Y.M.C.A. had any sympathy with the endeavour to "secularise" the Lord's Day. We feel certain that the Christian community generally will applaud and uphold our friends at Exeter Hall and elsewhere in the effort to furnish homeless young men in our great cities with safe and attractive places of resort on the Sabbath evenings. The object is not to "entertain and amuse" young men, as the secretary of the Sunday Society says, but to afford them such opportunities and to bring them under such influences as would prevail in a well-ordered Christian home.

"The great work of missions"—said the late Rev. W. Roby Fletcher, of Adelaide—"tends to bind all who love the Lord Jesus into one common brotherhood. It is forced upon us that those things which we hold in common are far more important than those things about which we differ. In labouring for our Master we may find a practical bond of union, which we may never be able to hammer out on the anvil of theoretical logic or theology." These words we believe to be true, but how are we, in this old country, where divisions are so sharply marked, to get Christians into a common service? Ragged schools, open-air missions, theatre missions, temperance work, and other similar agencies have some unifying influence, but the great commanding enterprise which shall enlist the sympathy and claim the energies of all, will be found in the Lord's last words before He returned to the Father, as recorded in Acts i. 8: "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto Me...unto the uttermost part of the earth."

In connection with this supremely important subject of Missions, we ask special attention to the urgency of Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites' appeal for Winter Missions in India, p. 13.

An esteemed correspondent, who signs himself "An Old Independent," writes deploring the freedom with which unscriptural teaching is disseminated in some periodicals:—

> At the present time the mischief and danger seem to come from within the professing Church, rather than from without. If the friends of vital truth were as alive, earnest, and bold in their tactics, as the enemies of the truth are in theirs, we should not have to mourn with shame the admission into a paper circulating in Christian families of a letter calling in question the Scripture doctrine of the fall of man.

Mr. Stead, whose outlook is generally marked by an assured optimism, writes in a very minor key in "The Progress of the World" in the current issue of The Review of Reviews. He says:—

> It is a weary prospect that opens before our eyes this autumn. Heaven grant that the dismal forecast may not be fulfilled! But it is impossible not to feel a horrible foreboding that the war which is raging between Japan and China may mark the beginning of the long-dreaded war which has been staved off for more than twenty years.....England, Russia, France, and the United States, are all deeply interested in the issue of the contest, and it will take wary walking on the part of the rulers of the world if they are not to stumble into the yawning gulf of war.

"Ridicule it as we please," says Mr. Stead, only too truly, "the war fever is latent in the blood of nations."

Dr. Barrett's deliverances on the secularisation of the Church cannot fail to do good, if only in the way of warning. We submit, however, that when our Lord's methods of dealing with the evils of society are referred to as a model for our imitation, it must be remembered that the very foundations of English and of Roman society are different. Jesus did not deal directly with abuses, because to have done so would only have led to violence and useless bloodshed; but in a free country like ours, where Cæsar is the people, and where wrongs can be righted by fashioning public opinion, it becomes at least an open question whether the pulpit is not bound to speak and the Church to act upon some public moral questions. Was the Church in America justified in being silent on slavery? Ought the churches at home to be silent on the drink question, on the opium question, and on the legalisation of immorality? That great wisdom is necessary in handling such things, if they are to be handled at all, none will deny; and the limits of such action are very difficult to fix.

Dr. Barrett has, we believe, laid his finger upon the exact spot from which our dangers spring, in saying that if you trace its hidden roots far enough, you would always, or nearly always, find the secularisation of the Church was the result of the prior secularisation of the Christian home. It is easy enough, he thinks, to blame the ministers for this decay of the spiritual life of a Church, and he did not desire to minimise the solemn responsibilities of ministers, but he was not sure that the parent was not even more responsible than the minister for the spiritual tone of the Church. "In the home the first foundations of the Church are laid, and it is at the family altar the fires of devotion first begin to die out." Yes; and one huge difficulty parents have in maintaining family religion is the hurry of business life, which takes fathers so early from home, and keeps them so late. Fathers are being made little better than bread-winners, glad, sometimes, if there is bread to win.

The emphasis laid upon social duties is leading, as it was sure to do, to the laying of a firmer emphasis upon Evangelical doctrine. The inadequacy of the "Social Gospel," when taken alone, appears with every new social and political advantage enjoyed by the people. Dr. Rowland, when preaching before the Congregational Union, expressed the truth we are always putting forward, that "the abolition of the House of Lords, the establishment of a new Republic, the efforts of coming District and Parish Councils, the triumph of collectivism, and all like movements, will neither singly nor together produce Utopia. Anarchy raises its hideous head as savagely in republican France as in despotic Russia, and no outward change will satisfy the awakening intelligence of the peoples. Nothing will do it but the reign of that other King, one Jesus, outcast still, even in Christendom, but coming to reign for ever."

The plea for auricular confession, put forth at the Church Congress by Prebendary Crowfoot, was ominous. Nothing less than this unscriptural practice can satisfy some clergymen in the demand for "wholesome discipline." Dr. Jessopp and Dean Lefroy were equal to the occasion, and a large body who espied the figure of Rome in the confessional box cheered their repudiation of the practice, and their disavowal of any need for it. The advocates of auricular confession are ever ready to declare that it is recognised in the formularies of the Church of England. Dr. Lefroy pointed out that the recognition only applies to exceptional cases, and that to make it general would be the same as to confuse daily food with the medicine necessitated by imperfect conditions of health.

The Bishop of Exeter gave an encouraging word to the modern movement for enlisting the aid of women in Church activities; whether he did it wisely will, no doubt, be questioned by two schools to whom he gives a passing blow, as he marches through these sentences :—

For the ministry of saintly women, whether married or unmarried, women of thought and culture, who have been duly taught and trained, is unobtrusively making itself felt more and more, year by year, and if kept clear and free on the one hand from sacerdotal thraldoms, and on the other from Salvation Army violations of that meek and quiet spirit which is woman's glory and strength, it will reproduce in these last days that service of holy and godly matrons and virgins which beautified and enriched the Apostolic age. The revival of the Scriptural order of deaconesses, if it stood alone, would be a strong tie between the first messengers of the glad tidings of peace and us upon whom the ends of the world have come.

Whether as nurses or deaconesses, as visitors or missionaries, as labourers among poor children or rich folk, it matters not, the aid of woman has come to the church, no more to be forfeited and lost.

How to keep the Sabbath is a question which has various answers. Professor Alfred R. Wallace has volunteered one which, though he seems to think it is new, has practically been the view of members of Christian families who have some regard for those in their employ. He suggests that the various classes of hired servants, who, as a rule, are fully employed for six days every week, and who also have not much less to do on the seventh, should be allowed full and complete rest that day. "All that portion of their weekly duties which is necessary for the well-being of their employers, and for the rational enjoyment of their lives, must be done by other members of the household who have spent the week largely in idleness or in pleasure, or, if in work, in work of a quite different character from that of their servants." In doing this work each member of the family will be doing deeds of self-sacrifice and of charity (in however small a degree), and such deeds do not constitute the "work" which is strictly forbidden on the Sabbath-day.

Now, we believe that this principle is largely acted upon in many Christian homes. Work is reduced to a minimum; arrangements are made for servants to attend worship or to visit their friends; and everything possible is done to make life bright and wholesome. Not only so, there are arrangements by which servants may have some leisure time during the week. The fact is that in some cases the hardworked person is the mother of the house, on whose hands idle and careless servants throw their work without pity or mercy. This matter has, like all other subjects, two sides to it. We agree with Professor Wallace's principle, and wish it were more widely adopted, but, at the same time, we cannot refrain from saying that the hardest of the work does not always fall on the shoulders of domestics, and that theirs is not always the busiest Sabbath.

A kind of hush has come over the nations at the announcement of the critical condition of the Czar's health. What the exact truth may be no one knows, but it is evident that things are very serious. The Great Powers cannot but contemplate the possible issue with grave concern, and the people, who are ignorant of state secrets, cannot but have their fears. The Czar has always been regarded as a friend of peace, and there is no telling what course events might take were he removed. In all such times, it is comforting and strengthening to remember that God reigns.

However far behind the people of other countries the Russians may in some respects be, they retain one fine quality which must have a good influence upon national life; they honour labour. Even their great people are not above working with their hands at the humblest toil. A writer in The Leisure Hour says that "if need be, they will adopt with ease, and without mauvaise honte, any offices, any public charges. There is at St. Petersburg a prince who serves in the custom house, and many nobles and titled men become professors, schoolmasters, even actors. In a pastry-cook's shop at Moscow some princesses of high blood serve behind the counter, others will become governesses, companions, housekeepers, telegraph clerks—in fact, will adopt any employment that may turn up." In his choice of books the Russian who can read has a good trait; he does not care for the dreadful, for blood-and-thunder tales, but shows a marked preference for books of a religious character, such as lives of the saints. There is a society called the "Intermediary," whose aim is to propagate good books among the uncultured.

The miseries and folly of war have seldom been so strongly set forth as they are in the letters of Marshal Bosquet to his mother from Algeria. He says :—

I write with a heavy heart about an infant that a soldier has brought me tied up in his pocket-handkerchief. It was a beauty. Poor little thing! You never saw such eyes. But it was a skeleton, and literally too weak to cry. It had evidently been lost in a stampede. I at once set about looking among the female prisoners here for a nurse, and had the luck to find one. The poor infant will be saved from death by falling naked into my hands. I hate my profession. Its monotony is horrible. We have to kill to-day, and will have to-morrow to attend to the wounded, and caress the children whom we have made orphans. This alternation goes on as regularly as the pendulum of my clock swings. I try to persuade myself that in devastating the people here I only do my duty.

This idea of duty which conflicts with humanity is delusive, as the kind-hearted Marshal found it to be. After all, we must act upon our own sense of right and wrong.

We note with intense satisfaction that Mr. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, who was seeking re-election to Congress, has been rejected on account of his unworthy character. His immorality, which was a national scandal, so aroused the indignation of the women of America, especially those of his own State, that they determined to put forth their utmost power for his defeat, and they have done so to some purpose. This is a warning to all such men as he of what will be dealt out to them if they do not amend their ways. The same thing would, we believe, be done here under similar inspiration.

In apostolic days, "All the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else but either to tell or to hear some new thing." A like spirit possesses the world to-day. Things are all new, with capital initials. A New Humanity has created a New Journalism, and the New Woman is the prominent figure in the New Era. But all this newness is change of form, not newness of life, as the changes in the kaleidoscope are all produced from the same bits of glass. Newness of life can only come through death. "If any man be in Christ, who died and rose again for us, he is a new creation. Old things are passed away; behold all things are become new." We are buried with Him by baptism into his death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. He that sitteth on the throne has said, "Behold, I make all things new." But first, "The earth and all the works that are therein shall be burnt up."

In a very delightful paper entitled "Near Damascus," Dr. Hugh Macmillan, who has travelled the road from Jerusalem to Damascus, tells us he thinks he sees many things in the natural features of the way, which were used by the Holy Spirit to impress the mind of Saul the persecutor. This may have been so, but considering Paul's absorption of mind in whatever he undertook to do, and that nowhere in his epistles does he show one trace of ever noticing the external features of the lands through which he passed, it cannot be positively affirmed. This, however, is a suggestive reflection :—

It was what it claims to be—an absolutely true and new revelation of the Lord Jesus, and in no other place would it have been so suitable as near Damascus, where Abraham rested for the last time before entering the Holy Land. To that storied spot came the patriarch, in fulfilment of the Divine command which summoned him to go into the Land of Promise, that he might be there the father of the chosen people, educated under God's own eye to become the missionaries of mankind. To that storied spot came the Apostle, in fulfilment of the Divine command which summoned him to go out of the Land of Promise, and preach the results of the special training of the chosen race to all nations. Here the universal mission of the father of the faithful and of the apostle of the Gentiles coincided, and received its seal in the heavenly revelation.

We believe that it is only when a patient is recovering from an illness he knows how ill he has been; only as the light of health shines in upon him does he perceive how dense has been the cloud over him. And similarly, we are persuaded that it is only as believers in Christ are growing in spiritual mindedness that they perceive how much they have been under the power of the spirit of the world. As we follow the Spirit we see first one thing and then another which is not pleasing to Him. They may not be condemned by the express words of Scripture, but they are felt to be incongruous with our calling as saints. Mr. Andrew Murray has only too much ground for saying, "The extent to which many Christians yield themselves to the influence of the literature of the age, without fear or caution, is one of the great reasons that the Holy Spirit cannot guide them or reveal Christ in them: the Spirit, 'whom the world cannot receive, because it knoweth Him not.'"

A. N. Jannaris thinks that as a Greek well acquainted with English he has some light to throw upon the English version of the Lord's Prayer. He discusses it clause by clause in the pages of The Contemporary Review, with the following result, which seems to us to be eminently on the orthodox side of things :—"Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name—thy dominion come—thy (fixed) purpose be done; as in heaven, so too on earth. Give us this day our mere (or simple) bread; and forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors theirs; and let us not fall into a tempter's snare, but deliver us from the evil one."

HOP-PICKERS IN KENT.

The season now drawing to a close has been one of the longest we have ever had, but the Lord has greatly blessed our efforts. I was accompanied on the Lord's Day by twelve or fourteen workers, and on an average about ten meetings were held every Sunday; they were all well attended.

A gentleman, a large hop grower, lent us a barn, and here on a Sunday evening crowds were gathered together to hear the old Gospel told out in language within their comprehension. On Thursday we gave 400 of the children a free tea in the barn.

A deep gloom was cast over the hop grounds by the sad accident which happened on Tuesday last week when seven of the hop-pickers were killed by a train running into a wagon which was carrying them to their daily work. A fund has been opened in Canterbury for the bereaved. Should any of your readers be led to assist, I should be happy to receive any amount to be added to this fund.

The Communion of Saints.

There is in these times a manifest longing for a renewal of the communion of saints. We say renewal, for in darker times, where there was risk and difficulty in being faithful to God, fellowship was more earnestly desired and more resolutely sought than now. Times of worldly prosperity and of keen competition have absorbed too much thought and energy in worldly things to allow of much interchange of soul on the most sacred themes. Hence Christian brethren have unconsciously drifted wider and wider apart. Rev. I. Morley Wright declared at Liverpool that "to a very painful extent, especially in our towns and cities, our church members are strangers to each other, strangers, at least, to each other's deepest joys and bitterest sorrows; strangers to each other's experiences of temptation, struggle, victory, and defeat." He went on to deplore the fact that so much is centred in one man.

Interchange of thought about the deep things of God, mutual edification, testimony to God's faithfulness, confession of personal experience—these are left to the pastor of the church; certainly the Church itself provides little or no opportunity for their exercise, and from the beginning of the year to the end of the year none say a word in the hearing of their brethren of what the Lord has done and is doing for their souls.

That such a confession should be made before such a body as the Congregational Union is itself a healthy sign. How to remedy the defect is not so easy to say. Each body of Christians has its own peculiarities of life and circumstance; but once the need is expressed and an effort made to meet it, the way will become plain. In most provincial towns there seems no reason why the old form of Church meeting should not be revived and improved upon—i.e., where it may have fallen into abeyance. How well we remember it! A prayer-meeting on the Monday evening before the first Sunday in the month; then the church meeting, well attended, solemn, and devout. Grey-headed fathers were close to the pastor, and some of them offered prayer; testimony as to the suitability of candidates for church-fellowship was borne by men of experience; the newly-received members were welcomed by the pastor in the name of all, and then addressed on their new duties, and encouraged to holiness and consistency of life.

This was real, as far as it went. But it was too exclusive, too limited in range, and too formal. No sister's voice was ever heard either in prayer or in testimony. There was no spontaneity. There was no room for the giving of any experience of God's faithfulness. "Each one hath a psalm, hath a hymn, hath a prophecy"—there was none of that. But the time for it seems to have come.

On what day, in London, say, these gatherings of the Church should be held, is not an easy question to answer. A prominent layman suggests Sunday evening; but ought not that time to be very sacred to the ingathering of souls, the reaping of past labours? We attach immense importance to the last half-hour of the day, when the pastor gets face to face with inquirers and others who are seeking personal help. To curtail opportunities for winning souls seems an unwise policy, even though it be only once a month, and though it have as compensation the advantages of fellowship. If Christians can give time, several hours, for social fellowship, they may well afford an evening once a month to meet and speak of the things of God.

In manifold ways the world strives to meet and satisfy the social longings of our nature; the sanctified social longing can be met only by Christian means; and the Churches must make themselves indeed the homes of the saints. J. P. G.

Our Indian Government.

"The powers that be are ordained of God." "Fear God. Honour the king." We are anxious to observe and to obey the spirit of these words in relation to our Indian Government. For India confessedly owes very much to English rule. No conquered people ever prospered under a victorious nation as India has under British supremacy. This Government therefore has a character to lose, and it is incumbent upon the Christian part of the nation, as its light to make manifest that which is evil, and as its salt to preserve it from corruption.

It is true that some of our noblest men have been our Governors-General in India, and many of the officials under them have been and are high-minded men of unblemished character. But even these need to be supported and sustained by the voice of public opinion, and righteous public opinion is the result of Christian testimony and the echo of Christian judgment.

The millions of India are governed by a comparative handful of Englishmen, and it would be a wicked thing wantonly to denounce their conduct, discredit their character, weaken their influence, endanger their lives, and imperil the hold of Great Britain on her great dependency. British and Anglo-Indian Christians feel the force of these considerations as intensely as any of their fellow-countrymen there or here. But these grave and disastrous consequences may flow from Christians' silence as effectually as from Christians' speech. There is far less danger in raising the standard too conspicuously, than in not raising it at all—in crying "Danger!" too loudly, than in being dumb dogs that cannot bark. The King of men is overhead, and no Government on earth was ever paralysed because when it was doing right some noisy and mistaken fanatics charged it with doing wrong. Against the Indian Cantonment Acts and the Indian growth, manufacture, and forced sale of the opium poison, earnest protest has been raised by Christian men and women in India and at home. If this counsel and this work be of men it will come to nought; but if it be of God it cannot be overthrown.

Those who protest have nothing to gain and everything to lose if they cry "Wolf! wolf!" when there is no wolf. But they, on the other hand, court disaster who cry "Peace! peace!" when there is no peace. For peace can only come by righteousness. "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."

To our perception the highest eloquence of the Welcome meeting in Exeter Hall was not in the burning words that were spoken, but in the pathetic silence of Alfred Dyer, and the touch of his fever-enfeebled hand. We are not prepared to endorse all that he and others have said or done in India, any more than we should expect or wish anyone to endorse all that anyone has said or done at home. No one would endorse John Brown in everything, but the fact abides that they who hanged him murdered him, and that his spirit is marching on—the spirit which vindicates right against might, which defends innocent weakness against lawless power, and inexperienced helplessness against violence and fraud.

The title of the article on account of which these Christian men were prosecuted and imprisoned was "Further Fraud by the Bombay Opium Department." It is objected that thus publicly to charge a Government department with fraud (and we do not defend it) is calculated to degrade our Government in the eyes of the people of India, and to imperil the continuance of British rule. It may be replied, however, that the fact of such a protest being made by Englishmen against the representatives of their own Government is an assurance to the people of India, that against any form of oppression a similar protest would be made.

The Government in India will do well to take the counsel of one whose own life was wrecked by opium, but who wrote when his mind was clear:—

> If a foe have kenn'd
> Or worse than foe, an alienated friend,
> Some rib of dry rot in thy ship's stout side,
> Think it God's message, and with humble pride,
> With heart of oak replace it: thine the gains,
> Give him the rotten timber for his pains.

This would be more dignified on the part of the Indian Government, and more worthy of a great and professedly Christian nation, than the pusillanimous spite of the prosecution, the unfairness of its procedure, the unrighteousness of its sentence, and the petty cruelty with which it was carried out.

No bench of judges at home would have dared to imprison these righteous men, whose only offence lay in the desire and the endeavour that darkness should be brought to light and what is wrong made right. Disaster came to the monarch of Babylon, not because the prophet warned him but because he forgot his warning; upon Herod, not because John denounced his sin but because he persisted in it. Great Britain is not great enough to change the nature of things, nor to defeat the counsel of Him that sitteth on the throne.

THE MESSAGE OF THE PULPIT.

In his sermon at the opening of the new Congregational Church at Mount View, Stroud Green, Dr. Joseph Parker said:—

"The messages delivered here will deal with great subjects, with God, and blood, and sin, and pardon, and holiness, and destiny—themes that cannot be discussed anywhere else. They would be out of place in the lyceum, in the political hall, in the House of Parliament. I speak of this house not in its locality, but in its typical relations. This house must be unique in its messages. Men must hasten to God's house to hear God's word, which they can hear nowhere else in the same sense, degree, and quality. It is when we make the pulpit a little lecturing platform, and thus advertise the nonsense and windy frivolity of the day, that the pulpit loses its power. The pulpit can never lose its power if it be faithful to its vocation, which is to deliver great messages of reconciliation and atonement, and deliver great gospels of love and liberty. Oh, it hurts me, as one would hurt me who bruised me with a heavy boot, when my preacher talks to me about a little whitewashing and drain enlargement and parish council business. I came not to my Father's house to hear about these things, which are important in their own place; but I came to my Father's house because I was told that there was bread enough and to spare; and the people that come for your little socialisms and new rearrangements and recastings of the social programme are the men who will make use of you, and as long as they can make use of you they will make you as popular as they can, but when you begin to be spiritual, and offer them the flesh and the blood of Christ as the wine and water by which alone life can be guided and sustained, they will turn away.

"My brother ministers, you are not hardly driven for subjects; the Cross still stands. You need not look up a paper to see what is the question of the day. The question of the day is, How can a man be forgiven, how can a broken heart be healed, how can the lost be brought home?—that is the question of the day"

THE SECRET OF A STRONG LIFE.

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D., Brooklyn.

I crossed the ocean lately on a powerful steamship, which weighed over twenty thousand tons, and pushed her way against wind and waves at the rate of over twenty knots an hour! I could not see the propelling force; that was hidden deep down in the glowing furnaces, heaped constantly with fresh coal. As long as the coal lasted the steamer could hold on her victorious way.

That illustrates the spiritual life of every strong, healthy, growing Christian. His strength is measured by his inward supply of Divine grace. He has the power to overcome temptations and to make headway—often against great obstacles—in the path of duty. No Christian is self-propelling; this grace is furnished him, and this power belongs to him simply because his "life is hid with Christ." It is none the less a real life because its source is invisible; the reality is evidenced by outward results visible to all men. As the swift-moving steamer attested the power of the coal hidden down in her bunkers, so the spiritual force and progress of a growing Christian prove that his life is hid with Christ Jesus. Yonder running brook is an evidence of a fountain-head up among those rocks; the moving hands on the face of my watch are the evidence of a main-spring. Happy are you, my good reader, if your neighbours who see you every day can detect in your outward conduct that your inner life is fed by an unseen Christ.

The great Apostle describes this inner life of the true believer as "with Christ in God." Our Saviour has ascended to his celestial throne. As an eloquent preacher of our day puts it, "Paul points his finger upward to where Christ is, sitting at the right hand of God, and says, We are down here in outward seeming, but our true life is up there if we are Christ's." The source of this spiritual life is divine; it begins with the new birth by the Holy Spirit. Up to the time that it was implanted we who call ourselves Christians were utterly dead in trespasses and sins. When the Holy Spirit regenerated us He made in us a new heart. By a mysterious but very real process our heart's life is so united to Christ, so dependent on Christ, and so supplied from Christ, that the Apostle describes it as "hid with Christ in God."

Is not the root of an apple tree concealed from the eye, and does it not go away silently down into the soil, feeling its way after earth-food and water, and drawing up nourishment for every limb and leaf? So a truly converted soul learns to go down into Christ for his spiritual nourishment. As our bodies are kept strong by our daily bread, so his soul feeds on Jesus as the "bread of life." He learns to find in Christ not only pardon and peace, but power to resist temptation. He learns the sweets of fellowship with his Master: and so close is his intimacy with Christ that in times of trouble or perplexity he has only to put the question, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" A brave, resolute Christian life is not always smooth sailing; but the inward power becomes an overmatch for headwinds. Sometimes the gales of adversity sweep away a Christian's possessions, but there is an undisturbed treasure down in the hold—a glorious consciousness that One is with him that the world can neither give nor take away. A genuine and joyous Christian life is such an inner partnership with Jesus that the believer can say, "I live—yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." This faith is not a mere opinion, nor is it a mere emotion. It is our grip on Christ, and his grip on us. Saving faith means the junction of our souls to Jesus Christ. The mightiest of all spiritual forces is the Christ-faith, because it puts the omnipotent Lord Jesus into our soul as an abiding presence and an almighty power. It was no idle boast, therefore, when Paul exclaimed, "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me."

Paul knew whom he believed. In the days of my boyhood it used to be said of a person who was converted that he had "experienced religion." A good phrase that; for a religion that is not a genuine heart experience is not worth the having. The poor weaklings in our churches have had but little or nothing of this experience. They joined the Church more than they joined Christ. If they had ever experienced the incoming of Jesus into their hearts, and had experienced a new birth by the Holy Spirit, they would not so easily topple over into worldlings and money-worshippers and moral cowards—too often into disgraceful defalcations of character. A steamer without coal is a helpless waif on the ocean billows. Empty bags cannot stand upright. It is the terrible experiment of joining a Church without any heart-union with the Saviour, of trying to live without honest prayer and daily Bible-food, of fighting Satan with spears of soft pine instead of the sword of the Spirit—in short, the experiment of trying to pass for a Christian without Jesus Christ—this it is that accounts for so many pitiable weaklings on our church rolls. To stand up against all the social currents that set away from God and holiness, to resist the craze for wealth at all hazards, to conquer fleshly appetites, to hold an unruly temper in check, to keep down selfishness, to direct all our plans, all our talents, all our purposes and influence toward the good of others and the honour of our Master, requires more power than any unaided man possesses. It requires Jesus Christ in the soul. Christ's mastery of us alone can give us self-mastery—yes, and mastery over the powers of darkness and of hell. This is the secret of a strong and a joyous life.

Such a life is self-evidencing. Although the interior union of a believer to his Redeemer is invisible, yet the results of it are potent to the world. They are seen and read of all men. Just as we know the supply of coal and the power of the unseen engine by the steamer's speed, so we can estimate the fulness and strength of a man's piety by his daily life. Our outward lives can never rise above the inward; he who has not Christ in his conscience will not have Christ in his conduct. The church member who does not draw from Christ in his closet will have but little of Christ to expend in the community. The hidden life of an apple tree comes out in bright leaves and full baskets of golden pippins. In a thousand ways does the hidden life with our Master come out before the world. It is manifest in the man of business who measures his goods with a Bible yardstick; in the statesman who would rather lose his election than lose God's smile; in the citizen who votes with the eye of his Master on the ballot; in the pastor who cares more for souls than for salary. The mother displays it when she seeks first the Kingdom of Heaven for her children, and the daughter exhibits it when she would rather watch by a sick mother's bed than enjoy an evening's gay festivities. No life is so humble or so obscure but it can shine when Christ shines through it. My friend, if Christ is hidden within you, let Him not be hidden by you from a closely observing world. You are to be his witness. The mightiest sermon—that no sceptic can answer—is the daily sermon of a clean, sweet, vigorous, happy, and fruitful life.

THE ANTI-GAMBLING CRUSADE.

Sir,—It is due to the readers of The Christian, many of whom are so kindly helping us, that they should have early and authoritative information of the good news of what great progress is being made all over the country in our arduous crusade.

The correspondence reaching us and other means of intelligence enable us to affirm, in addition to many other signs, that not only is the welcome recognition of the magnitude of the evil we contend against now heard from hundreds of pulpits instead of a few solitary ones, but the magisterial and police authorities are showing a determination, which was sadly wanting a year or two back, to protect the community against those who trade on the follies of others by encouraging the demoralising vice of gambling.

The terrible catalogue, however, of suicides, imprisonments, bankruptcies and ruined homes cries aloud for our unremitting exertions, and if we are supported by the public, in a battle comparable only to the campaign against slavery ninety years ago, the twentieth century will not dawn until the vile traffic of the betting trade has received a mortal blow. We are spending our strength without stint. We want the prayers of all, for we feel our own weakness in the presence of powerful foes, and we confidently believe that no social reform movement in England can more fairly claim the help of those Christian people who cannot personally take part in it.—Yours faithfully, John Hawke, Hon. Sec.

"THE DAY OF SMALL THINGS."

By REV. DR. STALKER.

In The Expository Times for October, continuing a series of papers on "The Parables of Zechariah," Dr. Stalker explains the parable of the Golden Candlestick (chap. iv.). Remarking upon the prophet's inference regarding the smallness of the beginnings of God's work, "For who hath despised the day of small things?" (v. 10), he says:—

The first efforts of the little community of returned exiles, whom Zerubbabel led, were feeble in the extreme. For long there were only the beginnings of a temple; the walls could not be got to rise far above the ground. It was a day of small things; and there were plenty of contemptuous enemies around, and perhaps some lukewarm friends within, who despised these small beginnings, and predicted that they would never come to anything. In like manner, two generations afterwards, when Nehemiah was building the walls of the city, there were scorners who said that if a fox should climb up on his wall the weight would bring it down.

Now, small things are sometimes contemptible. The frog is contemptible when it is puffing itself out to look like an ox. So is the gossip of society or the cant of coterie, when it gives itself out as the verdict of the world. But, on the whole, it is not safe to sneer at small beginnings. The critic, secure in his omniscience, tears to shreds the first tentative efforts of a new genius, but with the result that he is himself pilloried as a Philistine in literary history. The statesman, hidebound in the traditions of his office, uses all the resources of Government to obstruct and harry the struggling cause of liberty; but the day comes when the friends of freedom, their cause having triumphed, are able to make use of the same machinery for placing him in the traitor's dock. In a single seed there may be the potency of whole harvests in the future.

Nearly every movement must be small at the beginning; but the onlookers, before criticising, ought to consider how much virtue is in its motive, and how much power is at its back. The tide, flowing in long fingers, which are thrust forth and withdrawn, up the channels of the estuary, is a small thing; some have even attempted to sweep it out with the besoms of conventionality; but of what avail can such efforts be when behind it is the mighty swell of the Atlantic? The beginnings of the work of God's Spirit in the soul are often so small that they may easily furnish a theme for the laughter of fools.

A dream perhaps, or a hymn sung by a child, or the exhortation of a simple Christian, or a meeting not very wisely conducted may be all that can be pointed to; yet in it may be the germ of a changed life here and a blessed eternity hereafter. So is it with his work on the larger scale of the world. Christianity itself consisted at one time of a few humble people, at whom the principalities and powers of the earth could scoff as unlearned and ignorant men; but the Spirit of God was in it, and Christianity is now the acknowledged teacher of the race. Still, however, Christian efforts and movements in their initial stages are open to scorn on account of their small dimensions; but let those who are concerned in them only trust in the Spirit of God, and they may leave their critics to the disillusionment which is their fate.

WANTED, BOOKS FOR SEA.

Will you allow me through you to inform your readers that we are organising a lending library for the benefit of the smacksmen at sea? The books will be placed in library boxes as watertight as possible, and the crew of any smack will be able to borrow from six to a dozen books at a time.

For the purpose of starting this library, the Pure Literature Society have made a free grant of books to the value of £10, and this gift has been supplemented by a grant of twenty-five guineas which the Company of Fishmongers has generously made. We shall be most glad to receive presents of books to add to the library, especially illustrated books of a simple, interesting, and instructive character. Might I at the same time appeal for a little more literature for distribution on the North Sea, and for the help of several more ladies who would be willing to devote an afternoon once a month to tying it up?

DIVINE DELIVERANCES.*

By Dr. G. F. DOWKONTT, NEW YORK.

In the summer of 1879, some friends connected with the Medical Mission in Liverpool visited America, and learned of the proposal to open a Medical Mission in Philadelphia. They were pleased to advise with the friends having this project in hand, and upon returning home they informed me of the circumstances, and made some suggestions about my going over to aid in the work. After prayerfully considering the matter, my wife and I decided that we would go, if the Lord seemed so to direct.

An offer of rooms at the Mission free of rent was made by the friends in Philadelphia, but this was all they were able to do to provide for us in any way. Further consideration was given to the subject, and certain events transpiring, seemed to indicate that it was the right thing to go. It was still open to question, however, until the morning of August 13, when our going had to be finally decided upon, as we would need to sail a week later. That morning I knelt in prayer with my wife and four children earnestly praying for guidance, and rising from my knees sat down with my Bible in my hand. It fell open, and my eye went as an arrow to the mark, seeing only one verse—Isaiah xlii. 16: "And I will bring the blind by a way that they know not. I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them and not forsake them, saith the Lord." It was enough; I turned to my wife and said, "We will go, for this is evidently the Lord's message to us."

It was not a small thing to take this step. To give up home and friends was something, but to give up a certainty in the shape of a position, with definite salary, for a seeming uncertainty, with six in family, was a matter that needed very careful and prayerful consideration, and clear assurance that God was leading, even as He led Abraham to leave his home and country. In less than two hours after the experience just related, we had tangible evidence of the care of our Heavenly Father, by two friends giving, the one £20 and the other £5 towards meeting the expense of voyage, etc., without being asked or spoken to by me.

The work of breaking up home soon began; selling some things and packing others, and bidding good-bye to friends, were things gone through not without a pang. The fund was increased by other friends until it reached one hundred guineas, including ten pounds raised by the poor people at the Mission, and presented by them at the farewell meeting.

It was a trying ordeal for all, and a large number of friends gathered on the pier at Liverpool to see the ss. Indiana sail on August 20, 1879.

During the first two years of our American life many difficulties were met with and overcome, deliverance being sent in such a manner as to leave no doubt who was the actual Deliverer. Many times during these two years, and some of the succeeding ones, have the five or ten-cent thankofferings of the patients been all the money taken home at the close of the day. How little did these poor people think or know of these things. The day on which President Garfield was buried, in September, 1881, was a general holiday, and the weather was very hot. The whole of the way to the ferry had to be walked in the burning rays of the sun, and as the perspiration poured off my face, I began to complain, when as a flash there was brought to my remembrance these words, "Rejoice, in that ye are made partakers of Christ's sufferings." The effect was magical, and of such a character that I actually laughed outright at the thought of such a comparison. It had, however, the desired effect, for all the murmuring spirit fled, and I went on my way in a different mood.

There was a question as to my going to the mission at all on that day, it being a holiday; but, inasmuch as people do not all at once get well, or not get sick because of a holiday, I decided to go. Strangely enough, the patients gave more than twice as much on that day as on the largest amount contributed on any previous occasion, in all nearly four dollars. Oftentimes a day would pass without a cent being given, while on others only a very few cents would be received.

In December, 1882, funds were very low indeed, and in Christmas week scarcely anything was obtained beyond bare subsistence. Each day of the week my children were anxiously waiting to be taken to see the stores or shops, all filled with Christmas goods; but to take them only to see that which they could not possess would be very trying to all. Day after day they were made to hope for better things, until Saturday arrived, and I wended my way home, having only enough to pay the ferry over the river, and then walk. A dear friend brought a toy sleigh for the children, which I carried home, and we made the most of it. Then gathering all together we had a good time of singing before retiring for the night. Next day, the one before Christmas, although we had something to eat, I had not even enough money to pay the ferry to get to New York. However, shortly before the time for leaving, a friend called and furnished the needed means.

Arriving home about eleven o'clock that night, my wife, Mr. Summers, my first student, and myself, sat together talking over the condition of affairs.

Suddenly, a few minutes before midnight, we were startled by a sharp ring at the door-bell, which at the same time awoke four of the five children out of their sleep. They had gone to bed with visions of Santa Claus, and his descent with wonderful things, and hearing our exclamations of surprise, rushed downstairs.

Going to the door as quickly as possible, supposing some one was sick and needed aid, I was astonished not to see anyone there. In vain I looked around; no one could be seen upon the street, although the moon was shining very brightly. My wife and Mr. Summers, not hearing me address anyone, came to the door; turning to them, I remarked how peculiar it was. There was no mistake as to the bell being rung, but how anyone could ring it and get away so quickly seemed a mstery.

"Why, George, what is this?" said my wife, as she directed my attention to the doorstep, on which lay something glittering in the moonlight, forming the initial letter of our name D. Closer inspection revealed ten bright new silver dollars all bearing the date of the year 1882. After another fruitless search for the messenger, there was nothing to do but close the door, and thank the sender, though unable to thank the bringer. To this day we know not who brought those silver dollars, but we have no doubt as to who sent them.

Gathering the children around, we all knelt down and thanked our Heavenly Father. Upon rising from our knees, our eldest boy asked, "Mother, is it all real, or are we dreaming?" No, it was no dream, indeed, for all those dollars were readily cashed when presented, with one exception, which is thus explained. After assuring our children that it was all real, my wife remarked, "George, dear, I think we ought to keep one of those dollars in remembrance of this occurrence." We did, and have it to this day. Often since then we should have been glad of a dollar or part of one, but we could not spend that one, as it had not only been consecrated, but redeemed. For a lady, hearing of this deliverance, sent my wife two dollars, that she should not be at any loss for saving that one.

Later on, thinking over this event, I could not but feel thankful that my children had received such a life-long lesson. Do they not forget it? No, not to this day, and they never will. Better to them by far than the Christmas presents they might have had, had we possessed the means earlier, was this practical illustration of our Father's care. Yet we had to be brought low to obtain the help. How often our hardest trials are made to become our greatest mercies and blessings!

DR. COMANDI'S ORPHANAGE.—I learn that Dr. Comandi's orphanage and industrial home for boys is at the present moment in a position of great financial need. Ever since last autumn Florence has been passing through a severe financial crisis, several prominent banks having failed, and this circumstance has necessarily involved many people in difficulties. I do not know how far this may have tended to lessen the receipts at the Boys' Industrial Home. What I do know is that during the summer funds needed have not come in, and at this time the lack of means is making itself sorely felt. Various cases have occurred of lads being placed in the institution by friends who engaged to pay for their support, and who, after a short time, simply have discontinued the payment, leaving our boys in Dr. Comandi's care—at the expense of the general fund. —Yours truly, TH. A. ROBERTS.

POLICE-COURT WORK.

The Church of England Temperance Society has a branch called "the Police-Court Mission," which is doing excellent work. It employs a band of devoted men. They send a representative to every police-court; he attends daily, watches boys and young men, as well as women, who are brought before the magistrates, sometimes for trifling offences, sometimes for graver charges, but who ought not to go to prison. The magistrate is only too glad to hand over anyone to a home that will care for the case, and bring him or her under helpful influence.

At first a girl greatly dreads the shortest sentence; the second time she minds less a longer one; still less the third time, until at length, in many cases, she becomes a "gaol-bird." We had in our shelter a woman of 27 years of age who had been nineteen times in prison! It is to help these girls, who are themselves willing to go to homes, and to save them from such a life, that the Police Court Mission is at work.

About five years ago, the first case of this kind was brought to my Home by one of the missionaries of this society. She was brought before the magistrate for attempting to destroy herself. She had been in a situation, and while out on an errand, had met with companions who tempted her to drink. Wretched in mind at having thus given way, and ashamed to return to her fellow-servants, she was about to put an end to her life. While in the Shaftesbury Institute Training Home, the grace of God reached her heart, and she became a new creature in Christ Jesus. She has been in a situation for several years, and has been much valued, and her consistent life is a right example of what the grace of God can do.

Many cases of this kind have been brought to our Home from time to time, from ten different police-courts, as Marylebone, Bow, Westminster, Ealing, etc., so that work among first-offence girls has become an important and successful branch of our Training Home work.

One of the most important branches of the Shaftesbury Institute Mission is the women's night shelter, which has been at work for some years. We hold a certificate from the medical officer of health as to its sanitary condition, and women sometimes walk long distances to benefit by it. Since we extended it we have not often occasion to send women away.

In addition to the night shelter we have a day shelter or women's labour home, which provides employment for a certain number of women who are out of employment.

SWEET HUSH OF SOUL.

"But I would have you without carefulness."—1 Cor. vii. 32.

Keep me, Lord, from worrying,
Keep me calm and quiet;
Let not care, with ruthless tread,
O'er my soul run riot.
Bring thy word, and to my soul
By thy power apply it.

Let the burden of each day
Be for me sufficient,
Rolling it upon Thyself,
Saviour, Lord omniscient,
Knowing well thy precious love,
In thy ways proficient.

Far too short the time is here
To be anxious ever;
Let not restlessness my soul
From thy comforts sever;
Vain—if Thou dost guard the heart—
Is the foe's endeavour.

Thus each day in patience spent,
May my steps be lighter;
May my loins, as pacing on,
E'er be girded tighter;
And my soul, as nearing home,
Shine in grace the brighter.

Finding quiet 'mid the storm,
Thou the tempest stilling,
Ever listening to thy voice,
In obedience willing,
May I live beneath thine eye,
All thy mind fulfilling.

"SURELY I COME QUICKLY."

At Salisbury Conference. By Dr. Harry Guinness.

Our subject is the "Coming of the Lord." Whereas a great many people are uncertain about details, and are considerably muddled on the whole subject, feeling that one man says this and another man says that, thank God there are certain clear main outlines of which everyone of us may take a grip. All of these are embodied in the text, "Surely I come quickly."

The advent of Christ is to be a personal one. "Surely I come quickly." It does not refer to the imminence of death as many think, on account of the emphatic declaration of the first chapter of Acts: "This same Jesus who is taken from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into Heaven." In fact, the coming of Christ is positively antagonistic to death, as indicated in 1 Thess. iv., where we find that when He comes even those who sleep are to be raised from the dead. It is exceedingly important to be clear on the personality of Christ's advent. Many people are trying to spiritualise it away and make us believe that Christ only comes back to the world in as far as through his Spirit He inspires each believer. How impossible from such a standpoint as this to explain the passages already referred to.

Not only is Christ's coming personal, but it is pre-millennial. We are not to look for the millennium, but for the Master: "The King, ere the kingdom, shall appear." This is a matter on which we may all be perfectly clear, and in which there is practically no room for controversy. There are many people who think that legislation, education, and modern improvements are likely to bring about the millennial era apart from the advent of Christ. If only universal arbitration could be introduced, and local option or prohibition given; if only educational advantages are universal, and slums are abolished—according to some, the millennium might be brought about entirely apart from the advent of Jesus!

If we look at those very places where these conditions already obtain—such, for instance, as the charming little village of Edensor, in the Chatsworth estate of the Duke of Devonshire, where every house is an architectural gem and the place a little paradise, where there is no public-house, and where educational advantages are free to all—one still finds that the millennium has not arrived, even within the precincts of that little community. So with Bessbrook, in the north of Ireland, in spite of the splendid efforts that have been made for the exclusion of drink and all the spiritual advantages with which it has been blessed. I was told the other day by an active missionary engaged there in Christian work that the apathy and coldness of many are most striking, and that even infidelity rears its head in this remarkable little town.

We are called pessimists for disbelieving that, with the present agencies at work, the world can be converted, but it seems to us that we are the optimists, and that those who are anticipating the introduction of the golden age by the present agencies ought themselves legitimately to be the pessimists. How can they be hopeful when they view the present condition of things in spite of all that has been done to evangelise our dear old country? Those who have experience that reaches below the surface fail entirely to understand the optimism that conceives it possible to regenerate the world apart from the advent of the Son of God. No; we look not for a millennium introduced by human agency, even controlled by the Holy Spirit, but we look for the Lord from Heaven, who Himself shall put to right the wrongs of time, and reign both with a rod of righteousness and of iron.

Let us dwell for a moment on the certainty of the Advent of Christ. "Surely I come quickly." In spite of all the unbelief of men, in spite of the "Peace, peace," that is uttered by the world, in spite of the universal cry, "Do not all things continue as they were from the foundation of the world?" yet his Advent is certain; and, still more, it is at the very threshold. If the word "quickly" could be employed eighteen centuries ago how much more applicable is it to-day. Evangelical Christians throughout the world are awaking to the sense of the nearness of Christ's advent. Political events foreshadow it. Fulfilled prophecy indicates it. Earnest students of Scripture, who have devoted their lives to the study of the more sure word of prophecy, believe it, and apart altogether from any rash guesses at the day or the hour of the Advent of the Son of Man—guesses that seem to some of us as impious as they are impossible—we may yet hold with absolute confidence the conviction that we are living in the time of the end, and pray for the speedy advent of the day when the last shadows shall flee away, and Jesus Himself fulfil the eager expectations of his waiting people.

Some say that this theme is not a practical one; on the contrary, it is one of the most practical we can possibly conceive. It affects each one of us whatever our station in life or work for God. Do we sorrow? Let us not sorrow as those who have no hope. Jesus is soon coming, and will bring our dear ones with Him. Are we labouring? Let us not weary in our toil, for Jesus will soon be here. Are we cast down and oppressed by the burden and heat of the day, by the disappointments of life, and by the sense of his long delay? Let us lift up our heads with holy expectation, for the Master is at the door. Are we unable to explain the many questions that the world asks us on every hand? Let us be still and strong in the deep-rooted conviction that He Himself will soon appear and solve for ever the problems which we are unable to answer. What a strength and encouragement! What an inspiration! Let us harbour no uncertainty with regard to these central principles of the personality of Christ's coming, the pre-millennial character of his advent, the certainty and nearness of this supreme event, and let us endeavour to live in the light that it casts on the pathway which He calls us to tread. "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as He is pure."

By Rev. R. Middleton, of Norwich.

The second coming of Christ is the great central truth of Christianity at the present time, and should be the prominent thought in every consecrated heart. The prophet Daniel was told to seal up the words of his prophecy until the time of the end. The time of the end had now come, and the Holy Ghost had unsealed the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation so that God's children might understand them clearly. But the great fact to bear in mind now is that Christ is coming soon, and may be expected at any moment. St. John xiv. 1-3, Christ said, "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself." The bodies of the apostles to whom the promise was given had already been in the grave about 1900 years, therefore both they and we wait for the fulfilment of that promise. We believe that when Jesus comes the spirits of our departed and loved ones in Christ will be brought back to this earth by the Lord Jesus to receive their bodies again, which will be changed and made like unto Christ's own glorious body (1 Thess. iv., Phil. iii. 20, 21). We believe that the living saints who are upon the earth when Christ comes will be "caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air," and so shall we even be with the Lord.

This, as well as many other passages, shows that the Lord's coming will be a secret coming, i.e., to say not that open manifestation such as is mentioned in Rev. i. 7, where "every eye shall see Him ...and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him." The coming in 1 Cor. xv. and 1 Thess. iv. is to cause joy of heart to those who look for Him and his appearing "wherefore comfort (or exhort) one another with these words." Christ's coming is to be in the same manner in which He went away (Acts i. 9-11). He went away only in the presence of believers, and He will "so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." He is coming for his own children whom He calleth by name (St. John x.), to call together the family and remove them before the trying time, the woes and throes of "the great tribulation" are ushered into this world. Christ has never been seen by any unconverted persons since his burial, and unconverted eyes shall not see the rejected Saviour until He comes with power and great glory to "execute vengeance upon those that knew not God and that obey not the Gospel." When Christ comes, He will remove his waiting Church; take away the restraints now exercised over Satan, the great tribulation will soon after that be brought upon the world, at the end of which Christ will come to the earth. His feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, Satan will be chained, Christ's enemies overthrown, and the glorious millennial kingdom set up.

If we believe Christ may appear to take us away at any moment, what manner of persons ought we to be? Should we not yield our bodies and spirits to Christ who has bought them, that He may have the full possession of them and use them by the power of his Holy Spirit for his own glory? Ought we to live the half-hearted, apathetic, low level life which seems to satisfy so many who profess to follow Jesus? Ought we not rather to say—

> Take my life, and let it be > Consecrated, Lord, to Thee;
> Take my moments and my days,
> Let them flow in ceaseless praise.

So shall we find real pleasure in living and working with Jesus, and we shall by God's grace not be ashamed before Him at his coming.

A MINISTER'S VACATION.

Going to the place appointed by the superintendent of home missions, he found a goodly New England community—industrious, thriving, and well-to-do in everything but the Gospel. In that respect they were entirely destitute, having to send several miles when the services of a minister were required. He reached his destination on Saturday, and, having secured the use of the school building, went from house to house making himself and his purpose known, and inviting people to the meeting the next forenoon. He was treated politely, but received such discouraging words that he anticipated bare benches for an audience; nor was he far from the mark, for only a few persons more than a baker's dozen appeared when the hour came. The evening found a large number, and the remaining Sundays saw the little schoolroom well filled with an eager, attentive congregation. A Sunday-school was organised from the start, and later an Endeavour Society. A funeral was attended, and many calls made. This is an outline of the work. Now what are the results?

The change afforded the minister all he needed in the way of air, diet, and scenery. There was plenty of time for rest and meditation. A variety of sports were at his command, all without price, and made the more enjoyable by the companionship and open hospitality of those to whom he ministered. Recreation and the cool invigorating atmosphere added several pounds to his avoirdupois. A most picturesque portion of coast scenery, made up of bold bluffs, rock-bound shores, islands, villages, fields, forest, and mountain, formed a landscape of surpassing beauty. To him who combined work with play the spiritual results were refreshing. Some wanderers were reclaimed, some led to let their light shine, and some moved for the first time to take their stand publicly for Christ. The Sunday-school and the Endeavour Society give promise of continued services amongst themselves.

If others profited by the meetings, the minister is sure he, too, is a gainer, for he returns to his parish not only with a deeper colour on his cheek, but with more hopefulness, stronger courage, and a cherished spiritual experience born of his missionary labours on fallow ground. He and his people will have this field to pray and work for.—(Boston) Congregationalist.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

As we enter upon another winter campaign amongst adults and the young, we earnestly entreat the prayers and practical co-operation of all who can possibly help, as there are many "open doors and effectual" before us in theatres, halls, and other places in London and country towns and villages. The expenses of this mission are necessarily heavy, though by far the larger part of its workers are voluntary agents; whilst a considerable amount will be required to clear the cost of the past summer's operations and arrears; and we are much needing the new hall at Brondesbury in order that the work there may be extended. HOP-PICKERS IN HANTS.—We have closed one of the most interesting and, we hope, profitable missions ever held. A very pleasing feature manifested in the work is that many of the gipsies who learnt hymns in their childhood by means of the magic lantern, now come and take part in the service. At one of the tents a service of song was given wholly by the hop-pickers themselves. The tent was crowded and many outside. Will friends remember the work in prayer, that the Master's blessing may follow it.

WINTER MISSIONS FOR INDIA.

My dear Sir,—In the loving providence of God I was permitted last December to start from England as a "winter missioner" on a visit to many of the missionary stations of India and Ceylon. I was absent from my parish just four months. During those four months I travelled 16,000 miles of sea and land; I visited the missionary stations of Bombay, Agra, Lucknow, Benares, Calcutta, Krishnagar, Chupra, Allahabad, Jubbulpore, Madras, Palamcottah, Meugnanapuram, Colombo, and Kandy.

I had three objects in view: (1) To preach the Gospel of the grace of God to the heathen; (2) to encourage the missionaries in their depressing yet glorious work; (3) to hold conferences and Bible readings amongst the Christians. In the great goodness of God I was not ill a single day. I met with no accident. I was welcomed at every missionary station with great kindness. I was able to fulfil every appointment I was led to make. I was able to give 167 addresses. I found the heat, especially in the south of India, to be very great, but not by any means as relaxing as the damper heat of an English hot summer like 1893.

(1) I had great opportunities as a "winter missioner" for preaching the Gospel to the heathen; I preached chiefly by interpretation to those speaking Ordu, Bengali, Tamil, and Singhalese languages; the interpreters I had were mostly men of singular ability and deep spirituality, who interpreted without any loss to the Gospel truths I tried to impress. The great strides that have been made of late years in education in India have paved the way for preaching the Gospel in English, and I found the Baboos, I mean the educated Indian gentlemen, were most ready to listen to the Gospel from the lips of an educated Englishman. (a) They delight to hear plain English spoken. (b) They pay considerable deference to an English gentleman fresh from England, as he belongs to the country that governs India. (c) Many are anxiously inquiring more about the God that has made England so great. I preached to upwards of 200 Baboos in an open square in Calcutta. I spoke to a churchful of Baboos at Krishnughar, who came to listen to a lecture on "A door that no man could open." These Baboos were worshippers of idols, or followers of the false prophet Mahomet; all these gentlemen paid the greatest attention to the Gospel message and interrupted me in no way.

(2) I had the joy of meeting missionaries belonging to different societies, but who are all working for the same Divine Master. The presence of an Evangelical English clergyman amongst them was hailed with great delight, and many a warm grip of the hand and a hearty expression of welcome testified to the joy of seeing a "winter missioner."

(3) Conferences and Bible readings amongst the Christians, and specially amongst the native converts, were much valued. A "winter missioner" has a very obvious advantage over any local missionary. At Calcutta we had a four days' conference for the deepening of spiritual life. At Chupra eighty workers met for a couple of days. In South India the gatherings of workers were over 200 in number, and many testified to very clear help in their spiritual life.

The object of my letter is to try to impress upon your readers the

EXTREME IMPORTANCE OF SENDING OUT

"winter missioners" to India. India belongs to England, and has a first claim upon our attention; out of its huge population of 286 millions not one million are professing Protestant Christians, and the population of India is increasing at the rate of 3,000,000 a year.

The deadening influences of heathenism upon missionaries in India is very powerful, but by the grace of God a visit from a godly man from England may give a great impetus to their spiritual life.

The plan I wish to suggest is that a special "Winter Mission Fund" for India should be started, not on any account to interfere with the most important of all missionary work, the steady support of our missionaries' societies, but to supplement their work.

My idea is that two men, full of the Holy Ghost's power, should be selected, and should be sent ("How shall they preach except they be sent?") to one of the huge districts of India where, say, the Ordu language is spoken. An interpreter should be selected, a spiritually-minded, intelligent and earnest man, and should go with these "winter missioners" where they are sent in the district; he would thus become accustomed to their mode of expression and address. I suggest that services should be held for adults, children, educated Indian gentlemen, heathen, Mohammedans, and Christians.

These missions should not be held too frequently in one place, but as India is eighteen times larger than England, there is little fear of these missions being too frequent in one district. The cost to each missioner, including necessary outfit, would not exceed £150. I have mentioned this subject to a few friends, with this result, that I have in hand or in promises the sum of £166. I shall be very glad if any of your readers would communicate with me on this subject.

Your obedient servant,

Edgar N. Thwaites.

JEWISH NOTES.

LONDON.

The Mildmay Mission to the Jews has engaged Mr. Tenz to give special exhibitions of his models of the Temples of Solomon and Herod, the City of Jerusalem, etc., to congregations of Jews in East London. On Saturday, October 6, although it was the first Saturday after the Jewish New Year, a goodly company, chiefly of Jews, gathered at the Central Hall, Philpot-street, to see the model of Solomon's Temple. All were intensely interested as Mr. Tenz gave his explanation, and Rev. James Adler and Mr. Samuel Wilkinson delivered short Gospel addresses. On Tuesday evening, October 9—the eve of the Day of Atonement—the annual prayer-meeting was held, presided over by Rev. John Wilkinson, who gave an exposition of Leviticus xvi. The next evening, the large magic lantern was called into requisition, and Dr. Roberts, with its aid, conducted a Gospel meeting for Jews. The monthly workers' meeting of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews was held in the same place on the Thursday; and in future this workers' meeting will be thrown open every alternate month to all Christian workers, whether among Jew or Gentile. Rev. T. R. H. Sturges, of Wycliffe Chapel, gave a solemn and searching address upon absolute consecration to the Lord Jesus and his service. On Saturday, October 13, Mr. Tenz's model of Herod's Temple was exhibited to a congregation of about 150, most of whom were Jews. The children and girls from the Ashburton Home in Globe-road, under the charge of Miss Okell, formed part of the audience.

IRELAND.

A good work among the Jews of Dublin has been established under the auspices of the British Jews Society, assisted by a local committee. During the summer months open-air meetings have been held, and have been well sustained in numbers and in interest. A mission-house has been opened, with a reading-room, a class-room, and a study for the resident missionary, where he can meet inquirers. This house has proved a great boon in every way. "One evening a young man came in, and taking out a Hebrew New Testament from his pocket, put some questions with reference to the genealogies of our Lord, and this led to a most interesting conversation." The report states that there has never been such an active year among the Jews in Dublin as the present, and that next year, if the Lord will, it is proposed to visit the Jews throughout the provinces, and also start a Gospel letter department, in order to reach Jewish families who otherwise are inaccessible.

NEW YORK.

The first annual report of the Hope of Israel Mission to the Jews at New York, which is conducted by Rev. A. C. Gaebelein, contains some encouraging items. The average attendance at the Saturday afternoon meetings during winter months was between four and five hundred, while on one occasion, in February, fully 800 men and women listened to a Gospel sermon. Gospel services have been held every night except Saturday, and a weekly prayer and experience meeting; also a Bible-reading, in Hebrew, from the New Testament. Mr. Gaebelein is a Gentile, but his method of work is not to antagonise the Jewish laws and customs, but to induce the converts to continue "to observe the requirements of the Mosaic law as far as they do not conflict with the essentials of the Christian faith." Several Jews appear to have been convinced that Jesus is the Messiah, but Mr. Gaebelein rightly adds: "This is not conversion. From the beginning of our work we have felt that we must reach the heart as well as the head. By God's grace we are succeeding."

SMYRNA.

The Church of Scotland Home and Foreign Mission Record describes a religious movement of extraordinary interest in Smyrna. For two years past there has been, especially among the Russian Jews there, an unusual eagerness to know the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and willingness to consider his claims to be their Messiah. A large number of baptisms were reported to last general assembly. A great step in advance has been taken by them within the past few months. A Karaite Jew from Sebastopol, a man of considerable culture and intelligence, having himself found the Messiah, recently organised Gospel meetings, and formed a Hebrew-Christian Society. This community was at once joined by sixty-four heads of families, numbering from 300 to 400 persons. As persecution became more intense, consequent on their meeting for worship on the Lord's Day, a sifting has taken place; those who had joined in the glow of enthusiasm, but with imperfectly-rooted conviction, backed out, leaving thirty-two families and seventeen single men; in all, 185 persons at the time of writing. The number was almost daily being added to.

THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.

Very strange and saddening was the spectacle witnessed at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, on Wednesday, October 10, when the great building, which had been lent by Mr. Charrington, was filled from floor to ceiling with a large concourse of Jews, keeping the solemn fast of the Day of Atonement. The body of the hall and the upper gallery were filled with men who, with their hats on their heads and their praying scarves upon their shoulders, were eagerly scanning the pages of their prayer-books. The lower gallery was occupied exclusively by Jewesses, attired in their best robes. To the Christian observer the most painful effect was produced when, at intervals in the service, the voice of the precentor rose in loud lamentations, and his gesticulations became quite vehement, till at length, in apparent exhaustion, he fell on his knees and buried his face in his hands. Conversations with some who were present confirmed the well-known fact that the great majority of Jews do not understand the meaning of the Hebrew prayers they recite so devoutly, for Rabbinism, like Romanism, has kept the people in ignorance, by using a dead language in the worship of God.

A tract, entitled "Atonement," which has been published by Rev. John Wilkinson, is suitable for distribution at this season.

A booklet entitled "Jews and the Gospel," issued by Mr. C. T. Lipshytz, of the Barbican Mission to the Jews (33, Finsbury-square, E.C.), presents facts which appeal strongly for interest in the evangelisation of Israel.

MR. MEEK AND THE ZULUS.

Writing to a friend at home, this devoted evangelist mentions that his wife is recovering after a long illness. He describes a ten days' visit to her cousin M'Tonga, in Zululand. This chief professes to have accepted Christ, but his wives have not. The writer adds: "Since that I have had meetings at Grey Town, where the Europeans were brought together by a Wesleyan minister from Durban, and some forty stood up for the King. The Dutch and Wesleyan ministers gave out that it was my wish that every Dutch or English resident of Grey Town would give their Zulu servants a chance to come and hear the Gospel. They not only did as requested, but came themselves. Some twenty years back, if anyone had said that such a thing would take place, as the Dutch to come to the same place as the natives to hear the Gospel, he would have been looked upon as mad. At 3 p.m. I took my stand in the Dutch Church grounds close to the building. The elders had their chairs brought out, some 150 to 200 Dutch and English came to the meeting, and the Zulus sat in front. Before the meeting ended about thirteen Zulus stood up for Jesus. I held three meetings in Grey Town. There are now five of us (including my youngest son) who go out on Sundays preaching the Gospel. Thus, the work is going on, but without the help of any but the Lord Himself. I have about twenty children at the school, and I have to pay all out of my own pocket,"

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 21.—ZECHARIAH IV.

The Vision of the Golden Candlestick (1-3).—The prophet was aroused from his musings by the angel's touch. To all of us there come moments of awakening. There were seven lamps, and seven pipes to each lamp. (See R.V.) The candlestick therefore differed somewhat from that in the temple. The two olive trees poured their oil into a central bowl from which the pipes fed the burners. 7. Seven is the number of perfection, and indicates the fulness of the grace of God given, first to Israel, and then to the Church, for the enlightening of the world. Probably the olive trees represent Zerubbabel and Joshua, and typify the royal and priestly attributes of our Lord, by which souls are nourished.

The Explanation of the Vision (4-14).—When we do not understand, let us ask. God will stoop to explain his mysteries to the humble and believing heart. The explanation met the fears of the Jews that they would never be able to complete the Temple they had commenced. It could not be done by might, i.e., by the strength of many, or by the power of one man, but God would pour his daily help through their leaders, furnishing all needed grace, so that mountains of difficulty would be removed. (Matt. xxi. 21.) How true this is of Christian work. Results are accomplished not by us, but by the daily grace of God through us; and let us bind this promise to our heart. When God has sent us to begin a work we may trust Him with its completeness. The workman is vindicated as God's servant when the structure stands complete. There is no unfinished work in God's workshop. (10) The day of small things is always the point from which God's greatest works begin. They, i.e., the seven eyes of the Lord, are glad when they see the plummet in the hand of a capable man. For with in A.V. substitute even, and the sense is clear. What a bright conception of God's interest in our work, specially when coupled with 2 Chron. xvi. 9. Be sure when the work is done, to cry "Grace, grace!"

MONDAY, OCTOBER 22.—ZECHARIAH V.

The Flying Roll (1-4).—A roll inscribed with the words of the curse, Deut. xxvii. 15-26, must betoken impending judgment. Its flight shows that the curse was ready to fall; its size, ten yards by five, which was exactly that of the tabernacle, indicated that judgment would begin at the House of God. In proportion to our knowledge is our guilt. (3) "Over the whole earth" should rather be land (R.V.) On one side of the roll were crimes against the second table of the law, represented by theft; and on the other, those against the first table, represented by swearing. (4) The punishment would fall not only on the individual criminals, but would also enter their homes, destroying these. The sinner brings punishment on his household as well as himself.

The Vision of the Ephah (5-11).—This ephah, which was one of the largest measures of the Hebrews, containing about a bushel, was the emblem of the wicked Jews in the midst of the land. The woman within personified wickedness, and represented the secret sins of the people. (9) The bearing away of this vessel with its contents to the land of Babylon by the two women, foreshadows the casting out of evil from the heart of the chosen people, and typically, the purification of the Church of Christ, by putting out of it all things that work iniquity. So may God cleanse our hearts by the elimination of all that offends Him.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 23.—ZECHARIAH VI.

The Vision of the Four Chariots (1-8).—These represent the dispensations of God's providence towards the world. The brazen mountains are God's decrees, strong as the everlasting hills. (2) The colours have already been dealt with (chap. i. 8). (7) The north is Babylon, the south Egypt. Evidently we have a conception given us of the mighty spirits that stand before God, the Lord of all the earth, and that go forth at his bidding to execute his purposes amongst men, and to counterwork Satan as he goes about to devour. They go with lightning speed, or they walk to and fro as his patrols, waiting for their work to be designated. (8) The spirit of justice had been satisfied by the punitive work of the celestial messengers, and was therefore at rest. We rejoice to know that the death of our Saviour has for ever stilled the just requirements of a broken law.

The High Priest Crowned (9-15).—Heldai (or Helem, 14), Tobijah, and Jedaiah were a deputation from Jews in Babylon with gifts for the Temple. The gold and silver were to be made into crowns and placed on the head of Joshua in anticipation of the future coronation of our Lord as the true Priest and King. (12) The Branch is evidently He who sprang of David's line, and who is building the true Temple of God. Since Zerubbabel was to finish the material structure then building (chap. iv. 9), it is clear that the spiritual edifice of the Church is referred to. (13) The offices of priest and king were jealously kept apart in the Jewish state, as was illustrated in the case of Uzziah (2 Chron. xxvi. 18), but in Jesus Christ they blend. The counsel of peace is between them both. He is a king because He died (Rev. v. 9). He is a priest who exerts royal power over those whom He has redeemed. (14) God remembers our gifts. (15) The temple of God shall contain trophies gathered from all lands. Jew and Gentile, bond and free, contribute to its glory and beauty. Oh to be permitted to build some part of that holy fabric, whose stones are broken hearts!

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24.—ZECHARIAH VII.

The Inquiry about the Fast (1-7).—Messengers came from Babylon to inquire of the priests and prophets whether the national fast commemorating the anniversary of the destruction of Jerusalem should be continued. (4) In his reply the prophet was directed to go to the intention that prompted the inquiry, and was largely a self-righteous one. The petitioners thought to make outward rites avail for obedience and love; but they are reminded that the fast of the fifth month, commemorating the fall of Jerusalem, and that of the seventh month, the murder of Gedaliah, had not been times of real humiliation. They were not for God, but for self-congratulation. (7) The people are referred to the words so often spoken by Isaiah and other prophets (Isa. i. 11, lvii. 8).

The True Fast (8-14).—Abstinence from food is a comparatively small part of the fast that God loves. To fast from sin, to abstain from oppression and evil thoughts, to be humble and loving—this God seeks. For want of these things the Jews were scattered as with a whirlwind, and their land was left desolate. The only hope of our dwelling always in the pleasant land of God's favour, secure and happy, is in cultivating that spirit of perfect love toward God and man which was the requirement of the old and is the fruit of the new covenant.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25.—ZECHARIAH VIII.

God's Love for Jerusalem (1-8).—God is jealous against our foes and sins. He yearns for all our love. If we will let Him, He will surely deliver us from all evil. (3) Though the city was but slowly recovering itself, He had returned to it, and wherever God indwells, truth and holiness enter. He also would restore the populations that formerly filled its streets. In the true city of God, age and youth mingle. The joyous life of children is consistent with the glorious manifestation of his presence. Boys and girls need not cease to play when He is there. (6) What is impossible to man is possible to God. Let not the slenderness of our faith limit his gifts. (8) Sin cannot break the covenant relationships between God and his people.

Future Blessings (9-17).—A contrast is made between what they were before the prophets began their work, and the blessings which had already commenced to accrue; but even these were small compared to what would come, such as—(12) Prosperity. (13) They should be a blessing. (15) The absence of fear. (16, 17) Note the earnest pleadings of Jehovah that his people would act worthily of the great blessings He was about to bestow upon them.

The Effect on the World (18-23).—The Jewish fasts commemorating the worst disaster of their city, would become feasts (Jer. xxxix. 2; lii. 4, 6, 7). (20) These words were remarkably fulfilled about the advent of our Lord. Men were dissatisfied with their philosophies, and sought after something better. "We would see Jesus." There is probably a further reference to the close of the present age, when the world shall be evangelised by Christian Jews, and will stream towards the Saviour whom their fathers crucified. May God hasten the day.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 26.—ZECHARIAH IX.

Denunciation of Surrounding Nations (1-8).—These prophetic words probably refer to the victories of Alexander the Great, who made the circuit of the Holy Land, but without attempting to invade it. Damascus fell first before his arms. There the judgment found its resting-place (R.V.). The eyes of all spectators would be compelled to acknowledge the hand of the Lord. (2) Hamath lay north of Damascus. (3) Old Tyre was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, but New Tyre fell before Alexander, though she was defended by double walls and girded by the sea. (5) These cities were in Philistia, on the extreme south-west of Palestine. (6) Probably a bastard (mongrel) race (R.V. marg.). (7) After the devastating arm of the conqueror had passed, there would be in these lands a time of true turning to God, blood and abomination put away, and the remnant acknowledging Jehovah. There seems a further hint of its princes becoming incorporated in the ruling class of the chieftains of Judah. (8) When Alexander was marching on Jerusalem he was arrested by a dream, so that neither in going to Egypt nor in returning did he menace the chosen people. So does the Lord encamp around his children.

The Reign and Victories of Messiah (9-12).—What a contrast is here between the world-conqueror and the King of loyal and faithful souls. Just in his character and laws; the justifier of the ungodly; the vindicator of his Father's government. Having salvation from the guilt and penalty of sin; his salvation being the foundation of his reign. Not the war-horse, nor even the royal mule, his palfrey, but the lowly ass. When He entered Jerusalem, the welkin rang (Matt. xxi. 4, 5); when He enters the heart, songs break out. (10) Beneath his rule, Ephraim and Judah are reunited. He weans them from confidence in weapons of war. His speech is peace. His empire universal. (11) Because of his ancient covenant, Jehovah brought his people forth from the dungeon of despair and captivity. However dark our lot, we may always reckon on God's deliverances. (12) Zion is primarily the stronghold referred to, then Christ. When we are imprisoned, we may, like Paul and Silas, sing praises. God's prisoners have a sure hope of release. His mercy is double the measure of our sins.

The Days of the Maccabees (13-17).—God fitted Judah and Ephraim to his bow that He might launch them forth on his missions. Greece, i.e. Syria, which was part of the Greek empire of Alexander. (15) This perhaps refers to the wrath of God, with which, as with wine, his foes should be intoxicated. (16) God will save his people; they are like precious jewels in his sight; He is as good as He is great.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27.—ZECHARIAH X.

The Visitings of Jehovah (1-4).—God had returned to dwell among his people, and was waiting to give them his choicest gifts; only they had to ask for those with an appropriating faith. Is not this the time of the latter rain as the present age draws near its term, and should it not be the cry of the Church that as God gave the former rain on the day of Pentecost, so He should now cause the latter rain to descend abundantly? (2, 3) It will go hard with those who have assumed to lead God's people, but have belied and falsified their trust. But God will interpose on the behalf of his redeemed. (4) From God come princes, rulers, leaders.

The Restoration of Israel (5-12).—Who cannot fight and tread down strength when God is beside him? (6) Joseph, i.e., the ten tribes, shall share in the blessings of the millennial age. (7, 8) The hiss is the signal of convocation. But God does more than summon, He gathers the outcasts. (9) The wide scattering of the chosen people is for the blessing of mankind. (10) Surely this prediction is to be taken literally of the approaching restoration of Israel. (11) God ever goes in front of his people, smiting the waves. (12) Only as we abide in the Lord do we participate in his blessed strength, but when once we have received it let us use it by walking with persistent continuance in his ways.

PROGRESS IN BRITTANY.

A writer in Pasteur Lecoat's paper, Le Trémelois, says:—

It is now about four months since I left the town of B—— to return to the friends of my youth, to announce to them the truth as it is in Jesus Christ. God has abundantly blessed me during my stay; nevertheless, He gave me many difficulties to overcome. At P—— and C—— it looks as if God is preparing a great revival. In spite of fatigue after a long day's work, our brave friends at the former place do not hesitate to sacrifice an hour from sleep on Mondays in order to come to hear us talk about the Saviour. Our chapel at C—— has every Sunday a daily increase of numbers, and we cannot sufficiently thank God for the encouragement He gives us.

An old clog-maker lately said that he was going to give up smoking in order to pay for a Breton Bible. On the following Sunday I could not refrain from tears in handing him the long-wished-for book, which he kissed with joy, and exclaimed with tears, "This is my great treasure, and the only gift I can leave to my family. But this heritage, if they will receive it, will procure for them eternal life, after having been the secret of my own happiness here below. And only think that they command us to burn this book! I would rather die than permit such a thing to be done in my presence." Another clog-maker, eighty-four years of age, loves his Bible so much that he sometimes remains up till midnight perusing it with his friends.

Recently a lady teacher has come to hear us pretty regularly. One Sunday she was called a fool by some fanatics, who said to her, "How is it that you, who know so much, are fool enough to go and listen to those folks?" She replied, "Greater fools are they who do not go, and greater still those who want to hinder my going." A lovely answer, which encourages us not a little, for we see in it the manifestation of the working of the Divine Spirit on the souls of this awakening people. # INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

OCTOBER 28.

A Paralytic Healed (Mark ii. 1-12).

Golden Text, verse 10.

This incident took place at Capernaum. Note the word "again" (1). Here Jesus had his home, either a house He occupied with his mother and his brethren, or the house of Simon Peter. It was a high privilege, but also a great responsibility, to have Jesus residing in the city (Matt. xi. 23, 24). The occasion was an important one. The mere report that He was at home brought crowds together (1, 2), eager to hear, if not to receive his teaching. Among the crowd were Pharisees and doctors from distant places (Luke v. 17).

A Strange Interruption (3, 4).—The house would have only one storey, with a flat roof, which would be reached by a pair of outside stairs. The room where Jesus preached opened into the court, and from this a gate led into the narrow street. The crowd thronged the room, and the court, and extended even to the street. (1) The palsied man. A fearful form of this disease exists in the East. It renders a man perfectly helpless, and, in its worst forms, is incurable. It is an appropriate type of sin. Would that every one afflicted with the palsy of sin would imitate this man in acknowledging his disease, in longing for deliverance, in his confidence in the power and willingness of Jesus, and in his energetic use of such means as were possible to him. (2) His four friends were friends indeed. They shared his faith (5); they put themselves to trouble and inconvenience to help him; when they saw the crowd they did not put down their burden in despair. Difficulties only brought out the ingenuity and the energy of faith. Picture them climbing the outside stairs with their burden, removing the roof of the building, and holding the bed—or mattress—by the four corners, letting it down into the very presence of Jesus. In Eastern houses the roof is sometimes of earth and lime, pressed down by a roller; and Thompson speaks of some which have a roof of coarse matting, or boards, or stone slabs that could be easily removed. The work of the four men is done. They could not heal the man, but they have done their part in bringing him into contact with Jesus.

The Blessing of Forgiveness (5-7).—Jesus is continually doing what we do not expect. The bodily need had touched the sympathy of the four friends; but Jesus saw deeper than they. Fearful as was the condition of the body, it is still worse to have sin unforgiven. This was his first need, and it is ours. Even the healing of his palsy could wait for this. Put first things first. Let nothing be more important to you than this. Concerning this blessing, observe: (1) It is only God who can bestow it. The Scribes were right in describing as blasphemy (6, 7) any attempt on the part of mere man to speak such a word. (2) God only bestows forgiveness through Jesus. Because by his death Jesus has put sin away (Jno. i. 29). Our pardon has, therefore, a righteous basis. (3) It is given only to those who believe. "Their faith" (5) includes the faith of the palsied man as well as that of his friends. Faith is everywhere made the condition of receiving this blessing (Acts x. 43). (4) The assurance as to pardon must rest on the word of Jesus. He says it—faith accepts his statement, and rejoices in the truth of his declaration. Have you received pardon in the same simple way?

The Authority of Jesus Proved (8-12).—Jesus gave two evidences of his Divine power. First, He read what was in the hearts of his objectors (8). They must have felt at once that they were in the presence of One who was more than man when they heard his words. Secondly, He performed the miracle (9-12). The mere saying of either sentence (9) is possible to any man; but no one can say the first with authority who cannot with equal authority say the second. The result is convincing. He who had come in utterly helpless, rises at the word of Jesus, rolls up his mattress, and passes out through the astonished company a saved soul in a sound body.

For the Young.

THE SCRIPTURE UNION IN S. INDIA.

Our hearts are full of praise and thankfulness to the Lord for what He has done amongst the Kodaikanal little ones. Kodaikanal is a very small place, there being only about 400 people here all told, and the children are mostly very young, as nearly all over eight or nine go home to England on account of the heat. But we thank God that He has enabled us to gather these little ones together two and three times a week to hear his Word, and to teach them about their loving Saviour Jesus.

We are also thankful that the Kodaikanal Scripture Union Branch has enjoyed a weekly meeting during this year, owing to the loving earnestness of Mrs. Gates, the wife of a missionary at Sholapur. This, too, has been a great blessing to the members. Curiously enough, there are plenty of children's parties and picnics, and various other ways of making little child-life happy, but very few seem ever to think of gathering the little ones together to tell them of "Jesus and his love"—the brightest, happiest, and most blessed work of all.

A remarkable feature about the Kodaikanal Scripture Union members is their keenness for the text and reference for the day. From afar they espy you, and you are greeted with the words, "Text, and the reference, please?" often before you are aware of the presence of the owner of the voice. In fact, no Kodaikanal Scripture Union member is safe unless he knows his text and reference.

We praise God for manifest and wonderful blessing in the lives of these little ones. After one of our meetings some of the children went home and burnt some papers, on which they had written things which they now saw were unkind, reminding one forcibly of the burning of the magical books at Ephesus. "So mightily grew the Word of God, and prevailed."

We had different kinds of services familiar to seaside workers at home, such as "object," "promise," "thorn," "portfolio," "rag," and "flag" services. We found these means a great help in enlisting the interest of the children in the services. We also had a missionary service, at which Rev. E. Ballerby kindly spoke. As a present result, we have been able to start a little Kodaikanal "Sowers' Band," and as a result in the future, we have the joy of knowing that several of the children with the knowledge of their parents have dedicated themselves to the service of the Lord in the mission field.

Very touching were the little letters of the children, brought in with their thankofferings; and many testified to definite blessing received. But these little testimonies are too sacred to meet the printer's eye. Suffice it to say, as a practical test of their reality and earnestness, that in many cases the thankofferings were out of the children's own pocket-money, one boy subscribing the whole of his pocket-money for the month as his thankoffering.

At our last meeting, as we knelt in prayer with quiet and subdued voices, one and another thanked God for special blessings received. It was a blessed experience to hear some thanking God for a changed heart, others for power over their temper, others for the presence of Jesus in their hearts, and some for new light and joy in the reading of his holy Word. Some have found out the truth that Jesus does satisfy, and are seeking those pleasures which are at "his right hand," and which are for ever more. Kodaikanal is built around a beautiful lake, formed by the wooded hills around and a dam at one end which keeps the water in the valleys. Often might be seen the largest boat on the lake with its Scripture Union flag flying gaily, crowded with merry children, and to every part of the lake was wafted the voices of these little ones singing their favourite hymns. God grant that many hearts may have been reached by the sound of these happy voices.

AGRICULTURAL DEPRESSION.—A correspondent suggests, in view of the widespread depression in agriculture, that a day should be annually set apart, say the first Sunday in February, for united prayer to God for a blessing on the land and its cultivation, coupled with humiliation for the misappropriation of the fruits of the earth. Christian farmers might on that day gather together all their labourers for this object.

THE GOSSNER MISSION.

Probably few of our readers know of the Gossner Mission in British India. A Mr. Frans Boy, of Berlin, who last December joined the Mission, sends the following particulars with regard to the people among whom the work is carried on. The letter was in the first instance addressed in the Dutch language to the "Utrecht Students' Missionary Association."

The Gossner Mission comprises the Ganges Mission and the work among the Kohls. The former has five stations and four missionaries. At present there are little, if any, results; the natives, being Hindoos, are bound by caste, as by iron fetters, to heathenism. For this reason the committee in Berlin have seriously considered the advisability of giving up the Mission, and concentrating their efforts in the direction of the more promising work among the Kohls.

This Mission has ten stations and twenty-two missionaries. By the Kohls are understood the hill tribes, principally in the province of Chota Nagpur, who, belonging originally to the inhabitants of the plain, were by the invading Hindoos driven back to the hills. They are not rightly named Kohls, for the people who bear this name consist of various tribes, very dissimilar in language and customs. The Uzads and Mandaris are the principal tribes. To them the system of caste is unknown. As the so-called Kohls are much oppressed by the Hindoos, they naturally welcomed the missionaries, whom they regarded as their deliverers, although it was impossible for them to do much for them, the system of oppression having extended through centuries.

The centre of the mission is Ranchi, capital of Chota Nagpur, containing 20,000 inhabitants, There are three missionaries stationed here, and four at the school. Besides the school there is the seminary, which provides native pastors and teachers. In 1893 the number of baptized converts was 2809, of which 1239 were children of Christians. About 1570 have been rescued from heathenism. The number of native pastors was 18; young men preparing for the ministry, 16; catechists, 199; teachers 100. Itinerating work is carried on in 1149 villages. There are at the present time 3610 candidates for baptism, and 175 places of worship. Besides the German missionaries, there are also Jesuits and missionaries of the English Church labouring among the Kohls.

ST. GEORGE'S CROSS TABERNACLE, GLASGOW.

Twenty years ago, on a vacant piece of ground near St. George's Cross, Glasgow, a tent was pitched for the preaching of the Gospel, and on the same spot every summer since then, with a few exceptions, the old story of redeeming love has been told out from loving hearts. During these years the Lord has blessed the work in a wonderful manner. Many have been born anew, and have gone forth to spread the glad tidings of salvation in home and foreign lands.

Finding the premises at Garscube Hall inadequate for the increasing interest in the work, a desire began to form itself many years ago in the hearts of Mr. D. J. Findlay and some of his helpers that on the place where the tent was pitched, a place which had become dear to their hearts by the many transactions they had witnessed between heaven and earth, the Lord would give them a permanent building for the carrying on of his work. The matter was spread before the Lord, who, in his own time and way, answered their prayer. The building was recently opened with the annual tent conference. Mr. Findlay and his workers were cheered exceedingly by the immense crowds which flocked to the opening of the building to sound their note of praise for the Lord's goodness to them. Better still, the Lord has set his seal upon the place from the beginning, and although the opening services were principally for Christians, some very definite cases of conversion have occurred and from every service word has reached them of blessing received.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY. — On Friday last at Gravesend, after a lecture by Captain Williams, secretary, a local branch of the Society was formed.

Who are Israel?

It appears to me that in this discussion our brethren are (speaking generally) right in what they affirm rather than in what they deny.

No doubt earlier commentators had lost sight of the dispensational lines so clearly marked in the New Testament, and, to use an almost hackneyed phrase, they claimed all the blessings for the Church, and handed over all the curses to the Jews. Though this is, I think, an extreme and exaggerated way of stating it, let it pass. But those men of old were surely not wrong who poured out their souls in hymns which warm our hearts now, and will be sung perhaps, though retrospectively, on the banks of the river in the world to come! Such hymns as these:—

From Egypt lately come,
Where death and darkness reign,
We seek our new, our better home,
Where we our rest shall gain.

Jerusalem, my happy home,
Name ever dear to me.

O Zion, afflicted with wave upon wave,
Whom no man doth pity, whom no man doth save.

Glorious things of thee are spoken,
Zion, city of our God;
He, whose Word cannot be broken,
Formed thee for his own abode.

No exposition could be true which would uproot words which are so intertwined with our dearest affections, our earliest associations, and our holiest memories.

Yet Egypt is a country in Africa. Jerusalem is a city in Syria, and Zion a site within its walls. Israel is the name of a nation descended from Abraham through his grandson Jacob, and the Jews are a people so called from Judah, Jacob's fourth son by Leah, who praised the Lord for him and called him Judah—praise. How can we, who have never been slaves in Egypt nor freemen in Jerusalem, who were never in the loins of Abraham, and whose physiognomy declares that we are not children of Jacob-Israel, express the deepest experiences of our souls in language taken from Africa and Syria, and which means infinitely more to us than it could possibly mean to the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, after the flesh?

Those last words, "after the flesh," explain it all. They imply and suggest the contrasted words "after the Spirit." In the letter, all that history and all those promises, belong to the literal Israel, and to them alone. But in the spirit they are raised to a higher plane, and Egypt means the place of servitude to the tyrant prince of this world. Jerusalem above is the free and heavenly city, the mother of all who are born from above, the city which hath the foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God. The true substantial Israel, the Prince of God, who has power with God and men, and has prevailed, is Jesus the Christ, and we are Israel because we are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones.

If the literal and typical lamb has its anti-typical and spiritual counterpart in the Lamb of God; if Christ our Passover, who was sacrificed for us, is the anti-typical and spiritual complement of the literal and typical paschal lamb whose blood was sprinkled upon the lintel and the sideposts of the houses in which the children of Israel dwelt in Egypt: then we are the anti-typical and spiritual Israel, and we have Divine authority for singing

Now the sprinkled blood hath freed us,
On we go toward our Rest.

We are Israel, not in any sense which trenches upon the sole and exclusive right of the earthly Israel to their promised earthly blessings, which the nation will enjoy when the veil is taken from their heart, when they shall look upon Him whom they pierced, and mourn for Him as one mourns for an only son—not with lascivious tears and licentious rites, as when the women wept for Tammuz; but every family apart, and their wives apart.

We are not the literal-Israel vine which God brought out of literal Egypt, and planted in the very fruitful hill of Palestine, and looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes. But we are the spiritual-Israel vine, branches of the True Vine, of which the Husbandman is his Father and our Father, his God and our God. We are neither Jews nor Gentiles, though taken from both; we are the Church of God—the Church which is the body of the Christ, the fulness of Him who filleth all in all.

This spiritual house, a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, is not limited, I think, by time, or nationality, or dispensation. It includes Abel and Seth and Enoch, and all the antediluvian patriarchs; Noah and Melchizedek and Job, and all the holy ones who preceded the call of Abram. Its every member was foreknown from eternity and chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. And just as they are not all the true Israel who are of the patriarch Israel, or of the nation of Israel, so neither is the true Israel confined to the natural seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. It included Rahab of Jericho, and Ruth of Moab, Jethro the Midianite, Ittai the Gittite, Uriah the Hittite, Naaman the Syrian, and all the men and women (named and unnamed) who gained a good report through faith, of whom the world was not worthy, and who, without us, shall not be perfected, which surely implies that they with us, and we with them, shall be perfected together.

For as the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile is taken away, and both are reconciled to God in one body by the cross of our adorable Redeemer, who slew the enmity in Himself; so it would seem that when we are all perfected together, a holy temple in the Lord, the dispensational scaffolding will have served its purpose, and be done away. Then will be made manifest the Eternal City, which lieth foursquare, whose height and length and breadth are equal; which has no temple, because it is a holy temple in the Lord, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the Temple of it. That mystic City is the Bride, the Lamb's wife, called by her Husband's name, "The Lord our Righteousness," and it consists of all the living stones who have their life in Him, from the first to the last of his believing people—the Israel of God.

The literal and typical, the spiritual and antitypical senses of Scripture, are as real, as distinct, as separate, as earth and heaven. If we mingle them we introduce inextricable confusion. Upon the principles here laid down, I do not think there is much difficulty in discriminating between the literal and the spiritual Israel in the New Testament.

A South London Federation.

Last Saturday, on the invitation of Rev. F. B. Meyer, an interesting meeting was held at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, at which a large number of the ministers and officers of the Free Churches in Lambeth, Vauxhall, and Bermondsey were present. After tea and social converse, resolutions to the following effect were discussed and heartily passed: It was agreed that a federation be formed, to be called "The Evangelical Free Church Federation for South London," comprising ministers and office bearers in the districts named, for the purpose of concerted action against the vice, intemperance, and irreligion so rampant in the neighbourhood. Several committees were appointed to take up the different branches of the programme, to collect facts, and suggest lines on which united action shall be taken.

Some startling facts were detailed as to the great increase of public-houses in South London within the last ten years, and as to the alarming amount of immorality and betting associated with many well-known drink shops, not to mention coffee-houses. The betting mania seems to be fast becoming a fearful curse among our working men and women.

DULWICH INFIRMARY.—Some friends carry on a work of regular Sunday afternoon visitation among the patients at this infirmary, and the effort is greatly appreciated. Desires are frequently expressed by the sufferers for copies of the Scriptures. Miss Whittingham, 21, Atwell-road, Rye-lane, Peckham, S.E., would be glad to receive for distribution any copies.

The Opium Crusade.

WELCOME TO BOMBAY PRISONERS.

The Lower Exeter Hall was the scene of a very significant meeting on Thursday evening last. A number of friends were gathered to welcome to this country three of the four Christian brethren who lately underwent a period of imprisonment in Bombay Prison, for having charged the authorities with conniving at the existence of illegal opium dens or clubs. These three brethren were Mr. A. S. Dyer, editor of The Bombay Guardian, Rev. A. W. Prautch, an American missionary in Bombay, and Mr. Man Sukh Lal, editor of The Banner of Asia. The meeting was not so large as the importance of the questions at issue would have warranted, but the proceedings were marked by much earnestness and depth of feeling, which frequently found audible and forcible expression. In one sense the occasion was rather like the play of Hamlet without Hamlet, as Mr. Dyer, the chief actor, as he might be called, was unable to address the friends assembled. He was present, but his health has suffered very considerably through the strain of recent occurrences, and he is unequal just now to the ordeal of public speech. In token of sympathy with him and his fellow-witnesses in the cause of righteousness and morality, there was a goodly show of "editorial" brethren on the platform, and others sent letters of warm approval.

MR. ALFRED S. DYER.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Lambert, Weston & Son, Folkestone.)

Earnest prayer having been offered by Mr. Braithwaite, Dr. J. L. Maxwell, the chairman of the evening, noted the three main points that would be dealt with in succeeding speeches. First, there was the prosecution and imprisonment of three Indian missionaries for having exposed the way in which the Bombay Government contradicted in practice the profession it made in public as to the closing of the opium dens. Then there was the condemnation of Mr. Dyer for having inserted in a paper an article, written in good faith by three responsible men, and accepted as fact in good faith by Mr. Dyer. Besides that, there is the general question of the opium traffic itself, a question which admits of no real solution except the absolute surrender of its polluted and polluting gains. Dr. Maxwell asserted his conviction that the prosecution was involved a rank injustice, against which we must strenuously protest. The opium question hinges on the great export trade to China, with the fearful and unnumbered evils that flow from it to the Chinese people. The people of this country must see to see that a revenue which is only got by debauching another nation is one that cannot be maintained.

A vigorous little speech followed by Man Sukh Lal, an Englishman who had adopted this Indian name. The imposition by Great Britain of an indemnity on the Chinese in consequence of the opium wars, placed on our national escutcheon which can never be effaced. Coming to the question of the prosecutions at Bombay, the speaker described how Mr. Prautch and himself had at great pains ascertained the facts stated in the letter published by Mr. Dyer. They found there were bogus "clubs" all over Bombay, each retailing Government manufactured opium. He roundly accused the Bombay Opium Department of setting up a merely nominal prosecutor, while they in reality carried on the prosecution, with a determination to secure conviction. Because he had presumed, in his defence, to cross-examine the official witnesses, the magistrate explicitly imposed on him fifty rupees more by way of fine than his fellow prisoners got. Several incidents of the trial were recounted, showing the absence of impartiality on the part of the bench. One notable injustice done to Mr. Dyer was the sudden changing of the section of the Act under which all were arraigned, at the very moment of trial, so that his prepared defence was useless, and he had to defend himself without any preparation at all.

The next speaker was Mr. Robert Scott, who said the country sorely needed arousing on this question; he hoped that the three Bombay friends, with Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, would in large measure accomplish this. The Royal Commission was not desired by the anti-opium party, who regarded it as a device of statesmen so as to shelve the settlement of the question for a season. In commenting on the character of the official medical evidence submitted to the Commission, Mr. Scott was able to adduce an on the part of a medical official. Three years before the Commission, Surgeon Capt. Patrick

MR. MAN SUKH LAL.

Hehir, of the Bengal Army, wrote in a standard educational work, in the strongest terms setting forth the baneful effects of opium eating, and urging all never to begin the habit. In an article contributed to The Indian Medical Gazette last May, he wrote in a precisely opposite sense, asserting that the opium-eater in a competition, physical or mental, would defeat the non-opium eater!! These mutually destructive utterances were received by the audience with expressions of contempt.

The first part of the speech of Mr. A. W. Prautch was devoted to a vindication of Mr. Dyer's action in publishing the article which had been submitted to him. He had every reason to believe that the statements made in it were true, and to prosecute him for it was a most unjustifiable interference with the liberty of the press in discussing a moral question of great public importance. Mr. Prautch made some very damaging comments on the evidence taken before the Commission and published in the Blue Books.

ESPECIALLY REMARKABLE WERE THE FACTS

he cited as proving that the Indian Government had withheld such medical evidence as would be detrimental to the traffic. Another set of facts noticed went to show that the native cultivators of the opium produce the drug at a loss, in consequence of the low price paid them by the Government. Yet great pressure is brought to bear on them, amounting to compulsion, to make them continue the sowing of the poppy when they would gladly grow other and more necessary crops. The simple fact, therefore, seems to be, on Mr. Prautch's showing, that the Indian Government, for the sake of a paltry revenue, impoverish the native growers, spread ruin among their own people who eat the drug, and export to China that which debauches and sends to a dishonoured grave multitudes of a sister nation. Here, surely, we have reached the very acme of national iniquity.

An earnest protest against the whole traffic came from an Indian gentleman, Kanaga Ratnam, in the name of his native fellow-Christians and fellow-subjects of the Queen. He said the Indians were a loyal people, but the action of the governing powers is putting a severe strain on their loyalty. They have been accustomed to think that Englishmen naturally told the truth; since the giving of official evidence before the Commission, they are beginning to doubt it. England ought to be ashamed of itself in securing this revenue at such a cost to the people of India and China.

The lengthiest and most powerful speech of the evening was that of

DR. KATE BUSHNELL.

She said she was in no way alarmed at the official medical evidence given to the Commission. The medical profession has, she sarcastically remarked, a few representatives left in Europe, Africa, America, Australia, and even in Asia, who are not Indian officials, and who have long been the use and the character of opium. Some of these are of opinion that the Commission would have been better employed in submitting the official Indian doctors to certain opium experiments in their own persons. Dr. Bushnell held up to ridicule some of the so-called medical evidence that appears in the Blue Books. She was also extremely severe on official action in India in the way of ignoring and even condoning lawlessness. Referring to Lord Roberts, and his remark that she and Mrs. Andrew should have carried their complaints respecting the cantonment ordinances to headquarters, Dr. Bushnell expressed the calm conviction that if they had done so in all probability they would have shared the same fate as Mr. Dyer and his friends. If we are not to be at liberty to expose official connivance at the breaking of well-known laws, why, then, it comes to this, that we are GOVERNED ENTIRELY BY THE POLICE!

Are the British people prepared to submit to that? She maintained the inalienable right—nay, the Christian duty—of every citizen to call attention to flagrant breaking of the law. She would infinitely prefer to take her stand with Mr. Dyer and the others, and suffer the consequences, rather than be on the side of those who have nothing but excuse to offer with regard to such evils. Are we not calling down on ourselves the sentence of God on those of the Laodicean Church, of whom He said that because they were neither cold nor hot He would spew them out of his mouth? Dr. Bushnell related some appalling facts which she and her companion Mrs. Andrew had discovered as to the prevalence and immorality of the opium evil in Singapore and other parts of the East. In view of what they had seen with their own eyes and heard with their own ears, she regarded it as a reflection on human intelligence to tell them that the opium was a harmless thing. She avowed her belief that the officials in those parts deliberately calculated on the reluctance which they believed the people in this country have to speak out plainly on questions relating to social impurity. But we must deprive them of this plea; and for her part she affirmed without hesitation that the opium habit is often entered on in the East that it may increase the satisfaction of the user in his resorts to the brothel. In one of the places she and Mrs. Andrew visited in Singapore they found a list of forty Chinese girls, from the age of sixteen down to as low as seven years old,

VIRTUALLY BOUGHT AS SLAVES,

at the call of the smokers; and that under the direct recognition and sanction of the British Government. (At this point and at other periods of the meeting there were indignant cries of "Shame!") The time is coming, said the speaker, as she drew to a close, when the great danger to the British public is, not that they cannot get at the truth, but that they will close their ears to it, and will prefer a lie to the truth! It was supposed, years ago, when the Chinese had paid the indemnity money, unrighteously extracted from them after the opium wars, that the end of the matter had come. Probably the Bombay authorities thought, also, when they put Mr. Dyer and the others in prison, that that would be the end of the opium crusade in Bombay. No; let them understand that

THE OPIUM CRUSADE IS ONLY BEGINNING.

No question is ever settled till it is settled to the satisfaction of God. In this struggle things have now come to such a pass that our action as Christians must not depend upon any outward circumstances, on any rule of logic, or of information and investigation that can be made in any part of the world. We have but one thing to do—to rely upon our God, and to carry the war forward to victory.

The second Psalm was sung in Gujerati by Mrs' Man Sukh Lal while the collection was taken up.

Thereafter Rev. R. Wright Hay, of Dacca, moved the following resolution:—

That this meeting, having heard the statements of Mr. A. W. Prautch and Mr. Man Sukh Lal, in reference to the imprisonment of Mr. Alfred S. Dyer and themselves in Bombay, declares its conviction that in the course taken to call the attention of the Government of Bombay to the evasion of the law requiring the suppression of the opium dens, Mr. Dyer, Mr. Prautch, and Mr. Man Sukh Lal acted in perfect good faith, and purely for the public good, and instead of prosecution they deserved public commendation.

That this meeting desires to put on record its confidence in Mr. Dyer, Mr. Prautch, and Mr. Man Sukh Lal, and to assure them of its deep sympathy with them in their having had to undergo an imprisonment which was undeserved and unrighteous.

That this meeting warmly welcomes them to England, and earnestly desires that in their endeavours to place before the people of the United Kingdom the true character of our iniquitous opium trade, they may have the blessing of Almighty God, and be instrumental in promoting and greatly strengthening the determination on the part of the people of this country that, without adding to the taxation of the people of India, the manufacture and sale of opium by the Indian Government, except for medicinal use, shall be abolished.

That this resolution be sent to the Secretary of State for India, to the Viceroy of India, and to the Governor of Bombay.

In pressing home the resolution, Mr. Hay related some experiences of his own in the city of Dacca, when he made personal investigation as to the professed closing of opium dens. He found, just as in Bombay, that they were virtually open in another guise. In close proximity to places where the opium was sold he discovered sly resorts where numbers of men were found consuming the opium, and under its degrading and destroying influences. He wrote a memorandum of his discoveries at the time, and sent it to the India Office, but he had never heard that any official notice was taken of the matter. The resolution was vigorously and effectively seconded by Rev. J. G. Stuart, and was passed with acclamation.

In the course of a few earnest closing words, Mr. Broomhall expressed his utmost confidence in and affection for Mr. Dyer in the stand he has taken on this question in India. Mr. Broomhall also read part of a letter he had just received from Dr. Howard Taylor in China, describing the fearful havoc wrought by the opium habit in that part of China where he was sojourning at the time. Mr. Broomhall concluded with earnest prayer for the success of this effort on behalf of the nations of India and China, and for a blessing on all engaged in the work.

We give, in connection with this report of the welcome meeting, portraits of Mr. Dyer, Mr. Prautch, Man Sukh Lal, and Mr. Thos. Hudson, who was a co-signatory of the article in The Bombay Guardian, but who remains in India. Friends desiring to have fuller details of the Bombay prosecution, and what led up to it, should procure a penny pamphlet, "Suffering for the Truth," issued by Dyer Brothers, Paternoster-square, E.C.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.—A conference of delegates from about thirty branches of the Railway Mission was held in the Railway Mission Hall, Cambridge, on October 6, 7, and 8. The hall, which has recently been enlarged owing to the development of the work, now seats about 500 people, and was crowded out on several occasions during the conference. A striking and helpful address was given to men only on Sunday afternoon by Rev. Handley Moule. The delegates' report of work done at the various branches was full of encouragement.

COLOMBO OPIUM DENS.

Mr. George W. Tebbs, of the Ceylon and Indian General Mission, writing from Shiloh, Colpetty, Colombo, sends an account of a visit paid to Colombo opium dens, in company with a co-worker, his Singalese pundit, and Rev. T. Stockley, the new minister of the Cinnamon Gardens Baptist Church. They took with them a number of tracts and gospels for distribution; they were kindly received by the smokers, obtaining free access to the dens, although information by the men in charge was absolutely denied. Mr. Tebbs says:—

"We visited one of the 'Pettah' dens. This part of Colombo is solely composed of native bazaars. It is a sad fact that opium dens in Colombo can easily be distinguished by the unusually large crowd of natives assembled in the front—particularly so in the evening at the close of the day's work. At this place three men, who were Sivites, were sitting at the counter, and apparently were very busy dispensing the poison.

"The den was a fearful place. It would have made an excellent illustration for Dante's 'Inferno.' As soon as we passed from the street we entered a dark passage. At the far end there was a ladder, by which we had to cautiously climb to the den above. Making our way above, we were soon greeted by the insipid fumes from the pipes. We found that there was no ventilation, and no light save that given by the opium lamps. The room was so low that we had to stoop as we made our way to the groups of smokers. All told, there were about thirty men. In the midst of one group there was an old Singalese man, apparently about eighty years of age. As far as he could tell, he had been a smoker for about fifty years. His body was terribly emaciated. He seemed to be nothing more than a living skeleton. He was on the verge of the grave, and knew nothing whatever of the 'Beyond.' Here there was the same cry as in other places we visited. 'We would do without it if we could, but we cannot.' 'There is no hope for us now, we must have it until we die.' 'We thank you for visiting us, and for your sympathy with us, but it is too late to help us now. Please help the coming generation by destroying this bad thing right out of the land.' There was the same unbelieving and wondering expression upon their faces as we told them of One who could 'save to the uttermost.'

"I never thought there could be such hells upon earth until I saw them with my own eyes. I shudder to think of what must be eventually the fate of the nation who has brought to pass all this misery and woe unless she repent. We were glad to leave the place, but grieved to leave the souls as we emerged once more into daylight. There is a continual stream all day long entering and leaving the dens. Some go once, others twice, and even thrice, daily.

"We returned home sick at heart for these poor 'slaves,' and fully determined by the grace of God we would seek to hasten his kingdom by seeking the lost with Jesus in these dens of sin. Brethren, pray for us."

MR. McNEILL AND MELBOURNE JEWS.—Perhaps the most remarkable feature I witnessed in connection with the mission (says a resident in Melbourne) was the great interest manifested therein by the Jews. Even the Rabbi himself came and asked me if I would accompany him to one of the meetings, and he took his seat on the platform alongside our own ministers, desiring after the address to be introduced to Mr. McNeill, whom he thanked very cordially. Other Jews of high standing amongst us also attended the meetings, and I was informed that two Jewesses were converted one evening during the singing of a hymn by Mr. Burke.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

Last week two or three thousand clergymen isited Exeter to attend the Church Congress. The rincipal meetings were held in the Victoria Hall, hich had been fitted up so as to accommodate out 2500 persons. The Bishop of the diocese as president, and his opening address on Tuesday ternoon struck a very useful note for the guidance the subsequent gatherings. In some remarks on odern questionings, he declared that the Church ands, where she has ever stood, on "the Impregble Rock of Holy Scripture." The canonical oks, from Genesis to Revelation, are God's Word itten.

On the subject of reunion the Bishop said: It ems impossible that our Lord's intercession for s people "that they all may be one" should have en wholly unanswered during these more than hteen hundred years. Him the Father heareth ways. Perhaps, however, many have expected an swer here on earth diverse from that which was r Advocate's immediate will, and which has been lly vouchsafed. The unity of the Jewish Church symbolised by the seven-branched golden candleck, seven branches on one stem. The unity of e Christian Church is symbolised by the Son of an walking amid seven golden candlesticks. The carnation binds in one all who love our Lord sus Christ in sincerity; draw nearer each other. And secondly, we renid ourselves that our Lord's intercession for the ion of his saints is being progressively day by y fulfilled in those who pass within the veil. They gathered from all Christian communions under aven, but in the paradise of the holy dead no rtisanships divide them. They are one in the sence of the one Lord, theirs and ours. They ect one image. They sing one song. We see m not, and yet they are knit to us by countless es of spiritual kinship. Do we realise as we ght the centripetal unifying power of this fact? are, perhaps, too prone to look only on the urch Militant; an angel's ken would always include Church Triumphant. Still, we hail every apach to closer union here which is founded on th, and we thank God for those yearnings of rt after brotherly fellowship between Churchmen Nonconformists, which found such touching ression and recognition in the Lambeth Conence of 1888.

AS WE DRAW NEARER HIM,

Speaking of the Church of England as Protestant Evangelical, the Bishop advocated the consecra of deans as suffragan bishops, the compulsory rement of disabled clergymen, religious educa, and temperance. He proceeded: How can we ect to evangelise the world unless we are at the e time doing our utmost to perfect that Church rm which, thank God, has been so faithfully hopefully commenced? I do not see how we expect that the Christ, the Saviour of the world, fully bless us at home, while we leave outer darkness abroad, and carry on with forces gether incommensurate with its stupendous imance that missionary work which lies so near heart, and which demands the noblest offerings nen and means that our Church, as a Church, lay at his feet. If we were making disciples of ations, it would be our strongest Church defence, ghty magnet for home reunion, a signal to the of the earth, "The Lord is at hand."

fter discussion on Cathedral work and influence, great subject of Congress interest was "Biblical cism," on which addresses were delivered in Royal Public Rooms. The Bishop of Gibraltar ng read a paper which was not very decisive, Driver introduced "The Growth of the Old ament" in the language of the critical school, without any very startling statements. Dr. ley Leathes followed, maintaining the unity of oture, and in other ways championing the odox position. It is, he said, an obvious fact in the Old Testament, prophet, psalmist, and rian alike bear witness to a common national ry and a common national faith, to a common ion to God, to common hopes and aspirations, the uniform consciousness of failure and in- to realise them. Let the books of Moses be en when they may, it is undeniable that all the rs of the Old Testament are, so to say, per- with the consciousness of the Law of God. possession and knowledge of this law has made them what they are, and has differentiated them from all other writers. In the course of a debate, Rev. George Eusor warned against hasty conclusions. He urged consideration of the claims of the Lord Jesus, even as a man, for He lived about two thousand years than the critics nearer the times in dispute, and He was wholly without bias.

After papers on apologetics and doctrine, Rev. A. Armstrong Hall, in choice terms, maintained that if the alienated and indifferent are to be attracted and awakened it can only be by a Church that is herself awakened; and that must not merely tell them about Christian doctrine, but must be able to tell of a Christ whom their eyes have seen and their hands have handled, and at whose feet they have thrown themselves in obedience and submission.

On Wednesday questions of education and the care of the poor were discussed before deeply interested audiences; and other subjects were politics and commerce, the ethics of amusements. Mrs. Creighton, wife of the Bishop of Peterborough, spoke on the position of women and girls. In the course of her address she said: It seems to be true that the tone of society is given by women. If so, the question what they expect from men is of vital importance. Will they be content with conduct which in their presence alone leaves nothing to be desired? Let them speak out clearly on this point. To the truly repentant sinner we shall never shut our doors, though we have a right to demand that the repentance be true and lasting. But the man who does not honour all women is not fit to be a companion for our daughters, nor for our sons either. We must be very careful that we do not add to the temptations of men. The flirting ways, the

at balls, what are they but appeals to the lowest part of men's nature? The free and easy conduct, the jokes of a slightly questionable kind, the laughing assumption that a man must do many naughty things—these are only attempts to gain his attention by descending to his supposed lower level. We talk as if the vulgar hunt for husbands were a thing of the past, but a very little observation will convince us that it is not so. There are still girls who will do anything to attract men, mothers who are willing to ignore an unsatisfactory past in order to secure husbands for their daughters. We shall not be right on these points unless girls are allowed to have a sphere of their own, some other object in their life than doing the flowers and writing notes for their mother until they can find a husband. Marriage is a sphere, not an occupation. Our daughters must enter upon married life not because there is nothing else for them to do, but because they feel that married life offers to them the fullest opportunities for usefulness as well as for happiness. The attitude of society towards marriage, towards all questions of the relations of the sexes, is mainly determined by women. We women—young, middle-aged, and old alike—need a stronger conviction of the seriousness of our own individual lives. The influence which our sex gives us is already great. The through their purity, their innocence, their refinement, has been great. But the influence which we may have if we will add to these the consciousness of a serious purpose in our lives will be far greater. We do not wish to be sofa-cushions or even props to men; but we wish to work by their side, bringing each our own particular gifts to aid in that great work of the redemption of the world in which our Master suffers us to be his fellow-labourers.

On Thursday, Prebendary J. H. Crowfoot advocated auricular confession, and suggested the subject as a fitting one for the next great gathering of the Anglican Episcopate. The suggestion was hailed with applause, which Dr. Jessopp said was very ominous. He solemnly warned his younger brethren, before advocating sacramental confession, to study history. He further cautioned young women, as well as young clergymen, that it was a subject that they would deal with at their peril. Dean Lefroy admitted that the Church of England (as had been said) allowed the confessional, but he contended that it treated it as a medicine, and not as a food. To treat it as food would be to destroy its use. The manly, robust, vigorous character which prevailed in England was universally absent wherever sacramental confession was an order.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

The Autumnal Assembly of the Congregational Union was held last week at Liverpool, and attended by about twelve hundred delegates from all parts of England and Wales. Great George-street Chapel, with which the name of Dr. Raffles is so intimately associated, was the central place of meeting. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. Alfred Rowland, of Crouch End, the subject being "Things shaken, and things unshakeable in our faith and service" (Heb. xii. 27).

The address of the president, Rev. Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, delivered on Tuesday morning, was entitled "The Secularisation of the Church." It was a very useful and timely deliverance. The Doctor said: The Church of God is created by the life of God; it is a spiritual organisation existing for spiritual ends, and whenever from any cause its spiritual life and power are impaired, or subordinate aims and secular work are allowed to take the place of its spiritual mission among men, the Church is becoming, if it has not already become, secularised.

Justifying Nonconformity on spiritual rather than political grounds, the President enforced the true mission of the Church of Christ. Referring to the decay of Puritan tradition in family life, he observed: I know it is easy to say there was much that was unlovely and narrow in the Puritan home, that they went to a foolish extreme in their revolt from the world. It is easy to smile at some of the innocent things they denounced, and to say such a view of life as theirs was a partial and mutilated view; but at least this is certain, with all their narrowness these Puritans saved England from ruin. They were the source and strength of its most enduring greatness, of its deepest spiritual life; and to-day all that is best and purest in our national life, our national seriousness, our national righteousness, our Protestant faith, and above all, our English homes—fairest and sweetest of all the homes of the world—we owe to the influence of Puritanism in England, and to the Puritan interpretation of the command, "Love not the world, neither the things which are in the world."

Having spoken of reunion, Dr. Barrett said: There is a deeper and even more blessed work possible for us than the external consolidation of the Churches, and this is the revelation of the deeper inward and spiritual in God. "The unity of the Spirit" is the one hope, as it is the one foundation, of the future unity of the Church. The Life of God is the only force mightier than all our divisions, and as we draw nearer to Christ we shall find ourselves nearer to all our brethren in Christ. It is the faith, the charity, the holiness, the meekness, the goodness of the Church which will form the golden links of the new union of the future, and the humblest disciple may fashion some fragment of this living chain of love.

On the evening of the first day of the assembly there was a large public meeting, at which addresses were delivered on the Bible in the life of Free Churches. Dr. R. F. Horton spoke of the place of the Bible in personal life; Principal Cave dealt with its place in our national life; while Rev. J. Guinness Rogers spoke of its place in the Church. The last-named said his objection to the higher critics of the Bible arose chiefly because they did not take sufficiently into account what the Bible had been in the world, what it was—in the world, to individuals, and to Church-life. They could not take the Book as some question of language or literature; it was a history, and unless that was taken into account the critics could not claim to follow a scientific method. If believers could not explain all difficulties, they could afford to say, "Let us wait; the great fact is here, and it must be dealt with, that the Divinest thing in the world is the Bible, the Word of God."

On Wednesday morning Dr. Mackennal, of Bowdon, spoke on the nourishment of the spiritual life. He desiderated frankness as of supreme importance. Considered as a discipline, frankness is the way to truth; considered as an appeal to God, frankness is faith. Sincerity is the way to self-knowledge, and self-knowledge leads to repentance. If we are not afraid to know our defects, God's Spirit will transform our wants into desires. The doctrine which has been so much enforced of late, that absolute consecration is perfect sanctification, is true in the germ if only the consecration is sincere. Years ago, revolting from a doctrine of the inter cessorship of Jesus, which was too hard in its outlines, like an over-exposed photograph, he discontinued the formula in prayer "for Christ's sake." Now there were no words more dear to him. Spiritual life is the choicest gift God has to bestow on men.

Rev. W. Hardy Harwood having spoken on prayer and duty, Rev. J. Morley Wright called for more intense church meetings, and a greater use of the latent power which at present is untrained and unused in the churches. Dr. Fairbairn, in an address on the ministry, maintained that pastors should hand over to members of their congregation secretarial, financial, and other secular work, and become earnest students of God's message themselves. If the minister is to give his sermon straight out of the eternal he must live in the eternal; if church members make him a factotum, who has everything to do and is allowed to do nothing, how can he dwell with God till his soul be possessed of God, and his face radiant with God as he spoke to them of Him? If there is to be worship, there must be sermons straight from the Eternal.

"Prayer and Providence" was the subject of papers by Principals Scott (Lancashire Independent College) and Simon (United College, Bradford). There were meetings of the Church Aid, Colonial Missionary, and Total Abstinence Societies; also conferences on Church Extension, Irish Missions, Education, and subjects of social and semi-political interest.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

The visit of Rev. J. McNeill and his singing companion, Mr. J. H. Burke, to Victoria has come to an end. The results are yet to be manifested to their full extent; but enough is visible to make God's children give Him thanks for this time of refreshing and revival. The ministers of the various denominations were hearty in their welcome to the evangelists, and unwearying in their efforts to make the mission a success.

It is not needful to give a description of the evangelists or their methods, as they are well known to all your readers; but it will be of interest to give the impressions formed of them by those so far away from you. Perhaps this could not be better done than by giving a notice of the farewell meeting, and a copy of the address presented by the two Presbyteries of Melbourne; this is the opinion of able and competent critics, and ably sums up the work attempted and done.

Messrs. McNeill and Burke are now at work in Ballarat; then they will go for a week to Adelaide; then away to the northern colony of Queensland; then to Sydney, New South Wales; and finally to New Zealand, which will complete their Australian mission.

The writer can only add his personal testimony to the good that has been accomplished, and the greater things he yet hopes to see. "God bless John McNeill," is a prayer which will follow him from thousands of Australian hearts as long as God spares him to work.

FAREWELL MEETING.

On Friday afternoon, August 31, the ministers and elders of the Presbyteries of Melbourne North and South met for the purpose of saying farewell to Mr. McNeill and Mr. Burke. Afternoon tea having been partaken of, the chair was taken by Rev. Dr. Robinson, Moderator of the General Assembly, who briefly stated the object of the meeting. Short addresses were given by the Mayor and the Hon. R. Richardson, Minister of Railways, expressing their personal appreciation of the Mission that had been held, and their feeling that it had proved a blessing to all sections of the community. Rev. H. B. Macartney spoke on behalf of the executive committee, Rev. D. S. McEachran as representing the Presbytery of Melbourne North, and Rev. J. Meiklejohn as representing the Presbytery of Melbourne South. The following address was read by Mr. Meiklejohn:—

To Rev. John McNeill.

Dear Sir,—We, the members of the Presbyteries of Melbourne North and South, wish to convey to you, on the eve of your departure from the Colony of Victoria, an expression of brotherly feeling and devout thankfulness for your visit. Your labours during the four weeks you have been with us have been very abundant, and we are grateful to God, the fountain of all blessing, for the manifest tokens of success that have accompanied them. We have marked with admiration your special gifts as an evangelist, and the evidence you have given of their entire consecration to the Master's service.

Your work in Melbourne has not only been helpful to many individuals, but its effect, we believe, has been deep enough and wide enough to influence for good the corporate life of the community. Coming, as you did, at a time when, through a prolonged period of commercial depression, the hearts of many were weighted with disappointment and care, your clear and earnest declaration of the truth of the Gospel has helped to awaken new hope, and to beget that spirit of good cheer which is itself a source of strength.

The meetings held for business men in Melbourne Town Hall have been a marked feature of the work, and the large and attentive audiences that have assembled day after day betoken a deepening conviction of the reality of the things that are unseen and a renewed interest in them. Not only the enormous crowds that have attended the meetings, but the unusually long and frequent notices of the addresses in the daily papers, have afforded to many an additional evidence of the Gospel being still a living force, and capable, as of old, of moulding the character and shaping the destiny of men and nations. Your brethren in the ministry have shared in the blessing, and found a stimulus through your labours.

That God may safely keep you and continue to make you more abundantly useful; that your bow may abide in strength, and your arms be made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob—is our hope and prayer.

The address was signed by Rev. A. C. Smith, Moderator of the Presbytery of Melbourne South, and by Rev. James Ballantyne, its clerk; by Rev. A. Yule, Moderator of the Presbytery of Melbourne North, and by Rev. T. W. McGregor, M.A., its clerk; and by Rev. J. Meiklejohn, convener of the presentation committee. It was beautifully illuminated, bound in album form, and contained views of the Scots' Church, Dr. Bevan's church, the Town Hall, and the Exhibition building.

At the same time Mr. Meiklejohn handed to Mr. Burke a handsome album, containing several large views of Melbourne and the scenery of Victoria, and in doing so testified to the splendid help rendered to the Mission by Mr. Burke's singing, and to the way in which he had won the affection and esteem of the large representative choir that had assisted him.

Mr. McNeill made a characteristic and stirring speech in reply, gratefully acknowledging the abundant help he had received from the ministers of the different churches in Melbourne and suburbs. Mr. Burke also made a feeling reply. The proceedings were marked by much enthusiasm; the hearty appreciation of Mr. McNeill's and Mr. Burke's services shown by the ministers present was quite equalled by the warm testimony of such men of business as the Minister of Railways and the Mayor of the city as to the effect of the Mission in the domains of commerce, trade, and politics.

LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.

The annual report of the London Wesleyan Methodist Mission is a very readable pamphlet, containing as frontispiece a portrait of Rev. Walford Green, treasurer of the Mission and President of Conference. It thankfully records continuous progress throughout the entire Mission. Statistics are given showing the membership at each branch, in each case there being a gratifying increase. The total membership is 4390 (increase 312), with 1161 on trial, and in addition 960 meeting in junior society classes.

Of the East-end Branch Rev. Peter Thompson writes:—"The spirit in which all our workers have laboured is beyond praise. Their noble zeal and transparent unselfishness—the most powerful solvent of the selfishness of other people—have left a very deep impression on the minds of the people of the neighbourhood. We encourage all our members to take up some definite Christian work, and the response we get—even from those who can ill afford time and strength—in house-to-house visitation, sick visiting, etc., is most gratifying. Our open-air campaign has been enthusiastically maintained. St. George's holds a late Sunday evening service in the Commercial-road, and a Monday evening service in the East-end Market, Watney-street. Crowds of earnest listeners come round us. Stepney Temple has excellent meetings in front of its capital premises. The "Lycett" gathers splendid audiences round its steps in the Mile-end Road; whilst Old Mahogany Bar, in Leman-street and the Sailors' Home, and Wapping, among its artisans' dwellings, always find appreciative congregations. Earnest seekers after God very frequently follow our mission workers into the chapels and find salvation."

Rev. J. E. Wakerley, superintendent of the Central Branch, says of the work at Clerkenwell:—"Conversions have been constant, and, in not a few cases, notorious. Men and women who were most abandoned and dissolute have been greatly changed, for they have become 'a new creation in Christ.' The very remembrance of wonderful rescue brings tears of gratitude and triumph to our eyes. Secularists, drunkards, gamblers, and Sabbath-breakers have become most devoted and attached members of the body of Christ. It has been our aim at once to enlist all new converts in the service of Christ and their fellows. Our people have sought the lost in order to their salvation. Into the highways and hedges—the lanes and alleys—they have gone with Christian zeal, and have brought under the influence of the Mission pulpit many who for years previously had no acquaintance but that of the outside with places of worship. The social side of our Mission has been vigorously prosecuted. Dire poverty has been relieved, the sick and friendless have been nursed and comforted, wayward wandering boys sought out and sent home to parents who were almost heartbroken. Whole families have been returned from London, to which they came expecting pleasure and fame, but found despair, stifled cries, and vanishing dreams, to the country homes to begin life anew."

The West Branch is in charge of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who says:—"The work of the sisterhood, under the direction of my wife, has gone on steadily. Many of the sisters are the leaders of large classes, all help in the inquiry room, and in dealing with special cases. The mothers' meetings, the girls' clubs, the registry office, the workhouse teas, the work among the police and the soldiers, the social relief department, and the numerous branches of the medical department, including district visiting, the Crèche, the convalescent home, and the home for the dying are all in full vigour. Two of the sisters have lately tried an interesting experiment. They have gone to reside in a small flat in an immense block of artisans' dwellings in the midst of the Soho district. They are living literally right among the people. If the scheme fulfils our expectations, we hope from time to time to place some of our older and more experienced sisters in the midst of the dense masses of population in the poorest districts. I cannot help expressing a deep regret that I am compelled to spend so much of my time in collecting money for the work. God, in his infinite mercy and condescension, has given me great opportunities of preaching the Gospel to thousands of persons in West London. Oh, how I long that it were possible for me to give the whole of my time, energy, and thought to that highest and most urgent work!"

Rev. J. H. Hopkins, of the South Branch, writes:—"Our work amongst the young is a most hopeful feature of every branch of the Mission. We have three Sunday-schools, with nearly 1500 scholars. All the schools are most efficiently conducted by a devoted staff of voluntary workers, and we find them, indeed, the nurseries of the Church. In such a poverty-stricken neighbourhood as ours there are crowds of children outside any Sunday-schools about whose welfare we have been solicitous. On Sunday nights we have provided separate services for them on our school premises, and with the aid of the magic lantern and bright and hearty singing we have succeeded in reaching some hundreds of them. Those who conduct these services have been greatly cheered with the evidences they have had of the influence of the simple story of the Cross upon the lives of these outcast children. In every branch of the Mission we have great cause for thankfulness, and brighter prospects of greater success. We often sow in tears, but we are permitted also to reap in joy."

Then there are the Leysian Hall and Grove (Southwark) Missions, both of them doing excellent work. The various branches have scores of adjunct operations, promoting spiritual growth and education, thrift and bodily health. Devoted nurses and volunteer helpers make up a little army of workers whose labours, it is gratifying to know, have by no means been in vain in the Lord. Copies of the report may be had from the secretary of the Mission, Rev. W. D. Walters, Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C.

THE ANTI-LYNCHING COMMITTEE.—A meeting of the Executive of the Anti-Lynching Committee was held last week at the house of Mrs. Clayden, 1 Tavistock-square. The hon. secretary stated that since the letter and proclamation of the Governor of Alabama had appeared in the papers, money in support of the movement and letters of adhesion to the committee had been received. The following resolution was passed: "That this committee has received with great satisfaction from the Governor of Alabama a copy of a proclamation issued by him denouncing in the strongest terms the lynching of two negroes which took place in his State in August last, and offering rewards for the conviction of the offenders."

POLYTECHNIC SERVICES.

A new departure has been made by this popular nstitution in the way of extending its spiritual use-ulness to a degree proportionate to its influence as social and educational centre, and Mr. Josiah Nix, ate of the West London Mission, has been en aged as evangelistic secretary. The Princess's Theatre has been secured for Sunday evenings uring the winter months, when Gospel services of bright and attractive order will be held, combin-ng hearty singing with the aid of lantern views lustrating the preacher's subject.

The first of these occasions was held on Sunday vening last, when the capacious building was filled overflowing, so that long before the hour ap-ointed for the meeting to begin, the outer gates ad to be closed to a seething crowd pressing for dmission.

Mr. Quinton Hogg, as president of the Polytech-ic, briefly explained the object of the meeting. dmitting the importance of educational and phy-cal training such as the institute provides, he never-heless claimed "far and away the first place" for piritual instruction, to meet the highest needs of the uman heart. He hoped, too, that this movement ight prove a training ground in Gospel effort for a rge number of young men, so that they might be le to hold similar services in other parts of London.

It was with eager faces that the crowd looked down pon the darkened stage, and when the idea was lly grasped that it was distinctly a religious service e utmost decorum prevailed, as Mr. Nix unfolded e old-time yet present-day history of the Prodigal n. The subject was especially well chosen, for very large proportion of the audience were en of all ages, and his straight hits anent e temptations and snares which beset the e of a great city were very telling—whether dressed to the all-knowing youth of twenty-one, e more cautious man of forty, or the matured agenarian. That "the far country is easily ached, because the way is all downhill" was an iom easily proved; various means of "spending "—money, strength, respectability—were depicted th realistic fidelity, but only to point to that eat love of God to man in the gift of his only gotten Son, by whom alone a pardon and a lcome could be secured.

That the lantern is becoming increasingly a power-ally in Gospel work cannot be denied, and we ieve in impressing the eye as well as the ear with le truth. But we cannot help questioning the priety of thus depicting the sufferings of our rd. Thankful as we are to learn of a definite aversion here and there apparently traceable to s representation, we believe that the agony of rit which our Saviour endured so far exceeded physical suffering as to render any attempt even llustrate the latter pictorially to be very far from irable. In every other respect the service was culated, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, to bring ne to the audience the subtle power of the pter vanquished by the almighty saving and ping power of God.

Solos—"The Ninety and Nine" and "When I vey the wondrous cross"—were impressively dered by Madame Reichelmann, and an inquiry eting followed the lantern service. We commend se services to the prayerful and personal interest ur readers.

LORD RADSTOCK IN BIRMINGHAM.

Prayer was asked in The Christian for blessing he visit of this devoted servant of Christ to our . Grateful praise is returned for blessing defi-ly given. On the Sundays Lord Radstock ad-ssed the men gathered in the church and mission ices in the schools at night. There was decided sing in both. Amongst the men—some of them agged apparel, who knew what suffering physi-y and spiritually meant—on the second Sunday power of the Lord was graciously manifest as after man rose up to confess his need of Christ willingness to accept Him.

he drawing-room meetings for the upper classes also been attended with good. We are grate-or such men as Mr. R. Cadbury, who threw open all for the proclamation of the truth and Lord s, showing most hearty sympathy. To believers s message has come with power, illustrated has been by the grace displayed in and through ervant. G. O. West.

ZENANA MISSION FAREWELLS.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

The Society for Promoting Female Education in the East held its farewell meeting on Tuesday week at Exeter Hall, in connection with the departure for India and China of a number of lady-workers. These were Misses Johnstone and Eyre, who are returning to Hong Kong, Miss Bland to the Agra Zenana Mission, and Miss Eger, M.D., to the Mooltan Medical Mission. Miss Baker, a new worker, is also going to Hong Kong for the first time.

Rev. A. Brooke-Webb, who presided, spoke of the excellent work already accomplished by the ladies about to return to the East. Miss Johnstone had laboured for twenty years in Hong Kong with great success. Miss Baker was now going out as Miss Johnstone's assistant. Miss Eyre, he regretted to say, was ill, and it was not certain that she would be able to leave with the party for Hong Kong. Miss Bland, who had worked in the missionary field for sixteen years, was also in weak health, and her departure would consequently be delayed. He congratulated Miss Eger on having taken her degree, and mentioned that during the last year the number of attendances at her dispensary at Mooltan exceeded eleven thousand.

Miss Bland gave a touching account of her work in Agra. In spite of physical weakness, she expressed the hope that she would be able to go forth again in a few months. The unusual heavy rains experienced recently in India had damaged their schools and hindered their work. She invited fresh workers to come forward and take the places of those who were compelled to give up the work.

Rev. Ll. Lloyd, Foochow, said that he had seen this Society's work at two or three centres, and the C.M.S. owed a great debt to it for sending ladies to take charge of schools in Foochow. The benefits which they reaped from those schools were very great. Referring to Hong Kong, he mentioned that one of the first persons he met there was Miss Johnstone, of whose work he spoke most highly. He had seen the school of which she was in charge, and the value of it in such a place as Hong Kong was enormous. Addressing the missionaries, Mr. Lloyd referred to Christ sending forth the seventy disciples, and said that they might have Christ even more fully with them than those disciples had. The disciples went away from Christ, but they, the missionaries, had an ever-present Christ. When the seventy disciples came back, there was only one thought in their minds, and that was of success. If missionaries were inclined to dwell too much upon the success of their work, they should remember what Christ said: "Rejoice not that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven."

CHURCH ZENANA MISSIONS.

On Wednesday the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society held its dismissal in the Queen's Hall. The following ladies are, for the most part, returning to their fields where they have already laboured, although some are new labourers:—Misses Hensley, Kent, C. Dickson, Scott, Brown, F. Leslie, M. Leslie, Hall, E. Chambers, Gore, M. Hall, Davies-Colley, and G. Davies-Colley, who are for the North India Mission; Misses Bartlett, Dixie, Mason, Catchpool, Hobbs, Richardson, Dickson, Barthorp, Mitcheson, Werthmüller, Houghton, Brook, White, and E. Brenton-Carey, for the Punjab and Sindh Mission; Misses Oxley, Ashwin, Ewart, Amy Lillingston, and Potter, for the South India Mission; and Misses H. Newcombe and Wedderspoon, for the China Mission.

Sir Charles U. Aitchison, who presided, observed that the war in China was presenting obstacles to their work, and the committee would have to consider their instructions to the lady they were about to send out to Foochow. Although the missionaries of to-day had not the miraculous gifts of the Apostles, they had other advantages. The ends of the world were now open to them, and the means they had in hand were sufficient if used in faith. The best doctors, the best linguists, in fact the best of every gift, should be yielded to this service.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe then addressed the missionaries from Gen. xxiv. The missionaries were going forth as the slaves of God, and it would be helpful for them to remember that. They were also going forth as stewards entrusted with all their Master's riches and power. It was an awful and yet a grand responsibility to be thus endowed to represent their Lord. If they were to be successful they must remember that it was for their Master they went. They should remember, too, that if prayer was the right hand of their work, praise was the left hand. And when God brings a heathen woman to his feet they should never forget to thank Him in the presence of the saved soul.

ZENANA AND BIBLE MEDICAL MISSION.

On Tuesday afternoon (16th), farewell was said, at a large gathering of the friends of this Society, to twelve ladies going out for the first time as missionaries to India, and one who is returning after furlough at home. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and, after a few opening words, called upon the Bishop of Honduras, who addressed the young labourers in earnest and inspiring terms from the motto, "Christ for all, all for Christ."

Miss Baumann, one of the most successful and experienced Zenana missionaries, gave an account of the women of India, and of the joy of working among them. Difficulties there certainly are, but one forgets these in the joy of seeing precious souls won to Christ. If young Christian girls only knew the privilege of such service, surely many would come forward to offer themselves. Workers are sorely needed. Who will come to the help of the women of India?

Miss Cornall, L.R.C.P. and S. Edin., who is going to the Lucknow Hospital, urged the medical necessities of her sisters in India, and reminded her hearers that only women can reach these secluded women.

Other sisters of the party bore brief, bright testimony to their joy in going forth to this service. There were, in addition to the two just mentioned:—Misses Catt, Hayward, and Kenward for Gorakhpur; Miss Crawfurd Hill for Lahore; Miss Harris for Bombay; Miss M. Smith for Benares; Misses M. Hill and Price for Jaunpur; and Misses Sims, Thompson, and Willison for Malegaon (Western India). Rev. A. R. Cavalier introduced these workers, indicating the field they are to occupy.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe, in giving the valedictory address, sought to press specially the importance of being "ready" at any time for anything or any service the Lord may appoint. There is a readiness demanded in view of the return of our Lord, but the readiness for service is something different. God is ready to pardon, that is, He is longing and waiting to pardon; so our readiness, being, as it were, the reflex action of his readiness, implies a waiting willingness to hear and do whatsoever He saith to us.

This the speaker illustrated by the example of Paul (see Rom. i. 15; 2 Cor. xii. 14; 2 Tim. iv. 6), avowing himself ready to preach, ready to suffer, and ready to die. So must the believer be ready for whatever the Lord may please to send. Be it ours under every circumstance and in response to every call to be able by grace to say, "Ready, sir; aye ready." Our Master is ready; shall not his servants for his name's sake be ready to witness, to endure, and, if need be, to die that He may be glorified?

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

Whilst, as an association, we have to consider the wider and more national questions affecting our social life, we have also to consider the narrower, but not less important, domestic claims of our Preventive and Medical Homes. If the character of the work done in these homes were more fully understood, everyone interested in the rescue of the fallen would do their utmost towards their support. Ladies living within easy distance might visit the Preventive Home at Hackney, or the Medical Home at Camden Town, and thus learn to know the inmates and their needs. On Tuesday, December 4, we are hoping to hold a meeting for ladies only, at the Medical Home, and we shall gladly welcome all visitors. We are constantly entreated to do something to alter the state of the streets, and these preventive measures are certainly the most effective remedies. We not only take from the streets those who have fallen, but we endeavour to save those who would otherwise very soon swell the ranks. Notwithstanding the interesting and almost unique character of our Medical Home we shall have seriously to consider whether the work must not be discontinued unless funds are forthcoming. We trust that, constrained by the love of Him who said "I was sick and in prison and ye visited Me," the readers of The Christian will respond to this plea and "minister unto Him." Communications to be addressed to the Secretary, 267, Strand, London, W.C. S. L.

BLACKGANG MISSION, I.W.

Since the lamented death of Mr. Christopher W. Smith, which occurred nearly two years ago, this Mission has been nobly and successfully maintained by his widow, whose devotion and singleness of heart have won the esteem of all who know her. This was evident at the Harvest Festival recently held, when the hall was well filled with an enthusiastic audience, nearly all of whom have been gathered to Christ through the Mission.

The meeting was presided over by Rev. H. J. Crouch, of Hersham, Surrey. Mr. Newman and Captain Mitchell gave addresses full of spiritual stimulus. Many of the members also gave brief testimonies, which were interspersed with prayer and praise.

The work is still carried forward with much vigour, and during the year precious spiritual fruits have been gathered in. A well-attended Band of Hope and Sunday-school indicate the interest shown in the young, while believers' meetings and Bible-classes, in addition to the regular Sunday services, point to the provision made for the adults. Mrs. Smith's hands and heart are full of the work, to which she has given her life, her all. She earnestly desires to go out into the villages around, as formerly, to tell out the message of God's grace, but neither time nor strength will admit of this. If some zealous Christian, with both means and leisure, could assist our sister, the good work might be greatly extended.

MEN-OF-WAR'S-MEN.

The Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society is doing good work. As Miss Weston said lately: "It is not flashy work, but it is a very much more important work than if it were flashy. It is solid, deep, and lasting, and many marines, and seamen too, have told me it has been through these quiet and earnest talks on board their ships, with some of the readers of this Society, that they have been led to decide to live the Christian life. Afterwards the results have been shown by these men becoming bright lights among their shipmates, and leading many of them to the cross of the Saviour. The work of this Society ought to be helped forward very much more than it ever yet has been."

The organising secretary is Mr. W. A. Mount, 17, Stonor-road, West Kensington, W., who, in a little paper now before us, says:—

"The majority of Her Majesty's ships are too small to carry chaplains; hence thousands of men have but scant opportunities of receiving religious instruction, whilst exposed for years together to exceptional temptations in heathen lands; and, further, a vast amount of 'infidel literature' gets circulated among the men, and demands strenuous efforts to counteract it.

"For nearly thirty years this Society was maintained principally by officers and their friends, and increased the number of its readers from one to fourteen, but this is still far short of the requirement.

"Through its agency, among others, great improvement has taken place, and numerous expressions of gratitude for the work done by them have been received; but the necessity of considerably increasing the present number of readers is strongly impressed on the committee."

PALESTINE EXPLORATION FUND.

The new Quarterly Report contains several items of exceptional interest. Herr Baurath von Schick, writing from Jerusalem, reports that the so-called "Gordon's Tomb" at the Skull Hill, has been sold to an English association, and is about to be enclosed with a wall. The "Tombs of the Judges" and neighbouring ground are to be sold, and the hope is expressed that the site may be saved from the operations of the speculative builder. In consequence of the increase of population, and of the railway traffic, some streets in the city have become so overcrowded with pedestrians that the passage of camels with burdens has become almost impossible. Hence, it has been decided to exclude camels from such streets. The Jewish community of Jerusalem steadily increases; about forty families from Bokhara have recently settled on the north-west of the city, and are about to build a village.

A description is given of a beautiful mosaic pavement with Armenian inscription recently discovered near the Damascus Gate. Dr. F. J. Bliss reports on continued excavations on the Rock Scarp of Zion; and Mr. E. Davis begins a thoughtful study of the development of the Hebrew alphabet in the light of the Siloam and later Palestinian inscriptions. (A. P. Watt & Son, Hastings House, Norfolk-street, W.C.)

HOME VISITING WORK.

Mr. James Sharpless, in his new report of visitation work in East London, says:—"I have several godly widows on my list, whom I regularly leave a small weekly allowance, kindly sent by lady friends for the purpose. I know of no better way to invest money. It will return with good interest by way of the widow's intercession to God on your behalf. I only wish it was in my power to add to the list, as there are many such cases needing assistance. A beloved brother in Christ, who is now with the Lord, used to help several widows, to whom he sent a weekly allowance for years. When he died all was given up. I shall never forget their grateful expressions for his kindness to them, and their grief at his departure.

"What numbers there are shut out from the world, existing in back rooms and out-of-the-way places in a state of misery and want. Some have a little self-respect left, which forbids them making their condition known, hence the need of home visitation. Coals and bread have been supplied to many families during the most trying part of the year. In some cases of sickness a little money, and meat for nourishment, is given. There is one person these poor people dread more than anyone else, that is the rent collector. It is the chief struggle of their lives to keep up the rent, and to do that they have constantly to take some paltry article to the pawnshop. Of course, some suffer through their own fault, not being careful when in work to put by a few shillings. Others never have the chance to save, because their earnings are so small.

"I am visiting a dear godly woman, who for years has been totally blind. In her younger days she had been very active in the Lord's work, and was used of God in leading souls to the Lord Jesus, but now her active work is done, she being thoroughly prostrate with a complication of bodily ailments. She delights her soul in the good things of the Gospel. I often think how much is lost by those who never pay a visit to the Lord's afflicted ones, whom God often makes a channel of blessing to others. I have frequent calls to address meetings and to give Bible readings in connection with other places, both among the young people and adults. It is a pleasure to be able to render assistance to brethren who are pressed with a multitude of engagements. I might enumerate many other ways, whereby the Lord makes use of feeble instrumentality. I should be thankful for any left-off clothing (male or female), as many are not able to replace their garments when worn-out. Money sent shall be specially applied as the donors may wish—to the work generally, or for relief; if left optional the needs of each will be consulted."

The address of Mr. Sharpless is 14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E.

AMERICAN NOTES.

Arkansas has voted no licence. The majorities in favour of licence were confined to the larger towns and cities, but in much the larger part of the State no liquor can be lawfully sold.

A monastic order has been instituted in the Episcopal Church at New York by Bishop Potter. It is the second institution of the sort in that denomination, the first having been formed eight years ago.

Mr. Merton Smith has been labouring at Belvidere, Ill. The great interest taken in the meetings was evidenced by the immense crowd in attendance at the opening services in Union Hall. Great good is bound to result from his efforts.

The pastors of the Reformed, Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist churches of Hackensack, New Jersey, are preparing for vigorous evangelistic work during the coming winter. They have invited Dr. L. W. Munhall, of Philadelphia, to hold a series of services in Hackensack.

The thirty-seventh anniversary of the Fulton-street Noon Prayer Meeting was recently held in New York. The venerable founder, Mr. Jeremiah C. Lanphier, expected to be present; but he found himself too feeble to attend. Mr. Lanphier's successor, Mr. Charles F. Cutter, gave an interesting account of the work the prayer-meeting is now doing.

Major Cole has closed some successful Gospel meetings in Clinton, Mo. The five pastors of the Presbyterian, Cumberland Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal South and Baptist churches co-operated very heartily in the work, which has resulted in many conversions, besides the general quickening of Christian life among church members.

Rev. D. M. Stearns, pastor of the Reformed Episcopal Church, Germantown, Pa., conducts fifteen weekly Union Bible-classes, which are variously located in some principal cities and towns, viz., New York, Brooklyn, Harrisburg, Wilmington, Easton, Philadelphia, West Philadelphia, Allentown, Bethlehem, Stroudsburg, Belvidere, York, Baltimore, and Germantown. Mr. Stearns follows the topics of the International Sunday-school Lessons.

In the American Independent of October 4 there is a symposium on "The Drink Evil," which seems to be as burning a question in the States as it is in this country. There is a strong consensus of opinion as to the demoralising power of the saloon, and various remedies are advocated. General Neal Dow, of course, extols prohibition pure and simple. A resident in Massachusetts tells of the large success of the local-option law in force in that State.

A great anti-gambling crusade has been launched in Chicago. As a result of this several raids have been made upon certain notorious places, and in spite of the interference of justices of the peace and the indifference of the police, the gamblers have had such a hold in Chicago that it has been almost impossible to shake it. But the Civic Federation has made an attempt at the deliverance of the city from the grip of the gambler. The City Hall gave no aid, but the courts of record did, and the result is that gambling has ceased. The ire of the law-abiding and respectable citizens is fully aroused, and if gambling is not speedily suppressed by the powers an appeal will be made to the people and the legislature.

The city of Scranton, Pa. (says a correspondent of the New York Observer), has been blessed for ten days with the presence and the preaching of that highly-honoured servant of Christ, D. L. Moody. He came to Scranton almost unannounced, and by many he was unexpected. But when he left us multitudes were grieving over his departure. While among us he preached twice every day, and occasionally thrice. He is the same earnest, zealous, uplifting, inspiring man of God that he was when I first met him twenty-five years ago. One grand feature in connection with the campaign was the services conducted by four or five co-labourers in tents. These tents were erected in well-selected localities, where the masses could easily reach them, and they have been crowded at almost every service. Messrs. Whittle, Bliss, and Schiverea, as preachers, and Messrs. Stebbins and Weedin, as singers, carried on this work for several weeks, and the tent services were continued for a month longer. All classes and conditions of people have flocked to the meetings, and many have expressed a desire to live henceforth a Christian life.

WOMEN AND OPIUM.—Miss Dwarkabai G. Lalaj of Bombay, and Miss Marian E. Dyer, recently on the staff of The Bombay Guardian, spoke at a meeting of women at the Friends' Meeting House, St. John's-street, London, on Monday afternoon, on "India's women, and how they are wronged by the opium traffic." A resolution condemning that traffic was unanimously adopted.

CHILDREN AND SERVANTS.

My Dear Sir,—I have noticed with satisfaction e prominence lately given in The Christian to veral points bearing on family life and the deal-gs of Christians with employés, etc. Very, very uch evil is constantly being wrought, more from ant of thought than want of heart.

Like every other question, this has its two sides, d if the powers that be should consider their pendents and juniors, so also should the two latter nsider their employers, parents, influential friends, whatever name stands in their own particular se for the individual person or persons they feel emselves to be junior to. This latter side, hower, is one to which personal advantage is a power-l stimulant, and therefore is more often kept in nd than the former.

The question of recreation in Christian homes is e which can hardly be over-estimated, and which ems to be more thoroughly neglected by Christian rents than almost any other point. Parents cant be expected to know all about every subject ich children may inquire into, but a careful and ayerful study of one's children and their tastes will on show the direction of each one; and if one takes such awful things as electric batteries and chemi-s, and begins to talk about voltaic and frictional ctricity, Leyden jars, and induction coils, and to ghten you by nearly blowing himself up with phur and chlorate of potash, there is no choice you, if you would enjoy his fullest confidence, to make a study of, at any rate the elements of se sciences. Do not check the first enthusiasm the delights of science by telling your son that h things are "too dangerous," or "smell too ty," or are too expensive for mere child's play.

Surely it is not out of place to call attention to the ge number of advertisements for married people hout encumbrance, which is really inhuman.
cumbrance is not the word used in God's Book for arrows of a man's quiver, the olive-branches, and
"of such is the kingdom of heaven." If chil-n are publicly spoken of as encumbrances, how one be surprised that many feel themselves to be

Our servants and employés do not want a idlin and high-flown sentimental kind of hobby-ring of themselves and their feelings; they want ting as human beings; and we, in the mode-ly well-off and higher circles, to whom God has usted some small portion of wealth, very often in a grasping and miserly fashion to our undersgs, and in a very un-Christlike way. What will money be in another century? It may be many py and saved souls, among which our "children up and call us blessed," and our servants have oed the "Well done" of our Master to his ser-
t; and it may be mischief found for unemployed ds by Satan.—Yours very truly,

Fleur de Lys.

THE GOSPEL IN MEXICO.

Mr. Eglon Harris, of Orizaba, continues to send interesting and encouraging accounts of his work in Mexico. His printing press is already at work. He writes:—"There is some stir in opposition, but our hearts are gladdened to find that on all sides the monthly papers are being read, instead of burned as the priests demand. Three priests met Brother Almaillo one day as he was distributing tracts, and among other words used in their rage were, 'Where's this going to end?' 'We must put a stop to this.' Our brother replied, 'Senores, the work is God's. To stop the spread of the Gospel, you will have to fight against God. If we die, God will raise up others to fill our place in his service.' The priests then showed their increased rage by tearing up the tracts, which in the conversation they had received with a request to read.

"Our greater responsibility to work among the Indians has been urged. As far as I am able, I try to fulfil my debt to them, but at present I think we can best reach individuals by working in such a town as this, where they come daily in hundreds from scores of villages. No one who has not lifted up Christ's banner in a fanatical Roman-Catholic-Pagan village can imagine what it is. I would be glad to do more, but I think the Lord will send other labourers before we ought to attempt more."

The English correspondent of the work is Mr. John Mercer, 143, Dickenson-road, Rusholme, Manchester.

THE FLOODS AT MOOSONEE.

Some time ago you kindly inserted a portion of Bishop Newnham's letter, describing the sad disaster which in April befel the Mission house at Moose Fort, James Bay, Moosonee. May I summarise the damages caused by the extraordinary flood, and appeal to readers of your paper for generous help? The greater part of winter provisions, meat and kerosene, was destroyed; out of several hundred feet of fence only a few feet were left standing. Boxes of clothes, Indian Prayer-books and Testaments, were soaked and practically useless.

Such heavy losses in a spot 700 miles from Montreal are sad enough. But in addition to much extra labour and expense, is to be deplored the postponement of many visits which the Bishop had hoped to pay during the summer. Yet out of seeming evil good may come. The present five-roomed log-house, which has lasted fifty years, has long been considered unsuitable and dangerously near the river. The late Bishop Horbin, ever ready to endure hardness for Christ's sake, often wished for a larger and safer mission house. "I do not want," says the present Bishop, "a Palace or even a Bishop's court—only a house free from the annual peril to life and property—a house where the Bishop may be given to hospitality, and entertain his missionaries on their infrequent visits, without having to put them on sofas in rooms they must vacate in the day." I sincerely hope that some will respond to this appeal from "the Great Lone Land." Help will be gratefully received by Mr. Malaher, 20, Compton-terrace, Islington, or by myself. Alfred J. Begbie.

IRISH NOTES.

The Cork Methodist Association, whose membership now stands at 369, added forty-six new members to its roll last year, and is carrying on an active work.

The Dublin Methodist City Mission has just added two new agencies to its undertakings, namely a girls' parlour and a boys' club, which promise well.

A reading-room and library have been opened in Portadown, in connection with the Christian Endeavour Society, whose membership in the town now numbers 379.

The jubilee of Rev. John Davis, Presbyterian minister, who has spent fifty years as pastor of the one congregation in Ballynahinch, co. Down, was observed last week with great enthusiasm. Mr Davis received on the occasion congratulatory addresses from both the members of his presbytery and his congregation.

A meeting, to bid farewell to Miss Mary Spence, B.A., who is going out under the London Missionary Society as a missionary to Benares, was held on Thursday evening week in Donegall-street Independent Church, Belfast, Rev. Wm. Wylie presiding. Miss Spence stated that she received her call to mission work just fourteen years before, while listening to a sermon from a returned missionary. Mrs. Byers said that Miss Spence was the fifteenth student of Victoria College, Belfast, who had gone forth as a missionary, in addition to several others who had become missionaries' wives.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A new school has been opened in connection with the Highland Orphanage, Inverness.

Rev. John Riddell, of Glasgow, has been holding Gospel services in Bank-street Hall, Inverness.

The Dumfries Christian Conference was held last week. Rev. Sir Emilius Laurie, as usual, took a leading part.

Rev. John Urquhart has been delivering, in various parts of Scotland, lectures on modern literary criticisms of the Old Testament.

A successful series of meetings, extending over three weeks, has been conducted by Mr. Meneely, of Ballymena, in the Baptist Church, Dumbarton. The word was with power, and decisions for Christ were made every night.

St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, was very crowded one evening last week for the annual meeting of the Glasgow Sabbath School Union. Effective addresses dealing with various phases of Sabbath school work were delivered by Professors G. Adam Smith, Fergus Ferguson, and James Orr.

A second conference on the Revival of 1859 was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on Monday, and was remarkably well attended. Rev. Mr. Howie, of Govan, presided. Dr. Wells, of Pollokshields; Rev. Mr. Laurie, of Fairbairn Free Church, Glasgow; Dr Andrew, of Stirling; Rev. Mr. Clark, of Barrhead; and others recalled stirring memories of the past.

The Bristo Gospel Temperance Union, Edinburgh, during the past year has been energetically carried on, the main object being to reclaim individuals from intemperate habits by the presentation of the Gospel as the only real hope of ultimate success in the struggle against the allurements of strong drink. The Union is based on unsectarian and Evangelical lines, and whilst its workers seek to induce the adoption of the pledge in Christian faith, they also strongly recommend its members to become connected with some branch of the Church.

One of the oldest members of the legal profession in Edinburgh has passed away in the death of Mr. Donald Beith, W.S. He was an elder in Free St. George's Church, and no member or office-bearer in that communion was more thorough and devoted. Charitable to a degree, he was ever ready to lend a helping hand in the furtherance of philanthropic schemes. In public as well as in private life he was distinguished by the geniality of his nature.

The annual meeting of the Grove-street Institute, Glasgow, took place last week. Mr. Robert Boyd, who presided, referred to the work that had been done during the past years. The medical mission had been a complete success, thanks mainly to the labours of Dr. J. Anderson Robertson. They were at present building a new wing to the institute, and when it was completed they would be in a position to cope with a larger amount of work. The secretary's report stated that the dispensary in connection with the medical mission was now open five days a week. There had been 6000 consultations during the past year. The lady students from the Training Home, Burnbank Gardens, had rendered valuable assistance in visiting the sick. In addition to free advice and medicine, food and clothing had been given to necessitous cases. All the other branches in connection with the institute were in a flourishing condition.

THE Y.M.C.A.

We regret to hear that the Forest Gate Y.M.C.A. has been closed for want of funds.

The educational classes at the Glasgow Christian Institute have made a good start. During the first fortnight over 700 pupils were enrolled.

The Girvan Association continues to carry on a quiet work. The Sabbath morning fellowship meeting has an average attendance of fifteen. The evangelistic meetings have been well attended.

Another member of Ardrossan Association has joined the Bible Training Institute this session. There are now two members in the foreign mission field, one in the home mission field, and two in the Training Institute.

The Camden Association call attention to the Bible Studies on Sunday morning and afternoon. Also to the Bible Studies on Tuesday evenings at 8.30. Rev. D. M. Connan, Mr. White, and Dr. C. Y. Biss have promised to take part.

Members of the Clapham Association have been participating in open-air meetings on Clapham Common, on Sunday evenings. The meetings have not been devoid of incident and opposition, but the Gospel was preached, and souls have been saved.

The Walsall Association has started an excellent monthly organ of its own, entitled "The Walsall Young Men's Record." There are between thirty-five and forty local Y.M.C.A. magazines now being issued in this country, many of them excellent in regard both to appearance and contents.

The New York Bowery branch has done a splendid relief work. In the past five years the number of meals given was 416,639, total lodgings given, 108,709, number of situations secured, 7083, number of garments given, 4196. There were 1890 religious meetings held, the average attendance of which was 109. There were 8528 enquirers.

A delightful reception was recently tendered by the Brooklyn Association to Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Theodore L. Cuyler. Addresses were made by Messrs. C. Morse, secretary of the International Committee, R. McBurney, of New York, and Hall, to which a hearty response was made, detailing the prominent features of the World's Jubilee Conference.

The friends at the Cornhill, E.C., Association last week presented Mr. N. R. Hughman, the late secretary, with a parting token of esteem in the shape of a cheque for sixty guineas. We trust that Mr. Hughman may soon find, in connection with the Y.M.C.A. or elsewhere, a fitting sphere for his energies. His address is 57, Wharton-road, London, W.

Much blessing has followed a mission by Rev. Lewis Johnson, at the Saffron Walden Association; the Colchester Association reports an excellent programme for the winter; the Cambridge Y.M.C. Union is carrying on an excellent spiritual and missionary work, and there are signs of much progress in many other associations in the Eastern Counties District.

On Thursday the annual conference of delegates from Y.M.C.A.'s affiliated with the Eastern Counties District Union, was held at Carrow Abbey. The secretary, Mr. W. Price, stated that there are seventeen associations in the Eastern Counties, with about 2500 members. Six of these own buildings valued at £18,460, with a debt of £4300. The income is £1860, and the expenditure about the same. Various kinds of religious work are carried on, and conversions are reported from the majority of the associations.

The annual conversazione in connection with the Edinburgh Association was held last week in the Queen-street Hall. Mr. John Carment, LL.D., the chairman, laid great stress on the value for good of the influence of young men upon young men; and in the Association they required not only the sympathy but the practical help of friends. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Charles Fermaud, Geneva, secretary to the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, and Rev. Lewis Davidson, Edinburgh.

The Finsbury Bulletin, a bright little local, says: "A comparatively new feature in some Y.M.C.A. programmes is the Social Hour for Young Men on Sunday Evenings. What is a young man to do after service time? Go home, says someone. But in London and other cities, large and small, there are thousands of young men who are away from home, and on Sunday nights they feel their loneliness, perhaps more than at any other time. Then let our Association parlours be open and filled with homeliness; let music, and literature, and conversation, and family worship be made instrumental in filling a young man's mind with loving thoughts of the dear ones at home, and holy desires after the better home on high."

Sir Peter Eade, Mayor of Norwich, presided over the annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. on Thursday evening. The large St. Andrew's Hall was filled, and amongst those present were Sir Geo. Williams, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Mr. J. J. Colman, M.P., Mrs. Colman, Mr. Alderman White, and many of the clergy and ministers of the town. It was reported that Mr. J. J. Colman had given £1000 towards the reduction of the debt on the building, and that further gifts and promises amounted to £907. The Norwich Y.M.C.A. was established thirty-eight years ago. The past year has been one of conspicuous activity. The roll of membership stands as follows:—Honorary members fifty-six, members 310, associates 161, juniors seventy-eight; total 605.

The German Y.M.C.A. in London opened some time ago a home for young artisans coming to London for work. Difficulties, however, arose, and in September last the home was closed. The committee still hold the lease of the premises, and have expressed their willingness to transfer this, with furniture and fittings, to a board of trustees. The general secretary, Mr. W. Müller, believes himself called upon to take charge personally of the home, and trusts the Lord will move the hearts of his stewards to enable him to re-open the place as a Christian Home for Artisans. He calculates that not more than £500 will be required for re-opening this home and placing it on a self-supporting basis. His address is Mr. H. Müller, 28, Finsbury-square, E.C.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Y.W.C.A. PROGRESS IN INDIA.

During the past months three ladies have left our shores for Y.W.C.A. work in India; and under each one who goes the work seems to assume such large dimensions, that the call comes for more to follow. Two are preparing to go shortly, but any one who reads the following letter from Calcutta will understand the urgency of the cry for workers and money. Bombay also wants someone at once:—

"Our Y.W.C.A. Home is getting now a very busy place; it is full of workmen, and the compound is all upset, as we are making a tennis court. But I cannot open the Home until I have a lady to superintend it. The work is getting far more than I can do, even with Miss Daw to help me. I very much also want to be set free to go sometimes to other places. I have been troubled about Jubbulpore; it is likely to be quite an important centre for Y.W.C.A. work. Whoever undertakes this work must feel satisfied to belong only to God, for until the work has immensely increased, it can be nothing else than very isolated, as the field enlarges, and the responsibilities increase. You ask me what income is required; the more the better. As there was no Y.W.C.A. institution, or room, or anything, I was obliged at once to take a house for meetings, classes, etc. It was quite impossible to work without one. Then, again, I have had to pay the whole expenses of the work. Also I have had to keep open house to all girls who came to me. I am obliged to have a Bengali assistant, and I pay her fifteen rupees a month, besides paying for her board about twenty-five. If a lady lived with others, and if she had a committee who paid her working expenses, then she could live upon £100 or £150 a year; but so much depends on her surroundings. God is greatly blessing his own work; in fact, He is working wonders almost every week; but I am nearly weighed down, for the need of more workers is so great. I am very thankful for the blessing in Madras and Bombay. We must try to cover the whole of India, and be all linked together, knitted together in Christ. The Hon. Mrs. Waller, correspondent for India, 316, Regent-street, W., will be happy to answer inquiries."

BRIEF NOTES.

A new branch has been commenced at Rotherhithe.

The work carried on under Miss Turner in the Y.W.C.A. room at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, has been recommenced.

Miss Amy Greenwood, well known as a successful and devoted worker, has been appointed to the secretariat of the Y.W.C.A. in Adelaide.

The branch recently started in connection with Holy Trinity Church, Dalston, has had an encouraging beginning. Already a number of members have been enrolled.

An active interest is taken in temperance work by the members of the Central London Institute. Much help is rendered by Mr. J. Keeble, who took the chair at a recent meeting, when Mr. H. W. Maynard, of Wimbledon, gave an address.

A large number of girls have been gathered into the Bible-class under Miss Hay Chapman, in connection with the Park Mission branch, at 16a, Old Cavendish-street. As it has become difficult to find room for them an endeavour is being made to find more accommodation. The Park Mission Lodge continues to be most useful in temporarily housing girls found by the workers in the parks.

A branch which was started about twelve months ago at Crouch End was discontinued during the summer. With a view to restart the work, a meeting has been held in the Lecture Hall of the Congregational Chapel, Stroud Green. Mrs. H. Kidner presided, and addresses were given by Miss Paton and others. A room has been taken at 67, Ferme Park-road, and it is proposed to call it the Stroud Green and Crouch Hill branch.

The Brentwood Branch began its winter session with a most successful mission week, conducted by Mrs. Keith. The daily services were of a thoroughly evangelical character, and that they were thoroughly enjoyed was manifest by the crowded attendances, from the early prayer-meeting of Sunday morning till the concluding testimony and praise meeting on Thursday evening, when over thirty took part in the service. Crowded attendances was the order throughout, and at the united meetings held in the Y.M. Assembly Rooms, many were turned away. This mission week has now become a regular feature of the session and has resulted in numerous conversions and a deepening of the spiritual life of the entire membership which is drawn from every Church in the locality, and has considerably increased during the past year.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

NORTH LONDON C.E. UNION.

A deeply interesting meeting was recently held at the Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel, with Rev. J. R. Wood in the chair, in order to inaugurate a Union of the C.E. Societies in North London. The gathering was of an enthusiastic character, and largely attended. Among the speakers were Revs. Alf. Rowland, W. W. Haines, and H. H. Pullen, and Messrs. W. H. Groser, C. Churchill, and F. H. King. Fifteen societies, practically representing the whole of the north of London, gave in their adhesion to the Union. The audience represented societies whose total membership numbered, on June 30 last, 741, and was drawn from the following denominations:—Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan, as well as undenominational.

BRIEF NOTES.

A united C.E. Convention was held last week in New Brunswick (N.J.).

The Bridge End, Brighouse, C.E.S. has had an encouraging anniversary. The preachers were Revs. A. Galbraith and E. A. Lawrence.

The Chesterfield Ragged School C.E. Society has held its first anniversary with considerable interest. There are now ninety-two members actively engaged in good work.

In connection with a mission conducted at the Farsley Baptist Chapel by Rev. J. Manton Smith, a C.E. Convention was held, when representatives from various societies in Bradford, Pudsey, and surrounding district were present.

The first quarterly meeting of the members of the Exeter and District Y.P.S.C.E. Union, held at Thorverton, proved most successful. Preceding the public meeting in the chapel, an open-air service was held in the village. In the evening a large gathering took place in the chapel.

The first anniversary of the Centenary Memorial Society has been held at the Sunday-school, Mansion House-street, Kennington. Alderman F. F. Bels occupied the chair, and gave a most encouraging address. Rev. Walter Horne, the vicar of St. Philip's, Kennington, also spoke.

The C.E. annual Convention was to be held at Adelaide last week. An Australian paper says: "This movement, more than anything else that we know of, has brought our young people to take an interest in Christian service. There are so many young people out serving the devil, we should rejoice over those who are endeavouring to do right. Let us give them a chance to do their best, a word of prayer, and a helping hand. Our hope is in the young, and the Endeavour Society, it appears to us, has done much to nurture this hope."

CARDIFF SAILORS' REST.

Mr. John Cory presided over the annual meeting on Wednesday last at the Lesser Park Hall. He eulogised the work of Miss Tilly, who, until her recent departure from Cardiff to live in France, worked with such magnificent self-sacrifice among the sailors visiting the port. He spoke words of hearty encouragement for the present missionary and honorary officials.

Stirring addresses were also delivered by several of the workers. The only thing that cast a gloom over the gathering was the announcement by the secretary that the institution was £250 in debt. It is very necessary that this debt should be liquidated at once. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to the honorary secretary, Miss Mackay, 49, The Parade, Cardiff.

The outlook just now in the Belfast neighbourhood is most hopeful. There are signs of abundance of rain. The workers ask for much prayer.

BUENOS AYRES.—Mr. and Mrs. Torre's work is more interesting than ever. There is now a good meeting in Quilmes. We watched some men who came most regularly every week. Most of them had never been to a meeting in their lives before; they did not know what to do or what was to be done with them. There are more than two hundred children attending the day-school. The Sunday-school classes had to be broken up for lack of teachers. The hall is sometimes full on week-days as well as on Sundays. Lately there has been great blessing.

May Westbrook.

OBITUARY.

MRS. A. DIXON.

Mrs. Adelaide Dixon, the widow of the late Rev. Jabez Dixon, of Accrington, died on Sunday morning, October 14, in London, after an operation for cancer. From early life she had been an earnest Christian worker, and throughout most unselfish, constantly being a succourer of many.

MRS. FERRIMAN, NEW SOUTHGATE.

The wife of Thos. F. Ferriman, of New Southgate, was, on October 1, called to her rest, after a very short illness. For a number of years, in a quiet and unostentatious way, both at Holloway and Highgate, she conducted mothers' meetings and a police class. In Southgate, amongst young women, in connection with the Y.W.C.A., she was a most indefatigable worker. Having been brought to the Lord when quite young, she spent about forty years in the service of her Master, whom she so much loved.

REV. R. SHEPHERD, BEVERLEY.

This Congregational minister, who has done a good work in the North, died suddenly last week, as the result, it is believed, of a fall in his garden. Twenty-five years ago he met the late Mr. Bradlaugh in debate at Grimsby, and for two nights maintained the truths of Christianity. Mr. Shepherd published, many years ago, when Ritualistic practices were attracting considerable attention, a book entitled "Miss Nelly's Sins," in which he dealt with the confessional as practised in Protestant churches.

DR. W. MOON, BRIGHTON.

Dr. William Moon, the inventor of Moon's system of embossed type for the blind, died suddenly on Wednesday week at his residence, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton, at the age of seventy-five. Dr. Moon became blind when twenty-one years of age, and devoted the whole of his subsequent life to his fellow-sufferers. His system has been adapted to 476 languages and dialects. He was closely associated with a society for the visitation and relief of the blind in Brighton. We hope in an early issue to give a portrait and brief sketch of the work accomplished by Dr. Moon.

DR. LUNN, HULL.

Many will mourn the loss of this devoted servant of Christ, who has just been called home. His beauty of character, deep spirituality, and activity in every good work endeared him to all. He belonged to the school of Yorkshire Evangelicals of which the Dean of Ripon, the late Canon Jackson, of Leeds, and the late Dr. Shann, of York, will always stand as leaders. Dr. Lunn was a trustee of Holy Trinity and Christ Church, Hull, and of Holy Trinity, Scarborough; an active member of the Yorkshire Evangelical Union; and a consistent friend of many Evangelical societies. His loss will be deeply felt amongst Christian workers and Evangelical Churchmen.

ALDERMAN R. C. BARROW, BIRMINGHAM.

Few men in the Midlands were better known than Alderman Barrow, as a Christian, a philanthropist, and a social reformer. As a leading member of the Society of Friends, his loss will be keenly felt. Mr. William White writes:—"Very suddenly the beloved superintendent of the adult division of the Severn-street School, Richard C. Barrow, has been taken from our midst. On Seventh-day evening, the 29th ult., he took part in a conference of the newly-formed Midland District of Friends' First-day schools. The conference concluded on Second-day morning with a breakfast, at which our dear friend presided. His address on the occasion was lively, instructive, and well timed; and during the latter part of the day he took his active and useful part in the public business of the city. On the following day, very suddenly and unexpectedly, he was called from earth to heaven, to our great loss and to that of the whole city, which in such varied capacities he had faithfully served for so many years. Of him it may truly be said, 'Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.'" The wide respect and esteem in which he was held was evidenced by the large attendance at the funeral, at Witton Cemetery, on the 6th, of which the Birmingham Daily Post says:—"A larger or more representative company than that which assembled in the cemetery has not been seen for many years." It was estimated that about 2,000 people were present, including a large number of the Severn-street scholars, and it was touching to see the wives of many of these throwing small nosegays into the grave after the company had left.

DR. ALEXANDER, medical superintendent of Hanwell Asylum, writes to The Medical Pioneer as to the improvement in docility and character as a result of the discontinuance of the beer ration. His testimony is amply confirmed by the experience of many workhouses.

CAPITAL AND LABOUR.

Twelve months ago the Congregational Church at Summerdale, Chicago, had a debt of 1700 dollars on the lots which it had purchased for the erection of a building. The people had become much discouraged. At this juncture, the pastor, Rev. Edgar B. Wylie, called on Mr. Evans, a carpenter, who suggested that, as he was out of work, he would be glad to contribute two weeks' labour for a new church. Encouraged by this suggestion the pastor secured subscriptions in labour amounting to 960 dollars.

Mr. R. J. Bennett, a director of the Chicago City Missionary Society, promised to match every dollar of labour with a dollar of money. The work was undertaken by labourers out of employment with great enthusiasm. The walls rose as if by magic with the aid of fifteen or twenty-five men. No intoxicants were allowed the workmen, but the ladies of the community furnished them hot coffee three times a day. Mr. Bennett did far more than he had promised, and a beautiful church now adorns the site. On Sunday, September 2, the basement was dedicated. The entire property is worth 8040 dollars, and is free from debt. The Summerdale Church is thus possessed of valuable property through this friendly combination of capital and labour, and, what is best of all, these workmen have become largely identified with the church. This history, as well as that of the majority of the enterprises under the care of the Chicago City Missionary Society, shows how false is the impression that working-men cannot be reached by the Gospel.

EVANGELICAL PROTESTANT UNION.

The annual conference of the Evangelical Protestant Union was held last week in the Religious Institute, Manchester. Rev. A. A. Isaacs, who presided over the morning sitting, said the standard of revolt against the integrity and inspiration of God's Word had been raised in these latter times with greater violence and greater boldness than ever. Romanism, both inside and outside the Church, was almost caustic in the hope and expectation of eventual triumph. There could be no doubt that in the town and country parishes of England men false to their ordination vows, false to their trust, false to Protestant principles, had obtained a footing through which they were employing every effort to carry out what he could not help calling their nefarious and dishonest ends. Let them look how Romanism had raised its head, how step by step the great enemy of liberty and truth had been pushing onward. A paper on "Justification (not Sacramental)" was read by Rev. Isaac Hawker, and a discussion followed, in which Archdeacon Taylor, of Liverpool, took part. The afternoon sitting was presided over by Rev. A. Haworth. Rev. E. H. F. Cosens read a paper on "Old Heresies in New Forms—e.g., Pelagianism," which was followed by an address on the same subject by Rev. W. E. Waddington, Theological Lecturer, Cambridge. A second paper, entitled "Practical Disestablishment of Protestantism: The Loyal Layman's Practical Remedy," which had been prepared by the late Hon. P. Carteret Hill, of Tunbridge Wells, was read by Rev. A. A. Isaacs.

CAMBERWELL MISSION.—A reunion of past and present workers in this mission was held on Monday evening in the hall, Toulon-street. Mr. John Kirk spoke of the work of the Ragged School Union, and showed that the Camberwell Mission had been a centre of Christian activity since 1810. God had greatly blessed the mission. At present there is very great need of workers. Addresses followed by Alderman Treloar, Rev. J. Reid Howatt, Mr. Collins, and other friends.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For services to be held by Mr. J. C. Rainey at the Y.M.C.A., Wallingford, from Oct. 21 to Nov. 5, for work at Kingswinford, that many may be saved and that opposition may cease.—For blessing on work in and around Windsor and on the Soldiers' Home.—For much blessing to be given at Mr. Matthew Burnett's Gospel Temperance Mission at Newhaven, from October 21 to 26 inclusive.—For the power of the Holy Spirit on a mission at Bishop's Teignton, South Devon, commencing Sunday, Oct. 14, by Miss Grace Abbott.—For blessing on services to be held at Gilford Hall, near Dublin, that souls may be saved, and for Gospel meetings at Williamstown.—For a three weeks' mission in Liverpool, commencing Oct. 21, to be conducted by Mr. James Wharton, of Barrow-in-Furness.—For an eight days' mission for young women, at South Acton, by Miss Minchin, October 21 to 29.—For a mission for railway men, October 21 to November 4, by Mr. C. Lazenby. PRAISE.—For much blessing given during the past week at Langford, Somerset.

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Home Words for Heart and Hearth, conducted by Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., will be especially welcome in cottage homes. (Home Words Office. 2s.)

The Zenana; or, Woman's Work in India. Vol. 1. (2s. Partridge & Co.) This is the annual volume of the monthly issued by the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, which, in its new form, is bright, readable, well illustrated, and full of information as to India's women and those who work so patiently among them.

The smaller periodicals of the Religious Tract Society make very attractive annual volumes. Light in the Home (1s. 6d.), the new series of the venerable "Tract Magazine," should still be welcome in Christian circles. The Cottager and Artisan (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d., according to binding) is profusely illustrated, and never was more likely to prove useful with old and young alike. For the little folks' "real own" use there are: The Child's Companion, which has many engravings and monotint plates; and Our Little Dots (both 1s. 6d., 2s., or 2s. 6d.), with pretty pictures and stories at every opening. All are bright and useful books.

The Favourite Book of Beasts, Birds, and Fishes (T. Nelson & Sons) is a book in which over 300 animals are pictured and briefly described. It will please young people, and should instruct them at the same time.

The Soul's Wardrobe. By Rev. W. A. Challacombe. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) In parabolic form the author of this little book conveys a great body of sound and practical spiritual teaching as to man's ruin, regeneration, and restoration.

The World Postage Stamp Album, with illustrations of rare, obsolete, and current postage stamps, is in characteristic exterior and helpful contents, "the very thing" for young collectors. There are spaces for three thousand stamps. (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. Nister.)

Leena's Tales for Children, by Mrs. Quincey Lane. (Simpkin, Marshall.) Simple and sweet stories of child-life, with some fairy tales, charmingly illustrated by C. L. Pott. The book is prettily bound, and will greatly delight the little ones, and help to pass many a long winter evening.

Are Foreign Missions Doing any Good? (1s. Elliot Stock). We have here a new and enlarged edition of a pamphlet setting forth many weighty facts as to the beneficent results of foreign missions. The fresh matter deals with the spiritual aspects of the subject, and the whole is a powerful plea for missionary work in heathen lands.

Regions Beyond. The September-October double number opens with an admirable charge to a missionary band by Rev. Archibald G. Brown. The other contents are of exceptional interest. Dr. Grattan Guinness writes on "Poor Ireland," and there are pleas for many parts of the great harvest field. (6d. Partridge.)

A Night in the Woods, and other tales and sketches by James Weston (Sampson Low & Co.), is a very attractive miscellany of quaint, homely, and adventurous stories for young people. There are many fine illustrations by skilled artists, and the handsomely got-up book would make a capital Christmas present or school prize.

Our Protestant Martyrs: What they Did for Us, and How their Work is now Threatened with Destruction, is the full title of a pamphlet containing the substance of lectures by Captain Charles Orde Browne. (4d. post free. Tract Depôt, 100, Wellington-street, Woolwich.) A diagram shows at a glance the date of commencement and duration of each Roman innovation, and indicates the attendant martyrdoms. This is a very instructive and useful publication.

A Plea for Text Missions, by F. W. Cory. (1s. Partridge & Co.) The author, who has had much experience in the Bournemouth Text Mission, is fully persuaded of the usefulness of displaying simple texts from the Word of God. In order to stir others to a similar line of service he has brought together testimony and facts of great interest, adding practical hints as to the working of Text Missions, and giving a list of the most suitable passages for the purpose. The book ought to stimulate many to effort in this direction.

Why do you not Believe? By Rev. Andrew Murray. (1s. Nisbet.) Both in South Africa and in Holland this little work has had already a wide circulation; hence we welcome its translation into English. As the title indicates, it is addressed to the unsaved, and particularly to those who have been roused to a sense of the necessity for salvation. In the hands of such it is likely to do grand service. As the extract we gave in a recent issue shows, it is singularly direct in its appeals to the conscience, simple in style and earnest in tone. The very quaintness of some of its phrases will commend it to many.

S. W. Partridge & Co. send three pleasing story books (1s. 6d.) Raymond and Bertha, by L. Phillips; Violet Maitland, by L. M. Lane; and Prue's Father, by E. F. Heddle, well written, in a style likely to attract young people, wholesome in tendency, while thoroughly interesting in incident. The Coat of Many Colours, by Rev. J. W. W. Moeran (1s. 6d.), contains fifteen typical talks with the children, by one in full sympathy with young folk. These will be found very useful by all who have adopted the admirable plan of addressing a few words specially to the children at the Sunday morning service.

The Religious Tract Society has issued some excellent "Shilling Reward Books." Christie's Old Organ, by Mrs. O. F. Walton is an old friend in an attractive form. Prisoners of Hope, by I. Alcock, is a story of steadfastness under persecution in the sixteenth century, in the Church of the Bohemian Brethren. The purpose of the book is definite, as is the case with all the works of the author of "The Spanish Brothers." Donald and His Friend, by Sarah Gibson, and Tom Larkins, by C. A. Burnaby, will delight the boys. Effie's Temptation, as told by herself, is the story of one who found help in the day of sore besetment. Sunshine at Last, by H. Keary, is a capital temperance tale.

The Story of the South Seas. By Rev. George Cousins. (2s. 6d. J. Snow & Co.) The effort to build the mission steamer John Williams has revived in many hearts an interest in the South Seas, and this volume, from the pen of the Editorial Secretary of the London Missionary Society, should deepen that interest. The writings of Ellis, Williams, Murray, Gill, and others have been drawn upon for facts as to the people and their evangelisation. There are scores of illustrations and maps, and while describing in detail the work of L.M.S. agents, the story does not overlook the labours of missionaries representing other societies. These pages magnify the grace of God as shown in the elevation of some of the most degraded tribes of our race; and they should minister strong encouragement to all friends of the foreign mission cause.

A Man's Gift, and other Sermons, by the late Alexander Macleod, D.D. (6s. Nisbet & Co.) A memorial sketch by Rev. A. G. Fleming, and a few personal reminiscences by Principal Fairbairn, give the reader passing glimpses of the man himself, but even apart from these the discourses have a peculiar interest and value as illustrations of a type of preaching many would do well to study. As defined by the departed preacher himself, it is "forthtelling" setting forth the treasures of the Word. Its expository preaching by one who knew his Bible and who by reason of natural and spiritual gifts was enabled to set his expositions in glowing diction. As his "Christus Consolator" showed, he could deal trenchantly with men and passing events, while his inimitable sermonettes for the young, such as "Talking to the Children," revealed him as a prince of preachers to children. Now this memorial volume discloses the secret of his power. He preached Christ as One whom he knew, and loved and gloried in. There are rich veins of hidden treasure in these sermons which must commend them to many.

The People's Almanac (1d. Religious Tract Society) for 1895 is well illustrated; it has daily texts, and contains, in addition, many useful hints and recipes.

A poem on "Christian Unity," breathing an excellent spirit, has been composed by Rev. J. Shone, of Belfast, and is published by Messrs. J. Shone and Co., Lombard-street, Belfast. Price 2d.

Good Tidings for You is the title of a new booklet by Mrs. W. E. Legg. Its message will be timely at Christmas or the New Year. (One halfpenny. The Author, 43, Nevill Gardens, N.W.)

One with God is a precious little book of sixteen pages on the subject of the last Mildmay Conference. While valuable for Christians, it is so worded as to be suitable for circulation among the unconverted. (6d. per dozen. Hawkins & Co.)

The Secret of Success, by H. Risborough Sharp (1s. E. Stock.) An exposition of the nature and power of the will, its due cultivation and conquest, and its dangerous tendencies. The book contains many useful hints on success in business and social life.

Christmas and New Year Cards.—The Religious Tract Society has issued some very attractive cards with mottoes and Scripture texts. There are packets of twelve for sixpence, suitable for distribution amongst the young, at higher prices cards of embossed design, jewelled, deckelled, tied with silk and tassel. The mottoes bear true Christian sentiment, and the cards are choicely finished.—Some excellent motto cards of various sizes, designs, and other seasonable publications have been issued by Ernest Nister, 28, Paternoster-row. The reward tickets for Sunday scholars, in sheets (2d. each) of from twenty to seventy, are useful. The fancy calendars are equally attractive.

Notes and Comments.

In most of the Sunday Schools at home and abroad, Sunday last was observed as a day of special prayer for the children. True, all sincere teachers have these on their heart at all times, yet the impetus of general consent full oft lends fresh fervour to petition. Many labourers among the children have found the whole work of the school toned and deepened after the Day of Prayer, and not a few now doing good service date their conversion from the special meetings usually held in connection. Throughout the Metropolis, and in all parts of the provinces, Sunday was thus observed, and in many instances neighbouring schools met together for prayer, in which the children as well as the teachers united. It is computed that half-a-million of Sunday School teachers were, on Sunday, making special petition on behalf of five millions scholars in their classes. From such united prayer and effort the happiest results may be looked for.

An esteemed correspondent, writing with regard to the impending School Board election, expresses a hope that Evangelical Christian men, outside the present opposing parties, but in favour of sound Scriptural teaching in the schools, may be returned in each division. Those who know anything of electioneering tactics will see little beside disaster in such a distribution of votes as might result from a multiplication of candidates. Another suggestion which has our unqualified approval is that the election should be made the subject of earnest prayer. To our mind it is a great pity that the compromise has been called in question. The disturbance is already responsible for the creation of much ill-feeling among those who should at all times be neighbourly, and no one can say what serious consequences may yet result.

The letter of Cardinal Vaughan calling upon Roman Catholics to support denominational candidates in the coming London School Board election has surely settled the point as to which side all true Protestants ought to take. The Cardinal avows the object of his Church to be the use of public money for the purpose of teaching Roman Catholic children its own dogmas and practices. We knew that before, but it is well that the thing has been declared. Will ratepayers, then, allow their money to go for such a purpose? And if they do, when do they suppose the country will obtain that national system of education for which twenty-five years ago it passed the Education Act? Is the splendid work of the past years, in which men of all parties and of all denominations have been so happily joined, to be overthrown for the sake of bringing in tests that will make hypocrites, exclude the best teachers, and play into the hands of the narrowest and most bigoted men?

William Cowper, who, like a true poet, was in advance of his time, said, "War's a game which, were their subjects wise, kings would not play at." We have entered upon the "new era" in which the people govern themselves, and when they have discovered that the bond between the "masses" of different nations is closer than the tie between them and the "classes" of their own country. It lies with "the people" to decide whether there shall be war or peace. The leaders of the working men have now an opportunity in all the forward nations to enforce among their constituencies the fratricidal wickedness of war.

The warm praise of England which Mr. Bayard, the American Ambassador to England, spoke in his own country, has naturally called forth a good deal of comment. We agree that he must have seen our best side; and it would be well, at any rate for a change, if some of our countrymen would try and get an introduction to the best side of America. When we ourselves were there, we had the joy of seeing some of the noblest men and women of the States; and the memory of them has been an inspiration ever since. To have seen Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips, and Mrs. Hopper Gibbon, and other brave witnesses, who had sacrificed all for the emancipation of the Negro, is a high privilege. To have seen quiet church life and home life, is to have received the assurance that there is something in America besides corruption and violence. We sympathise entirely with Mr. Bayard's strong desire to become "an assistant in promoting peace on earth and goodwill among men." Whenever an honest American hand is stretched out, ours shall grasp it.

The work of evangelising Sicily, as described in a report by Signors Varnier and Scuderi, greatly resembles in manner and method the work of our Saviour when upon earth. They say that however suitable the services in the Evangelical Churches may be for believers, they are incomprehensible and disappointing to those who are wholly ignorant of the Word of God. Hence they seek personal intercourse by house-to-house visitation, and thus meet objections, solve doubts, and correct false notions. And it is cheering to see how these devoted labourers are visited by students and even by teachers of the Church of Rome. Even the illness of Signor Varnier was made a blessing, for to the large numbers who came to inquire after his health he had an opportunity of preaching Christ. In Calabria the people are so ignorant that they do not know what the word Bible means. Verily, Rome has been a pall of darkness wherever she has had undisputed power.

Many questions, critical and historical, have been raised in the study of the prophecy of Joel, in the discussion of which remarkable acumen is shown by Dr. W. L. Pearson, of Penn College, Iowa, in his volume, "The Prophecy of Joel: its Unity, its Aim, and the Age of its Composition." (1dol. 50c. Westermann, 836, Broadway, New York.) He says:—

> The variety of leading thoughts in the book is not great, but they concentrate in a harmonious unity about the one thought of the whole, "the day of Jehovah," in the broad sense of the term, presented in the double picture of richest blessings and of the Last Judgment. The Prophet will comfort the people in the national calamity, which calamity is itself an omen of the righteous judgment to come upon all people. The diversity of subordinate thoughts radiating from these leading ones, and primarily from the one topic, is very great, while they are painted in metaphorical pictures, now of much beauty, now of marvellous grandeur.

These considerations should help in the study of the prophecy, which is bright with hope as well as characterised by threatened vengeance. If the book opens with a succession of judgments, it closes with a series of gracious promises. The God who sendeth the plagues of destruction, at length returneth in mercy and "dwelleth in Zion." From this we should each learn a lesson, as God's ways with Israel are typical of his providences with individuals.

When we are tried by sorrow and temptation, we are apt to think that never was there so sad a case as ours, never was treatment so bad as we have received, never was the trial of faith so great. How we are to escape we cannot imagine. But we are wrong on both points. Our case is not exceptional, and there is the way to escape, the only way. For thus it is written: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as man can bear; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it." There is only his way, which He has made, and if He has made it, He is able to guide us into it. Sometimes in our trials we are really free from them, God stays our minds so perfectly upon his Word. He has a promise or word of help for everyone for every trial. Let us not seek to force a way out of trouble. "Stand still, and see the salvation of God."

"NO UNDERCRUST."

Some time ago, a woman came to thank me for saving her in the darkest hour of her life from a great sin. I had never seen her before, so that her first words filled me with surprise. She had been in sore trouble. That trouble had grown upon her until it seemed unbearable. She could see no relief, no way of escape from its intolerable pressure. Temptation always comes to us in our weakest moments, even as it did to our Lord, and it came to her with a force she felt incapable of resisting. She would end it all and have done with it for ever.

She sat in her chair beside a bare table, and, with her head in her hands, thought of the terrible purpose she had formed. After a while she lifted her face, and her eye rested upon a copy of The Christian, and upon a single sentence in a corner of the page. It was this—"God's loaf has no undercrust." I had said this somewhere in a sermon, and by the will of God it had got into the paper. When she saw it, she stared at it again and again, and said, "God's loaf has no undercrust. Then I have not got to the bottom or end of his love yet. There is something for me still. The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." In an agony of penitence, she fell upon her knees and prayed for forgiveness, and, with a new hope in her soul, asked God to help her in her distress. It came almost immediately, and she passed from despair to gladness. Feeling grateful for my simple words, she came to find me out and thank me, and I could not but praise God for using me through his grace in saving a soul from death. W. J. M.

The "Empire" and the L.C.C.

The action of the Licensing Committee of the London County Council with respect to certain West-end places of amusement has given rise to a vigorous correspondence in the Press. If the revelations of "Prudes on the Prowl" (as some writers in The Daily Telegraph elegantly name certain ladies and gentlemen) be true, and also the "Night Side of London," by another writer, then Mrs. Chant and her friends have not told us one-half; and the West-end of London must be a second Sodom. Private clubs near the "Empire" Theatre are said to be unspeakably worse than any public places of resort. Furthermore, a correspondent of The Westminster Gazette affirms that he could point out to Sir John Hutton and his colleagues "a great many private mansions in the West-end which are more in need of closing than the promenade at the Empire." The latter may be many degrees more respectable than these, but it is one of the tributary streams which help to swell the torrent of London's vice, making the descensus Averni all the more easy because of its air of mock respectability.

That the present condition of things should be strenuously upheld by those whose vested interests are concerned, does not surprise us. Indeed, those whose craft is in danger are showing far more zeal in defending their evil gains, past and prospective, than the defenders of the purity of our homes, the virtue of our girls, and the good morals of our young men are manifesting in upholding the righteous decision of the Licensing Committee. All kinds of platitudes, sophisms, and even deliberate falsehoods are brought to bear upon the subject. But we trust the County Council will maintain its ground, and not be bullied, cajoled, or deceived into giving way. It may rest assured that, though very noisy, those who desire things at the Empire to continue as they are, are a small minority. It will be easier to keep their foot down, and to support their committee, than to let this be an open and running sore, to be brought up again and again, until the multiplication and increasing degradation of such places compels their being swept away.

It is amazing that a professedly reputable daily paper should devote page after page for a week to voice the unblushing demand that facilities should be afforded by a responsible public body like the London County Council for indulgence in vice and immorality. Abuse of the most opprobrious kind has been hurled at those who have had the courage to plead for the cleansing of places of amusement, but for downright "cant" and sheer "hypocrisy" it is long since we have met anything to equal that shown by those whose financial interests are at stake. See the following from The Financial News:—

"Mr. George Edwardes declares that by the closing of the Empire Theatre a capital of £200,000 will be lost, but I find it difficult to reconcile this statement with the last balance-sheet of the company. The Empire has a capital of £60,000, composed of £1 shares, 10s. and 15s. paid up, and a real working capital of £31,500. If Mr. Edwardes is making his calculation on Stock Exchange prices, his whole case will, I think, fall to the ground; for surely shareholders who have for years been receiving seventy and even eighty per cent. dividends, and have been repaid their capital three or four times over, are not much to be pitied, especially when it is remembered that even now they can sell their shares for more than three times what they originally cost. If Mr. Edwardes states that his company cannot gain a living by the performance only, and claims that the rights of vested interests should be applied to his case for the purpose of allowing his company to pay a dividend—that is, by making the promenade and the sale of drink the real business of the company—then all the halls should be placed in possession of the same privileges, and Mr. Edwardes had no right to oppose the granting of a license to the Palace.

"Then, as regards Mr. Edwardes's piteous appeal on behalf of the poor leaseholder of the Empire Theatre, and the loss he would sustain by the closing of the house, let the veil be torn aside, and the fact be stated that the leaseholder is Mr. Nichols, proprietor of the Café Royal, who is also the largest shareholder in the Empire Company. Surely this knowledge will check some of the hysterical tears which are asked for on this poor leaseholder's account.

"Next, is it not a fact that this same Empire Company paid a fair dividend before the house had any promenade at all worth speaking of? And also let me ask whether the whole question does not resolve itself into this:—Cannot the Empire Company pay a fair dividend by catering only for the honest and clean-minded amusement-seeking public, and be content with that, without seeking a bloated dividend by means which are at least open to question?"

But it is even more surprising to find that the London Trades Council, through its secretary, should have thrown its influence into the same scale. Have its members considered how this vile system works the degradation of the wives and daughters and sisters of the working classes? The "ballet" itself is admittedly recruited from the ranks of those who are driven by poverty to adopt it as a means of livelihood, though all that is modest and womanly within them revolts against it, while their unfortunate sisters are with a Satanic cynicism called "soiled doves." Whence come these doves before they are soiled, most of them, but out of the homes of the working class? The temptation presented in the prospect of sufficient money to ease the strain of the daily struggle for bread is fearful in the extreme, but it is in the Christian public, not in the Empire and its habitués, that the tempted or fallen girl finds her truest friends.

Much has been made of the cry that some hundreds of persons would be thrown out of work if the strategic move of the Empire manager in threatening to close its doors were fulfilled; yet the trades-unions do not hesitate to call a strike among whole communities of men and impose the severest privations upon thousands of persons for the sake of a possible ultimate benefit. Let them apply the same principle in this matter. Even if the worst came to the worst—of which there is not the slightest probability—and all the employés of the Empire were deprived for awhile of their wage, yet if in the result they freed themselves from the tyranny of wealthy vice, well might they rejoice. If Mr. George Shipton does not express the mind of the Trades Council, let this be clearly stated.

Again, it is asserted that if the promenade be closed the girls will be driven out in greater throngs upon the street. So far as experience can decide, this is not true. Three years ago the licences were taken away from two dancing saloons in Ratcliff Highway. Miss Steer and her helpers assure us that there are fewer girls there on the streets than before; indeed, they do not hesitate to affirm that such depraved places of entertainment are the sources from which the streets are replenished. Innocent girls are attracted thither "to see life," as the phrase goes. They are tempted to drink, and too often the descent into a life of open sin is the result.

The Christian women to whom we owe so much in this great struggle are calling a meeting for prayer to-morrow, Friday, from eleven o'clock to four, at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross. They say that everything that great wealth can do is being done to work on certain members of the Council to bring about a reversal of the decision of the Licensing Committee. Certainly now is the time for Christians to speak out, and refuse to allow the government of London to be at the mercy of the morally indifferent, and its amusements regulated by libertines. Their appeal to Christian feeling and conscience ought to provoke an earnest response.

Many forcible utterances have issued from the pulpit, as well as from the Young Men's Christian Association and other bodies, and, in some instances, resolutions have been adopted in support of the action of the Licensing Committee.

We have referred to the matter at length, knowing that there are many earnest Christians who do not read the daily papers, and are therefore ignorant of the importance of this crisis in the moral history of London. Let them make it a matter of earnest supplication. The appeal to God by prayer will certainly not be in vain. He has done great things for us in the Purity struggle, the memory of which makes us glad, and He will help again. Very earnestly do we urge the London County Council as a whole to support its Licensing Committee and stand firmly to its recommendations.

WORK AMONG FRENCH PRIESTS.

Professor L. J. Bertrand, Director of the Œuvre des Prêtres Convertis, writes to us from 86, Boulevard Bineau, Neuilly, Paris:—

Some eighteen months ago The Christian helped me in finding money for an ex-priest whom I wished to send for a year to a theological seminary. Last year he became the assistant of the energetic Pastor Faivre, of St. Aubin, north of Bordeaux, who writes me: "Mr. Costa gave me full satisfaction, and I expected to keep him longer, but after a few of his evangelistic visits to Saubran, a Roman Catholic place, many inhabitants came to me, and rather clamorously said, 'We want Mr. Costa as our evangelist. Having dealt with Romanists in the Confessional, before becoming a Protestant, he will be a first-rate guide for us.' I therefore transferred him to Saubran, and now I receive numerous letters, saying, in the words of one writer 'Mr. Costa is loved and highly esteemed by everybody. His preaching improves Sunday after Sunday, and his zeal day after day. He, an ex-priest, has resolved, with the help of God, to have a good Protestant congregation of ex-Romanists, and the beginning is most encouraging. The number of his hearers increases week after week.' A converted Roman Catholic adds:—'If priests become Protestant and create Protestant churches, our clear duty is to follow them. The Œuvre des Prêtres Convertis will then become the most practical society of evangelisation.'"

The Christian was therefore right in helping a work which people call the most aggressive of religious societies. That adjective is not exact. We do not act as proselytisers of the priests, but we receive kindly those who come to us. Our work requires the greatest circumspection to avoid unsuitable candidates; but we cannot refuse those who want to serve God better. We have many ex-priests as good Christians as dear Mr. Costa. If there are deliberate deceivers among our French défroqués, there are also many honest inquirers, and some servants of Christ who deserve what The Christian has done for them. In their name and in mine, please to accept our deep gratitude.

GOD EVERYWHERE.—We can never be where God is not, nor where He sees and loves and upholds us not. He is our Father and our God for ever. He takes us from earth that He may lead us to heaven, that He may refine our nature from all its principles of corruption, share with us his own immortality, admit us to his everlasting habitation, and crown us with his eternity.—Greenwood.

LAMBETH BATHS.—The workers' conference of the Lambeth Baths Mission have resolved to reopen the meetings for the thirty-third series on Saturday, November 3. During the last session 4580 attendances were made every week, the Saturday and Sunday evening meetings being crowded. It is understood that the London Congregational Union will undertake the Sunday lantern services, as was done last winter. At the inaugural meeting Mr. R. K. Causton, M.P., will preside, and among the speakers will be Archdeacon Sinclair, Mr. Walter Hazell, M.P., Mr. Walter Palmer, Mr. Alderman Spicer, L.C.C., Mr. J. H. Raper, and other gentlemen.

GIDEON'S THREE HUNDRED.

By Rev. A. MOODY STUART, D.D.

"By the three hundred men that lapped, will I save you" (Judges vii. 7).
"Faint, yet pursuing" (Judges viii. 4).
"He shall drink of the brook by the way" (Ps. cx. 7).

I.—Their beautiful but forgotten test.

The lapping of water with the hand as a dog lappeth is never seen among ourselves, and appears to be quite unknown in Europe. The first description of it that we have met with is in Campbell's Travels in South Africa, published early in this century. He writes: "The Hottentot manner of drinking water is very curious; they throw it up with their right hand into their mouth, seldom bringing the hand nearer than a foot's distance from the mouth, and so quick that, however thirsty, they are soon satisfied. I tried frequently to imitate this practice, but without success."

This lapping must have been rare in Israel when it was practised in Gideon's testing trial only by three hundred of ten thousand soldiers, who had been selected out of thirty-two thousand in the original army: for by God's command he had already proclaimed the Mosaic ordinance for the fearful and faint-hearted to return to their homes, and only ten thousand remained, out of whom no more than three hundred stood the test. In a later age Josephus can never have witnessed it in Palestine, or even heard of it, for he regards it as a token of cowardice to prove by the choice of the weakest men in the army that power belongeth unto God; and it is stated that similar views were held by Theodoret and by Grotius.

In the island of Madeira, fifty years ago, I had the privilege of witnessing this "lapping of the water as a dog lappeth," and the singularly agile action once seen can never be forgot. One afternoon, in riding leisurely outside of Funchal, a man in the light garb of a courier came running toward the town at the top of his speed. He was at a short distance in front, and when quite near to me he stopped to quench his thirst at a fountain on the wayside. His attitude in drinking at once awaked the inevitable suggestion, "There is one of Gideon's three hundred lappers," and with a thrill of surprise and delight I drew up my pony for a more leisurely view of the attractive sight. But he was already away, as on the wings of the wind, leaving me to wonder and admire. The swift messenger from the hills had halted for a moment at the well without altering the attitude of the runner, but with one knee bent before him and the other limb stretched behind, he drank of the flowing water. As he drank, he held his face upward toward heaven, kept his lips wide open, and with a rapid motion of the hand, or rather, perhaps, the fingers of his outstretched arm, he jerked the water into his mouth in a continuous stream. He did not seem to move his arm, or to bring his hand within a foot or eighteen inches of his mouth. In pausing to quench his thirst, and when satisfied, ran on, still keeping the attitude in which he had imbibed the water, with the least possible waste of time or loss of muscular strength and activity. It was a beautiful picture of energy and zeal in carrying the message on which he had been sent. Without ever bowing the head, "he drank of the brook by the way," and the same action in Gideon's chosen men was both a test of their fitness for the conflict before them, and must have been of quite essential service in their long and exhaustive pursuit of Israel's foes. So it might well become a standing emblem in Israel for whatever was most self-sacrificing and heroic in the way and work of the Lord.

HE RETAINED HIS RUNNING POSTURE,

II.—Their faith, their zeal, and final conquest.

The characteristic proof of Gideon's followers was an indication of energy and self-denial, yet the first and greatest work to which they were called was an act of bold and simple faith, of distrust and disuse of their own arm, and of firm reliance on the unseen arm of the Lord. Known unto God are all his works, and when He directed Gideon how to choose his men he knew each of the men that would fall to be chosen, and there can be no doubt had already made them wise unto salvation through faith in Himself.

It was a great crisis in Israel, and second to none in their history except the deliverance out of Egypt and the destruction of Sennacherib's army in the time of Hezekiah. The heathen Midianites had swarmed over the land for seven years. They were like grasshoppers for multitude, and their camels without number, as the sand of the sea; they "left no sustenance for Israel, neither sheep, nor ox, nor ass," and the people were forced to hide themselves in dens and caves. It was from the Lord, in judgment for serving the gods of the heathen, with the hideous immoralities of their worshippers. If their devastations had been allowed to continue, the nation would have been and the knowledge of the true God extinguished.

But the Lord interposed with a great deliverance, which is afterwards referred to once and again by the Prophets and in the Psalms (lxxxiii. 9, 11, 12), "Do unto them as unto the Midianites; make their nobles like Oreb and like Zeeb; yea, all their princes as Zebah and Zalmunna, who said, 'Let us take to ourselves the houses of God in possession.'" So in Isaiah x. 26, where the deliverance from Midian is likened to the predicted overthrow of Sennacherib, and the rod of the Lord to the rod of Moses at the Red Sea. And in the magnificent prophecy of the Child to be born whose name is Wonderful, and of the people who walked in darkness seeing the great light, the overthrow of Satan by the Lord Jesus is compared to the destruction of Midian under Gideon and his chosen followers. "Thou hast broken the yoke of his burden and the staff of his shoulder, the rod of his oppressor as in the day of Midian" (Isa. ix. 4). Gideon himself has the root of his fitness for his great work in the deepest humility, "My family is poor in Manasseh, and I am the least in my father's house," combined with the firmest faith in the God of Israel. The first work to which he is called is not the slaughter of Israel's enemies, but the destruction of an altar to Baal set up by the Israelites themselves, and the whole conflict with Midian is for the rescue of Israel from the false and odious gods of the heathen.

The first action to which the tested three hundred are called, is not to fight as soldiers, but to stand still and see the salvation of the Lord. Instead of swords and spears, they are all of them provided with pitchers, and lamps, and trumpets (or rams' horns, as understood by Josephus), these last having probably belonged to the whole ten thousand. When they went forth in the name and in the strength of Israel's God, it was near midnight, and they would be invisible to their enemies as they went down into the valley of Jezreel, and took their places around the camp; Gideon first with his own company of a hundred on one side of the vast encampment, the other two hundreds on the other sides, each man by himself standing well apart to encompass the whole. God Himself upheld them all; for if a few had fled all might have come to nothing, but He gave them confidence in each other, as well as trust in Himself, and not one man failed to stand in his place. Then the sudden disclosure commences in Gideon's company, and is followed immediately by the others; the breaking of the pitchers, the flaming of the torches, the blowing of the rams'-horns, with the loud battle-shout, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," whilst round about the camp." Awakened suddenly out of their secure sleep all the host of Midian "ran and cried and fled," the three hundred still standing and blowing their rams'-horns as if they were the trumpeters of a numerous army behind them, whilst "the Lord set every man's sword against his fellow," and the host fled toward the Jordan. This standing still was the fruit and triumph of faith by the Lord's upholding hand, and was in some respects more and greater than the pursuit and conquest that ensued.

Then follows the swift pursuit toward the Jordan, in which they have ample need for the rapid "lapping with the hand of the water" to quench their thirst, for their friends through whom they pass refuse them bread for their hunger, and they are "faint yet pursuing." Altogether one hundred and twenty thousand of their foes have fallen; yet fifteen thousand, with their princes, have escaped across the Jordan, and the victory for the God of Israel and the people's deliverance from the power and from the gods of the heathen are not complete while these remain to renew their invasion. Exhausted with fatigue, and faint with hunger, the valiant three hundred follow after, overtake, and destroy them. From the men of Penuel Gideon had asked "loaves of bread for the people that followed him, for they were faint," but was only met with taunts, for to unbelief it was a foolish attempt to think of overcoming fifteen thousand men with their puny hundreds. What a noble record it is of these three hundred, who in singular faith had stood still with their torches and trumpets, that now, when faint and hungry, not one failed to cross the Jordan with Gideon, and in the Lord's strength to overcome the foes of Israel and of God, who outnumbered them as fifty to one!

A bright example to us, for although we cannot all be Gideons, we may all be like his faithful followers, who in the Lord's strength, having begun well, ran with patience to the end. Mary of Bethany is numbered with them, for she knew that one thing, and one alone, was needful, and chose the good part, which could not be taken from her. Our Lord Jesus Himself, who left us an example that we should follow his steps, "drank of the brook by the way" when He sat wearied by the well, and said it was his meat to do the will of his Father, and to finish his work. This one endlessly glorious work of serving his Father and saving us by his infinitely meritorious life, and by his atoning death, is all our acceptance, all our strength, and all our hope from the first to the last. But trusting only in Him and in his all-sufficient redemption, let us through grace follow Him by keeping ourselves disentangled and which ensnare and enslave the world around us, and through bondage to which many who seem to begin well fall sadly short before the end. Let us carefully cherish such peace with God and joy in the Holy Ghost as to let nothing hinder us in running the race set before us, looking unto Jesus. As we run let us thankfully partake of the blessings and comforts given to us on earth as only "drinking of the brook by the way," and suffering nothing to retard our onward course. Let us "lap the water with our hands" as we hasten forward, till we reach the goal, and are called to enter into the everlasting rest, where "the Lamb shall feed us, and shall lead us unto living fountains of water."

MR. W. R. LANE IN NEWPORT (MON.).

Our hearts overflow with praise to God for this second visit of his honoured servant. Truly, the ten days of the mission have been as the days of heaven upon earth. The Temperance Hall, seating over 1100 people, has been well filled nightly, and on more than one occasion crowded out. The mission services proper were conducted there, and the daily afternoon Bible readings were held in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A.

From the first the missioner plainly perceived that he had, primarily, to deal with the professed people of God, many of whom needed rousing up, to gird on their armour, and come to the help of the Lord against the mighty. The prophecy of Hosea was the preacher's armoury for several days, and there the Divine Spirit filled his quiver full of arrows, to the wounding of such as were "at ease in Zion," and then leading them to "the Lord, the Healer."

The door being well opened in this direction, the unsaved were more easily reached. Night by night the hammer of the Word was wielded, in the power of the Spirit, with mighty force to the convicting and converting of many souls. The inquiry-room was a busy scene, where the workers, Bible in hand, were engaged pointing the seeking sinner to the seeking Saviour.

We dare not venture to number up those who received definite blessing, but God was manifestly working in many hearts. We have a record of all who passed through the inquiry-room—no small number; they will be duly visited by the workers, and further helped before we hand them over to the various churches for future care. Every denomination in the town is represented by those who have professed to receive blessing. Weak Christians have been lifted up, backsliders restored, and "far-off" souls led to the Saviour. Family blessings bulk largely in our record.

Many most touching thank offerings were sent in, and of not a few can it be said, "The abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality" (2 Cor. viii. 2). A veritable wave of blessing has swept over our town, and we thank and praise our God, who hath "made bare his holy arm in the sight of all the people."

LIVING FAITH.

Faith in God lies of necessity at the root of all Christian life. Without faith it is impossible to please God, and equally as impossible to grow up into the likeness of his Son. Faith is a means to an end, and by no means the end in itself. The grand climax, the goal to which it leads, is nothing short of the "salvation of the soul" (1 Peter i. 9).

That which steam is to the engine, and blood is to the body, is faith to the redeemed spirit, the mighty propelling force of the Christian life. While this is true, yet, unless faith be in active exercise and directed to some specific end, as steam into the cylinder of the engine, we shall discover that that which should be the power of Christian character has become stripped of its energizing force, and is to all intents and purposes useless and "dead."

Only as God is revealed, comprehended, and understood, will faith become strong, deep, and abiding. It is the possession of the newly converted soul in order that all other things may be rendered possible to him. It becomes, indeed, the medium through which the graces and gifts of the Spirit are received and enjoyed.

Faith is the eye that has seen the Invisible, the ear that has caught the whisper of God's secrets; the hand that has laid hold of and appropriated the "exceeding great and precious promises"; and just as the members of the body are the media for communicating outward impressions to the brain, even so has faith become the spiritual medium for communicating the eternal verities to the redeemed soul. It is as much a gift of God as the atmosphere which conducts sunlight to the plant. The warm rays passing through the air, falling upon the upturned face of the flower, and touching its life at every part, produce both beauty and growth. Even so the glory, grace, and truth of God, revealed and conducted to the soul through the medium of faith, will be found to produce all that is essential to growth and activity in Christian character.

Yet, notwithstanding the presence and aid of the atmosphere a flower may be deprived of all the advantages of the sun's rays, by removal from the soil. So, likewise, may the heart of a child of God become barren and lifeless, despite the presence and aids of faith, unless it be "rooted and grounded in love."

Every tree of the Lord's planting will strike its roots deep into this precious soil, and then will faith become at once the great unseen but all important medium through which the Sun of Righteousness will impart life, energy, and power.

Faith is the only fruit of the Spirit that "cometh by hearing," all the rest proceed from "doing." Joy springs from obedience; peace is the result of believing; long suffering, gentleness, meekness, patience, temperance, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity, are each the outcome of Christian growth or life in action.

When St. Paul refers to the Spirit's fruit in his Epistle to the Galatians, love is put first and faith last. When, however, Peter deals with the subject in its practical bearing upon the building up of Christian character, faith is put as the foundation, and love as the crowning point of the believer's life. Add to faith courage, to courage knowledge, to knowledge temperance, to temperance patience, to patience godliness, to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity (or love).

Hence, a display of cowardice; an unwillingness to take one's stand in the defence of truth and right; ignorance regarding the plain and unmistakeable will of God; intemperate words or acts; uncontrollable fits of passion; an impatient, fretful, complaining peevish spirit; a heart absorbed with the trivialities of the passing hour; a life framed in accordance with the vain conceits of men, and after the fashion of the world; a miserable exhibition of meanness, selfishness, jealousy, or greed; an unbrotherly bearing; a deplorable lack of love, which is so often in evidence, even among the professing children of God, are things of which we ought to be most heartily ashamed.

That Christian who imagines that he can live in the "quiet enjoyment" of simple faith in God, and yet tolerate these inconsistencies of life, instead of giving all diligence to be adding to his faith those graces which we have earlier named, presents a lamentable contrast to the noble praise that Gibbon, the historian, pronounced on Law. "In our family William Law left the reputation, of a worthy and pious man who believed all that he professed, and practised all that he enjoined."

A living "saving" faith must produce a healthy and active exercise of its own powers, and he who considers that he is in possession of this, but who never exerts himself to build upon "the foundation," may well begin to question whether, after all, he has not been from the beginning of his supposed Christian career a veritable self-deceiver.

Service.

By PASTOR LEVI PALMER.

As soon as redemption was purchased Christ left the earth. He did not stop to preach it. To his disciples, however, He said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Thus the omnipotence of the cross operates through the Church. As Moses first felt the power of the rod before he wielded that power over others, so the Church, which has first felt the power of Christ's death, becomes the medium through which that power reaches the world. Christ became incarnate at Bethlehem that He might redeem the world by blood; but at Pentecost the Holy Ghost incarnated himself in believers that He might convert the world to Christ by power. Thus Christ in heaven, and the Holy Ghost on the earth, are both dependent upon human instrumentality. It has pleased God to put the treasure of his power in earthen vessels. He has committed to us the gospel of reconciliation. In us and through us his eternal Spirit is seeking to preach this gospel to a lost world. We are to be the chariots in which He will ride on his missions of salvation. He will deign to think with our mind, to love with our heart, to weep with our eyes, and to speak with our voice. Then—"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of Him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation."

No wonder that each of Christ's disciples should become a propagandist. No wonder that the fishermen of Galilee startled the world by their power and their claims. They knew that Christ's cross held the secret of the world's renovation. He was King of kings and Lord of lords, and the least that they could do was to claim the whole world for Him. And, if we really believe we also shall become enthusiasts for Christ. His life will, to us, be the only life that is worth living, his death the only death that is worth preaching, and his smile the only heaven that is worth having.

Next to eternal life we feel that to us is the privilege of service. Christ's cross is first the altar of atonement, but it is next the altar of consecration, where we can offer our bodies as living sacrifices. And thanks be to God, when we do that we find it to be an altar that sanctifies the gift. A weary prince once deigned to enter a poor man's cottage. When he had departed the loyal peasant set aside the chair in which the prince had sat, and said that henceforth it should be reserved for him only. God has condescended to enter our souls. Shall we not consecrate our whole beings to Him—our time, our talents, our silver, our gold, our feet, our hands, our lips, and our will, and so cry:—

Take myself, and I will be,
Ever, only, ALL for THEE.

The very names which Christ has given to his followers imply service. They are the light of the world, and their mission is to shine for Him. They are the salt of the earth, and God expects them to conserve the good and destroy the bad. They are the witnesses of Christ, and silence on their part would be treason. They are stewards, and responsible for priceless treasures. They are servants, and have their place, their work, and their time allotted them by God.

The figures by which the Gospel is represented show its dependence upon human agency. It is seed and needs to be sown; it is a remedy, and needs to be applied; it is good news, and needs to be proclaimed; it is a message, and needs a messenger. Service has ever been

GOD'S GREAT CONDITION OF LIFE.

In the Paradise of the past unfallens Adam had to dress the garden and keep it. In the Paradise of the future we are told that God's servants will serve Him. This also is the law of the Church on earth. All talents, few or many, great or small, are to be used for Christ. To him that hath will be given, from him that hath not will be taken, even that which he hath. The very life of our soul, in a sense, depends upon our service. Just as the mind by thinking becomes more able to think, and the heart by loving becomes more able to love, so those who serve become more capable of service. Five talents all used will soon multiply into ten: but one talent unused will soon cease to exist. The most perilous mistake a church member can make, is to imagine that he can keep his life by saving it. The Master says "he that will lose his life shall keep it." The glory of a plant is the power it has of propagating its own life. The glory of the majestic eagle is not seen in its wings or its flight; but in its offspring, which it has nourished with its own life, and defended with its own strength. This glory in a spiritual sense God gives to redeemed souls. He has magnetised us that we may magnetise others. He has saved us that we may save others. A glory despaired of by angels is put within our reach, for he that winneth souls is wise, and they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.

This holy service is the Divine remedy for all Church diseases. Thoroughly applied it kills all discontent—it is a blessed cordial for wounded dignity, it silences captious snarling, compensates for slighted importance, and effectually operates upon the pockets of the selfish.

CO-OPERATION.

There must also be combination in service. Great and glorious harvests are being garnered by isolated workers. Probably we have no conception of the vast amount of good that is being done outside all organised Christianity. The very influence of one holy consecrated, though solitary, worker is beyond all calculation. But notwithstanding this, it is still of the greatest importance that we should work in concert with others. This is the Divine ideal. Christ said, "If two of you shall agree." The Apostles were "fellow-helpers in the truth." With one mind they strove together for the faith of the Gospel.

God has taught us the value of united service in the mechanism of the human hand. One finger can accomplish much. It can distinguish marble from painted wood, it can test the beating pulse, it can signal to a comrade, or point the lost traveller into the right path. But five fingers can do more than five times as much as one finger, yes, and more than fifty times or five hundred times as much. There is, indeed, hardly any limit to what they can do. It is so in Christian service. Fifty men banded together will do a thousand times more than fifty who work in cold isolation. In politics and commerce, combination is becoming the order of the day. This is, however, more marked in religion. Great Evangelical denominations, missionary societies, and philanthropic movements, testify to the power of concerted action. Our enthusiasm and strength reach their climax when we feel that

We are not divided,
All one body we,
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity.

SUNDAY CLOSING IN VENICE.

In former numbers of The Christian the story has been told of the rise and triumph of the movement for the closing of shops on the Lord's Day. A sequel to that has now to be given. The secretary of the movement was a certain Vittorio Ravagnan, the head salesman in a boot and shoe shop. His master objected to his holding that position, and called upon him to give it up. Instead of doing so, he gave up his situation.

Last week he opened a shop on his own account, and he has put up over the door, "To Sunday Repose." The press of Venice, just as it approved and supported the movement, is supporting the secretary's action, and wishes him "good fortune." Judging from the crowds of people who frequent his shop to congratulate him and to patronise him, the good wishes of the press are likely to be speedily realised. The bold plunge he made is meeting the reward it deserves.

CITY WORK GIRLS.—Mrs. Fisher asks us to state that Christian ladies are much needed to take part in half-hour services in work-rooms in the City, weekly or fortnightly. Address, care of the Hall-keeper, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

"ARE ALL TEACHERS?"

An inquiry of deep interest to many Christian workers appeared in The Christian of August 16, but it does not seem to have elicited wide response. The inquiry was framed thus:—

The Lord Jesus so spake that the people "hung upon Him for to hear Him." There are Bible-classes now and other meetings, which attract men, young and middle-aged, by scores and hundreds. There are others where it is difficult to gather together twenty, or even twelve, notwithstanding earnestness, zeal, Scriptural knowledge, and spiritual understanding in the leaders. Whence the difference?

Does not lack of power to keep a class together come from lack of a combination of natural power, cultivated power, and spiritual power? We are speaking now of the work of a true Christian, of one who, in some form or other, has the right to serve. But is not the form the service is to take sometimes self-chosen instead of God-chosen? We see a fellow-believer able to hold together a large class; we see the members blessed, and the teacher blessed, too, in being made a blessing.

Are we not too apt to think thus: "I have the same right to save; I might be the same blessing in the same way." We try, and we fail. Why? Often from lack of natural power of the right kind. And thus we come to our first point.

I. Lack of natural power. Natural power differs in kind, and God has generally adapted the particular kind we possess to the kind of work He intends us to do. The very lack of power in certain directions means probably for us added power in other ways. For instance, in a busy household a certain member may not have strength for the usual amount of outdoor work. If she had, she would not be of the same use in the house, as is soon discovered when a stronger one is put into her empty place.

God may have given naturally to one of our sisters that subtle force which leads and attracts, and yet is so difficult to define. This, when sanctified by his Spirit and consecrated to Him, enables her to be the means of blessing to, and to hold together, perhaps, a large class. But possibly the natural power given her would not adapt itself so well to a large class, or to individual dealing. Another is naturally fitted for either of these, but not for the first.

Do we not need humbly and gratefully to recognise what our natural gifts are, instead of, often from a mistaken conscientiousness, or from a false idea of what working faith really means, pushing ourselves, or allowing ourselves to be pushed, into that which we are unfitted for. Natural unfitness, however, stands for absolutely nothing when the call is truly from God, and not from a mistaken notion of duty.

The master workman has many tools, some of which are absolutely useless out of their own sphere, but both chisel and bradawl are necessary in their turns for the completion of the work.

Also let us remember that the pressure of certain kinds of work often takes away in whole, or in part, the capability for some other kinds, even when under other circumstances the latter could have been effected. When the pressure is removed, the power, lately exhausted in another direction, may return.

II. Our second point is, lack of cultivated power. Those endowed with a large share of natural power, which has been consecrated to the Lord, and to which He has graciously added spiritual power, are in danger of forgetting that God has also entrusted us with ability to cultivate power.

Combined spiritual and natural power have often carried the worker through difficulties, and she is apt to forget the necessity of increasing knowledge, of adhering to habits of painstaking study and thought. Hence comes, if not failure, certainly not the measure of success that might be. Here let us refer to the many little things involved in the taking of all possible pains—punctuality, a personal interest taken in each member of the class, manifested by the carefully-kept register and timely-paid visits.

III. Lastly, we speak of the lack of spiritual power. This scarcely comes within the range of our thought to-day, for we are dealing with the truly spiritual worker, who indeed casts herself on Christ for spiritual power. But how we need ever more power to pray for, and more faith to claim, the indwelling of that Spirit apart from whom all spiritual work is only failure!

WORK IN BUENOS AYRES.

Dear Sir,—Since the year 1851, in which Captain Allen Gardiner and his brave companions perished as martyrs of Jesus on the desolate Patagonian shore, the interest of Evangelical Christendom has gradually developed in the people of neglected South America. May I call the attention of your readers to the work with which the Lord has entrusted me in this city of Buenos Ayres?

The work carried on at the centre known as the "Boca Mission Hall and Schools" in English and Spanish comprises Sunday and week night services, Sunday-schools and day-schools. The attendants at the schools number between three and four hundred children. The Spanish day-school is entirely free, and has about two hundred and ninety pupils. This school is for boys only. We need such a school for native girls, but are unable to open this branch through lack of funds for enlargements and for teachers' salaries; were it possible to commence this branch between one and two hundred girls would at once seek admittance. Week by week we have at our Sunday-school, gathered to study the Word of God, a number of children who were but a short time back wandering about the streets.

This work was commenced in the year 1889, and has been continued at much personal sacrifice. In the month of June, 1893, a property was purchased, comprising a large audience hall, with seating capacity for over 600 persons, schoolrooms, and other adjoining buildings, together with the land on which the buildings stand, for the sum of about £2000. Rather more than half this sum has been paid off by local subscriptions, and by help from the South American Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States. The property has been deeded over to this Society, and will constitute a permanent footing for missionary work in this neighbourhood. The Boca section of the city is the very poorest and most abandoned.

Much opposition was at first met from the bigoted Romish priesthood, and from the general abject superstition and ignorance of the Spanish-speaking people; but for some months now the work has been characterised by which is gradually drawing both English and Spanish-speaking people to the Saviour.

The English day-school and Sunday-school have an attendance of from sixty to seventy. We have a flourishing Gospel Temperance Society, with a membership of 108, and a Saturday evening mutual improvement class for young men. Many persons, both in our English-speaking and Spanish congregations, profess to have found the Saviour, and are humbly and prayerfully seeking to follow Him. These are the beginnings of a great harvest in this neighbourhood. That precious fruit has already been gathered, the following incidents, out of many others, will show:—

A little girl who was sent to market one Sunday morning by her mother had to pass our Mission Hall on her way; hearing the children singing in Spanish, she stopped at the hall door to listen, and was invited to enter, which she did. After the Sunday-school was finished she received a Sunday-school lesson paper and a card containing the announcements of the various services. On arriving home she narrowly escaped being severely punished. After the scolding and threatening had ended she told her mother in detail where she had been and what she had heard and seen, and actually succeeded in persuading her mother to go that evening to our Spanish service. This took place about eighteen months ago; since then the mother has scarcely missed a single service. After this first evening the mother would regularly bring all her children with her to the meetings, and always send them to the Sunday-school. Later on she succeeded in persuading her husband and her aged mother to attend the Mission Hall also; one after another they have all (with the exception of their eldest son, who is seeking the Lord) yielded to the Saviour, and are now living lives which are bright examples to those around them.

A dear old lady of eighty-three years of age accepted the Gospel at the first service which she attended and has since been instrumental in bringing five of her own family to the Mission Hall, four of whom are now following Jesus. In this and in many other ways she has given abundant proof of the sincerity and earnestness of her profession.

Sermons have been preached against us from the pulpits of neighbouring Romish churches, and terrible threats have been denounced against us and against all who dare attend our services. This frightened the people to such an extent at first as to completely keep them away; so that for two or three months only three or four persons would come to the Spanish meetings, and often no one came. But after the first conversions the people have ceased to trouble about the Romish opposition; they now regularly endeavour to bring their friends with them.

I trust many may be led as the Lord's stewards, to enable us to carry on and to extend this work. We require about £800 to pay off all obligations on the new property, and about £12 per month more than the present regular income of the work for current expenses. Anything beyond these amounts would be devoted to enlargements for the purpose of starting the mission school for girls.—Very sincerely yours. William C. Morris.

CAPTURE OF AFRICAN POISON.

A missionary in British Central Africa thus describes the capture of a quantity of mwavé bark, a substance from which a poisonous potion is made by the native medicine men.

The day was warm, and I was anxious to get home and into the shade, when, within a mile of the station, I saw two flat baskets and two myani skins. The two teachers who were with me stopped, and if it were at all possible for a native's face to turn white theirs did so. With a tremor in their voice, they uttered the one significant word "mwavé." The baskets and skins were filled with the bark. Of course I stopped, having recognised the bark as soon as the boys, and was determined, if at all possible, it should all be taken to the mission station. A few yards in front were about twenty men and boys. One came forward and said he would go for the "Capitao." In a few minutes a stout, tall, muscular fellow appeared. He was more excited than his predecessor, as was shown by the quick heaving of his breast. They know the mission is dead against mwavé drinking, and so he was afraid. I told him and his men to go in front of me to the station, where I would talk the matter over. They refused, and I was determined to hold or destroy the mwavé should they attempt to take it away. He talked away until at last I declared "I had spoken." I had to put on a bold front, while, to tell the truth, I had to do my best to keep from showing my excitement. Here was I with two of our schoolboys, and there quite a number of men with spears, axes, and shields.

The capitao was the "sing-anga" (medicine man). As it would be a disgrace to him especially to lose his medicine or maukwala, and also to his men for having suffered it to be taken, I was afraid they might make a raid on me and seize it. I stood by it, and wouldn't give in, and at last the capitao and ten of his men went to fetch Simon (one of our station men). I sent one of the teachers for help. The sing-anga and his men no sooner returned, than they dispersed into the bush. I could see that they had been frightened, but did not know at what. I completed their scare by taking up the school-bell and ringing it as loud as possible. In a few minutes my assistant and men came running up. The mwavé carriers had seen their approach, and hence their hurried flight. I told my assistant to fire a couple of shots into the air to frighten the carriers, and after doing so we carried our prize to the station. All the natives were greatly pleased, and none more so than myself.

We opened up the two baboon skins (mwavé bark is always carried in these) and found a lot of mwavé bark, a little toy mortar, a hippo-tooth pestle for pulverising the bark, the two drinking cups, and the medicine stick for marking off the line which divides those who have to drink the mwavé from those who have not. There was also a thin strip of cloth, which my boys told me had been taken from a person who died from the effects of the poison. I weighed the bark, and found there were 34lb.—no small quantity, sufficient to kill many people. It is a deadly poison, and kills people within an hour and a-half after drinking it. Birds die if they eat the leaves, and insects if they suck the flower. The Angoni pay large prices in cattle or slaves to those who bring them the mwavé. It is said to come from the Blantyre district, but few natives know the tree. I felt glad I had saved the lives of some poor people, if not altogether, at least for some time.

NATIONAL PROTESTANT CONGRESS.

The National Protestant Congress was held last week at Edinburgh, and occasioned a considerable migration of earnest Protestants across the Border. Scottish friends also rallied in large numbers, and the meetings on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday were well attended.

The proceedings opened on the Monday evening, when a conversazione and public meeting were held in the Free Assembly Hall. The delegates were welcomed by Sir William Muir, who, in a brief address, said:—"We look confidently to our meeting as fitted to consolidate and extend the pure profession of Christianity amongst us. We must 'earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints' in all its purity and in all its truth. We must fight manfully against the open attacks of the Roman Church, and not less manfully against the subtle and more dangerous attacks from within, unveiling their action and bringing their tendencies to light. Yet, in doing so I would urge not only candour and zeal, but caution, justice, and consideration. Let care be taken that not a word be said or imputation made that has not been tested or could in any way be justly construed as failing in truth and charity." Addresses were delivered by Revs. E. C. Britton, Dr. J. Alison, R. S. Balfour, Dr. T. Whitelaw, and T. H. Sparshott on the unity and continuity of the Church of Christ.

TUESDAY.

On Tuesday morning Mr. E. A. Stuart Gray, president of the Scottish Reformation Society, occupied the chair. Dr. Alexander Whyte delivered an able address on "Spiritual Religion Necessary to the Success of the Protestant Movement, and a Preservative against Popery and Infidelity." Spiritual religion, he said, simply meant a religion which had the Holy Spirit in every part of it, as breathed into the heart of all the regenerate; so that spiritual religion simply meant holy religion. There could be no true religion without a deep sense of sin. There are different experiences of sin, and there may be a sense of sin, even power over sin, without a spiritual conception of it. Then spiritual religion demands a spiritual view of Christ. The people of Capernaum, full of carnality, followed Christ for the bread they hoped to get, Peter for the gift of eternal life. With all his rash impulsiveness, his quick temper, his impatience, he saw Christ in a spiritual light. Again, true religion means spiritual worship. There was a great distinction between them and their Roman Catholic brethren. The difference was between their ways of worship—the way they taught their people to worship God. Protestants held the spirituality of all true worship, and the most spiritual exercise and experience on this side the Great White Throne was prayer. He spoke not of family prayer, not of congress prayer, not of pulpit prayer, but of prayer in private—in their closets.

Other speakers were Revs. R. Craig, Dr. C. H. Wright (Liverpool), G. Hanson (Dublin), and Dr. J. Smith (Edinburgh). The last-named dwelt on the "Spirituality of the Reformers, and Recent Aspersions on their Character." The Reformation movement remained a central spring in the life of the Church, because in essence it was neither political, nor humanitarian, nor philosophical, nor ecclesiastical, but was primarily and fundamentally spiritual. Glancing at the spread of Ritualism in the Church of England—at which they in Scotland were looking with wonder and astonishment—he said his conviction was that the whole movement was one of those great movements in the wisdom of man which, in certain crises of the kingdom of God, had bulked so large and come to so little.

Lieut.-Colonel Alves presided in the afternoon, when Dr. Elder Cumming introduced the subject, "God's Word, the sole infallible rule; God the Holy Spirit, the sole infallible Guide." The Church of Rome, he argued, had never interpreted the Bible as a whole, and had declined to be a guide to its interpretation at all. If, he went on, they desired to find infallibility it lay in God alone, in what He had said, in what He had done. The Book of God was infallible, as also was the Spirit of God; but, alas, their interpretation of the Book, and their understanding of the Spirit's guidance, must ever be open to possible error; and it was in that department exactly that the Church of Rome went wrong. Seeking to make man infallible she dishonoured God, robbed Him of his glory, and usurped his place.

Professor Macklin held that the Old Testament and the New are one revelation, united and inseparable, perfect and infallible, and the only infallible standard of faith and morals to mankind. He had more fear for Protestants meddling with the Bible than all the power of Rome. Rev. John Urquhart spoke on the confirmation of the Word of God by recent archæological discoveries, pointing out how the pick and spade in the East had established positions which unbelief had called in question, and how fresh accessions of information gathered from recovered documents and monuments had put an end to many difficulties and solved discrepancies which had long been the stock-in-trade of such as disparage the Bible. The address was characterised by much force, and was listened to with peculiar interest.

Lieut.-Colonel Myles Sandys, M.P., occupied the chair in the evening, when Canon Woodward spoke of the Ritualistic movement in England, being followed by Rev. W. Lancelot Holland as to the progress of the same tendency in Scotland. Among the other speakers were Revs. George Wilson (North Merchiston Parish Church), and R. Thomson (Ladywell), who gave an account of what took place in what he called the High Church of Glasgow lately week, on the occasion of the Synod meeting service. On that occasion his spirit was so stirred within him that he felt tempted to emulate the example of Jenny Geddes. He bade Scotchmen not stand this Ritualism which is creeping in upon them, but to turn the unfaithful ministers "head and heels out."

WEDNESDAY.

On Wednesday morning Professor Calderwood, who presided, said that while there was no desire to limit the religious liberty of others, error must be boldly exposed. The first speaker was Rev. Dr. Wright, of Liverpool, who sketched the rise and progress of Ritualism, saying by the way that the bishops as a body had done all they could to screen the Ritualists. "Power over the Lord's body" is now claimed as "the distinctive glory of the Catholic Church." Liguori explains that this means that the Lord Jesus is obedient to his priests on earth, that He comes down upon the altar at their call, is there without motion, is carried about at their will. But, vast as are the gains obtained by the Ritualists, they want much more. They now cry out for a revision of the Book of Common Prayer. They condemn its ceremonial. They call attention to the omission of rubrics directing the use of lighted candles, of incense, of crossings, of prayers for the dead, of mixing the wine with water; and want "the comfortable words" either struck out as not needed after the priest's absolution, or transferred till after consecration, that they may be regarded as the voice of Christ present at the altar. We must unsheathe again the Sword of the Spirit—the Word of God. That, if we use it right, will repel the foe. We have lost much, but all can be regained if we go forth in the might of heaven, and with the Bible in our houses, our hands, our hearts, and memories.

Rev. Dr. Thomas Smith observed that it was the late Dr. Horatius Bonar who, in the London Record, first showed the people of England the danger of the "Tracts for the Times." Rev. Dr. Kerr, Glasgow, next gave an address on "The Scriptural Doctrines violated by Ritualism." After describing the system criticised, he maintained that the great Scriptural principle which alone is fitted to protect the Church of Christ from Ritualism and Romanism is that nothing shall be admitted into the worship of God which is not required in the Word of God. If the Protestant Churches of the land are to be delivered from the pro-Romish influences at work, this principle, which rejects all forms and ceremonies which have no Scripture warrant, must be again fearlessly enforced.

Dr. McEwan, John Knox's Free Church, held that these words struck the keynote of what the Congress desired to maintain. He had long held that until the Churches come back to the great commission of their Saviour, and conduct worship and doctrine according thereto, they will never get rectified in regard to these evils. Professor Lindsay and Revs. Jacob Primmer and M. Mackaskill also spoke.

The topic in the afternoon, when Mr. W. C. Maughan, chairman of the Scottish Protestant Alliance, presided, was "The Papacy," on which Professor Orr was the first speaker, dealing in particular with "Rome's Substitutes for the Word of God." He said that of the general policy of the Romish Church in regard to the Scriptures there could be no doubt; it amounted to the virtual displacement of the living word of God to make room for something else. For what? Rome's own catechisms, text-books, and manuals of devotion, which were put in place of the Scriptures; but no books of devotion, he argued, could ever take the place of the living Word of God. Nothing was clearer than that in the Catholic view the Church displaced the Bible, and he contended that it was the first duty of Protestant churches to replace the Word of God in the supreme position of authority from which the Roman Church had dethroned it.

Rev. G. Hanson, of Rathgar, Dublin, dealt with the idolatry and intolerance of the Church of Rome. Mentioning the exaltation of Mary, he said that she increases, and Christ decreases, steadily in Roman Catholic teaching. As to Rome's intolerance, he thought that had been proved by her history. In closing, he prayed God the day would never come when education in Ireland would be denominationalised.

In the evening Lord Kinnaird presided. Mr. J. A. Campbell, M.P., in a paper on "Papal Aggressions and Parliamentary Concessions to the Papacy," observed that if none but a Protestant was to be Sovereign, it was only reasonable that the high offices of State should also be filled by Protestants. With the head of our State under the control of Rome, our liberties, civil and religious, would not be safe.

Mr. B. Nicholson (London) gave a paper on "The Propriety of Forming a Protestant Party in the House of Commons," which, he said, could not be better evidenced than by reference to a few of the measures which had been brought under the consideration of the House during the past few years. Subsequently Canon O'Connor spoke of the "Political Claims and Social Operations of the Papacy, including its monastic and conventual institutions." Religious equality, he said, was a very precious thing when they got religious equality. They would never have equality between two religions until they first made the religions equal.

THURSDAY.

At the concluding meeting, on Thursday, presided over by Lord Overtoun, it was announced that next year's Congress will be held at Preston. Dr. H. Grattan Guinness read a paper on "The Protestant Outlook in the Light of Scripture and Present Facts." He pointed to the material growth and increase of the Protestant powers, and the spiritual life of Protestantism as evinced by its aggressive zeal. At the same time, among the discouraging facts he noted the Romeward movement of the Church of England. Archdeacon Farrar said, and he ought to know, that in twenty years, if things went on at the present rate, the Church of England would be Romish in everything but name. But, he asked, was the Romanised Church of England likely to remain the Established Church of England? Disestablishment would be one of the outcomes of the triumph of rationalism, and, when set free, those churches that have Romish tendencies would in some form or other join the Church of Rome. Rome was irreformable, and her doom was clearly revealed; and if the National Church of England would return to her, she would share her guilt and become a partaker in her downfall.

Dr. John M'Ewan delivered an address on "The Opportunities and Responsibilities of the Ministry and the Churches."

In the afternoon and evening, in connection with the Scottish Women's Protestant Union, meetings were held in the Free Assembly Hall. At the afternoon meeting, which was for women only, papers were read on "The Danger of Entrusting the Education of Young Ladies to the Influences of Conventual Establishments," and on "The Importance of Home Training."

THE PRESS IN FRANCE.—It will be in the memory of many that less than a year ago, the weekly paper Le Signal was transformed into a daily publication, to supply the need of a wholesome journal designed to view current events from the Protestant standpoint. MM. E. Reveilland and A. de Rougemont have stood by the enterprise with commendable courage and zeal, and it is hoped that the venture will soon be an assured success. Much prejudice has been encountered, and great exertions have been required to make the paper known throughout the scattered Protestant community of France. We are glad to observe that pasteurs are interesting themselves more generally in the undertaking. At a meeting in the Temple at Passy a few days ago, it was decided to make an urgent appeal to the Protestants of France to support the enterprise.

CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION.

Once more Christmas casts shadows on before, and once more a reminder is furnished to our readers of an organisation peculiarly calculated to meet the needs of Christian workers desiring to make the season one of widespread seed-sowing. "There are so many whom one would like to reach at Christmas and the New Year!" is the exclamation of numbers, beset by a multiplicity of claims, or debarred by weakness from following up manifold opportunities of influence; "how shall I get through my Christmas letters?" How meet district and parish claims, and convey the message to many whom only at Christmas one can approach with season access?

To this problem a solution is furnished by the catalogue of the Christmas Letter Mission. Letters suitable for distribution among all classes—rich and poor, sick and well, young and old—are ready to hand, bright with illustrations, and conveying with cheery good wishes the Gospel message of life and peace in happy anecdotal form. Letters for postmen, railway men, cab, tram-car, and omnibus men, supplement those for general use, adapted for all kinds of parochial and district distribution. Letters for personal friends, for mothers, for school children, for infants, for the weak in mind, for Bible and communicant classes, for nurses, and for the convalescent, only need a signature to convert them into an individual appeal and token of remembrance from the sender. Nor must we leave out another departure of the Mission, a "Nothing to Nobody" letter, specially intended for isolated and neglected ones. Embossed letters for the blind complete the catalogue.

The returns of last season's work represent a distribution of 563,000 letters in the English language alone, thus raising the record of disseminations, since the inauguration of the Mission in 1871, to an approximate total of seven millions and three-quarters. The French and Italian branches report a distribution of 9000 and 11,500 respectively. America and Germany have for some years worked independently. In addition, the cheap gift-book issue has had wide recognition, upwards of 30,000 of these kindly tokens, adapted for all classes, having been, during the last Christmas season, circulated in friendly harmony with the Christmas letters and cards distributions.

The recently-issued report gives interesting details of the world-wide distributions carried out through the 138 secretaries of the Mission itself. For one extract only can we find space. It is gathered from the record of a distribution to tram-car and omnibus men, carried out by a City missionary:—"Tram-driver D—— accepted a letter. 'That Christmas letter was a grand one, Mr. F——. I have had one from you for the last five years, but that last one did the business for me. I was made that miserable that out of necessity I cried to God for mercy, and was ld on, step by step like, till I can now say that, through mercy and by what Christ has done for me, I have a good hope of one day going to heaven. Well, I sent that letter to a friend of mine in Whitechapel, and he was made as miserable as I was, and he was constrained to give up an evil life. Then he sent the same letter to his ungodly son in America, and again the letter was a power for good. First, he was much offended; then, after some weeks, he wrote home again, stating that he could no longer remain indifferent about his salvation, and since he has written to say that life, light, and joy had come in, which has spoiled him for the world and sin.' Other letters were sent to India, Ireland, and elsewhere, and in the Great Day to come I trust many will come from the east, and west, and afar off, and join in the everlasting song of Moses and the Lamb, through the blessing given through the many Christmas letters."

Help in the work will be most thankfully welcomed. All offers of co-operation, whether by the supply of hospitals, and other institutions, with the "one letter in the year" so eagerly longed for, or by pecuniary help, should be addressed to Miss E. Steele Elliott (Hon. Sec. and Treasurer), 66, Mildmay-park, N., who will furnish all information. The printers, Messrs. Hazell, Watson, and Viney, 1, Creed-lane, E.C., will send to any applicant catalogues of the letters, Christmas cards, and envelopes, and other publications of the Mission. A wider scattering of these bright letters and cards would mean a happier Christmas in many a home.

Sabbath Desecration in India.

"By ORDER."

My Dear Sir,—May I ask the readers of The Christian who reverence the Lord's Day to pray for its better observance in India? It is sad to see even Hindoos and Mohammedans engaged in business and pleasure on the Lord's Day, the same as on other days of the week. It is far sadder to see the majority of the European residents of India robbing God by the desecration of his day. With this we who have lived in India for many years have become sadly familiar. It is, however, a new thing for this desecration of the day to be both sanctioned and recommended by authority. This, however, I am sorry to say, is now the case at the station at which I live. And I fear that the order to which I call the attention of God's people, being now sanctioned by the Commander-in-Chief, may soon be extended to other stations than Agra, unless means are used to prevent it.

On Saturday, August 4, 1894, the following appeared in the battalion orders:—

SUNDAYS.—Colonel Hart removes all restrictions upon games being played by soldiers on Sundays, both indoors and out of doors, in the 1st Battalion East Surrey Regiment. The great majority of opinions, in this trying climate at least, are distinctly in favour of this wholesome liberty on Sundays. The custom has long been enjoyed in civil life, and there is no military regulation against it.

The removal of the restriction in this Battalion is not to be a cause of any interference with the right of any to abstain from games on Sundays if he choose. At the same time, the right of others to enjoy themselves in this way on Sunday is not to be gainsaid. By Order.

The Christian men in the regiment called my attention to this order, and after having called the attention of the other missionaries of the station to it, I sent a copy to the Bishop of Lucknow, suggesting that it would be well to call the attention of the Commander-in-Chief to it.

This he kindly did. In reply, H. E. the Commander-in-Chief stated that he saw no reason to interfere with the order as such, though he did not approve of the wording of the order. Hence by order of the Commander-in-Chief the wording was altered as follows:—

Battalion Order, September 1.

Sundays.—By desire of H. E. the Commander-in-Chief in India, Colonel Hart is glad to add to his Battalion Order No. 7, of August 4, 1894, the following words:—Outdoor games are not to be played on Sundays during the hours of Divine service or in the neighbourhood of places of worship or of school-rooms in which services are being held.

As a bazaar preacher I have been accustomed to refer to the observance of the Lord's Day by Christians all over the world as one evidence of the reality of the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. I fear that if things go on as they appear to have done for the last few years, I shall lack any such argument, at least as far as Agra is concerned. A year ago, at a meeting of the Agra Club, it was decided to open it for billiards and card-playing on the Lord's Day. As a protest the chaplain and two prominent members withdrew from the club. The protest, I fear, though nobly made, has had little or no effect. The Lord's Day seems to be the favourite day with young officers and others for pig-sticking and other sports. Can we wonder that, especially in large cantonment stations, where drunkenness and lust are added to the desecration of the Lord's Day by the representatives of a so-called Christian people, the progress of Christianity amongst Hindoos and Mohammedans is so slow? I know of no large cantonment station in India where it has been otherwise. Surely much prayer should be offered for our own countrymen in India, as well as, and as a means to, the conversion of Hindoos and Mohammedans there.

I am glad to add that although By Order games on Sundays are sanctioned and encouraged, at present the sentiment, even of many of the non-Christian soldiers of the regiment, is against it. Many men who do not choose to attend the House of God yet fear to desecrate the Lord's Day by playing games. It is a curious coincidence that on both occasions when the orders referred to were issued, in the same page orders were issued for the parade-service. To some of us it seems most inconsistent, first to order the men to parade for Divine service, and then in the same list of orders recommend them to spend the day in indoor or outdoor games. However, perhaps, it is not more inconsistent than to provide, first a canteen, where facilities are given for men to get drunk if they choose, and then pay temperance advocates to try to encourage the men not to drink.

In conclusion, I am glad to state that some few Christian people in India have lately started a Lord's Day Union for India, of which the Rev. F.W. Warne, of Calcutta, is secretary, and that by this union it has been suggested that on Sunday, September 16th, special sermons should be preached throughout India and Burmah, on the observance of the Lord's Day.—Yours, in Christ's service,

J. G. Potter.

SERMONS—SOCIAL QUESTIONS.

The October issue of Evangelical Christendom gives some account of a discussion on "The Social Question and the Sermon" at the Evangelical Social Congress at Frankfort-on-the-Main. In a lecture opening up the subject, Professor D. Cremer, of Greifswald, put forth the following propositions:—(1) It is in opposition to the character of the Gospel, and to the aim of preaching, to make the social question, from its economic political side, the subject of the sermon. (2) Nevertheless, the sermon cannot pass by the Social Question, because the Gospel is the foundation of all peace, of all power to do, and of all power to bear. (3) Christianity verifies its social significance in that it is congregational, and that in and through this congregation—the Church—it has proved itself unequally as a social power in the history of the world. Hence Evangelical preaching cannot—albeit the necessarily individual decision for or against Christ—agree to treat Christianity only as a personal affair, and to keep silence as to its significance for the community. (4) Preaching, therefore, is to maintain before the Church that the Redemption of Christ is world-redemption, and that each can only believe it and receive it in that he believes for others, and so begins to live his life in the love which applies to others what he through faith applies to himself. (5) In love, a Christian knows that all that he has, is, and can be, should be used as a blessing to others. Therein is the way pointed out, in which preaching is to testify concerning labour, and that which labour ennobles, concerning gain and possession, concerning rights and responsibilities. (6) Therein will Evangelical preaching become a powerful preaching of repentance; in that it opens the eyes of the blind to the worthlessness of a life not lived in love, to our guiltiness concerning that which we have not actually done to the account that we must render for others. It will bring the knowledge that each man's worth is according to his power of loving, and that with a love that embraces the time and eternity of other souls.

In the debate which followed, Dr. Stöcker said:—"What I most beseech God for is the gift of preaching to the people. We so often give the people theological trains of thought which interest us at college. They do not interest people in the least. Our sermon should be not only a feat, but a battle; it should be no firework. So often 'nothing' is preached, no reality offered to the people. We must realise the things of faith. I think the sermon may treat individually the definite needs of the time. We have to do with social conditions which make poverty a necessity. In this case it is not enough to warn individuals, we must rather preach against such conditions, so that it may be heard from throne to hut. When the labourer must pay a third part of his wage for his dwelling, we must raise our voice against it. James said:—'The hire of the labourers which is kept back by fraud crieth to heaven.' What James did we also may do, but not one-sidedly. We must not adhere only to a series of social texts. We must not preach against one grievance only. We must also preach against revolution and overthrow."

After discussion, a resolution was passed which stated:—"The Evangelical sermon is, and must remain, in the first place a preaching of faith; it has, however, the manifest right, on the frontier between Christian moral teaching and existing social conditions, at times to rebuke popular evils, even to point out to the best of the preacher's knowledge the way for improvement, without, however, taking a party attitude in the economic, technical, and organisational points of controversy."

THE WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION, we are requested to state, has no territorial limits, and is quite distinct from the "Scottish Women's Protestant Union," which is the auxiliary of the Scottish Reformation Society.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 28.—ZECHARIAH XI.

Judgment on the Rulers (1-3).—Lebanon with its cedars, and Bashan with its oaks, here stand for the princes and nobles. Their position had been so often used for the oppression of others that they would be exposed to the severest judgments of God. The storm that passes over the bending reed smites the cedar to the ground. Shepherds and lions refer alike to the ruling classes. For "pride of Jordan," see Jer. xii. 5.

Judgment on the People (4-6).—They resembled a flock whom their owner had resolved to slay. A million Jews died at the fall of Jerusalem, and so many were sold into slavery that the markets were glutted. Throughout the ages the Jews have been made a spoil by peoples and monarchs in every land whither they have come.

Rejection of the Messiah (7-9).—Christ, represented by the prophet, becomes the shepherd, for a brief interval, of this doomed flock, and would have saved the whole of it if they had not rejected Him. It was a poor, that is, a miserable, or needy (see R.V.) flock, but it would have none of Him. The two staves represent God's ideal, Beauty, i.e., God would have made them fair; Bands, i.e., God would have linked them into a brotherhood, but they would not. (8) The three shepherds cut off in one month may represent the destruction of prophets, priests, and magistrates, in the fall of Jerusalem. (9) These words received an awful fulfilment in the fall of Jerusalem, and in the sufferings of the Jewish people since.

Breaking of the Staves (10-17).—This was no doubt actually done by Zechariah as an act symbolic of a change in God's dealings with his people from the time that they rejected and sold the Messiah. It would seem that there was a handful, principally of the lower classes, that gathered round Zechariah, as afterwards round the Lord, and read the Divine intention. (12) The rulers showed their appreciation of Zechariah, as the Jews afterwards of Christ, by offering the price of a mangled slave (Ex. xxi. 32; Matt. xxvi. 15). (13) It is thought that the potter is Jehovah, whose house the temple was, but some translators render it "the treasury" (see R.V. mar., Matt. xxvii. 6). (16) This is supposed to refer primarily to the tyranny of Roman Emperors and others, and ultimately to the Anti-christ.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 29.—ZECHARIAH XII.

The Destruction of Jerusalem's Foes (1-6).—"Burden" indicates the gravity of the following announcements. The introductory words about the might of God show He is well able to execute the predictions which follow. (2) These words must refer to events yet future, and which shall take place after the Jews have been restored to their own land. The people were to be like cups of strong drink, the taking of which causes a man to reel. "Burdensome stone" means that those who lift it are crushed beneath it. (4) God always takes the part of his people; his eyes lovingly watch over them. (5) The leaders of the people shall recognise that the strength of the inhabitants of Jerusalem is in the Lord their God. (6) A leader has every reason to rejoice when his soldiers, like Cromwell's Ironsides, are deeply religious. God is on the side, not of strong, but of devout battalions.

The Deliverance of Israel (7-14).—The tents, i.e., the rural population, are saved first, that the deliverance of the whole people may be evidently God's work. (8) Ponder these words, O Christian workers. When God is before thee, the feeblest becomes strong as the hero of Israel. (10) After their deliverance will come their conversion, and this will be due to an especial outpouring of the Spirit. The age that began with Pentecost will close with one. The first work of the Spirit on the conscience is conviction produced at the foot of the cross (Rev. i. 6). (11) Referring to the death of Josiah (2 Kings xxiii.). (12) Nathan and Shimei were descendants of David and Levi respectively, and we infer, therefore, that the national mourning must include all classes, from the highest to the lowest.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 30.—ZECHARIAH XIII.

The Cleansing of the People (1-6). — Whenever there is conviction, there is cleansing. Calvary and Pentecost lie close together,. Sin as towards God, needing justification; uncleanness, the evil of the heart, demanding sanctification. (2) This extirpation of idols, and exorcism of the unclean spirit, have their counterparts in the experience of the soul. (3) This is a strong way of saying that false prophesying will be impossible in the blessed day when the Jews shall turn to Christ. If any essay it, his very parents will restrain him, and be the first to thrust him through. (4) The sackcloth dress of the prophet would never be worn. (5, 6) The fear of the righteous indignation of the people against false prophets would be so overmastering, that a man would rather be counted a slave than a prophet. Even the friends of one who attempted to prophesy would wound him in the intensity of their zeal against a race of men so intimately connected with the worst days of Israel's degeneracy.

The Death of the Saviour (7-9).—This begins another prophecy applied by Christ to Himself (Matt. xxvi. 31). In the sword God's justice is personified. Our Lord was not only a shepherd appointed by God, therefore my, but also the fellow, equal, associate, of Jehovah. The flock was indeed scattered after the crucifixion, but the hand of God interposed to protect Christ's followers. (8) We cannot believe that a third of the Jewish people has been gathered in. Perhaps more are being saved than we know, and certainly when the full purpose of God is accomplished they will be. (9) Mind that trial has its perfect work. It will not in itself convert, but it is often the occasion which the Holy Spirit uses for his special dealing with the soul. Note the cry of the people, and the answer of Jehovah.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31.—ZECHARIAH XIV.

The Last Day of Jerusalem's Trouble (1-11).—These words must point to events yet future. Anti-christ shall yet exert a marvellous power in gathering the nations to one last stand against the Son of God, the issue of which will be definitely determined at Jerusalem. (3) How often God delays his deliverance until the day appears lost. (4) So the angel said it would be (Acts i. 11). The cleaving mountain shall make a way for the people to escape; as, at the commencement of their history, did the cleaving waters of the Red Sea. (5) The earthquake of Uzziah's reign is used as a type of that great convulsion which shall open the way to Azal, which is thought to have been Ashkelon on the coast. It is thought by some that this means that a vast natural canal would be made between the waters of the Mediterranean and those of the Dead Sea, so that the commerce of the world might pass right up to the valley of the Jordan and the Arabian Gulf. (7) That day shall be unique. Days that begin in obscurity, often end in golden sunset hues. (9) The recognition of God as King of the earth is certain. (10) The plain from Geba to Rimmon is that of the Jordan, the bed of which is a great depression. All the land south of Jerusalem would be reduced to that level; and, on the other hand, the city itself would be elevated, so that her glory would be visible from afar, and filled with men, and never again swept by invasion. Some of this may be metaphorical.

The Destiny of the Foes and Friends of Israel (12-21).—It is a terrible thing to enter into conflict with God's people. Judgment and plague shall consume the enemy and the avenger; but it is useless to lay hold on the hands of neighbour and friend if you refuse the hand of God. Let us remember the fate of Pharaoh and his land, and the spoils of Sennacherib that fell to the people of Hezekiah's time. (16) It is not necessary to expect a literal re-establishment of the Jewish feasts, but simply that the nations of the world will be imbued with love and reverence to the King of the Jews. (18) The absence of rain would be no punishment to Egypt, because it depends on the Nile, and is independent of the clouds, but that land would not be exempt from judgment. (20) The bells of the horses would be inscribed with the same holy legend as stood on the crown of the High Priest, and the common vessels of household use would be deemed as sacred as the altar bowls. Every man would be a priest, and every act a sacrifice. Oh, that the bells that ring to daily duty might chime melodiously, calling to consecration and priestly service!

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 1.—MALACHI I.

God's Special Love to Israel (1-5).—Though Esau was Jacob's brother, Israel was preferred. Hated, not really, but in comparison. There was no arbitrary caprice in God's choice—the difference in the men determined it. Esau was satisfied to found a line of dukes; Jacob sought the spiritual and unseen. The land of Edom is an utter desolation to this day, whilst Canaan shall yet abound in fruitfulness.

The Sins of the Priests (6-14).—There had been sad declension since the days of Ezra; those who should have been leaders in piety were first in despising his Name. (7) They offered the inferior parts of the sacrifices, and the worst of their herds and flocks, treating God as they would not dare to do their earthly ruler. Just as in our day professing Christians will pay more income-tax than they give to the cause of God, and offer for his service what they would not give their friends. (9) Other sacrifices than they were wont to give were needed ere God would turn to them. (10) The service of the Temple was perfunctory; there was no love in it, so much service for so much pay. (11) Therefore God was about to turn from his people, and seek a worthier priesthood amongst the Gentiles (John iii. 24). (14) We are all in danger of the sin charged home on Israel. We are satisfied to bring to Him the torn, the lame, and the sick, the scraps of our time, the bad halfpennies of our money, the moments which are unclaimed by friendship or business; habits which can only be cured by remembering the greatness of our King.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 2.—MALACHI II.

The Requiting of the Priests (1-9).—When we will not lay God's teachings to heart He increases the pressure of trouble and judgment. (3) The priests would be mown down at their altars, and their bodies borne off as they carried away the offal of their sacrifices. Amid judgment, God always distinguishes his true servants, and saves them in the hour of trial. (4) These are beautiful words for us all who are called to minister as priests to God. This covenant was made with the house of Levi because of the prompt godly action of Phinchas (Num. xxv. 11-13), and whenever we dare to sacrifice all for God, walking with Him in peace and equity, and lifting up a standard against iniquity, God enters into covenant with us, our life and peace are assured. (7) We are to speak for God to men, and for men to God.

Heathen Intermarriage Forbidden (10-17).—The restored Jews intermarried with the heathen around, thus profaning the ancient covenant in Ezra ix., by which Jehovah sought to keep the people for Himself. Ezra and Nehemiah had withstood these mixed alliances, now Malachi takes up the protest. His point is that in acting thus each Jew was injuring the commonwealth, and dealing treacherously against his brethren. (13) Whilst they were thus violating their allegiance to Jehovah they wept at his altars, but of what value were such tears? This was the second time they had acted thus (Ezra ix. 10). (14) God is witness of all infidelity. (15) In Eden, though God could have made many wives for Adam, He created one only because He desired a godly seed. Polygamy has always produced misery in the home. Therefore Malachi protested against the concubinage which was becoming a growing evil in his time. (16) God never divorces the soul He has taken into marriage union with Himself. Read "covereth his garment with violence" (R.V.), garment is the word of conjugal relationship. By divorcing their wives, or by taking other women in addition to them, the Jews were marring the covenant of wedlock with harshness, cruelty, and bitter sorrow. God is on the side of the wives that suffer agonies from their husbands' infidelities.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3.—MALACHI III.

The Advent of the Messiah (1-6).—These words were fulfilled on the day when, all unnoticed, Joseph and Mary, bearing the precious babe, entered into the Temple to present Him (Luke ii.). But there is a sense in which the Lord is perpetually coming to the temple of the heart. As John the Baptist announced Him, so does conviction prepare the way for his reception. But He often steals into us unperceived, and straightway begins a work of renewal and refining. (3) The sons of Levi always undergo the first and deepest cleansing, because they so powerfully influence others. Look to it, child of God, that thou be not taken unawares. (4) Oh for the past blessedness, the soul cries. This too, is the aim of thy Lord's dealings. (6) God's changelessness in his promises and threatenings is a theme for praise. Were He not steadfast in his loving purposes, we might be consumed in a moment by his hot anger for some indiscretion.

Tithes for the Storehouse (7-12).—Men withhold their property from philanthropic and religious uses, but in the end they lose by it. God's curse in a year may deplete the treasuries filled wrongfully, and from which nothing is given for the extension of his kingdom and the relief of human suffering. On the other hand, when the tithes are properly rendered, whether by an individual or a church, there will be no stint in the blessing which will be measured out. Try it, not for the sake of what you may make, but for the glory of God and since it is right, and there will be an immediate experience of the happiness and delightsomeness of this promise.

The Lord's Jewels (13-18).—In those dark days there were a faithful few. Whilst the air was full of complaint, they swerved not in their allegiance. The gainsayers mistook outward rites for inward holiness, and complained that religiousness had done so little for them. (16) The children of God spake of Him as they who loved Him, and God noticed it, and the book of remembrance was written, and they were accounted as a peculiar treasure, to be carefully guarded and spared in the evil day.

THE STRANGERS' REST.—The workers are rejoicing in fresh tokens of blessing. On Sunday week, four seamen definitely decided for Christ in the English meetings, while in the Swedish and other meetings blessing was also granted. During the time of meeting a number of men entered the shop, some seeking to sign the pledge, and heard words whereby they might be saved; others seeking the Scriptures in various languages, and others in need of temporal help such as food and shelter, for which tickets were as far as possible were also supplied.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 4.

JESUS, LORD OF THE SABBATH.—Mark ii. 23-28; iii. 1-5.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Mark ii. 28.

THE Golden Text indicates the object of this lesson. Both incidents took place on the Sabbath day—one in the cornfields, outside Capernaum, the other in the synagogue within the city. There are two ways of destroying the Sabbath. The first is by ignoring it altogether, by deliberate disobedience to God's law concerning it, by making it purely an occasion for worldly pleasure. This is the tendency of to-day, as seen in the Sunday excursions, and in the increasing demand for Sunday amusements. But the Sabbath may be as effectually destroyed by adding to the command of God numerous interpretations, which would make the most innocent things to be sinful. This was done by the Pharisees, so that obedience to their injunctions made the Sabbath a burden rather than a rest—a bondage rather than a delight. This spirit has not been entirely absent even in modern days. Against both these evils this lesson warns us. The use which Jesus made of the Sabbath corrects the first; the words of Jesus to the Pharisees correct the second.

SABBATH IN THE CORNFIELDS (ii. 23-28).—How came He there? Let none abuse his example and say that they, too, will forsake the house of God, and offer their worship in the temple of nature. For He and his disciples were on their way to or from the Synagogue for morning service. Matt. xii. 1 tells us that his disciples were hungry. The Rabbinical law forbade any eating before Sabbath morning service, except in case of sickness, as the Ritualists of to-day command an early and fasting communion. If our Lord was on his way to the Synagogue, then his defence of his disciples showed that He recognised no authority in the Rabbinical requirement. But that which Jesus defended shocked the Pharisees (24). What crime had the disciples committed? The law sanctioned their plucking the ears of corn (Deut. xxiii. 25); but in the judgment of the Pharisees this was reaping, and to rub the corn in their hands was threshing. There was, therefore, a double offence against the Sabbath Day. It was by such foolish additions to the Word of God that the true Sabbath-keeping was lost.

An incident in the life of David is mentioned by Jesus as a justification of the conduct of the disciples. The story is told in 1 Sam. xxi. 1-6.

SABBATH IN THE SYNAGOGUE (iii. 1-5).—The example of Jesus teaches us that no one makes a proper use of the Sabbath who does not spend it in learning God's will, and in fellowship with God and his people. Sabbaths are precious opportunities, of which God gives us fifty-two every year. He who remains ignorant and unsaved is without excuse.

The house of God has always attracted the afflicted ones. Hence the presence of the man with the withered hand (1). Perhaps he had heard of the miracles of Jesus, and was in the Synagogue in hope of being healed by Him. He is a type of many whose right hand is withered, and whose usefulness is therefore impaired. Such can be found in every house of worship to-day.

Others were there whose condition was more alarming than that of the afflicted man. They were the resolute and confirmed enemies of Jesus, who watched Him (2), not in order to learn the truth concerning Him, but only to find excuse for rejecting Him. His teaching condemned them. Note how their opposition grew. In ii. 24, they murmured against the disciples; here they are eager to murmur against the Lord. This is the condition of heart that excludes the light, and is most to be feared.

The miracle had a two-fold object—first, to relieve the afflicted man, and next, to condemn the folly and guilt of the Pharisees. Hence the command (3), which is so unlike what our Lord usually did. He ever sought to avoid ostentation. But He makes this man prominent in order that by him He may convict his accusers. The question (4) suggests that, not to save when we have opportunity is to destroy. He had come to save; the foolish restriction of the Pharisees would say, "Let the man's affliction continue rather than break the sanctity of the Sabbath." Such hypocrisy angers and grieves (5) the Saviour. It is upon such persons that his indignation falls most heavily.

The form in which He did the miracle was an appeal to the man's faith (5). The same command from any other man would have mocked the sufferer, and left him a sufferer still. But with the word of Jesus there went the power. The man had not to wait until he felt strong before he obeyed. The attempt to obey brought with it the power to obey. It is so with all the words of Jesus. Men can do impossible things at his command.

BUTTERFLIES AND BEES.

BY REV. DR. HUGH MACMILLAN.*

THERE are two kinds of insects that sip honey from the flowers. There is the gay butterfly, and there is the busy bee. The butterfly dances from flower to flower in the warm sunshine, and only gathers the drop of sweetness that it can sip at once without the trouble of stopping. It has no patience to go any deeper in search of nectar. It fertilises only shallow flowers, and therefore its work in nature is of little importance. It helps very little to carry the pollen dust from flower to flower, and so produce seed. If the plums and cherries, the apples and pears, and strawberries of the garden depended upon it, they would yield no fruit. And just as it is of so little use in nature, so it is of little use to itself in this respect. It stores up no honey. It lives but for a few weeks, and then it dies, having left nothing of its work behind.

Like that butterfly are those who read the Bible without study or reflection. They flit along the pages, looking out for some novelty to arrest them. They have only a surface acquaintance with its truths. They are too careless to penetrate into their depths, and consequently they get little good from their reading of the Bible. They forget quickly what they have read; they make no use of it in practical life; they know nothing of the length, and breadth, and height, and depth of the love of God in Christ Jesus as revealed in his Word; they do not help to teach others, and make them wise unto salvation; they do not carry to the ignorant and the poor, to comfort and bless them, the lessons which they themselves have learned at the feet of Jesus.

But, on the other hand, there is an insect that does a most valuable work in nature and also for itself. This is the homely bee that makes a point of going straight to every flower and examining every one that is open to the sunshine. I have often watched it improving the shining hours in the garden. It works very rapidly. It visits, perhaps, twenty flowers in a minute, and so carefully does it economise the sunny moments that it looks only at some flowers, whose honey-cups are dry, and hurries to others which will reward it with a copious supply of sweetness.

Wherever it alights, if the flower-cup is deep, it will go down to the bottom of it, if its mouth is shut it will push its lips apart, and if the tube where the honey is hid be peculiarly shaped it will explore all its parts until it finds the nectary, and you hear its hum of satisfaction subsiding into silence as it is sipping the sweetness in the very heart of the flower. In this way it gets powdered all over with the precious gold dust of the blossom, and thus by its labours it helps to produce the delightful fruits of the garden and the field. It hives up in its nest or in its skep for the cold dark winter the luscious stores which it gathered in the lovely summer hours.

Like the bee are those who search the Scriptures, who linger and meditate upon each passage, until they have extracted all its wealth of meaning. The consequence is that such persons can communicate their wisdom to others and make many share in their sweet experience. The Word of God dwells in themselves so richly that during the dark cold winter of trouble or sickness when shut out from the ordinances of God's house and the means of grace, the truths which they have treasured up will create for them sunshine in their shady place, and make a second summer around them.

Which class of readers of God's Word do you belong to—to the butterflies or to the bees? If you are butterfly readers, skimming the surface and making no earnest study of God's Word, then you will get little honey. But if you are bees, you will get a rich feast from every text. You will find no part of the Bible without attraction and use. You will come upon the fragrant thyme and the flowery heather growing on its barest hill-sides. You will find the scented clover in its fields and meadows, and the rose and the lily in its garden enclosures. Some of the places where you see no footsteps but your own will often yield the richest blossoms to you. It is not from its most stirring and striking pages that you will cull the sweetest thoughts, but often from its quietest and most familiar; just as in nature, it is not the gayest, but the homeliest blossoms that have the most honey.

There are in the Bible modest violets of texts, as it were, that hide themselves in lonely spots and have to be carefully sought out; and mignonette texts that have no form or comeliness to recommend them, and yet are unutterably sweet and fragrant, when you come unexpectedly upon them, and call up a thousand tender memories. There are texts especially made for the dark hours of life and for those who are sorrowful, just as there are flowers that bloom only at night, and produce from their pale ghostly blossoms the fragrance and the honey in which the silent moths that come out in the shadows of evening delight.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION

SEASIDE WORK.

Two crowded meetings were recently held in Devonshire House, Bishopsgate. In the afternoon Rev. E. A. Stuart presided.

Mr. T. B. BISHOP emphasised two points—one the remarkable testimony for God and his Word that had gone on all round our coast the past summer in the services; secondly, the great need there is of wider effort to evangelise, not merely the children who gather at the seaside, but the village children. He also testified to the work the Universities' camps for public-school boys had done. Rev. E. A. STUART gave a thoughtful address based on 1 Chronicles xv., in connection with the bringing the ark of God to Jerusalem.

Mr. E. ARROWSMITH (Lowestoft) spoke of the way in which the Word spoken to the children reached the grown-ups. Mr. A. G. DODDERIDGE said he had twenty-five workers with him at the service, either at Portrush or Eastbourne, twenty-two of whom hope to be clergymen. Over £60 was realised by literature sold by the colporteur during the work at Eastbourne. Abundant testimony was also given to the abiding character of the work. Mr. GOODMAN spoke of Herne Bay, and of remarkable work among the boys; and Rev. W. S. STANDEN closed the meeting with some earnest appeals to those present as workers to let the Lord Jesus have the whole of their life.

In the evening meeting, Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR presided, and gave an earnest and helpful address on the importance of having not merely life but full life, and that to overflowing.

Mr. H. HUTCHINSON and Rev. G. E. ASKER told of the work at Bedlington, the latter giving his impressions as to the intense spiritual reality of the work done. Mr. L. B. Butcher (Llandudno), Mr. D. M. Thornton (Scarborough), Rev. Martin J. Hall (Colwyn Bay), Messrs. A. C. Kestin (Bournemouth), and S. M. Warner (Southsea) also gave deeply encouraging accounts of the work, speaking of many tokens of blessing the Lord had given.

PRO-OPIUM FANATICS.—The Shanghai Mercury has been publishing a series of articles commenting on the evidence given before the Opium Commission in London, which are, on the whole, strongly adverse to the views of the Anti-Opium Society. Nevertheless, in one of these articles is the following significant paragraph:—"If, however, we have been compelled to comment on the wild nature of much of the evidence given by anti-opium faddists, we must, on the other hand, deprecate much of that offered by men whom we may equally dub pro-opium fanatics. That opium may be useful as a medicine under certain circumstances is admitted; but it is allowable to doubt that its continual use is in any case otherwise than harmful. It is possibly, in very small doses, a prophylactic in malarious districts; in larger it certainly has the contrary effect. Yet this is the chief, if not the only case suggested for its beneficial effect."

"CHRISTIAN ALMANACK," 1895.

With this issue our readers will receive our Almanack for 1895. We trust it will meet with as much acceptance as those of previous years. The subject of the nine illustrations is the life of David, and they touch several of the strangely different incidents of his wonderful and romantic career. Few have passed through so many changes, or touched human life at so many points. Shepherd and warrior; minstrel and king; the man after God's own heart, and the murderer of Uriah; the inspirer of chivalrous affection in men and women, and the outcast of his people. All these strands were woven into the web of his life, and they all reappear in his Psalms, which interpret and express the infinite variety of human aspiration, penitence, and pain. By all the varying experiences of life he became fitted for his great work of saying for men what they knew and felt, but could not say for themselves.

His early shepherd life coloured his whole subsequent career, and his lonely wrestlings with the wild beasts gave him confidence in the delivering power of God. It was there he stored, in meditation and lowly duty, the forces which wrought through him in after years. It was as a youth, fresh from following the ewes, that Samuel anointed him to be the shepherd of Israel.

Then came his life at Court. The palace minstrel, the friend and companion of the king, the trusted leader of the armies of Israel. A brief spell of sunshine, to be suceeeded by long years of dark vicissitudes, when he was hunted like a partridge upon the mountains, and could only see his beloved Jonathan by stealth, meeting him in the woods. But amidst all, as we are reminded in the seventh of our pictures, he retained the sweetness and grace of earlier days, refusing to take as a luxury water which had been obtained at the risk of life from the well of Bethlehem.

Then, after years of happy and successful rule, he plunged, suddenly and without warning, into the foulness of impurity and murder, and committed crimes, with which Nathan had to accuse him, and which have ever since given great cause for the enemies of Christ to blaspheme. Thenceforward trouble followed him as a shadow. First discord in his family, then the loss of his kingdom, finally the death of Absalom. What a contrast between the young athlete slaying the lion, and the agonised father receiving the tidings of the death of his favourite son!

We can never forget that he laid the foundations of the prosperous reign of Solomon. It was David who purchased the temple-site from Araunah, and gave the charge to the young king, which so largely moulded his earlier career. And so his influence passed onwards in Israel, and outwards through the world. His many-sided character, his words and songs, his prayers and tears, his victories and failures, have been for the inspiration, encouragement, and warning of myriads.

Below all his varied life there was a profound and unwavering trust in God. He was preeminently a religious man. He set the Lord always before him, trusted Him at all times, and encouraged his soul in God. Whatever befell him he made his refuge in the Lord. The secret place of the Most High, his abiding-place; the wing of the Almighty, his shelter; the presence of God, his sun and shield.

Yet deeper still, the life of David has a fascination for us because in so many respects he foreshadows the character of the Lord Jesus, his Son and Lord, of whom it was said, that He should sit upon the throne of David, and exercise a dominion which should be as the light of the morning, a morning undimmed by clouds.

MISSIONS IN MADAGASCAR.—In view of political differences between Madagascar and France, considerable anxiety has been felt by friends of the L.M.S. as to the missions in the island. It is feared that a military expedition on the part of the French might be attended by a demand for foreign missionaries to leave Madagascar. Our French contemporary Le Signal has no such fear. It says: "The French Government will not fight against Protestant missions. If the societies observe the neutrality which their regulations enjoin, they will command respect. Moreover, the retirement of foreign missionaries is only requested when they can be replaced by French missionaries of the same faith; and France cannot undertake to fill so many posts as the L.M.S. workers occupy."

PONDOLAND; EAST AND WEST.

By REV. WALTER SEARLE.

I have recently returned from a visit to Pondoland, which is the last territory brought under British rule. Unlike Mashonaland, this land of the Pondos has come into our possession without the shedding of blood. In this peaceful settlement, a veteran missionary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, Rev. Peter Hargreaves, has played no inconsiderable part. I have been his guest, and have stayed in the house where the famous deed of annexation was signed in March; I have also visited, in company with Rev. J. Househam, the spot where the flag of England was first hoisted as symbol of our rulership over a people long accustomed to anarchy and cruelty, so great that some have called this spot the darkest place in darkest Africa.

Here during many years the Wesleyan missions have done faithful and fruitful labour. I can bear witness to their success. I preached both at Buntingville and Emfundesweni to large congregations. At one I had amongst my audience children of Ngwiliso, the paramount Chief of Western Pondoland, and at the other a daughter and a brother of Sigcau, the paramount chief of the whole land, which is divided into two by the famous River Umzimvubu, which passes through woodland scenery of the most magnificent description. At both stations there were most attentive and devout congregations. Rev. J. Househam has done much to perfect their sacred songs.

During the preaching of the Word the power of the Spirit fell upon them, and penitents cried for mercy, backsliders sought restoration, believers cried for the salvation of others, and local preachers sought the fulness of the Holy Ghost. God's Spirit often works mightily through these intense emotional demonstrations, and immediate conversions take place which are of permanent continuance.

Here is a man kneeling at the penitent form. I ask him why he is there. He replies, "I have left my Lord, but to-day I return, and will walk by his side day by day."

There is a woman in one meeting while Mr. Hargreaves is preaching. She is smeared with the red clay—a sign of heathenism. The Word takes effect. She leaves the service and hastens to the stream, there to wash away this clay. Returning to her husband's kraal, she is rebuked for having left off the customs and traditions of her tribe. She replies she had obeyed her higher Lord—Jesus, the Son of God. They lay her down; they forcibly smear her body while she protests that her mind is free from all concurrence in this heathenish rite, and her soul is washed in the Redeemer's blood.

Bearing unqualified testimony to the work of the existing missions, and extending its worth, to the Redeemer's praise, I find there is more work than they can do, and with the utmost cordiality, and concurrence with them, as well as with the wish of the chief, and the co-operation of the resident magistrate, we as a mission have the opportunity to enter. Here is pioneer work amongst unevangelised tribes, and here are our workers, Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Green, as well as others, who are ready to go.

My two years' residence in South Africa, my recent journey of over 2000 miles, nearly 500 of which were traversed in a post cart, and my stay amongst these barbarian people, have convinced me, that while walking in the Spirit, and praying in the Holy Ghost, there is so much practical commonplace work to be done, as essential to this as eating and drinking are to the health of the holiest of the saints of God. To reach the first proposed station, our workers must travel hundreds of miles. There they must build their own nests, for houses do not even exist. They will require horses to ride about, for they will cover large districts. A wagon will become a necessity, and medicines will cost money, for the old chief is delighted with the prospect of having one who, like Mr. Cyril Green, has had a training in medicine.

Anyone wishing to help in the annexation of Pondoland to the Kingdom of God should communicate with our English secretary, Mr. Arthur Mercer, 14A, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon.

MARSEILLES.—Mrs. Frankland West, who labours here with Madame Lhermet, writes that the work is still strictly independent, although carried on in a spirit of hearty co-operation with Pasteur Colin, of the lately-established Baptist Church.

A VILLAGE WORK OF GRACE.

The Baptist chapel at Tiptoe is an off-shoot from that at Milford-on-Sea, Hants, where Rev. J. Harington Evans began work after leaving the Church of England. During the last few months Tiptoe has been the scene of a remarkable work of God. The little chapel, though situated in a district in which very few houses can be seen, is crowded to the doors for the Sunday services—not as the result of any special preacher whose eloquence draws the people. For the most part the pulpit is supplied by the preachers from the Bournemouth and Poole Evangelistic Union. They all unite with Rev. G. Tanswell, pastor of the mother church at Milford, in describing the work as entirely of God. The people have maintained the spirit of prayer, and the revival is the result.

A thanksgiving meeting, held on Wednesday, October 10, was crowded to the doors. Words of congratulation and of counsel were spoken by several ministers from the district, and Mr. Tanswell, who presided, expressed a hope that the mother church might be favoured with a similar visitation. The converts, of whom there are about thirty, have already made Milford the subject of special prayer, which, no doubt, will be followed by earnest effort.

A brief conversation with some of the friends elicited some most interesting facts. Conviction of sin has been very deep and real. One young man was so troubled that he stayed out at night seeking the Saviour, and one night returned home late full of the joy of salvation.

"I've prayed for my husband," said one, "ever since I was converted, and that is some years since; at last my prayers are answered." Her voice trembled with emotion while she spoke. In answer to the question, "How was it?" she said, "He was under deep conviction, but could not see the way. One Sunday night, when we returned from the service, I asked him if he could not trust the Saviour. But he seemed still in difficulty. 'Come, then,' said I, 'and let us join together in prayer.'" Side by side they knelt, husband and wife, and after an hour and a-half he said, "I see it. I can and do trust Jesus!" What a joyous experience after seventeen years of married life!

The time was too short to hear more then, but on the way back to Milton Station the driver had more to tell. The Sunday-school is reaping a large share of the blessing. There were never so many scholars, and they never showed such interest as now. "We used to have to ring the bell to call them in," he said, "but there is no need for the bell now." Out of his own class four were already decided, and several others were under conviction.

The meeting left an impression never to be forgotten. The joy of the people, old and young, expressed itself in their looks, and especially in their song. There was no trace of got-up excitement; but every heart seemed to feel the words they sang. The hymns were wisely chosen. "To God be the glory, great things He hath done," was the first; the next had for its chorus, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded," etc.; "The half has never yet been told," was the chorus of the third; and the fourth, "I feel like singing all the time."

It was evident that in some cases the emotion was too deep for utterance. In the midst of the exultant words the eyes would fill, the lip tremble, and for a while the voice would be silent. Others seemed oblivious to everything except to the presence of Him whose praise they sang. We have heard sweeter voices, and better cultured, but have never heard music that has thrilled us more than this. A glowing heart gives timbre, as musicians call it, to the voice.

Will your readers rejoice with and pray for this little place, that the work may continue, and that other places may catch the flame?

TORQUAY.—The Chelston Evangelistic Mission is being greatly blessed. The evangelist, Mr. Lovi Powell, has, during the summer, been holding open-air services on the sands and in other parts of the neighbourhood. The attendance and the attention have been very good, and many have testified to having received much blessing. The services at the hall are largely attended; there is also a flourishing adult Bible-class. The Dowager Countess of Castlestuart, the foundress of the Mission, is about to employ a reader for another part of the town. A home of rest, which is near the mission hall, under the management of Mr. and Mrs. Powell, is much appreciated.

THE LATE DR. MOON, BRIGHTON.

On October 10 there passed away, at his residence in Brighton, one whose name is known and revered the wide world over. The Great Day alone can reveal those who have cause to bless God that over fifty years ago He saw fit to entrust to a young man just entering manhood "the talent of blindness." This was the favourite definition of the late Dr. Moon for the motive which prompted his life-long work. To him the phrase which Milton's genius has consecrated, for all time, to the blind, meant no mere passive service in the waiting time. Grasping the heaven-sent trial with the resolute hand of a consecrated will, he called it "talent," and forthwith put it out to usury. In no less than 476 languages have portions of Scripture been printed for the use of the blind by means of Moon's embossed type, besides a complete library of other books, in many foreign tongues, as well as in those of the United Kingdom. These are adapted both for educational and recreative purposes, as well as for the building up of the religious life. Amongst the latter, completed last year, is the "Pilgrim's Progress" in Hindustani; whilst another includes five volumes of Dr. Paton's Autobiography, which have been embossed.

William Moon was born on December 18, 1818, at Horsmonden, near Tunbridge Wells, so at his death he had entered his seventy-fifth year. When four years old, he lost the sight of one eye from the effects of scarlet fever. Being a close student, he so tried the sight of the other, that in 1840, being then twenty-two years of age, he found himself totally blind. About that time, while living with his mother in Brighton, some ladies, becoming interested in him, taught him to read from Frere's Type. Having himself mastered this and other systems then in use, he set about teaching others, and soon had a class of blind students from the town. This class afterwards developed into the Blind Asylum, which now exists in the Eastern Road, Brighton.

It was the inability of a blind lad who for five years tried in vain to learn the existing system, which led him to devise an easier method; and this resulted in the construction of that system now so well known as the Moon Type. It consists of letters of very simple construction, combined with a full orthography, the characters being composed principally of Roman letters, in their original or slightly modified forms; with a few new characters in place of some of the more complex. These simplified characters, which consist of only nine, have been applied to over 476 dialects and languages. Having his system ready for adaptation, Dr. Moon commenced work with a small amount of movable type, which had been given him by a friend, and his first publications were in the form of a monthly magazine and devotional extracts. Soon, an urgent demand arose for various portions of the Bible. To emboss this, with the means at his command, was an utter impossibility. Relying on the promise of that Word of God, which he so earnestly wished to give to others, he "spent six months in daily pleading and waiting at the Throne of grace," to find the Divine promise fulfilled "None shall seek my face in vain." The plan occurred to him, by which he was able to stereotype plates at a comparatively small expense. Still he had to wait; for to stereotype the New Testament, even by this cheaper mode, required a large sum. Great was the rejoicing and thankfulness when a first donation of five pounds, followed by gifts from other friends, enabled him to go forward. Now, there are 50,000 of these stereotyped plates at the establishment at 104, Queen's-road, and it would be difficult to spend a more intensely interesting morning than a visit to that Institution affords.

Dr. Moon married, as his first wife, a daughter of Mr. Caudle, a medical man in Brighton, and two children were born to them. The elder, a son, is Dr. Robert Moon, now practising in America. In the same year in which he brought out his embossed type was born the daughter who has been his life-long companion and co-worker. "I was born into the work," said Miss Moon, when kindly giving the details for this sketch, "and from my earliest days I have been connected with it." Truly, the mantle of the father has fallen upon the daughter, and upon Miss Moon now devolves the responsibility of the work, it having been the great wish of her father that she should carry it on when he was "called home." For some time past the chief burden of it has practically been upon her shoulders, as regards detail.

The best testimony to the memory of the venerable founder will be for friends to rally round the institution and its representative, Miss Moon, who is one of the trustees; and to relieve her from any pecuniary responsibility in the conduct of the work. An income which she derived independently of her father leaves her at liberty to give her services still gratuitously. Dr. Moon's second wife, who survives him, is a daughter of the late Rev. R. Elsdale, D.D.; she has also a separate income of her own. The knowledge of these facts enabled Dr. Moon conscientiously to place nearly the whole of his private property at the disposal of the institution, and not very long since he handed over to the trustees the land, valued at £3000, which was his own freehold, upon which the more recent of the now extensive printing works are built.

The late Dr. Moon was early seriously disposed, and his bent was towards the Gospel ministry; but God saw other ways of using him. His life seems to have been a gradual growing in the knowledge and love of God, and a deeper draught, as years went on, of the satisfaction which is to be had in Christ by every believing soul who seeks full revelation of Him, through the power of the Holy Ghost. "My father's simplicity in prayer was wonderful," says his daughter; "he just asked for what he needed, like a little child. I have known him spend whole nights in prayer." Herein lay the secret of his marvellous work, which spread in many directions, besides those which have been here indicated.

(From a Photograph by Mr. C. Hawkins, 32, Preston Street, Brighton.)

For many years Dr. Moon conducted a Sunday afternoon service for the blind, the result of which has been that the true light has shone into many a dark heart, leading them from spiritual darkness into God's glorious light.

His decease was quite unexpected. Having taken tea as usual, he went, with his attendant, for a walk, returning about six o'clock. Soon after he complained that he did not feel well; by half-past six he was with Christ, death resulting from syncope. His desire had always been for a sudden translation, even his courageous heart having a dread, inborn of physical nervousness, of the act of dying. The Lord knoweth the frame of each of his children, and in respect of this, his honoured servant, what words can be more applicable than these, "So He giveth his beloved sleep." M. J. G.

BOOKLETS FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.—Other tracts and booklets recommended by various correspondents for use among inquirers, are: "The Herald of Salvation" (3s. 6d. per hundred, Pickering & Inglis, Bothwell-street, Glasgow); and "A Finger-mark in my Bible," by Pastor W. Y. Fullerton (one penny, Passmore & Alabaster).

MEOPHAM GREEN.—The mission hall goes on vigorous and well, and the opening meeting of the winter season was conducted by Mr. W. G. Bradshaw. In connection with the work there is a reading-room for men in the winter, to which it is desired to add a library. A good number of books have already been kindly given, but many more are needed. These should be sent to Mr. Chas. J. Smith, 1, Sunnyside, Meopham, near Gravesend.

JEWS IN ARABIA.

Further interesting details of Rev. S. M. Zwemer's visit to the Jews of Yemen have been received by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. Before leaving Aden on his long inland journey to Sanaa, the capital of Yemen, Mr. Zwemer distributed copies of the Hebrew New Testament to the Jews there, and, through the kindness of Rev. J. C. Young, of the Keith Falconer Mission, spoke on several successive days to Jews and Arabs in his dispensary. Leaving Aden on July 2, Taiz was reached a week later. Here Mr. Zwemer was detained eighteen days by Turkish officialdom, and finally left for Sanaa in the custody of a soldier, who had strict orders not to allow him to speak to Jews on the way, and bearing a letter to the authorities at the capital containing the accusation' "This is a converted Jew who is corrupting the religion of Islam, and sells books to Moslems and Jews." While at Taiz Mr. Zwemer visited the synagogue, and found there some curtains of silk with embroidered texts, and a printed diagram of the ancient candlestick, with the names of the twelve tribes.

Arriving at Yerim on July 29 the missionary had an opportunity of preaching Christ to Jews and Arabs for two hours at the caravanserai. He writes:—"There was no interruption, and it was impressive to see the interest of Jew and Arab alike in what I told them about the meaning of Isaiah liii., reading it in Arabic by a dim candle-light amidst the camels and donkeys and baggage of an Oriental inn." On August 2 Mr. Zwemer entered Sanaa as a sort of prisoner, and was handed over to a policeman; but was released on bail by a Greek friend. It was not, however, till ten days later that the authorities were satisfied, and the Testaments delivered up to him. Visiting the Jewish quarter, Mr. Zwemer commenced to distribute the books. Some refused when they saw the title. Others accepted eagerly. No one was allowed to have a copy without first reading a page out loud, to show that he understood it, and then promising to read it daily. Mr. Zwemer adds:—"In some few instances I was greatly encouraged by the attitude of Jews towards the Gospel, and their eager expectation of the coming of the Messiah; but most of the Jews at Sanaa are absorbed in trade, and often crushed by poverty, so that they take no thought for the life to come. The chief Jews told me that my errand was in vain, because no Israelite ever turned Christian." Nevertheless, two Jews confessed secretly that, though Jews outwardly, they were Christians at heart through reading the New Testament some years ago.

Mr. Zwemer was not allowed to remain at Sanaa more than twenty days, but before he left, the Lord wonderfully opened the way for him to send copies of the New Testament to the Jews in certain neighbouring towns. Leaving Sanaa on August 21, Mr. Zwemer returned to the coast by a different route, and before reaching Aden had exhausted his stock of books, amounting to a total of 485 copies, all of which had been judiciously distributed. In concluding his most interesting report, Mr. Zwemer writes:—"I desire to express devout gratitude to God for his preserving hand throughout the whole journey, and entreat the prayers of all who love Israel for the poor, ignorant, oppressed Jews of Yemen and lower Nejd. God grant that soon work may be established at Sanaa as a centre, and so reach out to the sons of Isaac and Ishmael throughout all Arabic Felix."

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—At the monthly prayer-meeting on Thursday, October 18, at 20, Berners-street, Dr. Waller, who presided, spoke of the cheering fact that there is undoubtedly a revival of Protestant feeling in many parts of the country. He also referred to the need that exists for the educational and direct missionary work of the society. A very earnest address was given by Rev. W. R. Mowll on "Decision for Christ."

WORK AMONG KANAKAS.—Mr. C. F. Johnson, of the Kanaka Mission, North Bundaberg, Queensland, writes telling of much encouragement in work among the natives of the New Hebrides who are engaged by Queensland planters. Letters have been received from missionaries in the islands reporting on the fidelity and zeal of some of the Kanaka labourers who have returned to their native parts. Mr. Johnson writes that owing to his wife's ill-health he is leaving Queensland at the end of the year, and coming back to England.

THE PASSOVER.

By Rev. JOHN M'NEILL.

For the Lord will pass through to smite the Egyptians, and when He seeth the blood upon the lintel and upon the two side posts, the Lord will pass over the door, and will not suffer the destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you.—Exodus xii. 23.

What the Old Testament passover lamb was to the threatened first-born that night in Egypt, the Lord Jesus Christ is to threatened, doomed sinners now. Christ is our Passover Lamb, slain for us, and we escape by his death. Make application of that atoning death by a personal trust therein!

God, you remember, had at last picked up the gauntlet that Pharaoh had flung down, and was about to shoot his tenth arrow, the arrow that destroyed the power of the oppressor for ever. The salvation to-night is salvation from impending doom and overhanging judgment. I know you are going to say, "That's an old-fashioned view of things." Well, I'm not here to preach new-fashioned or to please man's ear. Woe is me if I tamper with eternal truth to tickle men's ears and gratify their vanity and conceit! Salvation from impending doom! You may deny it, and forget it, and scoff at it; but you do not alter it.

Further, that night in Egypt meant freedom for the slaves. Those Israelites were bondsmen, a nation degraded, toiling in the brickfield, under the brutal curse of the taskmaster, the brutal lash for ever on their backs, making the blood to start, and life to be a misery, and death a blessing that was longed for, and slow of coming. And salvation that night, when God came to redeem them, meant freedom for the captive, new days for the down-trod and the oppressed. The Gospel I preach spells freedom for the slave, freedom to the man, freedom to the woman, toiling in a bondage compared with which the bondage in Egypt was a light affliction that endured only for a moment, and told only on the body and the earthly life. Oh, men and women! oppressed by the devil and the world and sin; men and women driven hard, and butchered by lust and passion, I preach to night freedom! a glorious redemption for you through the blood of Jesus Christ.

What an offer! What a salvation! Now, that you know you are bondsmen, why should you hang up your chain? There is freedom for the man under the drink curse, freedom for the poor woman who has made herself the slave of pleasure and disgrace. Freedom for us all, for we are all bound in the chains and the darkness of unbelief, and the tyranny of our adversary the devil. Freedom for that pickpocket, new life and new days for you. If you will only accept the Lord Jesus Christ, and turn from your evil ways, He will save you and redeem you, and blot out your black shameful past. He will make you a new creature. What a privilege to declare such a salvation!

There was another point. I think I see an Israelitish father, a poor slave in the Egyptian brickfield, and Moses gathers them all together and tells them that God is going to break their bonds, but they are to kill a lamb and sprinkle the blood on the lintel and the door-posts. Now I see an Israelitish father, on that historic fatal night, take that lamb and kill it, and I see its life's blood, smoking hot, flowing into the basin. Now if that father killed that lamb, not simply with his knife, like any butcher in the slaughterhouse, but with his mind, his thought, was he not bound to have stamped on his soul some thought like this: "If my first-born is not to die, something innocent has to die in his place"? The innocent giving its life in place of him who was in danger of the judgment stroke. That is the core of the Gospel according to Jesus, according to Paul, according to John, according to Isaiah, according to the redeemed up in heaven. "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us unto God by thy blood, out of every nation, and kindred, and people, and tongue." There is no feeling so universal as that. The death of the Lamb of God is the very nerve and core of our salvation from guilt and doom.

HIS HEART, WORKING BEHIND THE KNIFE,

By the heart's faith in God the operation of killing the lamb was lifted far above the mere material and mechanical. There is the Lord's Supper. You know what it means. If you sit down to the Lord's table without faith in your heart, you can degrade that ordinance and make it meaningless, grotesque, and wholly unintelligible. You can degrade it into a mere mumbling of a morsel of bread and sipping of a mouthful of wine. But if you have faith in Jesus in your heart, oh! what a mighty elevation! What a transformation! You are at the foot of the cross. You are in fellowship and actual touch with Jesus Christ crucified for you. Jesus risen from the dead and alive in your midst. What a difference faith makes in the things of God's Word and our salvation.

Did you ever think that when our Passover Lamb was slain for us—Jesus, the spotless, innocent Saviour—did you ever think of just one man who had the right view of Jesus at the cross? I have often thought of all the thousands—and there was a bigger crowd than we have here to-night—scoffing, mocking, questioning, arguing, and a great many of them quite indifferent, and in the midst of them Jesus was crucified! But I think there was one man, and he was not a disciple or a religious man, who had the right view of Christ as He hung there. Who was he? The disciples didn't understand Jesus. At the cross they thought that was the end of everything. They didn't understand that that was the defeat of sin and the victory for ever for God and his people.

I THINK IT WAS BARABBAS,

an utter outsider; for the last shall be first. It was Barabbas who, for murder and sedition, had been flung into prison. He should have been slain that day, but, by a custom, when mercy triumphed over judgment, a noted criminal was released, and Barabbas, to his great surprise, was released, and Jesus put in his place. And I think I see Barabbas with all the other people pouring out through the city gates to the place of public execution, and he goes with the crowd; but, ah! there is something in his breast that others do not feel. I see him worming his way till he comes up to the foot of the central cross, and I do believe Jesus held Himself in life till Barabbas came and looked at Him; and as poor Barabbas stood and looked up into the pale, pinched face of our Jesus, he would surely say within himself, "Whoever you are, and whatever they say about you, you are there in my place, you are there for me, for me. But for you I had hung there in death, shame, and hell."

My friend, if you are hard pushed for a theory of the atonement, take Barabbas' theory till you get a better. Stand to-night at the foot of the cross, and look up and say, "He died for me. He bare my sins in his own body on the tree. By his stripes I am healed." Substitution is a grand theory. It preaches well, and it prays well, and it sings well. Oh, the sweet hymns founded on that theory, while

ALL THE BLOODLESS THEORIES ARE DUMB.

Now, to-night, when you trust Him, you have taken your bunch of hyssop and dipped it in the blood, and sprinkled it on the lintel. It needs personal trust, not in ceremonies, but by trusting everything to Jesus Christ. He has done it all, and left you nothing to do but to "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." That is better than trusting to feeling or to ceremony. That is trusting to the Rock that can never fail, Christ Himself, and what He has done and what He is doing, trusting in the Word that can never be broken. You will have plenty of feelings and inward witnesses along that line by-and-by; but trust Him in the dark without the feeling, and you are saved, no matter what you feel or do not feel. He says so: that settles it.

TAKE YOUR BUNCH OF HYSSOP

and dip it in the blood, and claim your own share in that atoning sacrifice. There are a great many temptations to abandon faith in Jesus Christ and Him crucified, and glorified, and coming in the clouds of heaven. But let none of you go out of the door of this house until the morning—that is, having come to Christ, abide in Christ till the morning. Bless God for every white and whitening head in this assembly; for you the morning is coming, but it is coming for all of us sooner or later. Who will laugh then? The believers will rejoice when they see how completely they were saved behind the finished work of the Redeemer Jesus.

WINTER MISSIONS FOR INDIA.

Dear Sir,—I have read the letter of Rev. E. N. Thwaites, of Salisbury, in your issue of to-day's date with great interest and approval, as I know India so well. I had the privilege of attending the Salisbury Conference this year, and the accounts Mr. Thwaites gave of the doors he and his fellow-missioner, Rev. Martin Hall, had discovered to be wide open in India to all classes—Mohammedan and Hindu, European and Eurasian, English and vernacular-speaking peoples alike—convinced us that such a mission as his had been, ought to be repeated.

The testimonies of all who really know India concur in showing that the present state of the country—the repudiation of idolatry by Hindus themselves—the religious unrest—marks this period as the opportunity for Christian effort. Has not the Master's warning to Israel, in Matthew xxi. 43, a very decided application to the Christian Church to-day?

Mr. Thwaites's visit to India was not the mere reinforcement in the Indian Mission field of two more missionaries. It was that in a very effective sense, but it was more—it was the proclamation of the Gospel of the glory of Jesus Christ by an English minister fresh from home, vigorous and lively, and so large-hearted as to ensure the heartiest welcome by Christians of all denominations. It was the strengthening, refreshing, and encouraging of weary labourers after the burden and heat of the past hot season; in fact, it was the carrying into the various fields of labours a miniature Salisbury Conference!

The writer, then quartered with his regiment at Delhi, can never forget the successful effect of the first effort of this sort by Rev. A. N. Somerville in February, 1875 (see The Christian, April 29, 1875). His originality, energy, and vivacity were, to a degree, taking and effectual with natives as with Europeans.

Mr. Thwaites, all will agree, is similarly qualified for this special work. If God opened the way for him to be sent out for, say, five cold seasons in succession, it would be an unspeakable blessing to India.

He should go out, untrammelled by any committee or directors, unconnected with any particular society, and committed to the guidance and control of the Holy Spirit.

Mr. Thwaites says that the scheme has met with marked approval by his few friends to whom he has mentioned it; who have already, unsolicited, given or promised £166. Could not a fund be established to send out one or two such men as Mr. Thwaites every cold season?—Your obedient servant,

Mildmay. J. F. Morton, Colonel.

THEY SERVE WHO LOVE.

They serve Him best who love Him most,
Love, bringing love, can bring no more;
"Take these things hence," He says, but smiles
Upon the offerings of the poor.

Give Him thy love, for thou canst give
No richer, costlier gift than this;
Who gives his love doth give himself,
And finds in giving truest bliss.

Art thou so poor! thy God so great!
That thou hast nothing worth to bring?
Then take thy mite; though 'tis thine all,
Yet it is worthy of a king.

He asks thy heart—thy broken heart—
And by thy love, thy love would prove;
The alabaster box can yield
No perfume till it breaks for love.

Pour out for Him its richest drops,
Thine emptiness shall be thy boast,
And in his sweet communion learn,
They serve Him best who love Him most.

HOME OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

Few probably are fully aware of the large variety of earnest and practical work going on in, and radiating from, the Home of Industry. It is all so quietly done that many, even of those who attend the monthly gatherings, fail to realise how much is being done for the poor and sinful of the teeming streets around. Hence the announcement for the last Workers' Meeting that it should be devoted to the Home work promised an evening of interest, and this promise was well fulfilled.

Mr. Louis Field opened with an address on "Rest" as essential to true Christian service. There is, he believed, in these days of rush and hurry, too little meditation and communion, too little of that quietness and confidence which are the secret of strength. The outgoings of Christian service must always be balanced by the incomings of communion and waiting on God.

Mr. W. Sharp gave the latest tidings from the Tibetan Pioneer Mission, and asked prayer for Miss Taylor and her party.

Miss Baker, who has served for many years in the Flower Mission, told of her experiences in the Ophthalmic Hospital and in the Holborn Infirmary. To her it had been a revelation of the love of flowers which slumbers in the roughest natures; often, in the most hopeless and forbidding cases, the sweet blossoms had won their way, gaining a hearing for a few plain personal words. In the ward, as opportunity serves, hymns are sung, the little bouquets with Scripture texts distributed, and generally a brief address is given. These flowers, texts, and loving messages, coming in the time of weakness and pain, have again and again proved ambassadors of mercy to awaken careless souls and bring back wanderers to God. Of course, the patients come and go, and there is not always the opportunity of following up the work; yet God has been pleased to grant many cheering tokens of his gracious power.

Miss Kilpatrick, who is carrying on the young women's work, with which Miss Turner was so long and usefully connected, said:—One feels the great privilege of being permitted to carry the Gospel into crowded workrooms, especially when one knows that a great many of the girls and women never willingly go elsewhere to hear it. We feel the responsibility of being found faithful, and making the message clear and plain. It is glad work to be able to tell of a living Saviour, able to save to the uttermost those who come unto God by Him. One is thankful to be welcomed by the girls, and evidently missed when absent even once; noisy voices are hushed, and noisy girls listen quietly to the old, old story of Jesus and his love. Eternity only will show what work has been done for God in this way. The Sewing Classes for girls, held two evenings in each week, is where we get to know them, and find out more about them, so as to help them more. They are such nice evenings, too, and the girls enjoy and appreciate them so, talking and laughing over their work. We notice many take great interest, singing the hymns they like best. The best of all the evening, to those who work amongst the girls, is when they repeat verses learned in the classes. Then the girls listen to the Words of Life given in the short address. Some have passed from death unto life during the year, from among those who attend our sewing class. The Bible-classes are also very encouraging, one on Friday evenings especially so. It is good to see the girls, after a hard day's work, choosing to spend their evening studying God's Word instead of amusing themselves, and to see many of them "growing in grace and in knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Mr. James Stopps, the bright and ready-witted colporteur, known so well to all visitors to the Home, gave some of his experiences, which were amusing enough in their odd unconventionality: as when he had a jug of soapsuds down his back, or chopped firewood for an old man in order to get a talk with him. He is known commonly among the men as "Old Eternity" (from the text painted on his barrow) or "the Macpherson man." During the year he has sold 468 Bibles, 892 Testaments, and 964 books; while he has distributed large quantities of tracts. He is carrying the Gospel into all manner of places—gamblers' dens, coiners' haunts, and bar-rooms, as well as into the homes of the poorest. God has led many souls into light through this means. The lodging-house visitation has also been very successful.

Miss Macpherson herself added a few words on Bird Fair, and the need for workers; specially among young men. The proceedings concluded with earnest prayer for blessing on these varied labours.

DR. JAMES SPURGEON.

For a quarter of a century Dr. James Spurgeon has ministered in sacred things to the Baptist Church at West Croydon, and this week pastor and people are celebrating their "silver wedding." As all the world knows, the Doctor has also been an active participant, throughout that period, in the varied ministries that cluster around the Metropolitan Tabernacle. He still retains his official connection with the Pastors' College and the Stockwell Orphanage.

The celebration services began on Sunday, when Rev. D. J. Hiley, of Bristol, preached morning and evening. Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, was to have been the evening preacher, but an attack of illness prevented. Mr. Hiley's morning discourse was a most telling and eloquent one, based on Matt. xxv. 40, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto Me." It was a plea for the infusion of a religious motive and spirit into the common actions, courtesies, and kindnesses of everyday life.

In the course of the service Dr. Spurgeon made some interesting announcements as to the special meetings of the week. On Monday evening there would be a united prayer meeting, with Rev. Wm. Cuff presiding, and the promised attendance of a large number of brethren in the ministry. On Tuesday evening a public meeting was to be held, with Mr. F. F. Belsey, of Rochester, as chairman, and among the expected speakers, Dr. McEwan, of Clapham, Rev. E. G. Gange, of Regent's Park, Dr. Glover, of Bristol, Mr. Barrow, M.P., and others. Another meeting on Wednesday evening would be addressed, it was hoped, by the venerable father of the pastor (Rev. John Spurgeon), Dr. Angus, Dr. Booth, and Mr. Baynes, of the Baptist Missionary Society. A testimonial was to be presented to the pastor that evening. This (Thursday) evening will bring with it a deputation from the Stockwell Orphanage.

In connection with this celebration we may notice the biographical sketch of Dr. Spurgeon which Mr. Holden Pike has compiled (3s. 6d. Alexander & Shepheard). The work gives a full and clear view of the busy and fruitful life of the ex-co-pastor of the Tabernacle. Dr. Spurgeon probably suffers in public regard from being brought into comparison with his more famous brother. His gifts, and the consecrated use of them in many directions, certainly entitle him to an honourable place among successful living workers in the Christian Church. In a preliminary chapter prefixed to Mr. Pike's biography, Dr. A. T. Pierson expresses a very high estimate of the personal worth and public service of the pastor of the West Croydon Baptist Church.

MR. ASHDOWN'S INDIAN MISSION.

I should like to state through the medium of your columns that the Mission at Khed, twenty-five miles north of Poona, in the Bombay Presidency, which was started by me in 1891, and of which you were good enough at the time to give some account in The Christian, has lately passed into the hands of the Church Missionary Society. Nearly the whole of the cost incurred in the erection of buildings, etc., was borne by myself. A kind friend in England contributed about one-tenth; a few friends also helped me to keep the work going. No funds were raised in India.

I may add that I have personally acquainted those who so kindly assisted me in England with the particulars of the transfer. The Society, I should say, has agreed to take over the land and buildings, etc., at my valuation. God's blessing has been with us in Khed, I acknowledge with a deep sense of gratitude; and, now that I leave this district, I can never forget to pray for the success of those who take up the work. William Ashdown.

KINGSDOWN ORPHANAGE.—A sale of work for the benefit of the orphans in these Homes will be held at 18 and 19, Pemberton-road, Upper Holloway, N., on Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 6 and 7. Gifts of all kinds, viz., useful or fancy articles, flowers, grocery, confectionery, or money will be welcome.

BOYS UNDER CANVAS.

Our boys' "fortnight under canvas" is now over. The prolonged illness of Mr. Fegan, under whose personal supervision all arrangements have hitherto been made, and whose inspiriting presence has been greatly missed, served only to increase the uncertainty and doubt arising from the weather. At last we were enabled to start for our old camping ground at Holtye on August 28.

Whatever disadvantages may be mentioned in connection with a late season "camping-out," there is a strong counterbalancing advantage in a finely wooded country such as that in which we were sojourning. Along the by-ways, in the hedges, over the common, on every hand might be found an abundance of blackberries and wood-nuts. At no other time of the year would there be any eatables that the boys could pick with freedom and without fear of transgressing. We had only one really wet day, the weather was balmy and bright on the whole, although the evenings were sometimes chilly.

We were graciously preserved from any sickness, and the hardy-looking, bronze faces very plainly evidenced the good that had been done physically by a few weeks in fresh country air and healthy surroundings. The rural delights of that holiday, by some never before seen, will linger in these boys' minds long after they leave "the old country" for their new homes across the sea, and will form a pleasant link in their memories when their thoughts wander back to the land of their birth.

The meetings in the Gospel Tent were all well attended, and visitors came from miles round. Each Sunday brought increased numbers until, on the last Sunday, a great many sat or stood outside for lack of room within. Prayerfully and lovingly the Gospel of God's grace was set forth, and we trust that many will be found "in that day" who yielded themselves to God, and found pardon and peace in the finished work of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We are now entering upon our winter's campaign here. The cold and inclement weather will send many a poor suppliant to our ever-open door. But enlarged opportunities need increased support, and we greatly need help at the present time to enable us to sustain our various branches in operation.

F. D. Hollaway.

AMONG JEWS IN WHITECHAPEL.

The reopening of the Hebrew Conference Hall in Old Montague-street took place on Thursday afternoon, and the thirty-third anniversary of Mr. H. Ehrlich's entry into the London City Mission, under whose care the work has been carried on for so many years, was celebrated at the same time. Mrs. Ehrlich, to whom the Mission owes so much, had a kindly welcome for all visitors, the great majority of whom were Jews. They sang "All hail the power of Jesus' name"—some of the singers being grey-haired men and women—with a touching earnestness, and several of the voices, as may often be noticed amongst the Jews, were of the best quality.

Rev. C. H. Banning, of Christ Church, Highbury, who presided, was well supported by friends who take a cordial interest in this effort. He expressed his sincere regard for Mr. Ehrlich, and his thankfulness that in a district in which there were more Jews than could be found even in Jerusalem at the present time, the Gospel was being so faithfully preached and so gratefully received.

Mr. Ehrlich followed with a retrospect of work amongst the Jews—what it was thirty-three years ago and now. So great was the opposition and bigotry of the Jewish population at that time, that he and the friend in whose company he began were assailed with kettles of boiling water, amidst cries of, "Scald them! scald them! They will bring a curse upon us and upon our children." All that had passed away, and to-day the people manifest a great interest in the work. The missionary is greeted kindly, and the little ones come in large numbers to the Band of Hope, parents being glad to send them.

Short addresses were delivered by Revs. A. Bernstein, J. S. Hutchinson (L.C.M.), H. O. Allbrook, J. H. Scott, A. L. Williams, Mr. C. Button, and others. The meeting was characterised by the best feeling from first to last, and was well fitted to encourage the faithful workers to attempt and to hope for greater things.

HOSPITAL FOR THE LEBANON.

THE wide district known as the Lebanon, north of the Land of Promise, known to us as Syria in the Bible records, is now needing medical help. Only one small hospital with twenty beds, beautifully neat, and a good representative of European comfort, supplies insufficiently its needs. This is supported by the Society of Friends, and is many hours distant from us. What is this among the hundreds of villages all wanting the same help?

In our mission station at Baakleen, which is the metropolis of the Druse population, and also the place where the Turkish Court is held some months of the year, we have a pressing need for accommodation for a few sick patients. At our dispensary last year the attendance reached 4500, and the number grows. We have a doctor and two nurses hard at work, and it is no uncommon thing for a sick person to travel nine or ten hours to see the "good ladies." We are building now an extension to the dispensary, and want a few rooms in which to lodge the sick who come to us.

Baakleen is ten hours from Beirout, and occupies a commanding position, surrounded by hundreds of villages that nestle here and there on the slopes "of the goodly mountain" that rolls softly down to the sea. We have before now sent one of our nurses as far as Tyre, and our nurses often ride miles to see the sick.

We believe the good seed sown at the dispensary and Sunday school will not return void, but will bring forth fruit a hundredfold. From our house is a good point of circulation for Arabic, Hebrew, and Turkish portions and tracts. We want £1000 to complete our dispensary, and fund a sum to endow a couple of beds. One or two ladies able to undertake midwifery cases are needed.

AWAKENING IN CHINA.

WRITING to the New York Evangelist, Rev. J. H. Worley, of Foochow, says:—

"All will rejoice to know of the great awakening which is sweeping over this part of China. We are having a continuous revival within and without the church. Many who had abandoned their idols and were united with the church, and were merely nominal Christians, with a knowledge only of the cardinal truths of the Bible, are now learning by experience what repentance, faith, and salvation mean, and are bringing forth the fruits of righteousness in Christlike lives. Our native ministers have received a fresh baptism of power, and the Holy Spirit gives unction to the preached Word, and hundreds of heathen are inquiring the way of life.

"Every station has been blessed with a gracious revival; many fields have been opened, and for a long time hardly a week has passed without an invitation to begin preaching and establish a Christian school in some town or village. During the last six months fourteen such stations have been opened with most encouraging prospects. In order to meet these providential openings fourteen students from the Theological Seminary have been appointed pastor teachers, and every Sunday several more are sent to hold services in other new fields."

MR. HENRY VARLEY IN DUBLIN.

UNDER the auspices of the Dublin Y.M.C.A. Mr. Varley is conducting a mission to men only. Bible talks were delivered each afternoon in the Minor Hall, at which numbers of Christians attended. The men's meetings could not be better in numbers and power. A large number of young men have been led to decision, and a hopeful work is being done amongst the manhood of the city.

Mr. Varley continues his mission this week, and it is hoped that many more may be influenced.

THE PACIFIC MEDICAL JOURNAL says that the hereditary evils of beer-drinking exceed those which result from spirit-drinking. "First, because the habit is constant and without paroxysmal interruptions which admit of some recuperation; second, because beer-drinking is practised by both sexes more generally than spirit-drinking; and, third, because the animalising tendency of the habit is more uniformly developed, thus authorising the presumption that the vicious results are more generally transmitted."

THE PEACE SOCIETY.

THE Peace Society was represented at the recent Antwerp Peace Conference by its secretary (Dr. Darby), Mr. Thomas Snape, M.P., and others. The attenders at the Congress had an opportunity of studying certain object-lessons at the International Exhibition then on view in that city. In particular, their attention was claimed by the vast guns in the French Department, able to carry heavy projectiles more than twelve miles. These weapons have, it is said, already rendered the world-renowned fortifications of Antwerp practically useless for modern warfare.

The Frankfort Journal contains a long report of an excellent address by Baroness von Suttner, recently delivered in that city, on "The Aims and Results of the Peace Movement." She takes special encouragement in the circumstance that several of the European Governments have begun to make a pecuniary contribution to the advocacy of Peace, including 1000 francs from the Belgium Government, and a similar amount from the Swiss Government. The Norwegian Parliament also recently made a grant for the payment of expenses of Peace delegates. The Baroness remarks that although such contributions are small, yet they are noteworthy and welcome, as being the beginning of the Peace Budgets, which, it is to be hoped, some day will take the place of the vast War Budgets of the nations.

LIGHT IN THE DARKNESS.

O LINGERING life that keeps me here,
A pilgrim plodding home;
The days seem dark, the nights grow drear,
Where'er my footsteps roam.
Is it that I have missed the light
Along the homeward way,
That all the world God made so bright
Grows darker every day?

No light comes down to lighten me,
The clouds hang low and chill:
Through sunless days I strain to see,
But all grows deep and still.
I drift in doubtings down life's tide,
I clutch, let go, and fall;
While looms the dark on every side,
One dense funereal pall.

I hear the sound of sorrowing waves,
That beach their tidal flow;
And chant their dirges round the grave,
Of promise drowned in woe;
And with their murmur in my ears,
I search the pathless deep;
And grope amid repentant tears,
For light to guide and keep.

Far through the whelming clouds of night,
That slowly backward roll,
There streams to earth the glory light,
The hunger of my soul;
And over me the Saviour bends,
To whisper low and sweet;
"My child, in Me all darkness ends,
My light shall guide thy feet."

O, sweet the life that keeps me here,
A pilgrim plodding home;
The light comes down, and Heaven draws near,
Where'er my footsteps roam;
And songs of angels from the skies,
Like music faint and far,
Tell of the home-land sweet that lies
Beyond the morning star.

AT A MEETING recently held at Toynbee Hall, it was unanimously decided that intoxicants should not be introduced to the workmen's clubs in connection with the University settlement.

THE BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION are holding prayer meetings at their various metropolitan branches this week, in support of the righteous action of the Licensing Committee of the London County Council. On Friday, at St. Martin's Town Hall, there will be an all-day prayer meeting, in which Mrs. Wheeler Andrews, Mrs. Pearsall Smith, Mr. Walker (of the Salvation Army), and Revs. J. B. Meharry, F. B. Meyer, Mark Guy Pearse, Thos. Spurgeon, and others are expected to take part. The B.W.T.A. National Executive will meet in Birmingham on November 13, 14, and 15, under the presidency of Lady Henry Somerset.

A SEARCH FOR MR. A. G. BROWN.

WANTING to see Mr. Archibald G. Brown on a matter of church business, I presented myself at his house at an early hour of the morning, so as to be sure of seeing him. However, he had gone out, and I was politely informed, "You will find him at the Tabernacle." On inquiries here, I was told that I should find him at the soup kitchen in Traferney-place, Bow Common. After my directress had attempted to point out my way through a perfect labyrinth of streets, I pursued my course.

The streets were narrow and filthy, the odours of them causing me literally to hold my nose and expectorate with might and main. To proceed on my course was to do battle with the most malignant foes of human life. Still, my business was urgent; there was no alternative for me but gallantly to go forward! After many inquiries I reached "Traferney-place." And what a place! Ahead of me I saw volumes of steam pouring forth from two open windows, and, taking courage, I said, "Here is the soup kitchen." More than that, the savoury fragrance convinced another of my senses that it was even so. I entered the place and took a hasty glance down the clean table, and saw three or four poor fellows whom I thought were among the multitude of workless and hard-up men come in to appease their hunger. They appeared to be enjoying to the full their basin of soup.

I went to the man in charge and asked, "Is Mr. Brown here?" Pointing to one of my supposed poor fellows he said, "There he is." Fixing my eyes on him I perceived that the individual pointed out had just made ready to attack a formidable basin of bread and soup, sitting upon the same forms and eating from the same board as the unfortunate men who had turned in to relieve their hunger. After looking at the good man twice and thrice to satisfy myself that my senses were not being imposed upon, I laughed heartily and moved toward him.

"Come and sit down," he said, cheerily. "How did you find me out?"

Well he might ask! "Only by a persistent use of the tongue," was my reply.

I then proceeded with my business, which I need not here relate. Suffice it to say, it would be difficult to say whether he was more interested in my story or in his basin of soup, in company with those poor, perhaps sinful, brother men.

I need not point the moral of this incident. Oh, for more man preachers as distinguished from professional preachers. F. T. PASSMORE.

MR. TELFORD IN SURREY.

A FOUR weeks' mission, two at Reigate and two at Redhill, was concluded by Mr. E. P. Telford last week; it has proved a time of much blessing, not only to the conversion of many, but to the strengthening of Christians.

The mission was commenced in the Public Hall, Reigate, on September 23, continuing there till October 5, and afterwards in the Market Hall, Redhill, from October 7 to 18. Afternoon meetings were held each day, and were found exceedingly helpful to Christians. The interest deepened in every way as the meetings proceeded, and many accepted Christ as their Saviour in increasing numbers. In consequence of the Redhill meetings following closely upon Reigate, it was soon seen how desirable it is that such missions should not be too short. During the whole second fortnight some Reigate people came into the inquiry rooms almost every night.

Among the special incidents met with, the following one is full of interest: [A young man living four miles away heard of the meetings; he determined to walk over one Sunday, and see if salvation was to be found there. He had been seeking the way of truth for five months, ever since he recovered from a severe illness. He soon found Jesus was present to heal, and returned rejoicing. Already it has been found that the number coming into the inquiry rooms by no means represents the amount of blessing received.

At Redhill on three evenings it was arranged to have a large procession to the meeting through the principal streets, singing and giving notices at intervals, by which means many were brought into the meetings. Seventeen years have passed since Mr. Telford held a mission in this district, and many cases of blessing at that time have only now come to light. J. S.

OPENINGS IN FRANCE.

M. P. Guiraud, evangelist at Gabre, Commavère, par le Mas d' Azil, Ariège, writes to us: "I have just passed some weeks in Ariège near the house of the brothers De Grenier, who sealed their faith with their blood in 1762 at Toulouse. In the commune of St. Martin de Carolp there is at present a serious and interesting movement towards the Gospel. The municipal council has almost unanimously asked that the Gospel should be preached in the commune. The Bishop has been compelled to withdraw the priest, and the people have no disposition to retain Roman Catholic worship. They are firmly resolved to maintain their rights, and to press their religious needs.

"The movement of which I speak owes its immediate development to a former Mayor of St. Martin, who, during service in Alsace, attended Evangelical worship. Now heads of families and others are asking for information, for Bibles, Testaments, booklets, and tracts, that will show clearly the difference between Romanism and the Gospel. The municipal council have requested the Prefect to engage the services of a pastor, but it is doubtful if the Government will create such a precedent. I have written to Toulouse for literature for distribution, and I trust that friends of the work in England will come to our aid, sending suitable French publications direct to my address. I shall willingly devote my time to the work of placing the Word of Life before the people of the commune, which is distant from here three hours' walk through a mountainous country.

"There is also another locality which has no Romish curate, and in which an evangelistic work is to be done. Unfortunately, it is almost impossible in France for our societies to extend their efforts, through lack of funds. Yet can we leave souls to perish when God places them right in our path?"

PROTESTANT EFFORT IN FRANCE.

In the October issue of "Gospel Echoes from Across Channel," Pasteur J. E. Pfender, secretary of the Société Centrale Protestante d'Evangelisation in France, says: "The object of the Société Centrale is to preserve our scattered co-religionists, and procure for them the blessings of the true Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; also to spread the same Gospel among our fellow-countrymen plunged in ignorance, impiety, or error. This Society, whose task is so vast, is at present passing through a most critical hour. The Government has ceased to adopt our stations, as it did of yore, when they had grown to be real parishes. Thus a considerable portion of our resources is absorbed to maintain congregations which we have previously formed; and it has been necessary to increase our expenses in order to respond to the double and urgent duties the Lord imposes upon us.

"French Protestants have already made large sacrifices to be able to bear this new burden of expense; they will make more; they can and must do a great deal to meet the demands occasioned by the multiplicity of efforts; these are quite out of proportion with our number, but necessary owing to our scattered condition. A deficit of £1800 still weighs upon our weak resources. We look forward, considering our duty and our progress, with uneasiness. We ask all our friends with earnest entreaty the help of their prayers, their sympathies, and their sacrifices. To continue our work, without extending it, without taking into consideration our deficit, we need an annual increase of £1200. If we do not obtain it, we shall be obliged to suppress stations, which means the withdrawing of spiritual food for some thousand souls, which have already been enlightened by celestial rays.

"If there is no other nation of which the character is so decidedly recognisable everywhere as the English, neither is there any which takes so ardent an interest in the Reign of God throughout the world. We beg our friends of all the United Kingdom to come energetically to our rescue at the outset of this winter's campaign: we undertake the campaign in trembling in the consciousness of our weakness, but with faith, persuaded as we are that the Almighty will not abandon us."

The office of the Society is 48, Rue de Dunkerque, Paris.

DAN'S STORY AND ITS CONTRAST.

I was much interested in the touching story of "Dan" which appeared in The Christian a few weeks ago; how from the old farmstead he came to London and in a few years sank to the lowest dregs of society, apparently and humanly speaking, because there was no loving hand of fellowship stretched out to him at the place of worship he attended, and, in consequence, no kindly aid through the week. In our City congregations are there not many "Dans" who, appearing for a time, remain unknown, and only having their cold dreary lodgings to come and go from, are at last persuaded to add excitement to their lives, through the music-hall, the gambling table, and the theatre?

It has struck us that the National Home Reading Union,* which was started five years ago, to try and stem the tide of bad literature, might be also used to supply one link in the chain so sorely needed to bridge over this gulf of loneliness. If week by week such young men had a cheerful gathering with other young fellows to look forward to, a ray of sunshine would be introduced into their life, they would have been able to form helpful friendships, and healthful interests would spring up on other hands.

A few weeks ago I heard a story of a Sunday-school teacher, who felt the need of keeping some hold on his boys during the week, and who also found out that they were reading the low tales which are sold in such profusion in many back streets, and wondered what he could do for them. He had only one night in the week disengaged, and it was somewhat of a struggle to give that up; but he thought if he could get his boys to join a "Home Reading Circle" they might get interested in better books. Knowing that they would vote them dry, he began by playing games with them, which he would only continue after the reading. At first the boys endured the books in order to get the play; but after a time they became so interested that of their own accord the games were given up that they might have more of their now valued books, and the teacher never regretted having given up his only free night. He found that, "Give and it shall be given unto you," is as true of time as of money.

Then, too, a leader's personal character must tell. Perhaps we can hardly realise the subtle sympathies which leap out to meet those influences with which we are constantly brought into contact. Moreover, a Christian "Circle" leader will try to lead his circle from the great minds of our country, and from tracing the course of history and the delights of nature and science to the Christ who is the Revealer of the beautiful thoughts in the great heart of God to us. Above all, he will try to lead them to our Christ as the great sin-bearer; to "Jesus, who shall save his people from their sins."

EXCAVATIONS AT JERUSALEM.

Dr. Bliss, who is conducting excavations for the Palestine Exploration Fund in Jerusalem, sends home a report of recent work, in which he states that he has found, at a depth of a few feet, the foundations of a wall which may be those of the actual first wall of the city, and are certainly on the site of that wall. In the course of the work he had uncovered three large square towers. He had also found a gateway, the door sill of which was still in situ, with the holes of the door posts and the holes for the bolts. This sill was four feet above the ancient paved road which passed through the wall at this point, but on digging deeper he found, four feet below and therefore on a level with the ancient road, the sill of an older gateway.

These discoveries are contributions to the Jerusalem problems of the greatest value. Of less importance, but still very curious, is a discovery reported by Herr Baurath von Schick, who has found a postern in the north wall on the exact spot where the Leper's gate is placed by writers in the 12th century, a fact which seems to show that the present position of the wall is what it has always been, and that the city never extended farther north than this wall.

PASTOR CHARLES SPURGEON.—A letter was read on Sunday morning in the Greenwich Baptist Tabernacle, from Mr. Spurgeon, stating that owing to ill-health he would be compelled to resign the pastorate of that church, which he has held for fourteen years. He will go abroad to sunnier climes, and it is expected that the resignation will take place early in December.

* The headquarters are at Surrey House, Victoria Embankment, London, W.C. The secretary will gladly send all particulars.

THE LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE.

In the report of the first year's work of this college for the instruction of foreign missionaries in the elements of practical medicine, Dr. C. F. Harford Battersby, the principal, says:—

"Those who have been through the course seem to have profited by it, and are thankful for the opportunities for medical and surgical knowledge which they have received. Of these some are already in the mission field, while some have still a short time more at home. One is now in South Africa, and two more hope to enter upon work there. One has left for the Straits Settlements, whilst others are destined for North Africa, China, Madagascar, the Central Provinces of India, etc., and one is already on his way to Persia.

"A new session began on October 4, and the residential college is already full, whilst others will be in the neighbourhood. The continued support of friends interested in the work is asked in making known the advantage of the training to those who might be able to avail themselves of it. The testimony of medical men on the usefulness of such a course of study would be especially valuable, and would have great weight with the various missionary societies who have not as yet realised the importance of careful training in elementary medicine and surgery to those of their men who are far from any qualified medical aid. Whilst the college is already self-supporting, as far as the working expenses are concerned, there is still need of some help in order to render the work more efficient, and the need of some good anatomical models may be mentioned in this connection."

The college is situated at 16, Mornington-road, Bow, E.

ANTI-GAMBLING.

An anti-gambling demonstration was held at Christ Church, Westminster-bridge-road, last week. Rev. F. B. Meyer presided, and there was a large attendance. The chairman said he believed from his experience of the immediate neighbourhood, there was scarcely a factory or laundry not more or less bitten by the gambling fever. Coffee-houses and public-houses were known places of resort for betting, especially on Sunday mornings. In some cases poor men and women were ringleaders in this.

Rev. E. Roberts moved a resolution upholding the action of the National Anti-Gambling League in coping with the great evils of betting and gambling. Mr. A. H. Gilkes, headmaster of Dulwich College, seconded the resolution, which was carried.

Mr. John Hawke, hon. superintendent of the Anti-Gambling League, said that the league proceeded on two lines. It was no use to try and revive the old laws against individual betting. They would interfere too much with the liberty of the subject, and they must use persuasion and example. Against those persons who made their living by the trade of betting and gambling, and by the weakness and the follies of others, they would use all the powers of the present law or any that Parliament might give them in the future. They were endeavouring to enforce the Betting House Act, and hoped to bring an action against the stewards of the Jockey Club. They had every hope that the Odds Bill would be introduced next session, and many of the newspapers had told them that if it could be made illegal to publish the odds in any form they would not oppose.

HOME OF REST, FRAMFIELD.—In this home of rest for business women and girls over fifteen, the life is that of a private Christian household. The charge for board, etc., is 12s. 6d. per week; less is charged when it is found necessary, and a free invite given to those who really need it. Miss Mason desires to increase the number of invitations, knowing there are so many working women who through ill health, or lack of employment, need, but cannot have, rest and change of air. Towards this end she will be glad of additional help. Communications to be addressed, Miss H. Mason, The Hawthornes, Framfield, Sussex.

THE LONDON JEWS' SOCIETY held its quarterly prayer-meeting on Tuesday afternoon, in the Inns of Court Hotel, 20, Lincoln's Inn Fields. Sir John H. Kennaway presided, and Rev. J. Seaver gave the address. The following missionaries, shortly going out to Syria and Palestine, were commended to God in prayer:—Rev. J. and Mrs. Segall, returning to Damascus; Miss A. A. Gridley, going out to Damascus as lady worker; Miss Louisa J. Barlee, going out to Hebron as an honorary worker; Miss Jessie Paterson, succeeding to Miss L. J. Barlee's work in Jerusalem; and Sister Isabel Maxwell, going out as a nurse in the Jerusalem Hospital.

FAITH OR FANATICISM?

Dear Sir,—May I be allowed to say a word touching some remarks made in The Christian of Oct. 11, bearing upon voting money not actually in the exchequer of a missionary society, or in a probable estimate of moneys likely to be received?

I gather from the paragraph that you would justify getting into debt, or running the risk of doing so, provided one looks to the Lord to pay it off. Does not this savour somewhat of fanaticism or of tempting the Lord, rather than of faith to be commended? Is there not a great difference of principle between ordering groceries for home use, or 10,000 Bibles for free distribution, when the purse is low, hoping the Lord may pay, and receiving into my house a destitute child, trusting for enabling grace to economise more closely that another mouth may be fed, or for the Lord to send further supplies through any channel He wills—but on no account to incur debt?

If worry and anxiety follow from lack of money to meet the liability for the Bibles, is there anyone but myself to blame? It would be of no avail to plead intention of doing good to the souls of men. The most kindly friend would rightly blame for mistaken zeal or faulty judgment.

I cannot help thinking this is one cause of the outcry made by churches and missionary societies in these days. Not being content to take the incoming of funds as one of the Lord's indications that He wishes certain work proceeded with, human plans are laid, money not in hand voted, and then vexation follows that hopes are not realised, and, ofttimes through pressure, doubtful methods for raising it are resorted to. May it not be that the Lord would teach by permitting these difficulties, which, after all, are but the natural consequence of action, independent of his distinct leading and guidance that something is wrong?

If "the work is there and workers to do it" cannot faith be just as easily exercised for the Lord to incline hearts to give beforehand as afterwards? And although He afterwards honours the faith He graciously bestows, ought not true faith first to make sure that she sees the definite leading He intends her to follow? And may not the Christian friends who differ from us be mistaking hope for faith?—Respectfully yours, N. A. B.

[We entirely agree with our correspondent.—Ed.]

CEREMONIAL AND UNITARIANISM.

Dear Sir,—Many readers of The Christian will be in full sympathy with your animadversions on the ceremonial used at the recent opening of a Congregational church at Wimbledon. To others the matter will seen unimportant; merely a question of taste, or at most of Christian efficiency. There is no fear that Congregationalists will adopt or tolerate any ceremonial that embodies the idea of an official priesthood, an idea totally incompatible with the very existence of Congregational churches.

But, sir, there is a danger far greater than could arise from the adoption of a ritual as pompous as that of the Irvingites or the Church of Rome—the persistent and systematic effort that is being made to indoctrinate Congregational churches with Unitarianism. There could be no just cause of complaint if Unitarians, Mohammedans, Buddhists, or Atheists were content to propagate their tenets by open and honourable means. But from the days of Penry and Robinson until very lately, Congregationalism has been identified with a body of Evangelical doctrine, of which the Incarnation of the Co-eternal Word was a central feature, albeit we have always been averse to formal creeds. We are now being taught, however, that so long as a man cultivates the spirit of Christ, it is quite indifferent whether he believes Him to have been the Son of God or only the son of Joseph the carpenter. The spirit of Congregationalism, we are told, is undogmatic, and there is room for Evangelicals and Unitarians side by side within its fold—until the latter assimilate or eject the former.

I have lately seen a new hymnbook, designed for use, and actually used, in some Congregational churches, in which, of about 240 hymns—many of great poetic beauty—there are less than forty verses which could not be sung by a Unitarian without the slightest mental reservation.

This is a trifle. One of the most widely circulated religious papers, though ostentatiously undenominational, is well known to be edited by a member of a Congregational church; prominent Congregational ministers are among its most acceptable contributors; and it caters especially for Congregationalists, who form probably the largest part of its readers. Yet for years past the steady aim of its conductors has been to belittle everything which our fathers understood by the word "Evangelical," to familiarise its readers with every novelty of destructive criticism, to "damn with faint praise" every high-class publication on the conservative side in criticism or divinity, and to impress us with a notion that the deity of Jesus Christ is a speculative question, about which the opinion we may adopt is of small importance.

Even this might have been borne with. But recently the fullest prominence was given, on the leader page, to a signed article by an ex-Congregational minister (now M.P.), in which I read the following:—"It is indispensable that Christ believed in a devil, most probably a personal devil. This was inevitable. However high the transcendent Man may rise in his spiritual consciousness, his feet must stand on the dust and mud of his native soil." If this means anything at all it means that He whom we own as Master and Lord did indeed believe in the devil—couldn't help it, considering his age and surroundings; but we of this enlightened century know better, and that He who said, "I proceeded forth and came from God" was either mistaken or untruthful in respect of his own origin; his "native soil" being, not as the Beloved Disciple taught, "the bosom of the Father," but "dust and mud."

This precious effusion was not allowed to pass without protest; but, as was expected, the protest was quietly ignored.

Now, sir, is it not time that some means were adopted whereby Congregationalists, who hold by "the faith once delivered to the saints," might formally dissociate themselves from those who, while calling themselves Christians, repudiate His infallibility to whose name they cling, and patronise Him by setting Him in rank with Socrates and Buddha and Mahomet? Many of us are far less conservative in our theology, and in our views about the results of Biblical criticism, than the editor of The Christian, but in my opinion questions about the mode of the Spirit's operation, or the final destiny of this wicked world, the second Advent, or plenary inspiration, the right use of sacraments, or whether Moses wrote Leviticus, are of infinitely little importance in comparison with the supreme question, Is the Incarnation of the Divine Word a fact or a fable?—Yours faithfully, T. G. Crippen.

FINAL PERSEVERANCE.

Sir,—I recently heard a local preacher taking his text from 1 Cor. xv. 58, "Be ye steadfast, unmovable," etc. He based his arguments upon this text, declaring that the Apostle's teaching was in direct opposition to the doctrine of "once saved always saved." The preacher himself stated that we are only on probation here. What I should like to know is, what are the direct teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ upon this all-important subject?—Yours faithfully, G. A. S.

[We believe that one who is born again cannot be unborn. But the proof that we are born again is that we continue. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." "Whose house are we if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." There is no such doctrine so stated as "once saved always saved." "The Lord knoweth them that are his"—that is his side. "Let him that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity"—that is our side. If anyone has returned to iniquity he has no ground of assurance. 1 Cor. xv. 58 was addressed to believers who were in the work of the Lord, and exhorted them to abound in it.—Ed.]

DIALECTS IN AFRICA.—Mr. D. Crawford, describing his itinerant experiences, says:—"Bantu is always Bantu wherever we go; and it only needs a few days of getting the ears accustomed to local differences to see how really trivial these are. The pure Luba spoken north of the Va-Lomotwa sounds at first hearing as very incomprehensible, yet on examination it is only Chi-Sanga with 'p''s changed into 'b''s and a few extra expletives. Chi-Vemba on the east and north of Mweru is more difficult, owing to the fact that a new vocabulary has to be acquired; but even this is the easiest part of dialect-learning, as all know who are among dialects. But then, when grasped, what a weapon it is, reaching on till near Lake Nyassa, and south to Lake Bangweolo. A very hopeful streak of light in this dark babel of dialects is the fact that all eastward of Lake Mweru Swahili is known by nearly everybody. It is therefore possible with a knowledge of Umbundu and Swahili to go across Africa between latitudes 9° and 12°, and hold intelligible converse with at least all the chiefs and a great number of their people. I found everywhere a craze for beads, cloth not being much asked for. The former should rank equally with the latter, and for every truss of cloth there should be a bag of beads."

GATHERED GOLD.

"Woe to the eyes that shed no tears,
No tears for God to wipe away!"

It is not how much we give, but how much we have left, that betokens our liberality.

Satan may batter the outside of our hearts, but he can never get inside if the Lord Jesus be there.

Every resistance to temptation lessens the power of the tempter, and renders the path of duty more easy.

If you don't keep pride out of your souls, and your souls out of pride, God will keep your souls out of heaven.—Dyer.

The bread of life is love; the salt of life is work; the sweetness of life is poesy: the water of life, faith.—Mrs. Jameson.

However frequently you are injured, if real penitence and contrition follow the offence, a Christian is always bound to forgive.—Bishop Porteus.

Temptations, when we meet them at first, are as the lion that roared upon Samson; but if we overcome them, the next time we see them we shall find a nest of honey in them.—Bunyan.

The nominal profession of religion, with which many persons content themselves, seems to fit them for little else than to disgrace Christianity by their practice.—Milner.

GROUNDS OF ACTION.

Let the grounds of our actions be noble, beginning upon reason, proceeding with prudence, measured by the common lines of men, and confident upon the expectation of a usual Providence.—Jeremy Taylor.

SOLID DEVOTIONS.

Solid devotions resemble the rivers which run under the earth. They steal from the eyes of the world to seek the eyes of God; and it often happens that those of whom we speak least on earth are best known in heaven.

DUTIES.

Duties are ours; events are God's. This removes an infinite burden from the shoulders of a miserable, tempted, dying creature. On this consideration only can he securely lay down his head and close his eyes.—Cecil.

HOW TO LIVE AND PRAY.

So live with men as considering always that God sees thee; so pray to God as if every man heard thee. Do nothing which thou wouldst not have God see done. Desire nothing which may either wrong thy profession to ask or God's honour to grant.—Bishop Henshaw.

TO LIVE WELL.

It is no small commendation to manage a little well. He is a good waggoner that can turn in a little room. To live well in abundance is the praise of the estate, not of the person. I will study more how to give a good account of my little than how to make it more.—Bishop Hall.

TIME TO DIE.

He who cannot find time to consult his Bible will find one day that he has time to be sick; he who has no time to pray must find time to die; he who can find no time to reflect is most likely to find time to sin; he who cannot find time for repentance will find an eternity, in which repentance will be of no avail.—H. More.

PLEASURE OF A RELIGIOUS MAN.

The pleasure of a religious man is an easy and a portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom without alarming either the eye or the envy of the world. A man putting all his pleasures into this one is like a traveller putting all his goods into one jewel—the value is the same, and the convenience greater.—South.

THE TEMPTER'S POWER.

It is a narrow and straight path between overrating and underrating Satan. Underrate him not, for thou art no match for him. Overrate him not, for he is no match for Christ. Remember he is a resistible foe; his power, great as it is (and it is great) is not omnipotence; his cunning is not omniscience.—J. Harington Evans.

PRAYER FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—Following the custom of former years, the prayer meeting at the Metropolitan Tabernacle was made special last Monday evening. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, the pastor, gave a suggestive address to Sunday and Ragged School teachers, based on Elisha's miracle at Jericho in healing the waters at the spring. The meeting was well attended, and largely representative, the secretaries of the Sunday School Union, the Ragged School Union, the Tabernacle Sunday School, and others taking part in the devotions, which were mainly directed for a blessing upon all efforts to bring the young to the fold of Christ.

TEMPERANCE AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

A gathering of metropolitan and home county workers of the National Temperance League was held on Friday evening at the Mansion House, which was crowded.

The Bishop of London, who occupied the chair, said that the purpose of their meeting was to stir up the members of the League to greater activity. It was proposed that they should begin the new year with an earnest endeavour to add very largely to their numbers. They believed that by far the most efficient means was to begin by removing intoxicating liquors altogether from themselves. There was no persuasion like showing others that you have done precisely what you want them to do.

The Mayor of Northampton said that although he was the 704th mayor of that borough he was the first total abstainer; but he had found total abstinence of immense value in his official position, because he was better able to give advice to people brought before him for drunkenness. Having referred with approval to the legislation which had been passed with the object of protecting children from temptation, the speaker expressed the opinion that a law should be passed giving a magistrate, as in America, the power of sending to an inebriates' home for six months the man who had been fined three times for drunkenness.

Canon Basil Wilberforce said that he was very thankful that they were about to inaugurate another great crusade on total abstinence lines. He could not help referring to the violent opposition that met them from wealth that had been created in a particular direction; and he must say that he believed in the great mass of total abstainers having the power given them to protect their homes. They contended that it was only morally right that side by side with any measure that was passed should go also the permission, if the great majority of the people desired it, to free themselves from a source of constant temptation. That, however, could only be a partial remedy, and therefore it could come alongside any other remedy. Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., and Mr. T. Marchant Williams also addressed the meeting.

WOMEN AND TEMPERANCE.

The autumn meetings of the Women's Total Abstinence Union were held last week in Exeter. On Monday a reception was given in the Barnfield Hall. On Tuesday the proceedings opened with a business meeting, followed by a public prayer meeting conducted by Mrs. Servanté. In the afternoon there was a meeting of the general committee. In the evening a large meeting took place in the Royal Public Rooms, Mrs. Henry J. Wilson presided, and stirring addresses were given by Miss M. E. Docwra, Lady Elizabeth T. Biddulph, Miss Agnes Weston, Mrs. Servanté, and Mrs. Hawkes. The meeting was most enthusiastic throughout, and at the close pledges were taken and members gained to the Union. On Wednesday the proceedings commenced with a mid-day prayer meeting conducted by Miss Forsaith, in the afternoon a public meeting took place in the Barnfield Hall under the presidency of Lady Elizabeth T. Biddulph, who in opening gave a short account of the Women's Temperance Home at Sydenham. An address was delivered by Dr. George Hardyman on "Reasons, Scientific and Otherwise, for Total Abstinence." In the evening a conference was held, when a paper was read by Miss Ashworth on "Strongholds and Safeguards, Women's Total Abstinence Societies." On Thursday a crowded meeting for women was held, Mrs. Atkinson presided, and addresses were delivered by Mrs. Brooks and Miss Reavell. Meetings for young people were also held at the Blind Asylum, Miss Leakey's house, and at the printing works.

FOUR CHILDREN of Rev. Ross Taylor were burned to death in a fire at their home at Nyack, a suburb of New York, on Monday morning. Their parents, with the two eldest children, narrowly escaped meeting the same fate, having to jump from the windows of the burning house in order to save their lives. Three workmen were injured in the fire, one of them fatally. Rev. Ross Taylor is a son of Rev. William Taylor, the Methodist Missionary Bishop in Africa.

A MISSIONARY FOR SOUTH AMERICA.—Mr. John Mitchell, who has laboured for five years in West Indian Islands, left England last week, after a furlough of some months, necessitated by a weak state of health. He sailed by the R.M.S. Lucania, on Saturday last, for New York, en route for Granada, and thence to Venezuela. There is, at the latter place, a wide sphere for Gospel effort. Mr. Mitchell will value the fellowship of friends in the United States during his brief sojourn among them.

OXFORD NOTES.

Wycliffe Hall is full this term, and is doing most effective service for Evangelical truth by means of its able principal and his staff of helpers.

The sermon to freshmen was preached last week by Rev. F. S. Webster, of Birmingham, and proved a word in season to the men present, over 200 of whom gathered to hear it in St. Peter le Bailey Church.

It is a pleasure to note that Mr. Chavasse is among the lecturers this year in the Theological Faculty as deputy for Professor Heartley. With so large a proportion of doubtful teaching, Mr. Chavasse's testimony will be most valuable.

The number of "freshmen" who have come up this term is 693, being about twenty more than last year. May they be surrounded by much prayer in this their first term, which so often marks a man's University career for weal or woe.

The Missionary Union programme for this term has a good list of speakers, including Bishop Hodges, of Travancore. Mr. F. Anderson, of Exeter, now travelling secretary of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union, gave the address last week.

Among the additions to local workers during the Long Vacation is Rev. E. H. Elwin as curate of St. Peter le Bailey, who was ordained in September. Mr. Elwin was president of the I.C.C.U. last year, and was an active worker for Christ all through his undergraduate course.

The Oxford men who were able to attend the Student Volunteer Camp at Keswick have brought back a "good report of the land," and the result is being seen in the increased and increasing power of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union. The College Bible-readings are now in full swing, and it is gratifying to find new ones being started in Colleges which have been hitherto without them.

Much earnest expectation is being shown concerning the conference for the deepening of the spiritual life, to be held next week. Most of the Keswick speakers will be present, and Mr. Robert Wilson is to preside. As the present Holiness movement originated in the Oxford Conference of 1874, it is fitting that another should be held after these years of blessing. The meetings will be held from Monday evening next to the following Thursday, and much prayer is asked from all those interested in Oxford life and influence.

The Oxford Ragged School, where so many undergraduates have had some of their earliest (and most practical) experiences of work for Christ, is now attached to the parish of Holy Trinity, it having for some time past been found increasingly difficult to maintain it as a separate organisation. But it will not suffer any real change or loss by the new arrangement, the vicar having agreed to continue it as a Ragged School, and thus with the guarantee of continuity and stability in the management, the old school, so dear to many, should increase in power and usefulness.

IRISH NOTES.

The Irish Church Missions and the Church of Ireland Colportage Mission are about to be amalgamated.

A series of sermons in aid of the South American Missionary Society has just been preached in various churches in Ireland, including Newry, Portrush, and Cork.

The Church Army Mission and Colportage Van for the North of Ireland, under Captain Barnhill, has completed a successful seven weeks' mission in Belfast in which many are believed to have decided for Christ.

The itinerant evangelists of the Irish Church Mission continue to meet with much encouragement in their visitation of fairs. They sell to the people many copies of the New Testament and other Evangelical literature.

A correspondent of the Belfast News Letter speaks very highly, from personal observation, of the work of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. "Its readers carry the Gospel message from street to street and from house to house in cities and in the country with very blessed effect."

A largely attended meeting has been held in Cookstown to bid farewell to Miss Ramsay, of Claggan House, Cookstown, a missionary of the English Presbyterian Church in China, who has been home on furlough for some time, and who is about to return shortly to her work in the East.

Rev. W. J. Bewglass, Presbyterian minister, Carrigart, co. Donegal, makes an earnest appeal for aid in erecting a place of worship for his scattered congregation. They had to surrender their old church to the landlord, and are at present without a meeting place. Mr. Bewglass says his people, who are mostly small farmers, shepherds, etc., have given liberally, but outside aid will be needed to secure the £800 required for a suitable building.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The annual Conference of the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild is being held in Edinburgh this week.

A branch of the Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has been established in Perth.

Mr. John M. Nicholson has been carrying on a good work among the young and by tract distributing in the island of Lewis.

Rev. Dr. Donald Macleod, of Glasgow, will, it is expected, be the next Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

The Baptist Union of Scotland held its annual meeting in Adelaide-place Church, Glasgow, last week. The Scottish Baptists are a comparatively small body, but their testimony to simplicity of doctrine and church order is valuable.

Rev. William Turner, who for twenty-two years has been superintendent of the Edinburgh City Mission, has found it necessary, acting on medical advice, to resign his appointment, and contemplates paying a visit to Australia, where one of his sons is settled.

The Free Church of Scotland Guild held its sessions last week at Kirkcaldy. Principal Rainy attributed the great advance in dealing with social problems to the influence of Christianity. Dr. Ross Taylor, of Glasgow, made a strong plea for union between the Free and U.P. Churches.

The classes of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, are now in full session. Mr. Anderson takes up in his evening class, studies of the Gospels, and on the third Tuesday of each month proposes to give a lecture on "The Being of God," with the object of furnishing his students with arguments to meet the prevailing and increasing scepticism of the times.

Rev. D. Baron has entered upon a short mission in Glasgow, in connection with the Bonar Memorial Hall for Jewish mission work. His "Occasional Record" for this month contains a narrative of his recent tour in Austria-Hungary, which is of more than ordinary interest, and gives a striking picture of the opportunities for itinerating work in that part of the Continent.

Henceforth on payment of the ordinary matriculation fee, and on compliance with the usual regulations, the students of the Edinburgh School of Medicine for Women will practically become students of the University, and will be able to proceed in due course to the ordinary medical degrees. The University of Edinburgh is no less to be congratulated on this happy solution of a pressing problem.

The large society for caring for lads and girls, known as the "Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society," which has covered the city and suburbs with a network of Sunday meetings and lectures and Bible-classes for young people, held its annual meeting in the City Hall, on 16th October. Bailie Chisholm presided, and made a vigorous and telling speech. The Society numbers about 20,000 lads and girls.

A conference of women workers is being held in Glasgow, October 23-26. The subjects to be discussed are such as "The Official Work of Women," "The Student Life of Women," "How Women can Raise the Standard of Morality," "The Conditions of Domestic Service," etc. Miss Louisa Stevenson, Mrs. Mirrlees, Miss Maitland (Oxford), Mrs. Creighton (Peterborough), Miss White, and other ladies are to take part. A short devotional meeting precedes the forenoon sederunts.

The Children's Fresh-air Fortnight scheme, directed by Mr. MacKeith, of Glasgow, has received a second gift of £2000 to purchase and furnish a Home for scrofulous children. Just a week previous, the first £2000 was sent in for the same purpose, so that Mr. MacKeith has now the means to provide the two Homes he appealed for. Although not distinctly evangelistic, the scheme is included in the operations of the "Glasgow United Evangelistic Association," and sprung out of the work for the children carried on in the Tent Hall on Sunday afternoons.

LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.

Last Friday united devotional meetings of all the branches of the London Mission were held in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly. Rev. Mark Guy Pearse presided. After an expository address by Rev. W. H. Tindall, Rev. J. H. Hopkins enjoined the necessity of frequent prayer in their work. If people prayed more, more would be accomplished for Christ. Rev. W. D. Waters said the endeavour to separate the sacred from the secular was one of the greatest mistakes. In the Christian life everything should be done in the spirit of consecration.

In the afternoon the meeting was addressed by Sisters Mary and Emmeline (West London Mission) and Sister Mary (Central Mission). At the evening service addresses of a devotional character were given by representatives of different branches.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The "George Williams" Memorial Hall at Bridgwater is now undergoing extensive alterations on the ground floor.

The committee of Y.M.C.A.s in Basle has consented to receive the next International Conference at that city in 1898.

Associations are in course of formation at Blaina (Mon.) and Ware (Herts). A successful start has also been made at New Brompton.

At a well-attended meeting in the Christian Institute, Falkirk, last Friday evening, Mons. Fermaud, of Geneva, gave an interesting account of Y.M.C.A. work on the Continent.

Encouraging reports are to hand from the Associations in the South of France, which are described by Pastor Tophel, President of the Central International Committee, as "full of life and animated by an excellent spirit."

Successful meetings were held last week by the Winchester, Wimborne, Bridport, Sidcup, and Ryde Associations. The last-named bade farewell to a member bound for mission work in China. At Winchester the year commenced with a membership of 68; now it stands at 125.

On Tuesday evening a large meeting was held at the Central Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant, Liverpool, to welcome Sir George Williams. The Bishop of Liverpool presided, and was very influentially supported. Prizes gained by students in the evening classes were distributed, and excellent musical selections were rendered during the evening.

Canon McCormick is to deliver his lecture, "The Siege of Derry," at the opening meeting of the free Pleasant Saturday Evenings for men in Exeter Hall on October 27. Madame Reichelmann and Mr. Rechab Tandy are to sing. Rev. Dr. Pentecost is announced to deliver a course of eight free lectures at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evenings upon "The Reasonableness of Christianity."

Mr. W. Hargrave White, at one time State Secretary of Missouri, and for many years secretary of the State Executive Committee of Missouri, died in Atlanta, Ga., Saturday, September 8, at the age of sixty-four. Mr. White was the author of "The History of the State Work of the Missouri Young Men's Christian Associations," and for a great many years was an arduous labourer in the cause of young men.

A meeting of the Tunbridge Wells Y.M.C.A. was held on Wednesday evening, October 17, to bid farewell to one of the members, Mr. E. Noakes, who is leaving for India as a missionary under the C.M.S. There were about eighty members present, and the meeting was of a very hearty character. During the summer splendid open-air evangelistic meetings were held on Sunday evenings. Crowds stood and listened to the testimonies of the young men.

The Lewes Association, at its annual meeting last week, reported 111 members. The Sunday morning prayer meetings, the evening evangelistic services, and the week evening meetings have been fairly sustained. The Sunday open-air services in Lewes, Ringmer, and Iford have been carried on with vigour, and evangelistic meetings have also been held once a month in the Institute at Glynde. Work of varied kind has been carried on with much success.

The annual social meeting of the Inverness Y.M.C.A. Tract Society was held last week. The annual report showed that the work has been carried on very successfully during the year. The number of tracts distributed by fifty-five ladies and gentlemen were—English, 40,211; Gaelic, 2908—making a total of 43,119, an increase of 303 on the previous year. Addresses were delivered by Revs. I. Fraser and C. E. Greenfield, Mr. Kinnear, and Mr. Barclay.

A public demonstration, organised by the Kingston and Surbiton branch, took place at the Albany Hall, and attracted a numerous assemblage. Rev. Dr. Moore, who presided, said that in his younger days he was a worker in the Y.M.C.A., which he had always regarded as a splendid institution for educating, developing, and Christianising young men. Mr. Robert Burn, of Aldersgate-street, gave a description of the recent Jubilee celebrations, and exhibited a series of oxy-hydrogen views of Y.M.C.A. buildings in Japan, America, Australia, New Zealand, Switzerland, the Sandwich Islands, and India, as well as of men well known in connection with the work.

The annual meeting of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. took place in the Lecture Hall last week, and was well attended. Mr. A. Backhouse occupied the chair. Mr. Johnson (gen. sec.) read the annual report, which referred to the building and extension scheme, for which promises had been received for £3299. The total cost of the building would amount to about £5000. The usefulness of the Y.M.C.A. has been proved by the fact that five of its members had left them to devote their lives to mission work at home and abroad. Four members of the Bible-class had left to become Sunday-school teachers. The recent trade depression had somewhat affected the membership, the total number being now 639.

At the annual meeting of the Dundee Young Men's Christian Association, Ex-Provost Moncur, the president, occupied the chair. The work of the association, it was stated, had been more than usually encouraging. The religious life of the association had been much more vigorous than for several years past, and they were looking forward to a very successful winter's work. The membership for the year was 549. In connection with the tract society, it was mentioned that a large number of foreign sailors entered the port, and they were visited every Sabbath morning, tracts in nineteen different languages being distributed. The members of the society numbered forty-three, and about 95,000 tracts had been distributed during the year.

The Westbourne Grove Association has commenced the winter's work in real earnest. By the invitation of Mrs. Buller, 36, Porchester-square, a number of the members recently gathered together. After refreshments, a meeting was held in the drawing-room, when Major Irby spoke on the influence of the members in their daily calling. Dr. Hibbard gave an important word on the blessedness of an unclouded fellowship with the Lord Jesus; and the secretary (Mr. Walter Wild) spoke on purity. There was a deeply spiritual tone, and before the meeting closed there were nearly forty young men signified their desire to give themselves in full and glad surrender to Jesus. A social gathering was held in the hall at 172, Queen's-road, last week, when a larger number of young men than ever assembled. The hall was well filled. The chair was taken by Mr. Jas. McIntyre, and a really stirring address was given by Pastor F. B. Monti. Several young men gave bright testimonies to the saving and keeping power of Jesus. Prayer is asked for Mr. Chas. Cook, who will conduct a six days' mission, Nov. 18-23, for men.

THE Y.W.C.A.

EAST END INSTITUTE, GLASGOW.

The East End Institute and Home, erected for the work of the Glasgow Y.W.C.A., was formally opened on October 19 by the Lord Provost of the city and Lord Overtoun. A large company of subscribers and friends assembled in the afternoon in the new hall, when a short meeting was held.

The Lord Provost, in his opening speech, spoke of the general work of the Association in the city, and the need for such among the numbers of young women in a large city. In the district in which the new institute is situated, the chief centre of the mills and factories, there are 7000 young women between the ages of fifteen and thirty, and if the neighbouring division of the city is included, there are double that number.

Lord Overtoun sketched the origin and growth of the special work of the East End Home and Institute, which began twelve years ago with a very small home. The arrangements are made to suit mill-workers, for whom the Home is intended. Forty can be accommodated in this new Home, and there is, besides, the ordinary institute and branch work going on. The building and site have cost about £4800, and it is opened free of debt. Mr. J. S. Templeton and Dr. Patrick having spoken, the company adjourned to the Home, where tea was served, and the house was open for inspection.

In the evening Lord Overtoun (to whom the Y.W.C.A. owes so much for his generous liberality) presided at a social meeting of members, and Hon. Emily Kinnaird, Rev. Mr. Steel, and Rev. Mr. Lowe gave addresses. Miss Todd, evangelistic secretary of the Scottish Y.W.C.A. Division, conducts a mission for young women in the New Institute this week. The bright sunshine of the opening day was a token of the spiritual sunshine which the workers ask may shine on this work for God among the young women of the East End of Glasgow.

BRIEF NOTES.

Mrs. W. E. Legg held last week, in Aberdeen, a special mission for women and girls.

It is proposed to observe Thursday, November 8, as a day of united prayer in the London Y.W.C.A. Special meetings for prayer will be held, afternoon and evening, at the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, and it is hoped also at other centres.

The usual monthly conference was held at the Morley Halls on Thursday last. Miss Nugent, who presided, introduced the subject, viz., New Testament thoughts which gather around the word "members." Several took part, and a closing address was given by Miss Hull, of Eastbourne.

Last week a mission was held by Miss Rouse at the Young Women's Institute, 10, Merton-road, Wandsworth, which has been lately affiliated with the Y.W.C.A. The meetings were well attended; many received blessing. The word was spoken with power, and there is much cause for praise.

The report of the Upper Tooting Branch at 81, Trinity-road, states that the work has been carried on steadily, with evident signs of the Lord's presence in the gatherings for Bible-study and prayer. The number of members and associates has been larger than at any previous time. Between forty and fifty attend the Sunday afternoon Bible-class, conducted by Miss Palmer.

The work at the Evening Rooms, 419, Edgware, road, under Miss Seth Smith and Miss Wilkinson—though somewhat limited in scope, is encouraging. The room is filled at the Bible-class on Sunday afternoons. Working meetings and socials are held on Mondays. On Tuesdays the juniors are taught needlework, and on Thursdays the week-night Bible-class meets. Additional helpers would be welcomed.

The annual meetings of the Brighton Branch, held last week, were of a most inspiriting character. Miss Hedley, lady superintendent, was able to tell of souls born again and backsliders restored. Victoria House is becoming an increasingly favourite holiday home, and the visitors' list has a record of 500, while, altogether, 560 young women have passed through it during the past year. The West Brighton Bible-class, under its leader, Miss Annie Meyer, has held its twenty-first anniversary, having on the occasion an attendance of over 300. Most encouraging, also, is the report from the Kemp Town Branch, which has doubled its numbers.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

There are now 1742 British branches of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour.

At a recent State convention of the Y.M.C.A., which met in Oakland, Cal., almost all of the 150 delegates were Christian Endeavourers.

The Walworth-road Chapel Society has bidden farewell to one of its members, Mr. C. E. Wilson, who is leaving for India on Foreign Mission service.

An Endeavour Society has been inaugurated at City-road Baptist Chapel, Winchester, with much heartiness and promise. Pastor Arthur W. Wood, president.

Out of seventy-two societies in Kansas only four fail to report conversions. During the year 300 have been added to the churches, 500 having been added in the last three years.

The Endeavourers of the church in New Orleans holds monthly memory meetings. At these meetings they repeat in concert a psalm which has previously been committed to memory. Everything else during the meeting is also memorised.

At a crowded meeting of the Montreal Endeavour Union, the delegates, who have made for themselves an excellent record by their temperance work, gave expression to most emphatic condemnation of evil in the administration of municipal affairs in their city.

The C.E. Auburn, Cal., holds meetings at the county jail every Sunday afternoon, the leaders being appointed by the prayer-meeting committee. A large part of the time is spent in singing. At a recent meeting nearly all of the prisoners expressed their intention to live a better life when they went out.

The Ramsgate Congregational Society had lately a splendid meeting in connection with the opening ceremonies of new school buildings. One meeting was allotted to the "Endeavourers," who were strongly reinforced by friends from the Cavendish, Ramsgate; Ebenezer, Margate; Congregational, Sandwich; Crescent Congregational, Margate.

In the eighteen months during which the Union at Oakland, Cal., has been carrying on work for seamen, they have secured from sailors 166 signatures to the active members' pledge, 750 of the men have attended meetings on land with Endeavourers, and the audiences at meetings on shipboard have numbered 900. Sailors have been received in the homes of the workers, and two officers have been brought into church membership.

The annual convention of the Victorian Christian Endeavour Union was held in Melbourne on Thursday and Friday, September 13 and 14. The meetings were characterised throughout by an earnestness and enthusiasm that showed no signs of abatement in interest and reality. The closing and consecration meeting was a repetition of the magnificent sight of two years ago, the Town Hall being packed with members of the various societies, and an overflow meeting with some 600 being held in the Congregational Church, Collins-street.

DO NOT ACT as if you thought your boy amounted to nothing, nor be continually making comparisons between him and some neighbour's son to his disadvantage; nothing will dishearten him quicker.

IN CANTON URI it is provided that, "Any innkeeper who gives a customer so much to drink that he becomes unconscious or is incapable of walking, is under the obligation of supplying him with lodging for the night without any compensation, and shall moreover be punished."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker are conducting a three weeks' mission at Ramsey, Isle of Man. Very much blessing is attending their labours. Men and women are deciding for Christ, and Christians entering into fuller light.

Hayling.—A fortnight's mission has been held in the Mission Hall here by Mr. F. W. Walter, of the Evangelisation Society, London. Good results have been the outcome of the efforts put forth, especially among young people.

Mr. Richard Weaver was preaching on Sunday in the Wesleyan Chapel, Heaton Mersey, and after the evening meeting many were found seeking salvation. He hopes to begin next week a month's mission at Dr. Barnardo's Institutions.

Mr. Wm. Forbes is conducting a mission in Blochairn Church, Free Presbytery of Glasgow. The gatherings have been large, and much blessing has resulted from the work. The congregation desire to thank God for our brother's visit.

R. W. DOBBIE, Pastor.

Redland Park, Bristol.—A remarkable revival has taken place in connection with Redland Park Church, Bristol. The number of inquirers was so great that the services of the neighbouring ministers were called in. As a result some three hundred persons have applied for membership, or have made a profession of Christian belief.

Barrow-in-Furness.—A successful mission has been held by Mr. James Wharton at Cemetery Cottages, Barrow. Believers have been strengthened and sinners have accepted Jesus. Many have been reached who attended no place of worship. Mr. Wharton has now commenced a mission in Liverpool for which prayer is desired.

Mr. W. Woodhouse, who has been evangelising and doing Gospel temperance work at Croydon and elsewhere, and who is commended by Rev. R. E. Chettleborough, Mr. A. H. Parker, of South Croydon, and Ned Wright, is open for evangelistic engagements or mission work. His address is The Mission House, Whyteleafe, Surrey.

Ipswich.—A remarkable series of special services has been held at the Ipswich Y.M.C.A. Mr. A. Purse and Mr. Paget Wilkes have presided, and addresses have been given by these as well as by University men from Cambridge and Oxford. Numbers of young men have decided for Christ, and the power of God has been manifested in a very marked way.

Newcastle Soldiers' Home.—The second week of the special evangelistic services was well attended. Several ladies of the town conducted the meetings; the Misses Proctor holding four services for the garrison children. All the gatherings have been owned and blessed. One soldier came from Ireland to spend his furlough here, and at the meetings God met and saved him.

Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a successful mission at the Park-lane Chapel, Bradford. The daily afternoon Bible readings were much appreciated by increasing numbers who attended, and as the precious truths and promises of the Word of God were unfolded many were made to rejoice in the possession of the Bible as the book of books. The evangelistic meetings in the evening, had the power of God resting upon them. Souls were saved, and believers quickened.

Edinburgh.—Last Friday the Brothers Weaver brought their fortnight's mission in Moray Church, Edinburgh, to a close. The services have been well attended, the large church being often crowded; 300 to 400 waited to every after-meeting, and the vestries were nightly thronged with inquirers. A number of persons have given in their names, professing conversion. This season has brought reviving to all our workers and salvation to many of our young people. Our prayer is that God may use our young friends to the salvation of many in Scotland.

P. W. PATERSON, Minister.

Kilkee, the beautiful and much-frequented seaside resort on the west coast of Ireland, has again been favoured with a visit from the agents of the Irish Evangelisation Society, Messrs. Carleton and Robinson, who have closed a very happy and hopeful mission there. Large crowds of Roman Catholics attended all the services, and listened with eager attention to the story of redeeming grace, as sung and preached by the evangelists. The most perfect harmony and goodwill prevailed. Meetings were held for Christians, in which Rev. T. B. Robertson took part, and his searching appeals when urging home the claims of Jesus for whole-hearted service will not soon be forgotten.

Alexandria, N.B.—At the invitation of the Vale of Leven United Evangelistic Association, Mrs. Bacyertz conducted services here from September 30 till October 8. Bible readings were given each afternoon, from which the children of God received great blessing. In the evening the Gospel was announced, in the power of the Holy Spirit to hundreds of eager listeners. Night after night young and old were found in the after-meeting inquiring the way Zionwards. Of a truth, He that is mighty hath done great things, for which we give Him all the praise and all the glory. Since Mrs. Bacyertz left us she has been very ill, and earnestly desires the prayers of God's people on her behalf. E.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. H. J. Pope, the Wesleyan ex-president, has returned home from his official visit to Canada.

Rev. Dr. Greeves, whose serious illness we have already mentioned, is surprising his friends by his satisfactory progress towards convalescence.

Rev. Colmer B. Symes, of Leytonstone, is, we regret to learn, suffering from the effects of a severe cold, and his medical adviser has ordered him to desist from active work for at least a month.

Mr. Alfred Brunton, who has been visiting this country, ministering here and there, is about to return to New Zealand. He will probably sail by the same steamer as Mr. and Mrs. Henry Varley.

Rev. John MacNeil, the Presbyterian evangelist for Victoria, has started for the West Australian gold-fields, hoping for a season's thorough evangelistic effort among the miners at Coolgardie. He is trying to put a Bible or Testament in each digger's tent.

OBITUARY.

REV. LEWIS PRICE, LLANELLY.

THE beloved pastor of Trinity Chapel (Calvinistic Methodist), Llanelly, has been called suddenly home. While officiating at Nazareth Chapel, Llwynhendy, he was seized with paralysis in the middle of a prayer, and fell in the pulpit. He was carried to a neighbouring house, where he passed peacefully away without regaining consciousness. Mr. Price, who was fifty-nine years of age, and had ministered for nearly twenty years at Llanelly, was one of the most popular and useful ministers in the denomination. He leaves a widow and four daughters.

REV. J. SUTCLIFFE, GREAT YARMOUTH.

This aged Primitive Methodist minister, who has been called to rest at the ripe age of seventy years, had been a minister for forty-two years, and had laboured with acceptance in various parts of the Connexion. The last few years of his life were spent in the Norwich district, where he gained the esteem and respect of all who knew him by his transparent goodness and strict integrity. The Gospel which he had preached to others sustained and comforted him in the hour of departure. He knew that the end was near, and calmly anticipated it, making all arrangements for his funeral, and passing away amidst expressions of satisfaction and joy that nothing but the consciousness of the Divine presence could produce.

REV. DR. RAMAGE, GLASGOW.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. William Ramage, D.D., senior minister of Berkeley-street U.P. Church, Glasgow, who passed away on Friday morning at 15, Oakfield-terrace, Hillhead, in the eightieth year of his age. He had been laid aside for years from infirm health, and only occasionally occupied the pulpit. Dr. Ramage's first charge was that of the Relief Church, Kilmarnock, to which he was ordained about fifty-two years ago. He remained a few years in Kilmarnock, when he was called to East Campbell-street U.P. Church. In 1856 he left the East-end of Glasgow, and, with a number of the members, formed the Berkeley-street U.P. Church, of which he was a minister till his death. He was a thoughtful preacher, and published a volume of sermons two years ago entitled "Last Words."

HOME.—Youth has its unspeakable longings, its deep hungers, its cravings for tenderness. In the true home these are all met. Those who have such a home do not realise the half it is to them. It is the very shadow of Christ's wings over their lives, the very bosom of Divine love.—J. R. Miller, D.D.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—The Queen Victoria, the pioneer hospital ship of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, which during the past two months has been in charge of Mr. G. Andrew Hutchison, for an evangelistic campaign in home waters round the coast, from Great Yarmouth to Bristol, returned safely on Saturday last to the Mission depôt at Gorleston, prior to sailing for the winter work amongst the fishing fleets in the North Sea. This in-shore effort has been attended with much success and manifest blessing. The sister hospital ship Albert arrived at Gorleston only a few days earlier from service amongst the cod fishers of Labrador, and will now also proceed to the North Sea.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

MR. GEORGE GARLICK visited Corsham, Wilts, last week, and addressed twelve meetings. A number of pledges were taken.

Mr. W. S. Caine, addressing his constituents in East Bradford, lately, condemned the Gothenburg system as a "mere red herring trailed across the temperance path."

One hundred members were added to the Bible Christian Total Abstinence Society, Lee, last year. At a gathering to inaugurate the winter's work, ninety persons signed the pledge.

Under the auspices of the Norfolk and Norwich Gospel Temperance Union, a series of public meetings was held during last week in the Princes-street Lecture Hall, addressed by Mr. George Blaiklock.

Nearly £30 has already been collected by the children of our British women to erect a fountain in London, similar to the one in Chicago, of which the sculptor, Mr. G. E. Wade, has been commissioned by Lady Henry Somerset to make a copy.

Mr. Hodder, the chairman of the Belfast magistrates, declared last week that, from his experience in the other court, he thought that all the misery and crime in Belfast was more or less to be traced to drink, and in a great many instances to the spirit groceries.

A successful mission, conducted by Frank Dymond and Alfred Young, was held at Windsor (New Forest), from Sept. 30 to Oct. 5. The meetings were well attended, a special feature being the large number of young people. During the week twenty-nine pledges were taken.

The Lambeth Band of Hope Union held a very successful annual meeting at the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell, on Tuesday evening. An address was given by the Rev. J. W. Horsley, whose experience as a prison chaplain enabled him to point out the evils of intemperance.

Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell are to address the first of the series of great mass meetings on the Opium question in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, on Monday evening, October 29. The support of a number of well-known ladies, local ministers, and other gentlemen has been promised.

The Bishop of Durham, speaking last week at a meeting at West Hartlepool in connection with a conference of the Church of England Temperance Society, said the temperance cause was a religious cause, and avowed himself a supporter of both local option and the Gothenburg system, as well as of other proposals for restrictive legislation.

Glasgow, by comparison with its English neighbours, is now the model city in the matter of public-houses. Sheffield, with one-half of its population, has about the same number of licences; Liverpool, with 150,000 fewer inhabitants, has about 350 more licences; and Birmingham with its 487,000 to Glasgow's 669,000, of a population, has about 450 more licensed houses.

At a public meeting held in the Myrtle-street Baptist Chapel, Liverpool, under the auspices of the Congregational Total Abstinence Association, the chairman said last year eighty-eight persons entered the Congregational ministry, and of them eighty-one were total abstainers. There was a grand total of 2160 abstainers out of 2782 Congregational ministers in England and Wales.

A very successful series of meetings in connection with the Dublin Women's Temperance Association have been held in Dublin and the neighbourhood, addressed by Mrs. J. H. Thompson, of Cork, and Miss Hanna, of Belfast. Much interest has been aroused in the Union, and some new branches have been formed. One important result has been the formation of a Women's Methodist Total Abstinence Union for the Dublin district.

General Neal Dow has addressed to Lady Henry Somerset an opportune letter on the subject of prohibition, stating that in Maine a cry for "re-submission" of the question of prohibition to the people, raised by the Democrats who are opposed to the law, has been rejected, that party being "beaten and crushed as no party ever was before in Maine," despite the support of immensely rich liquor leagues of the West, who have for two years past set their hearts upon the overthrow of the prohibition in Maine.

Mrs. Ludwig, who has spent many years as a missionary in Old Calabar, addressing the Glasgow B.W.T.A. meeting on the 13th, spoke of the great hindrance to missionary work in the strong drink sent to the West Coast of Africa by British merchants. Every three weeks while she was there, a ship of from 3000 to 4000 tons, laden entirely with gin, brandy, and rum, discharged cargo at Duketown and the ports on the Congo coast, and in addition a large portion of the cargo of the weekly trading vessels is always strong drink. Britain sends Bibles and missionaries in her ships, but their drink cargoes do more to debauch Africans than her Bibles and missionaries to raise them.

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Early Days is a capital magazine for children; and the new volume is a treasury of animated story and pictures such as "speak" to juveniles. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) The Day of Days Annual is a very attractive volume. (2s. "Home Words" Office.) Among other useful contents are: Mrs. Marshall's Reformation tale, "Dayspring: A Story of the Time of William Tyndall," and a series of papers by Principal Moule, entitled, "A Six Days' Visit to Rome."

A PICTURE OF STUNDISM.

The Highway of Sorrow, by Hesba Stretton, is a story of intense interest, in the course of which the persecutions and martyrdom of the Russian Stundists are powerfully depicted. Its author has had the assistance of a well-known Russian writer now an exile in England, who has supplied the outlines of the work and the facts and incidents in regard to prison life in Siberia. The simple ways and piety of the dissenters from Greek Church orthodoxy are very charmingly set forth, while the ignorance and cupidity of the average peasant are described in language that cannot but excite heartfelt pity. The pages should evoke renewed sympathy with the persecuted Stundists, who are admitted by their enemies to be sober and law-abiding to a degree not known in other communities. Miss Stretton makes us weep for those whose sorrows she so strikingly details, and we trust her volume will call forth earnest prayer to God, and result in better conditions of life for men and women who suffer and die as did the heroes of her vivid story. (6s. Cassell.)

DR. PIERSON ON MISSIONS.

The New Acts of the Apostles is the singularly appropriate title given by Dr. A. T. Pierson to the volume containing his course of lectures delivered in Scotland last year upon the foundation of the Duff Missionary Lectureship (6s. Nisbet). The secondary title, "The Marvels of Modern Missions," conveys a good idea of the contents of the work, which is calculated to occupy a very useful place in the literature of its class. After dealing with the new links of mission history, Dr. Pierson describes the new Apostolic succession, taking special notice of the work of women in the foreign field. Then comes a statement of the new vision and voices, the new converts and martyrs, the new signs and wonders, and the new motives and incentives. All along the "Acts" of our day are placed in correspondence with those of eighteen hundred years ago, and at last it is delightfully shown that the new Acts of the Apostles is, like the old, an unfinished book. "God grant" exclaims Dr. Pierson, "that the unwritten history of the years before us may embrace far greater marvels than have ever been witnessed!" As a repertory of missionary facts and arguments, this work is as deeply interesting as the style is truly enthusiastic, and we bespeak for it a wide circle of readers, whom it will assuredly stimulate to increased zeal in sending the Gospel throughout the world. Dr. Andrew Thomson supplies a hearty introduction, and a coloured map shows the prevailing religions of the world, their comparative area, and the progress of evangelisation.

LIFE OF "ROB ROY."

Few men of this generation have lived a life more widely useful and more beneficial to society than John Macgregor. The circumstances of his very earliest days had in them all the elements of tragedy and romance, while his after career, in its varied aspects, was very far removed from the humdrum and the commonplace. The biographer of such a man has therefore the advantage of plentiful material, and is not driven to indulge in panegyrics or reflections in order to fill out his pages. The baby life so marvellously saved from the destructive powers of fire and water became a very full one, and Mr. Edwin Hodder deserves credit for having compressed the work into one goodly volume. The record of Mr. Macgregor's many good deeds is still fresh in the public memory. His work on behalf of street shoeblacks, his earnest zeal for the defence of Protestant truth, his activities in connection with the founding and developing of the Open Air Mission, his numerous literary efforts, his valued services on the first London School Board, not to speak of his travels, his canoe adventures, his encouragement of the Volunteer movement—all these and many other facts in Mr. Macgregor's career give him a claim to the title of national benefactor. Mr. Hodder's usual literary skill is displayed in the telling of the interesting story; and the many illustrations, including a beautiful etched portrait of "Rob Roy," enhance the attractiveness of the book. It is certain to be one of the favourite biographies of the century. (15s. Hodder Brothers.)

The Morning Star for October (1d. Holness) contains several instructive articles on prophecy, God's purpose regarding Israel, and cognate subjects.

The Children's Treasury of Pictures and Stories for 1895 (1s. Nelson) is as bright as its many excellent predecessors, and is sure to please the little folks.

Friendly Greetings.—The twenty-ninth half-yearly volume, with large engravings and coloured pictures, is very handsome. The reading matter is purposeful throughout. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Messrs. Partridge have added three more volumes to their very attractive "Home Library" (2s. each)—Jennie Chappell's Madeline; or, The Tale of a Haunted House; Sarah Doudney's Louie's Married Life; and Mrs. Webb's Naomi; or, The Last Days of Jerusalem, a story of special merit.

The fourth in "The Keswick Library" series (1s. nett. Marshall Brothers) is They might be, by Rev. Hubert Brooke. From a chapter in Old Testament history, many weighty lessons are gathered as to the sorrowful failures of professed Christians to-day. We hope Mr. Brooke's pungent pages will find many readers.

Sorrow and Song. By Coulson Kernahan. (3s. 6d. Ward, Lock, & Bowden.) These collected essays are fine specimens of literary criticism on the life and work of some modern children of genius. They show much insight into the eternal verities, and a conscientious desire to weigh thoughts and things in the balances of the sanctuary.

Sunshine and Shade: Tales from many lands in verse by Finlay Craig. (Andrew Elliot, Edinburgh.) Whether in tragedy, satire, or description, the author of these verse-tales shows a fertile fancy and a plentiful store of swinging phrase. "The Birthday Gift" is a stirring ballad, telling the gruesome story of the death of John the Baptist.

Little Folks well deserves its high reputation as a magazine for the young. The half-yearly volumes (3s. 6d. and 5s., according to binding) are replete with high-class pictures and useful letterpress. The new Christmas volume has engravings on almost every page, together with six full-page coloured plates. (Cassell & Co.)

The Last of the Prophets: A Study of the Life, Teaching, and Character of John the Baptist (2s. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh), is an addition to the excellent "Handbooks for Bible Classes" series. The author, Rev. J. Feather, of Croydon, has evidently given much thought to his subject, and the result is a volume rich in well-digested information.

Missionary Veterans in South Africa, by Rev. Jabez Marrat, contains well-written and instructive biographical sketches of Revs. B. Shaw, T. L. Hodgson, and J. Edwards, three devoted Wesleyan missionaries in South Africa. An introduction tells the story of the discovery and colonisation of the Cape, and the penetration of the continent from the south; and there are portraits and illustrations. (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

The Religious Tract Society has issued some very bright-coloured "toy" books, illustrative of Scripture story. The first is entitled Picture Stories from the Life of Jesus, and the others are devoted to the Parables, the Life of Joseph, and the Life of David (6d. each). Another excellent publication from the same house is The Good Shepherd, the life of the Saviour told for children, and printed in large type, with many illustrations (1s.).

The Thacher and His Class (1s. Sunday School Union) contains thoughtful papers by Archdeacon Farrar, Drs. Horton and Stalker, and Rev. W. Douglas Mackenzie, M.A., on the ideal, the qualifications, the responsibility, and the reward of Sunday-school work. Miss Sarah Geraldina Stock writes helpfully on the preparation, and Rev. H. S. B. Yates, who edits the whole, deals with the work in general. The little volume contains useful hints and sound encouragements.

Tatian's Dia Tessarôn and the Modern Critics is an account of the now recovered consolidated Gospel or harmony of Tatian, and an examination of controverted New Testament "readings" in the light of its testimony as to the primitive text. The pages bear evidence of adequate scholarship and great care; and the Revisers of the New Testament are mercilessly criticised. We regret to observe occasional traces of censoriousness in the tone of the work. (3s. 6d. J. E. Hawkins & Co.)

An Introduction to the Study of the Acts of the Apostles. By J. M. Stifler, D.D. (3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) This is a very serviceable work, opening up the Acts in a way which makes the many striking events of Apostolic days pass clearly before the mental vision. The author is Professor of New Testament Exegesis in Crozer Theological Seminary, and is well known as a teacher at Bible conferences in America. A specially valuable feature of the book is the analyses that are given of the Apostolic addresses recorded in the Acts.

Stories from English History is a new volume of the "First Lesson Book" series (2s. 6d. each, Seeley & Co.). Beginning with the coming of Julius Cæsar to Britain, and ending with the death of the Black Prince, it covers a period eminently rich in striking and charming incidents. The fact that it is from the pen of Rev. A. J. Church, M.A., who has done so much to emphasize the romantic in history, is a guarantee of utility and interest. There are many illustrations, reproductions of ancient sculptures and illuminations.

The Comprehensive Concordance to the Holy Scriptures. By Rev. J. B. R. Walker. (5s. T. Nelson & Sons.) Based on the Authorised Version, and claiming to give fifty thousand more references than Cruden's Concordance, this compact and well-printed volume of nearly a thousand pages cannot but prove of great service as a Scripture text-finder. Dr. William Wright, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, furnishes an admirable introduction on "The Growth of the English Bible," and Dr. M. C. Hazard supplies a very readable "Bibliography of Concordances." Rigidly alphabetical in its arrangement, the "Comprehensive" gives proper names (accented for pronunciation) as well as common words, and all references under the various heads are set out in strict Biblical order.

Words to the Laity: Addresses and Papers on Subjects of Contemporary Ecclesiastical Controversy, is a new volume of substantial worth from the busy pen of the Archdeacon of London. (6s. Nisbet.) In the preface Dr. Sinclair says: "Holding as I do very strongly to the teaching of the great divines of the Church of England, from the Reformers down to Waterland, and loving with deep earnestness the simplicity of the Reformed English worship, I have no hesitation in stating, as far as I can, the grounds for that adhesion and that affection." This is done in addresses on the benefits and principles of the Reformation; the meaning and use of the words Catholic and Protestant; and discussions on the position of the laity, schism and divisions, church music, and the Communion of the Lord's Supper. The book is calculated to instruct and embolden wavering Evangelicals in the Church of England.

The Ancient British and Irish Churches, by William Cathcart, D.D., is a work of peculiar interest and real merit. It shows that England, Scotland, and Ireland were all evangelised before the landing of Roman missionaries in Britain, and that for centuries they were altogether independent of the Pope. The life and labours of St. Patrick form a substantial portion of the volume, and the outline is admirably succinct and comprehensive. The pages describe the doctrines and observances of the early British Christians, contrasting their primitive simplicity with the Papal corruptions afterwards introduced. Provided with maps, illustrations, and indices, this work is evidently the result of wide reading. The matter is well digested, and for study and reference alike the book will prove of real service to many. (5s. Baptist Tract and Book Society, 16, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.)

Two cheerful penny wall calendars for 1895 are: The Faithful Words (Holness) and the Friends' Foreign Missions. (Headley Brothers, Wormwood-street, Bishopsgate.)

The Golden Text Calendar for 1895, published by Mr. Holness (1s.), is a very useful block, with a text for every day of the year. Two capital booklet almanacs are the Day by Day (1d.) and the Search and See (a halfpenny).

The Cloudy Pillar, by William Brown, is a thoughtful and helpful sermon, recently preached in the chapel of the Royal Edinburgh Asylum, Morningside. (2d. Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland, Edinburgh.)

A Word of Testimony, in reply to Mr. Gladstone's now famous article on "Heresy and Schism," is an instructive pamphlet from the trenchant pen of General Sir Robert Phayre, G.C.B. (3d. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

The Santhals of Bengal, India, and Leaves from a Missionary's Diary is the title of a deeply interesting pamphlet, by Mr. A. Hinder, of the Bethel Santhal Mission. It deserves many readers. (6d. A. Hinder, Sefton Park-road, Ashley Down, Bristol.)

DEVOUT BOOKS.—The constant habit of perusing devout books is so indispensable that it has been termed with great propriety the oil of the lamp of prayer. Too much reading, however, and too little meditation, may produce the effect of a lamp inverted, which is extinguished by the very excess of that aliment whose property is to feed it.—H. More.

Notes and Comments.

"IT is better" (says Truth) "to go to prison with a principle, than to sit on the bench with a prejudice." There are some living "ex-prisoners" who will endorse that truthful epigram.

All true friends of the friendless stranger will thank Truth for an article in its issue of last week, in which it exposes the machinations of certain harpies, who frequent railway termini in order to catch unwary and unwelcomed young women arriving in our great city. In the case specially referred to, it was a young French lady coming to a situation who narrowly escaped being entrapped at Victoria. We have had proof that other large terminal stations are watched with the same evil intent. Truth suggests that the various agencies for the protection of the travelling stranger should approach the railway companies on the subject. We doubt not the Travellers' Aid Society connected with the Y.W.C.A. (17A, Old Cavendish-street, W.) is alive to the question.

On a succeeding page we record the proceedings in connection with the adjudication by the London County Council on the Empire Theatre licence for music and dancing. In the face of the determined onset by the great body of the secular press, and the apathy shown by most of the religious weeklies, the result was a surprising victory for the purity of social morals. We believe that even the most sanguine of the London Christian reformers were unprepared for the large majority by which the Licensing Committee's action was sustained. We hope the feelings of thankfulness to God that are rightly entertained as to this outcome, will not make any insensible to the gravity of the evils that still remain to be checked, if they cannot be wholly abolished.

Among the most reprehensible things in connection with the Empire agitation has been the action of The Daily Telegraph, whose conductors permitted its correspondents day after day to pour forth a stream of virulent and foul-mouthed abuse against some of the most self-sacrificing and high-minded ladies in the community. This point was properly dealt with by Dr. Newman Hall in some remarks at the recent temperance meeting in the Mansion House. Amid cries of approval he declared that such conduct was a degradation of the Press. It is true that at the prayer meeting in St. Martin's Hall, Mrs. Ward Poole generously said they did not at all mind the abuse levelled at them in the newspapers, but this detracts nothing from the heinousness of the offence.

"Citizen Sunday," which was used by so many ministers of all denominations in London for the purpose of enforcing the duties of citizenship from a Christian point of view, can hardly have failed to do a great deal of good. They were not asked to use it for political or partisan purposes, but rather for the purpose of encouraging every citizen to take his share in making the place in which he lives as healthy, as pure, and as moral as he can. The restraint in avoiding debatable topics, the insight and courage required in dealing with lofty principles of duty, would alone be an education both for speakers and hearers. Our Lord's idea of neighbourliness is shining forth gloriously in all these endeavours to purify ourselves of social moral plagues, and to relieve every form of oppression.

Our law courts often give us strange glimpses into individual and social life. One day last week, in the High Court, a witness was being cross-examined as to the character of a testator whose will was under dispute. The witness, a cultured country solicitor, admitted that the deceased was somewhat eccentric in speech and habit, and one indication of this was a habit of "unnecessary swearing." The judge was puzzled to know where the exact line could be drawn between necessary and unnecessary swearing; and the combined efforts of counsel and witness failed to throw any effective light on the subject. The most painful element in the case was the fact that this educated man of business appeared to regard the habit of "swearing at large" as a harmless eccentricity.

Canon Wilberforce expressed a very patent fact when, at the meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance, he gave utterance to the following conviction:—

> He had the deepest reverence for the community to which he belonged, but the days were coming when the appreciation of a religious body in this country would not depend upon its long hereditary pedigree, but only upon its power of salting the corruptions of humanity.

This is only a special application of the words of the Great Master and Lord, addressed to his disciples, as representing all coming churches or religious communities: "Ye are the salt of the earth; if the salt have lost its savour, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men."

In his speech as chairman, at the meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance in Manchester last week, Sir Wilfrid Lawson very pithily summed up the present position of the Temperance agitation thus:—

> Everybody was dissatisfied with the present law. Great numbers of people were suggesting improvements. There was no very general agreement among them. To use a common expression, "Every hound is hunting his own hare," one running after one scheme and another after another. But the members of the Alliance to-day were more united and more determined in demanding the popular veto than ever they were before. His advice to them was to go on demanding it. They had been often repulsed, but never defeated. Let them go on without heat, without passion, without empty threatenings, or noisy vauntings, or doleful lamentations. Let them go on steadily and unceasingly. Let them demand the passing of this great democratic and enfranchising measure, and when they got it, then at length they could hope that the great Temperance movement would have a free course and fair play, and at last would have a chance of realising its great ideal in the shape of a sober, righteous, and godly nation.

The Alliance certainly can claim the virtue of consistency in its long struggle, which is now, we believe, nearer a successful issue than at any period of its history. If prohibition is ever to be reached in this free and constitutional country, it will be through repeated experiments of the local veto. But that need not prevent the trial of other experiments. The evil is so great that every possible or probable weapon should be forged against it. Yet while the veto may produce a sober nation, it will not necessarily be a righteous and a Godly one. Titus ii. 11—15 must be remembered in this connection.

That the work of the Ritualists in the Church of England leads to Rome has recently been candidly affirmed by several dignitaries of the Papal communion. The (R.C.) Bishop of Clifton, preaching a few days ago at Harrow, while regretting that the Ritualists do not submit to what he regards as the supreme authority, the Pope, complacently referred to Ritualistic imitations of Romanism as evidence of the truth of the thing copied. This is the Romanist view; and the Ritualist view seems to be much the same.

This was shown the other day in a letter sent by Lord Halifax, president of the English Church Union, to the Cardinal Archbishop of Toledo in Spain, expressive of the "profound distress which was caused to many thousands of members of the Church of England, by the recent action of the Archbishop of Dublin, in having presumed, without the sanction of your Eminence, and of the Bishops of your province of Toledo, to consecrate a certain schismatic named Cabrera, at Madrid, to the Episcopate." Señor Cabrera is a Reformer; but Reformation and Ritualism are opposite forces, so Lord Halifax proceeds "solemnly to assure your Eminence and the Bishops, clergy, and faithful of the ancient and illustrious Church of Spain, of our repudiation of the encouragement which the action we deplore has given to those who have withdrawn themselves from the communion and authority of their lawful pastors." Time and convenience will doubtless bring Ritualists and Romanists closer together; but it is impossible not to see that they are already pretty much agreed. They are a menace to Protestant freedom, and the sooner we all realise it the better for our testimony and our country.

Lady Boyd, one of the women of the Solemn League and Covenant, exclaimed in one of her letters, "O that anything would chase me to my God!" How many, moved by a great longing on the one hand and hindered by inbred sin on the other, have uttered the same cry! To the Principal of Glasgow University she wrote: "It will not neither be philosophy nor eloquence that will draw me from the broad road of perdition. I must have a trumpet to tell me of my sins." The trumpet "to tell my people of their sins" is still wanted, and so also is it wanted to warn the wicked man of his way.

Dora Greenwell had a ministry to many souls when she was living; her influence remains in her books, two of which, "The Patience of Hope" and "Two Friends," have just been reissued by Messrs. Gibbings and Co., London. Here is a beautiful bit on the adaptation of Christianity to all conditions of life :—

That Christianity should so fit in with the ordinary and mediocre, has always seemed to me a proof of its crowning excellence. All other ideals draw away the heart from real life ; the poet, the artist, is continually trying to break out of the narrow circle of visible things, he "asks for better bread than can be made with wheat." The Christian ideal alone meets the habitual, the practical ; meets it while immeasurably transcending it. The Christian must be friends with every day, with its warm details, its homely atmosphere ; its loving correction must make him great.

Northamptonshire has a "Federation of Free Churches," with a Baptist, a Wesleyan, and a Congregationalist for its officers. One of the main objects which it sets before itself is to bring the churches of all denominations into closer contact with each other, and to make them more aggressive. The overlapping of agencies already existing cannot, perhaps, be altogether done away with, but it can be avoided for the future, and the Federation will make that one of its objects. Something in the way of practical union has already been done, as one or two chapels have been closed in order that small, weak congregations might unite and form one strong church. United services, united missions, exchanges of pulpits, and special conferences on united work have taken place. The influence of such conference and co-operation cannot but be most helpful to a firmer and stronger life. The example set by Dodridge's county deserves imitation.

The question of Old Age Pensions, long a theoretical question before the public, is at length taking a practical form. It was inevitable that it should. Once the national imagination and conscience were impressed with the facts as to how aged people generally end their days, the subject could not stop. The fact is, that 30 per cent. of the aged end their days as paupers. Many of them have worked with unflagging industry from their childhood, have lived temperately, have been respected as worthy, perhaps religious, members of society, yet the workhouse is the shelter of their feebleness. There are 401,904 annually relieved, or not less than 45 per cent. of the aged poor—above 65—who are classed as, and existing as, paupers. To give a pension of five shillings a week, a sum of £11,700,000 would be required for England and Wales ; with deductions which have to be made on account of savings in certain directions, which would be effected by a change of system, it is calculated that £9,000,000 a year would suffice. The ways and means we cannot discuss here. We can and do express our sympathy with the good object of treating our aged poor, not as paupers to be degraded and punished for poverty, but as pensioners who have a right to some comfort and peace after their life's work is done.

It cannot fail to give satisfaction to English people to see how highly their general system of training children, especially boys, commends itself to the minds at least of thoughtful Frenchmen. The free, open life of our schoolboys, the trust reposed in them, the sense of self-help which is so early called into play, form a great contrast to the incessant inspection to which French boys are subjected, and the effects which flow from it. We know, however, that the moral standard might be very much higher than it is, and for that improvement parents and other responsible persons must never cease to labour.

Englishmen may think of Russia as a country locked up with frost and snow in winter, but such is not the case. Winter is the time of official activity, and, according to a contemporary, officialdom has already begun to operate against the Stundists. A Stundist woman has been sent off for five years on a charge of adherence to Protestant tenets, after repeated requests from her village priest to renounce her heresy. This appears to be the first case of a woman sent off for such an offence. Some men also have been despatched along the exiles' sorrowful road. One cannot help contrasting palace and humble dwelling with each other in that great mysterious land. A Protestant princess casts off, not without pain, all she has been taught, an act said to be only a form, but surely a very questionable form ; her future subjects, taught out of the Bible the faith she abandons, are willing to suffer for it. Whether the change of sovereign may not also be a change of this persecuting policy we cannot say ; we hope it may be so. Meanwhile we should, in loving sympathy, bear the exiles on our hearts before God.

In his book, "Foreign Missions after a Century," Rev. Dr. Dennis, of the American Presbyterian Mission, Beirut, Syria, has some observations which by no means agree with the descriptions given of heathen systems by some home students. He says that "this subject of the religious state of the heathen world has sometimes been presented by students of comparative religion in what has been called an unprejudiced or judicial spirit, which, however, has led to conclusions which are scholastically shallow, morally sentimental, and practically false." Speaking of one particular author, he says :—

The rich, subjective contributions of his own religious instinct have clothed the grim and unsightly realities of the old classical and the modern ethnic religions with a beauty and worth which is far beyond their deserts...He has not failed to avail himself of the privileges of poetic licence.

To us it is pitiable to see writers trying to reinspire and adorn dead systems against which the apostles put forth their utmost energy, and also praising present-day heathen systems which have sunk the nations in darkness and sin. We gain nothing, but lose much, by not keeping to the ugly facts.

The Imperial and Asiatic Quarterly Review contains an article on "A Chinese View of the Korean Difficulty," from which it appears that although the northern and north-eastern boundary of China is coterminous with that of Russia, and many Russians have settled in Mongolia, no jealousy is felt of Russian power. "A Chinese Official" professes that the country looks at the matter in this way :—"We have not known Russia to break her promises, and it was not Russia that forced opium upon us, plundered the Summer Palace, and that worries us with hosts of religious and other adventurers." Thus it is that our national sins find us out ; and thus it is that our commercial adventurers bring our missionaries into disrepute. The only remedy is by well-doing to put to silence ignorant and foolish men.

According to the estimate of Mr. C. T. Gardner, Acting British Vice-Consul at Seoul, Corea, there are as many as two thousand European and American missionaries in China, and over a million native Christians. He is of opinion that we cannot, even if we would, put a stop to, or even curtail, missionary enterprise in China, and that we should therefore consider how Christian missions can be conducted so as least "to shock the patriotism, outrage the religious feelings, run counter to the social customs, and adversely affect the pecuniary interests of the non-Christian Chinese." Colonies of Christians have been successfully planted in Manchuria without the concurrence of the officials. He thinks the Government would favour such colonies in thinly-populated parts ; girls brought up in orphanages and schools might emigrate to them. He would like to see Christianity protected by the joint Christian Powers. We doubt the wisdom of this meddling of the Powers with religion at all ; and probably America, which has as great a stake in the country in the presence of American missionaries as any of the Powers, would not join. Let Christianity work out its own destiny.

SERVICES IN THEATRES AND HALLS.

By the kind invitation of Sir George and Lady Williams, the workers in connection with this movement met at 13, Russell-square, on Saturday afternoon for conference and prayer. After refreshments had been partaken of, prayers were offered by Revs. J. B. Barraclough and Geo. Snashall.

Sir George Williams, as chairman of the committee, congratulated those present on the commencement of the thirty-sixth winter course of this work, and urged the claims of the metropolis as a great centre for evangelistic effort. Captain Lowe spoke of the work in the various large buildings, and also dwelt on the importance of maintaining the smaller mission rooms occupied by the City missionaries, a large number of which had been helped by grants from the committee. Mr. J. H. Lydall spoke of the need of brevity and conciseness in presenting the message of the Gospel, and of seeking in every address the salvation of souls. Mr. Coote offered a few words of encouragement to the workers. Hon. Mr. Farwell said that love must be the motive power in Christian effort. Captain Thorn gave instances of spiritual blessing received by some employed in the theatres where services had been held.

Reports were then given by London City missionaries, the managers of the services, on the present interest and value of the work, particularly at the Agricultural Hall, Morley Hall, Hackney, and Munt's Hall, Clapham Junction. Rev. James Ellis stated that he had received into his church several persons who attributed their conversion to God to services held by this committee.

Rev. T. C. Udall said he believed funds would be forthcoming in the future as they had been in the past, when Christian people saw that real, honest, and unsensational work was being attempted. No work, he felt sure, was being carried out with a greater regard to economy in its management.

These special religious services for reaching the poor and the non-church-going classes in London are arranged to be held for the thirty-sixth course, 1894-5, in the following buildings :— Agricultural Hall, Islington ; Pavilion Theatre, Whitechapel-road ; Queen's Theatre of Varieties, High-street, Poplar ; Town Hall, Shoreditch ; Morley Hall, Hackney ; Homerton Hall, High-street ; Munt's Hall, Clapham Junction ; Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, Gibraltar-walk, Bethnal Green ; Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, Union-street, Borough ; Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, Kirby-street, Poplar ; South Norwood Hall ; Railway-arch, Bermondsey, and also various smaller halls and City Mission rooms in the poorer districts.

IT IS SERIOUSLY PROPOSED that Aberdeen should apply to Parliament for power to make an experiment in the municipalisation of the public-houses. Amongst other things the Bill will seek power to refuse the granting of new licences, and to declare after the expiration of five years from the commencement of the Act the right to sell intoxicating liquor by retail shall vest exclusively with the municipality. The proposal also provides that the municipality shall, five years after the passing of the Act, without requisition, and every three years thereafter upon a requisition from not fewer than one-fourth of the municipal electors, take a poll as to whether the sale of intoxicating liquor by retail shall be continued. Bailie M'Kenzie, a prominent temperance reformer, says they always had been, and were yet, for prohibition, but they considered that the scheme before them, as now adjusted, was the best local-option scheme ever before the country.

To Stay-at-Homes.

It was the father's love for Benjamin which kept him at home, while the other brethren went forth to provide for the need of their households. Our Heavenly Father still deals thus with many of his children. They are detained at home while others are out on the whitened harvest field! In the love of their Lord these weak and suffering ones (whatever be the cause or case) may possess a present reward. They are in nowise excluded from that. Nay, they may find a deeper entrance into his heart of love, and be kept from much that would hinder their enjoyment of it.

Too faint to pursue; but, thank God, our King has made it "a law in Israel" that "as his share is that goeth down into battle, so shall his share be that tarrieth by the stuff; they shall share alike" (1 Sam. xxx. 24). "She that tarried at home divided the spoil" (Ps. lxviii. 12).

The Lord is pleased to make seasons of isolation and suffering very bright and memorable to his people. Moses was highly favoured when God said to him, "There is a place by Me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock while my glory passeth by" (Exod. xxxiii. 21, 22). Child of God, your present time of trial may be such "a place" as that. "A place by Him" indeed! A place of wondrous privilege! "The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by Him, and the Lord shall cover him all the day long" (Deut. xxxiii. 12). A place of safety! The lions' den was that to Daniel, in direct communication with heaven! The fiery furnace was such "a place" to the three Hebrew children. The two disciples did not more calmly, sweetly walk to Emmaus, in that quiet evening hour, in company with Jesus, than did those three tread that fiery path in fellowship with Him!

Never the exquisite pain,
Then never the exquisite bliss,
For the heart that is dull to that
Can never be strung to this.

The disciples in the storm were safe, because Jesus was with them in the boat, or watching and praying for them on the mountain top. Oh, do not fret or rebel at the Lord's choice for you. It is the very best that infinite wisdom and love could make. Accept it now, and one day you will see and understand it all.

When I stand with Christ in glory,
Looking o'er life's finished story;
Then, Lord, shall I fully know,
Not till then, how much I owe.

Then will we see that there was a Divine, and therefore a perfect, plan in our lives, the Lord thinking upon us all the time! "God led them not by the way of the land of the Philistines" (Exod. xiii. 17). "He led them by a straight way, that they might go to a city of habitation" (Ps. cvii. 7, R.V.). "The rebellious shall dwell in a dry land," but the meek and lowly and trusting one shall, even now, antedate the bliss of heaven! "They shall not hunger nor thirst: neither shall the heat nor sun smite them, for He that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall He guide them" (Isa. xlix. 10). Dr. Andrew Bonar once said, "This is heaven below! And there is another verse very like it in Rev. vii. 16, 17, but that is heaven above!"

The "Benjamin" who tarried at home, enjoying his father's love and care, may find a counterpart in the disciple whom Jesus loved! Why did John style himself thus? He was not thinking of his love for his Lord, neither did he think for a moment that Jesus loved him more than the other disciples. Surely not. But he had nothing worth mentioning about himself compared with this, he had no more such precious memory as that. He was "the disciple whom Jesus loved, which also leaned on his breast at supper" (John xxi. 20).

May blessed discoveries and manifestations of this Heavenly love cheer and sustain those beloved ones whose earthly path lies among the shadows. "Till the day break and the shadows flee away."

Loved with everlasting love
Led by grace that love to know,
Spirit, breathing from above,
Thou hast taught me it is so!
Things that once were wild alarms
Cannot now disturb my rest;
Closed in everlasting arms
Pillowed on thy loving breast.
His for ever, only his;
Who the Lord and me shall part?
Ah, with what a rest of bliss
Christ can fill the loving heart.

Christ and the Children.

Sir,—I. God has given to his Church two volumes: Prophecy and Providence. If I read those Divine books aright, the Church and the world are in the last times. In the Prophetic volume, the apostate Church of Rome occupies a large and prominent place; and especially in the last days. As in the Old Covenant section of Divine Testimony, the Psalms, Isaiah, and Daniel allude to that terrible power, so in the New Covenant section, our Lord's farewell addresses in the upper room and on the Mount of Olives, the writings of Paul the Apostle to the Gentiles, and the startling and solemn Apocalypse of John the Divine (especially the closing chapters), refer to the Rise, Progress, and Destruction of that great Satanic kingdom, the Papacy. Those Prophecies appear to indicate (1) that, in the latter half of the present nineteenth century, and the first quarter of the next, Rome would make frantic efforts to regain ascendancy, and to secure universal sovereignty; (2) that, to do so, after the loss of her direct temporal power, she would create confusion, encourage political convulsions, and stir up social as well as spiritual revolutions (see the "Three Frogs" in Rev. xvi. 13, 14); and (3) that her efforts would be specially directed towards the subjugation or overthrow of those nations which, at the Reformation, withdrew from her yoke and commission, and more particularly Great Britain, that New Covenant chosen people, to whom would be given the treasures of God's Word, and the riches of the world's commerce.

II. Such seem to me to be the contents of these portions of Prophecy which forecast the Apostasy of Rome, and her final struggles against Christ and his Kingdom. What read we in that other volume—the volume of Providence which God's Hand is actually writing before our eyes to-day? What has the Papacy been doing since Italy, with the approval of Christendom, strange to say, stripped her of temporal power? Where has the Papacy been most active during the present half century, if not in Great and Greater Britain? What forms have her amazing activity taken? Man says of Sir Christopher Wren that, if we want evidence of his architectural skill, we must stand within St. Paul's Cathedral, and look around! Standing within the fabric of Modern History, as it is being upreared, I have evidence to the truth of God in Prophecy. Providence to-day seems to corroborate Prophecy as perfectly as a key made for a lock. The prophetic Three Frogs are at work, under the strong and subtle direction of the Papacy, making men's hearts fail them for fear, and for looking for days of awful calamity. Even those great social and political movements, which profess to ignore all religion in their activities, are craftily regulated and stimulated by the Papacy. And what mean the attitude and actions of Cardinal Vaughan, and the forces of Jesuitism operating under his counsel in the State and also in the Church of England? What is the key to those mysterious hieroglyphics which Cardinals and Archbishops are writing to-day upon the Religious Life and the National Education of Great Britain? The present School Board battle is one of Rome's mightiest and last efforts to subdue the Anglo-Saxon race.

III. The Christian is read by thousands of true believers in London, of all Christian denominations, including the Church of England. What, then, is the duty of The Christian in this great crisis, which has been foretold in Prophecy, and which is being fulfilled in Providence before our eyes? It is to stand up for Bible Education. It is to ignore parties and politics, creeds and churches, and to hold up that Banner of The Truth, which the Old Testament Psalmist and Prophet declared would be given by God in these latter days to them that fear Him, in order that they might display it. 1. We have Cardinal Vaughan distinctly demanding (a) denominational religious teaching in our Board Schools, and (b) pecuniary support from the State Treasury for other than Board Schools. 2. We have the Archbishop of Canterbury (a) making the same double demand, and (b) stating that Churchmen must march in parallel lines with the forces of Cardinal Vaughan and Rome to win their object—Rome's ambition to devour Britain's offspring. 3. We have the English Church Union, the Kilburn Sisterhood, and other Ritualistic confraternities, all acting with extraordinary secrecy and power on these lines, with a view to the overthrow of a great Protestant bulwark—the Educational Compromise of 1871. 4. We have Lord Halifax, an Ecclesiastical Commissioner of the Church of England, (a) holding public intercourse with the Popish Archbishop of Toledo in Spain, (b) denouncing the progress of the Christian Religion, in its Protestant and Scriptural form, and (c) calling for Reunion with Christ's great adversary, the Apostasy of Rome, and for the Restoration of the Mass, by the authority of Church and State, in the British Empire. The Christian has a duty to do in this crisis. It must Protest for Christ and the children. A Christian.

PORT SAID.

Mr. W. H. Fry writes on board s.s. Avoca in the Red Sea: "I recently passed through Port Said on my way Eastward, and met Mr. Locke, who has now for some years resided there. He visits the vessels which are continually passing, also the gunboats on the station, keeping a place open as a Seamen's Rest, and distributing literature, etc. Owing to some misunderstanding, Mr. Locke has had to assume a financial burden which is very heavy for him, and he is in need of some assistance. I should be very glad if he could be helped to the extent of, say, £100, to assist him out of present difficulty and enable him to complete the outfit of his Seamen's Rest, which he has never yet been able to do. His address is Seamen's Rest, Place Lesseps, Port Said, Egypt.—Mr. F. W. Crossley, Star Hall, Ancoats, Manchester, would forward any donations."

A DAY OF PRAYER.—A meeting of the delegates of various societies for a day of prayer will be held at the National Club, on Tuesday, Nov. 6, at 3.30 p.m. Over twenty societies have already joined. Any Protestant Society which has not received an invitation, is requested to communicate with the Hon. Sec., 14, Buckingham-street, Strand.

World-Wide Evangelisation.

In The Christian of August 2 last (page 15) it is stated that at the Keswick Convention Prebendary Webb-Peploe said, "It is a noticeable fact in the Bible records that no sooner was a blessing given to individuals than they began to glorify God. . . . The man who was healed of the devil possession wanted to follow close with Christ, but was sent to witness at home, which is far harder. . . . That man once saved went through Decapolis and testified till, when Christ came again that way, all were prepared for a mighty work. Go thou and do likewise."

Then in The Christian of October 25 (p. 26), in referring to Dr. Pierson's fresh book, entitled "The New Acts of the Apostles," you write: "Dr. Pierson exclaims 'God grant that the unwritten history of the years before us may embrace far greater marvels than have ever been witnessed.'" And very solemnly I would say, Why not? The arm of the living God, the all-mighty, is not shortened that it cannot save; nor is his ear dull of hearing that He cannot hear; but our iniquities have separated us from the living God.

As a little boy I remember most distinctly standing to gaze at the passing of what has been looked upon as one of the first railway trains in the world propelled by steam. It ran between Liverpool and Manchester, and on it was a member of the Government, who was killed by it the same day. Since then, have not railways been multiplied over much of the world, and still they multiply. But they need the propelling power, whether it be steam or electricity, and they require the rails to be laid for them to run upon.

The awakening of 1859-60, that has so often been referred to in your columns, was not only prefaced and accompanied by beseeching solitary prayer, but by gatherings together of one accord of women and men for united prayer in England, Ireland, and Scotland, and also America, and in heathen lands. At that time I have seen ministers and laymen so long in protracted prayer, that they would be tired of kneeling, but not of praying, and so would continue praying, some lying reverently down with their faces to the floor. The great business was not the words or language, but that Christ should be lifted up with one accord, and souls converted.

Often, indeed, yea, again and again, the Holy Spirit took up the unlearned and poor man and woman and made them his own mighty threshing instruments. Is it not high time that we should unanimously, in spirit at least, fall on our faces and say, "O Lord, send by whom Thou wilt—by babes and sucklings, or the most unlearned or most vulgar, or by converted cannibals. Only glorify thy name, and make thy kingdom to come, and thy will to be done, for the sake of our beloved Saviour thy only begotten Son." May He deliver us out of the Satanic darkness of thinking that salting and illuminating the world is the work of missionaries and ministers, and not the privilege and absolute duty of every Christian, regardless of sex or of age, whether we live at home or abroad.

Reginald Radcliffe.

A "DISMISSAL."—A very impressive dismissal of six missionaries for India and Japan took place at Birmingham in connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission and the Birmingham "Ready Band." Rev. A. R. Cavalier, general secretary of the society, introduced the outgoing missionaries, and a valedictory address was given by Rev. J. John Hunt, Vicar of St. Barnabas', Birmingham.

"THE UNITY OF THE SPIRIT."

Ephesians iv. 3.

Shall truth be spared, to keep the unity of the Spirit? Shall the unity of the Spirit be kept at the cost of truth? These are two ways of asking one question, which all truth-lovers must answer with a negative, if they rightly estimate the value of truth. Unity is valuable only in proportion to the amount of truth which it embraces. Not only every sect in Christendom, but every religion under the sun, has its own faith and its own unity. But the unity of "the faith once for all delivered to the saints" consists in the knowledge of the Son of God, wherein we grow unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; and this alone is the unity of the Spirit that is to be kept in the bond of peace. Now, if the measure of this stature of perfect manhood be thought by some to consist in seven points of agreement, while others think it consists in five only, the sixth or the seventh, or even both, being deemed by them as, if not positive error, quite unnecessary to the symmetry of truth, how is the unity of the Spirit to be kept while the Umpire is in the heavens?

If, in the presence of the Canaanite and Perizzite, the herdsmen of the patriarchs must not strive lest reproach come upon their fellowship as brethren, how much less does it become the disciples of a Master who said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another," in the face of an infidel world, and a false church, to be casting out, rejecting, and even excommunicating one another! It is sad enough to make our Father sorry, and angels weep, to see Christian men so unfair to their fellows, so unwise to themselves, and so little governed in their conduct towards each other by their text-book, a code put into their hands with express warnings, solemn admonitions, and direction singularly minute in detail how to deal with an offending brother. Surely, when common report (which is commonly a liar) assails a brother, we should exercise that love which thinketh no evil, but beareth all things patiently and hopefully, until the supposed offender be first proved, and when proved, and proved a heretic, then to receive a first and second admonition before being rejected. Error is reported as broached in certain quarters, misstatements are made, false premises are declared, and equally false conclusions are deduced, the natural preference to believe ill rather than well of our neighbour is indulged, and without inquiry or apparent disposition to distinguish between doctrines that essentially differ, opposing theories are confounded, and the worst imputed to the "heretic," whether rightly or wrongly, it seems to matter not! Alas for the admonitions! "See that ye fall not out by the way"; "Be at peace among yourselves"; "Above all things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness." (Gen. xlv. 24; 1 Thess. v. 13; Col. iii. 14.)

Brethren, beloved of God, called to be saints—for to such and such only we speak in loving earnestness—bear with us while we utter our growing conviction concerning "this time." The God of heaven, our loving Father, in strict accordance with his whole economy of revelations from the beginning, is giving to many of his children in various sections of the church further light upon revealed truth, as a test to prove us whether our faith stands in the creeds and systems of men's devising, in doctrinal truth of the Bible, or in Himself as perfect love, holiness, justice, equity, and truth; whether our regard for each other consists in faith and order, or love in the true unity of the Spirit as fellow partakers of the same grace. How, then, are we standing the test? What has it produced already? Are we walking in love as dear children? Are we noble as the Bereans of old to search whether these things wherein our brethren differ from us are so? Are we wise to hear that we may increase learning, and as men of understanding to attain unto wise counsels? Have we exhausted the treasury of wisdom in the written Word, and learned therein all our Father's will? Have we so nearly attained infallibility that as arbiters of right and wrong, truth and error, we may pronounce on this and that in spirit like to her who saith "I sit a queen"? Or, is our faith so fickle, our confidence so weak, our judgment so unsound, that we fear to encounter honest inquiry, and tremble to prove whether rock or sand is beneath our feet?

In obedience to the exhortation to brotherly love, then, and to preserve the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, we shall do well to consider wherein that love and unity consist. Have we one Father, one Saviour, one Guide, one present joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, one prospect of one home, one song, and the many crowns from one Hand? Or does our fellowship stand in creed, ceremony, system, subjection to ordinances after the doctrines and commandments of men, calling again for the Master's reproof, "Full well ye reject the commandment of God that ye may keep your own tradition which ye have delivered" (Mark vii. 9 and 13)?

The Master is at hand, the work must be done, and now seems the time of trial, whether, hand and heart united, we shall be found "occupied till He come"; or whether, severed asunder and distracted, the servants in power, the overseers, and office-bearers shall be found "beating the men-servants and maidens," if not "eating and drinking with the drunken." Assuredly "the Lord of these servants shall come in a day when they look not for Him," and—to say the least—they shall not be found ready. May the God of all grace grant unto us that wisdom from above which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy, that, in anticipation of a returning Lord, we may be found of Him in peace, without spot and blameless (2 Peter iii. 14). ## MODERN PREACHING.

On Tuesday, at the meeting of the Baptist Board, a thoughtful address on "Modern Preaching" was delivered by the president for the year, Rev. G. T. Ennals, of Leytonstone. The subject was treated with an earnestness befitting its importance, and with a faithfulness that did not hesitate to acknowledge defects and shortcomings. It was admitted with regret that the pulpit has been prejudically influenced by the times, and has often merely reflected the spirit of the age which it ought in duty to have guided, purified, and elevated. Compared with forty years ago, preaching is characterised by many omissions from its testimony, by great modifications of statement, and by a considerable shifting of emphasis.

Elaborating these points, Mr. Ennals showed that the doctrinal and spiritual being overlaid to a large degree by the ethical and humanitarian, has resulted in an enfeebled Christian discipleship. It is a fallacy that Christianity is "not a creed, but a life," since we are influenced by truths just in proportion as we feel an interest in them. Christianity is both a creed and a life. The ethics of the Gospel are the outcome of the spiritual doctrines of the Gospel. The preacher of the Social Gospel holds that if we show interest in the physical welfare of the working classes, their sympathies will be won for our higher objects. My experience, said Mr. Ennals, among the toilers of East London confirms my contention that nothing so speedily touches the working classes as the full revelation of Divine love. They can appreciate the importance of the noblest pulpit themes; and all secondary questions are far more easily settled when once the heart is won by the Gospel of Christ. Too often the consideration of merely social topics crowds out the essential matters of individual regeneration, the necessity of vital union with Christ, and the need for personal sanctification.

Having referred to the lighter treatment of sin and the serious disregard of the sterner teachings of the Saviour, which so largely prevail in modern preaching, Mr. Ennals spoke of the temptation to parade human learning, and to scatter the fruit of the tree of knowledge while people are perishing for lack of the fruit of the tree of life. Finally, he inquired whether modern preaching adequately fulfils the ideal purpose of the Gospel ministry; and, in answering the question, he said: The mission of the preacher is the same through all time, and his message is unaltered in its substance by the changes of centuries and the conditions of men. We have to preach the Everlasting Gospel—a Gospel which is a revelation of great facts concerning God and man, sin and salvation, life and death—eternal life, eternal death. In my opinion, preaching was never of such a high order as to-day. It has greater breadth and sympathy, is more human and natural, more winsome than ever before. But has it not left behind some elements of strength? I think it has. Do we find in the churches men of the same stalwart piety, men so well-instructed in the things of God, men who so well know what they believe and why they believe it, as were found forty or fifty years ago? Are the churches purer, stronger, or more spiritually influential? I think not. There are fewer theologians in the pulpit, the catechisms are banished from our homes and schools, and a race of invertebrate, molluscous Christians is the result. Modern preachers are not so definite in their statement nor so systematic in their presentation of truth. I plead, not for the revival of old technicalities, but for the clearer enunciation of the truths that were embodied in the terms in use years ago.

In conclusion, Mr. Ennals sought to encourage his brethren to increased definiteness in the proclamation of the Gospel in its fulness; he urged them to set forth the old truths with all the energy of an ever-new conviction. If modern preaching has failed, it has been just in proportion as it has made known a modern Gospel. Not from the nineteenth century has the preacher received his commission, but from the Lord, to whom at length he will have to give account of his ministry.

STAY FIRM.

"Stay firm" [French version] and let thine heart take courage.—Ps. xxvii. 14.

"Stay firm." The Lord will give thee
The needed grace,
His presence shall be with thee
In every place.
The storm may rage around thee,
And billows wild;
They cannot overwhelm thee—
Thou art his child.

"Stay firm." He has not failed thee
In all the past,
And will He go and leave thee
To sink at last?
Nay, He has said He'll hide thee
Beneath his wing;
And sweetly there in safety
Thou mayest sing.

"Stay firm." Though friends despise thee,
And foes may frown;
Know God is watching o'er thee,
He holds thy crown.
When you shall stand before Him
What matter then
That serving Him meant earning
The scorn of men?

"Stay firm." Let not the future,
Though dim and drear,
Fill thee with dread foreboding
And anxious fear.
'Tis only thine to follow
Where He shall lead;
Thy Shepherd King provideth
For every need.

"Stay firm." Let nothing tempt thee
To compromise;
Do ever what is pleasing
Before his eyes;
Though it may mean despising
To follow Him,
When one has seen his beauty
Earth's joys grow dim.

THE STORES PRAYER UNION, in connection with the Civil Service Supply Association, 136, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., held their second anniversary meeting on Tuesday, October 23. A number sat down to tea, provided at 56, Old Bailey, E.C., after which an enthusiastic meeting was held in the lecture hall of the Sunday School Union, about 200 being present. The hon. sec., Mr. E. A. Grattan, read the second annual report, reporting a year of growth and prosperity. The meeting was afterwards addressed by Mr. J. E. Bignall, Rev. Henry Grainger, and Rev. John Howard.

THE BIBLE LANDS MISSIONS AID SOCIETY, formerly known as the Turkish Missions Aid Society, is assured of the interest of all who are acquainted with its operations. In order that the Society may be more generally known, its secretary has compiled a pictorial pamphlet, giving information regarding Albania, Syria, Kurdistan, and other districts, the evangelisation of which has been assisted by the Society. We observe that about fifty mission objects are annually aided by the Society, the supporters of which will be glad to see the portraits which are given of the workers and the scenes in which they move. Copies of the booklet may be had from the secretary, Rev. W. A. Essery, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

AFFAIRS IN SOUTHERN MOROCCO.

Dear Sir,—It may interest readers of The Christian to know how affairs are moving in Southern Morocco. When the Sultan died, in the beginning of June, the universal conviction was that rough times were at hand. Here in Marakesh the danger was supposed to be the greatest. On a former occasion the town had been besieged, so, naturally enough, everyone rushed off to buy stores. As the result of this, panic ensued, and prices were doubled. This state of things lasted for a day or two, and then, to the relief of all, fears seemed to depart, and markets resumed their normal rates.

Beyond a few petty quarrels things remained quiet until the end of July. Harvest operations were in full swing, and the tribesmen had no time for anarchy. Rumours were abroad, however, of what might probably take place after harvest. The Kaids had all gone on to Fez with the young Sultan, and people were curious to know what sort of a reception they would get when they returned to their country seats. It was well known that, without exception, they were cordially hated by their respective tribes.

While it is too true that they had brought this wrath upon themselves by oppressing and systematically robbing the poor people of their hard-earned savings, it is equally true that the corrupt and miserable government had trained and forced them to do so. The position of a country governor is invariably sold to the highest bidder, and it is well known that the price eventually comes from the bags of the poor people; consequently to become a Kaid means becoming an oppressor. The Sultan knows this, so let those who would judge the action of the Kaids bear in mind the responsibility of their master. To remedy the crying evil means a great change of government; for this we pray and trust.

As the time drew near for the return of the Kaids the people gradually conceived the idea of avenging their burning wrongs. It was a bold step, certainly, and many of them shrank from taking it. While itinerating in a large province in the end of July, I found that the people were waiting for someone to fire the first shot. Latterly the storm burst forth in all its fury, and spread with more or less speed and force over all the southern provinces. Some of the Kaids returned to find their houses in ruins, others to find them under siege, while others were content to reach this city of refuges without going near them. Thoughts of what they had suffered goaded on the people at a terrible rate.

Not content merely with taking the stock, stores, and household plenishings, they must needs tear down doors and beams in order to sell them. In some cases, where floors were laid with marble, it too was lifted and brought into town. Of rarer worth were the unfortunate slaves, who became the property of the first one who seized them. It is also reported that the free daughters of one Kaid were sold, but I am a little uncertain as to the truth of this. Speaking moderately, it is said that fifty Kaids' houses have been subjected to the above treatment. One prominent Moor, who ought to know, says fifty-eight, another says sixty-three. Whatever be the exact number, it is a fact that the treatment to which the Kaids have been subjected at this time is almost unprecedented in the history of Morocco.

Following in the same strain, I may mention the country mellahs (Jewish quarters), which were subjected to the same treatment. In some places the poor Jews were not only stripped of their all, but were even sold by their captors for whatever price obtainable. The knowledge of this caused much excitement among the Jews in the larger towns, and I believe that with their help relatives of those sold into slavery have since been able to ransom them all. As a rule the Jews of this country are timid and fearful, and of late have LITERALLY FULFILLED DEUT. XXVIII. 65, 66.

If a Moor on any occasion gives evidence of fear he is taunted with the words, "Are you a Jew?" Surely none of God's Word shall fail in fulfilment, so just as we see the dark side being verified, so surely shall we yet see the bright and glorious restoration and conversion of the "chosen race."

During the time when the Kaids' houses were coming down, the town here enjoyed practical quietude, in spite of the unrest of the daily report. It was even quieter than usual, seeing caravans had ceased coming and going to the coast, on account of the unsafe state of the roads. About a fortnight ago the roads were deemed safe enough, and traffic has been resumed. Now, however, circumstances have arisen inside the town which have done more to cause alarm than all that has transpired since the Sultan's death. I have already mentioned that some of the Kaids sought refuge here. It is reported that orders have now come from Fez to imprison them and confiscate all their goods, etc.

On Sabbath last they were summoned to appear before the Khalifah of this place. The first one who went was promptly seized and put in prison. The others, hearing of his fate, fled to one of the refuges (they have for some time been living in their own town residences). Near noon it was discovered that one of them had dared to remain in his house. Orders were at once given for his apprehension, but it was easier giving the order than carrying it out. For about five hours he and his brother held out against some hundreds of soldiers. Being armed with the best of rifles they fired down upon the assailants with deadly effect. It is impossible to know how many were killed. At first some said eighty, but I think thirty is nearer the truth. As to wounded, I fear an enormous number now lie in terrible suffering. Dr. Muir attended three in one little street, so this gives us some idea of the havoc that has been made. Another poor fellow, with a compound fracture of his thigh, now lies groaning in one of our rooms. It is terrible to think that the desire to apprehend one man should have resulted in such loss of life and untold suffering.

Long before the besieged were vanquished the lower part of the house had been broken into, and while the owner was fighting like a hero from the upper story his property was being carried off from below. Standing at our door we saw many different things being carried past, but what saddened us most was to see a poor black slave led away, naked save for a rope round his neck, in the midst of a company of demon-like beings. Poor fellow! he had been guilty of nothing but faithfulness to his master. Overcome at last, it is said, the poor Kaid took away his own life. His brother had fallen some time before. Long after sunset the pillagers went on stripping the house of every conceivable thing, and at the same time fighting wildly among themselves over the spoil.

Since then the town has been strictly under guard, and public orders given for all strangers, and those having no fixed residence, to leave the town in three days' time. The people have tasted blood, as it were, and it is hard to say where the thing may end. We will not be surprised to find that the very men who were anxious to seize and kill their Kaid will now be the first to demand satisfaction for his death.

Will those who love the Lord's cause pray that times of peace may soon be ushered in, and that a happier and juster form of government may be established? Our work all the summer has been a work of faith. While merchants have fled to the coast, or gone about armed to the teeth, we have continued going out and in as heralds of peace and love, and suffered no molestation. Our motto, "Where duty calls or danger, be never wanting there."—Yours, in Jesus, C. Nairn.

THE SANTA CLAUS HOME.

This Home, superintended by Miss Charles, is intended for children with hip and spinal diseases, who are not admitted at most ordinary Homes owing to the prolonged care that is necessary—care which it is utterly impossible for the children to have in their own poor homes, however willing the parents may be. Any case is admitted when a cot is at liberty, either by payment of 5s. weekly, or by "free letters" from subscribers to the Home.

When in town, we took a basket of flowers and went to see the dear little patients, of whom there were twelve, eight girls and four boys. These latter had a room to themselves, while the girls were together in another room. They were delighted to see us, and sang some little songs, taught them by the eldest girl, Lily, aged twelve, who, although a sufferer and in bed for two years, is the sunshine of the Home. The youngest "Baby," Emily, four years old, is a sweet tiny childie, looking only half her age. All were so contented and happy that, saddened by our visit, we felt glad that God had put it into the hearts of his people to take care of his suffering little ones. We, too, can help to gladden lonely hours by sending toys, scrapbooks, dolls, drawing-slates, etc. Warm little shawls, and bedroom slippers, would be highly appreciated by those able to get up for a short time, and money, too, for the daily needs, would be thankfully received. The address of the Home is, 34, South Grove, Highgate, London, N. E. W. Purdon.

PUBLIC-HOUSES AND THE GOSPEL.

I have been much interested, in common with many others, in Mr. Drysdale's articles on "Aggressive Work." I think it might be useful, especially to the younger workers for Christ, if more who have had wide experience were to give accounts of ways in which the Lord has used them—to the praise of his name (Acts xiv. 27). Several times I have resolved to write suggesting an open door for aggressive work, which offers much promise of usefulness if undertaken with devotion and faith. Mr. Drysdale's account of his conversational meeting in the smoke-room at a "Hydro" and the letter in your last issue on "Young Women and Drink" have brought me to the point. I think the more the suggestion is considered the more it will commend itself. It is that the war be carried into the enemy's camp by invading the public-houses. If the Church of Christ were to send an army of her best workers into the public-houses of our land, warning and pleading with those who are led captive by Satan, wonderful results would follow.

From fifteen years' experience of visiting public-houses, in many different towns, I can testify that it is true drinking in them has greatly increased of late years with young people of both sexes. One always returns home from the work sad and depressed at heart. I have been quite deaf for many years and am not able to do more than to distribute tracts. I thank God that even that work is not without known results. Formerly I spoke with people and visited a great many afterwards in their own homes. The results were most encouraging, and I have particulars in my diary which are of great interest to me.

Now, is it realised when Sunday-school teachers complain of losing elder scholars, that these, as well as many other young people, are to be found among the vicious and godless, and all kinds of habitués of the public-houses? I myself have seen members of my own Bible-class hiding their faces behind newspapers, and in other ways, when I entered a tap-room or smoke-room, and have met many (most of them deploring their fall) who were formerly Christian workers. One evening a local preacher nearly knocked me over in his haste to rush from the house when I appeared inside the door.

I have always felt that the work done was not sufficiently thorough, and often prayed about it, as well as consulting friends how more could be done to carry the truth home to the conscience. For some time past I have seen the way, and believe it is both right and practical. Any person is at liberty to go at any time into a public-house, purchase a twopenny bottle of lemonade, or other refreshment, and stay as long as he will, engaging in conversation on any subject with those who may be there. No landlord can legally refuse to supply a temperance drink called for, or interfere in the slightest with the liberty of a customer who is sober. Of course, if one were to go so far as to annoy a landlord in his own house, simply as a tract distributor, he could be so offensive as to stop the visits, but we find that with tact and courtesy our visits and remarks are welcomed and appreciated.

A very little reflection will serve to show what a very wide and promising field for aggressive work there is here for suitable workers. True, much of the soil is hard and barren, but every class is represented, and, in experience, it is found that in public-houses you can converse with whom you will, and on any topic you choose. Much work is done amongst discharged prisoners, and in seeking to rescue the fallen. I would not underrate the value of such work, but rather wish more could be done. But in the public-houses are found not only these characters, but multitudes who are in danger of becoming such, and some of whom are daily falling. Is it not the wise course, on the principle that "prevention is better than cure," to seek to rescue these by any means available? And there are many who would be cheered and strengthened in their struggle by a brother or sister's helping hand. It is vain to make ourselves comfortable with the thought that our town and city missionaries are doing this work for us. It is not possible for them to do it unless strengthened by the main body of those who should be "the army of the Lord."

Many and many a time have men and women used such expressions, in speaking to me, as, "I wish you could make a better man of me," or, "How I wish I was the happy woman I once was." I remember how I was struck with the remark of one young man on receiving a tract, "I wish I was going to take that's advice." Our marching orders are, "Go!" The Son of Man came "to seek and to save that which was lost." His command to his servants is, "Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in." While we sit in our churches these people do not come in. Do not we all choose our own comfort and that which pleases us far too much? I write as one who knows the inside of public-houses after a long term of experience.

EXILES FOR HIS SAKE.

OPERATIVE JEWISH CONVERTS' INSTITUTION.

Persecution in the old-world sense—the rack, the gibbet, and the stake—has no longer to be dreaded by the confessor of Christ, but none the less there are still those who have to "endure many things for my name's sake." The Jew whose eyes have been opened to see Jesus as the Messiah of Israel and the Saviour of sinners, has often to suffer the loss of all things. He is cast out of the synagogue, cut off from his family and friends, "boycotted" by his brethren after the flesh, and frequently deprived of his means of livelihood. Under such circumstances it becomes necessary that his fellow-believers in Christ should do something to enable him to earn his living.

A perception of these facts led the honoured Charles Simeon, and others like-minded, to found in 1831 the Operative Jewish Converts' Institution—not to support young Jews in idleness, but to teach them a useful trade, while instructing them more fully in the Holy Scriptures. This Institution has from the first been closely associated with the London Jews Society, although perfectly distinct and independent in organisation and management. For many years the Institution has had its locale at the famous Palestine-place, paying a small rent for the use of the premises. Now, however, these historic buildings have been sold, fresh arrangements being made for the schools and other branches of work hitherto carried on by the London Jews' Society in Palestine-place; and consequently the Operative Institution is likely to be called upon shortly to find another home. Hearing of these impending changes, the editor, in view of the interest which many feel in the matter, instructed me to visit the Institution in order to ascertain the facts. I found the principal, Rev. H. O. Allbrook, most willing to show me over the premises, introduce me to the inmates, and afford every information as to the work going on, as well as the past and present results. As to possible changes and future movements, he is, however, at the moment, unable to say more than this:— has been so manifestly seen in the whole history of the undertaking that I am confident He will guide as to the future, bring light out of darkness, and so overrule any change in store for us that the result may be increased efficiency and wider usefulness. But come and see what we are doing now."

The invitation being accepted, we passed into the printing department. In the composing-room Russian, Austrian, Roumanian, Palestinian, and English Jews were busy at the case, setting Hebrew, Judæo-Persian, German, Swedish, and English type, under the oversight of a Russian Jew, who has been forty years on the staff. In the machine-room—also under the care of a former inmate—I found a capital running plant, capable of turning out a vast amount of good work. The bookbinding room was mainly occupied with Bibles and books for various societies; but I was glad to observe also not a few volumes for private customers.

In the sewing and folding rooms were some Christian Jewesses busy at work. The place seems a hive of business-like activity, and those who find there a home quickly learn the value of faithful industry. Altogether, there are twenty-two Hebrew Christians engaged on the premises. Of these seventeen are "inmates," which term indicates refugees and others admitted to learn the trade, and who, while doing so, are fed, clothed, and boarded freely. These inmates come from many places and they go to many parts. The Institution is at once a centre of attraction, and a centre of radiation.

ITS INFLUENCE IS WORLD-WIDE.

It affords shelter to the persecuted of many lands, who in their turn go forth taking with them well-informed faith in Him who is the true Light. Having learned a useful trade, they go out to follow their calling; or to become missionaries and ministers of the Gospel. Since the opening of the Institution 922 have been admitted—nine-tenths of these sent by missionaries of the London Society, although others are also readily admitted on showing satisfactory evidence of conversion or sincere inquiry. Seventy of these have become missionaries, twenty-three parochial clergymen, and thirteen ministers of other denominations. Many of them have obtained high eminence, and their names have become widely known by reason of important service rendered to the cause of Christ. Most missions to Jews, both here and in America, have recruited their staff from men trained in the Institution. At present the London Jews' Society has nine, the London City Mission five, the British Jews' Society two, and the Mildmay Mission to the Jews one.

Readers interested in the evangelisation of the seed of Abraham will observe that a large proportion of the Jewish labourers now in the field have benefited by this Operative Institution; yet so quiet and modest is its work that it is but little known. Its "graduates" are recognised as doing good service, while the "Alma Mater," to which they owe so much, is apt to be forgotten.

In considering the special claim such an institution has upon the Lord's people, the fact that the inmates earn a very considerable sum towards its support must be borne in mind. Still there is need of help; for these come to be taught and have to be maintained. No sooner are they able to support themselves than they are sent out to make room for fresh comers. Moreover, the committee are anxious to add fresh trades—such as lithography and stereotyping. Beyond all this, there is looming near the need for new premises. The devoted principal and his committee are waiting upon God that He would touch the heart of some of his wealthy stewards to build a suitable home for the Institution. This, however, will appear in due time; meanwhile, the Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Palestine-place, Cambridge Heath, E., has a strong claim on the prayerful sympathy of all who "pray for the peace of Jerusalem."

AMONG SAILORS AT PORT SAID.

Mr. G. A. Eoll, of Port Said, who is now in England, gives a good account of work since his last visit. Men of many nationalities pass Port Said, and among these during the past three years Mr. Eoll has circulated over 4000 Bibles, 28,000 Testaments, and 35,000 Gospels, besides feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and attending to the sick. The Scriptures distributed were in over a score languages. He proceeds:—

During the last eleven years of mission work in Port Said, the Lord has been pleased to bless my labours in many ways, both in distributing the Scriptures on board the large number of steamers coming through the canal, now about four thousand annually.

The following incident is typical of many proofs of blessing resulting from my work:—On February 6 I met a Greek on the street whom I had known for some years. Shaking hands with him, I asked where he had been. "In prison at Alexandria, sir." "How is this?" "Do you remember the house which was burnt down last October?" "Perfectly." "I was accused and condemned to prison for setting fire to it, but I can truthfully say that I am innocent still. My sojourn in prison, however, was the happiest time of my life." "How could that be?" "You might remember, sir, that thirty-seven years ago, on my wedding day, you gave me a Bible." 'Yes, I do." "Well, that Bible I read through whilst in prison, and I have come to believe that it was all written for me. I fully trust the Lord, who has forgiven me all my sins." Knowing his former life and his present humble confession, I felt bound to believe the man's testimony.

Before leaving Port Said I bought of the Egyptian Government a site on which to build a mission house. This I paid for, and on my return I hope to put in the foundation, for which I have the funds in the bank. There will, however, be need for £750 more, and I am asking the Lord to incline his stewards to help.

While in this country Mr. Eoll may be addressed, care of Mr. Case, 11, Cotham-road, Bristol.

MISSIONARY DAY AT MANCHESTER.

Thursday, October 25, was the day set apart at the Strangeways Conference Hall, which is a great centre of Christian effort of a practical kind, as "Missionary Day." From early morning until late in the evening, the great purpose of the Saviour's cross—"That God's name might be known upon earth, his saving health among all nations"—was the thought in every heart, and the theme of every tongue. Much prayer had gone from many hearts that it might be a day rich in blessing, and so it proved.

At nine o'clock, a number of ministerial friends and others gathered for breakfast, the Bishop of Manchester and Mrs. Moorhouse presiding. Before rising from the table, the Bishop spoke some earnest, stirring words of sympathy with the object of the day, reminding his hearers that the Lord's command was imperative—"Go and preach the Gospel to every creature." The question was not, "Have the results been commensurate with the efforts put forth?" but "Have we been faithful in obeying the command?" At the same time he pointed out, confirming it by his Australian experience, that whenever the Gospel is simply and faithfully preached, and brought down to the capacity of the lowest heathen tribes, it finds a response even in their darkened minds.

After the hymn, "Far, far away in heathen darkness dwelling," was heartily sung, the company gathered in the Conference Hall for prayer. Then came the first missionary meeting, Prebendary Macdonald presiding.

Rev. David Baron gave an address on "Christ, our Passover, sacrificed for us, therefore let us keep the Feast." He showed, from the Old Testament, that the three leading features of the Jewish feasts were rest, joy, and sending portions. If Christians have the rest and joy which comes from knowing that "Christ our Passover is slain for us," they will "send portions" of that blessed Gospel feast to those who are still without it.

Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites and Miss Lucy Guinness followed. The former told of his recent journey to India, of the remarkable way it came about, and of the willingness of the natives to hear when there was an earnest human voice to tell; in his own emphatic hearty way, the speaker went rapidly over the various cities visited, specially Benares, the sacred city, which he described as the greatest sink of iniquity he ever witnessed.

The afternoon meeting began at three o'clock, Mr. W. J. Crossley presiding. "Work amongst God's ancient people" was the subject of an earnest address from Rev. David Baron, who recounted from experience in many lands the remarkable awakening and spirit of inquiry amongst the Jews; all this points to the close of the dispensation, and the near approach of Him who alone can give freedom to oppressed Israel.

After special prayer for missionaries now journeying to foreign stations, Dr. Harry Guinness told of the wide doors and effectual opened and opening in Africa and elsewhere. The heathen world is crying, "Come over and help us." Is the Christian Church responding adequately to the call?

Miss Belleby, of the Church of England Zenana Society, followed with an account of work in Ceylon, and closed with an earnest appeal for more workers amongst the women and girls of India. After which free-will offerings were taken for the cause of missions.

During the interval which followed tea was served. At six o'clock the "Requests for Prayer" were laid before the Lord, and a very solemn and blessed time of prayer followed, under the influence of which the closing missionary and consecration meeting gathered, Mr. Leonard K. Shaw presiding. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit were felt by all from the beginning of this meeting to its close. After Rev. Edgar Thwaites, Miss Lucy Guinness, and Dr. Harry Guinness had spoken, the first-named on the need of winter missions for India, the meeting resolved itself into one for personal consecration to the Lord. Miss Gertrude Jackson and Mrs. F. W. Crossley were the speakers. The Lord's claim on the whole-hearted service of his people, and their entire yielding to Him were most tenderly and lovingly set forth. The rapt attention of the crowded hall told of the Spirit working. While still kneeling the hymn, "Loved with everlasting love" was sung with an effect which will not soon be forgotten. Thus the second missionary day closed, many going home to ask on their knees before God or that real love for souls, for perishing souls which Jesus had.

As a result of the day, the money offerings for the missionary cause will reach about £600. As last year, several fresh workers will be placed in the foreign field as a direct result of these blessed "Missionary Days" at the Strangeways Conference Hall. Mr. Eugene Stock's absence owing to illness was much regretted throughout the day.

WOMEN WORKERS IN GLASGOW.

The women who met last week in the Queen's Room, Glasgow, to discuss the many questions affecting the welfare of women, showed an earnestness of purpose and a deep religious feeling which can scarcely fail to call down a blessing upon the great works in which they are engaged. Mrs. Mirrless, who gave the inaugural address, claimed for women a Divine work to be done in life, which has been entrusted to women in virtue of that womanhood which is alike a privilege and a responsibility. Theirs it was to follow the example of their Divine Master and to occupy themselves with the poor, the sinful, and the sorrowing; and so to raise and comfort them that they might be led to that humble, joyful hope and loving obedience which make the regenerated Christian.

The ladies who represented the various women's settlements had a brave record of work done. They live in the midst of the poor to whom they minister, in neighbourhoods in which there are no leisured ladies to carry on charitable movements. The Sunday services are always well attended, and the clubs for boys and girls do much to keep young people safe and happy at the most critical period of their lives.

The care of the aged poor elicited many an expression of sympathy for those, who, through no fault of their own, are doomed to end their life of toil in a workhouse. As Miss Clifford pointed out, it is not so much the Poor Laws that are to blame as public apathy, which does not return the right sort of people as guardians. When paupers are classified according to their merits, the odium of being one will be removed; or, better still, by thrift on the part of the poor, state aid, or voluntary charitable effort, the aged workers of the future will be converted into pensioners instead of paupers. Women, even without men's resources, are far before them in thrift, and when women have the direction of girls' elementary education—as they ought to have—the girls will be taught to be good needlewomen, cooks, nurses, and housewives, instead of wasting much of their time as they do now.

The dignity of service found warm advocates in Lady Laura Ridding and Mrs. Angus. The former regretted that nowadays girls of the class who formerly made good servants became shop or factory girls, occupations which entail much greater hardships and worse pay than domestic service. In shops and bars there are as stringent rules as to suitable dress as in service, the fines imposed are a severer punishment than any restrictions insisted upon by a tyrannous mistress. Whereas servants have only one ruler, those in places of business had often half a dozen. Factory experience makes girls unfit to be the wives of poor men, and develops a loathing for solitude and quiet occupations. A girl exposed to the elevating influence of a refined Christian family receives the best training she could have. Mistresses should avoid making fussy, galling rules, and render to their servants "justice and equality."

Mrs. Angus, who had been in service twenty-five years, remarked that if she had to begin life again she would be a servant. She considered it the best opening for young girls who had to earn their own bread. Dissatisfied, restless servants cause much unhappiness among other servants, and many of the complaints they make are unreasonable. Shop girls are not as well paid, fed, or housed, although they are called "young ladies," while the servant often goes by the name of "slavey." Both should be called young women.

Miss Anna Richardson's paper on "The Causes of Intemperance in Women" was exceedingly well thought out. It contained authentic statistics, and opinions of leading medical men, which all went to prove that secret drinking is on the increase with women of the upper and middle classes, and that many ladies are dying of alcoholic poisoning, while those nearest to them have not the slightest idea that such is the case. Heredity, doctors' prescriptions, social customs, and grocers' and other shopkeepers' licences, are among the main factors in leading women to give way to drink. Miss Richardson regretted that so many doctors order women to drink port wine, when a harmless remedy would serve better.

Dr. Jex-Blake, speaking from her own experience, said she had no reason to think that the excessive use of stimulants was common among her patients. She considered that a glass of light wine or beer could do no one harm if taken at meals. Alcohol should never be used except medicinally; "sups" between meals should be avoided, and children should on no account be allowed to touch stimulants. The sense of the Conference was decidedly in favour of total abstinence.

Mrs. Creighton spoke very earnestly as to the recent awakening of women to the knowledge of impurity. She contended that it is necessary to know, in order that we may help. We all know what the result of keeping women in ignorance has been in the past upon the social sore. Women must not shrink when it is necessary to denounce the evil. There can be no compromise with sin. The same standard of morality must be demanded from men as from women; and mothers should begin to instil the truths of religion into their children from infancy, teaching them to regard their bodies as the temples of God. Hardness and self-control are valuable to a child, who should not so much be shielded from temptation as strengthened to resist it.

Lady Frances Balfour said that the best men were on the side of those women who are trying to raise the standard of public morality. Every woman, by her own example, can help that cause.

At a young ladies' meeting in a different hall at the same time, Miss Lumsden read a paper no "Self-Development," in which she recommended her young listeners to make a point of securing a certain time for solitude and for study every day. Neither asceticism or self-indulgence is true self-development. The life of the true self is the dying of the false self which apes it.

Miss Mary Hort, in dealing with the ethics of home life, dwelt upon the beauties of a Christian home circle, in which forbearance, patience, and charity are exercised by each member of the family. Girls returning to their home after having been several years at school frequently find that their interests are different to those of the other members of their family. The tendency, under these circumstances, is either to wrap themselves up in their own set of ideas, and appear cold and indifferent, or to feel aggrieved if their particular opinions are not adopted wholesale by the family.

The "Possible Deterioration of the Worker" was the subject of a paper read by Miss Clifford on Thursday evening. The temptations to which Christians are liable after years of self-denying service are self-will, or a certain inertness of mind, which sometimes leads to a dictatorial manner; the love of power, impatience of opposition, unsympathetic dealing with beginners. All of these can only be guarded against by being in continual touch with God, and understanding fully his infinite care of all. This was followed by an address from Mrs. Creighton on "Serenity." The speaker alluded to the rush and hurry of even philanthropic work in the present day. The world that we can influence and help is so large, the calls for help come to us from such widely different quarters, that we forget we must first of all possess our souls, and that what we are is more than what we do.

Mrs. Lindsay gave the concluding address, and summed up the lessons of the many papers which had been read, each of which treated of some good work done for women by women. The one thought suggested or expressed by every paper was the absolute necessity of knowledge gained by careful and sympathetic investigation, as a foundation for all work for others, as a preliminary condition, without which benevolence, zeal, and enthusiasm often do more harm than good.

C.

IN BERNE it is provided that, "When persons receiving poor-law relief are knowingly helped to gamble or drink, the person so offending can be punished with sixty days' hard labour. Persons of drunken and dissolute life may be forbidden from access to public-houses for two years from date of prosecution, or punished by deprivation of parental rights."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 4.—MALACHI IV.

Judgment (1).—These words refer primarily to the destruction of Jerusalem, but they go further. Their complete fulfilment can only take place in the awful scenes with which the present age is to close. But there is also a sense in which this fire is always burning and destroying.

The Blessedness and Victory of the Righteous (2, 3).—The wings of the Sun of Righteousness are his beams (Psa. cxxxix. 9). Beneath the blessed grace that Jesus sheds abroad on the hearts that love Him, they become glad and fruitful. They say that a sun-bath is in the highest degree restorative. And the joy that Jesus gives makes us gambol as calves of the stall. There is an over-abounding joy which makes the heart light. (3) We are reminded of Luke x. 19. The old prediction of Eden is realised in all who are the seed of the woman. They tread on the lion and adder. If you are in Christ, you are more than a conqueror.

Elijah the Prophet (4-6).—These words were partially fulfilled in John the Baptist (Matt. xi. 14; xvii. 12; Luke i. 17). But he did not exhaust their meaning (John i. 21; Matt xvii. 11). John did not restore all things. The great and terrible day of the Lord is yet to come. All true advents of Christ to the soul, the Church, and the world, must be preceded by the work of Elijah or John. There must be a restitution of all wrongs, and a preparation in heart and life. (6) Ungodliness loosens the family tie, but repentance towards God tightens the bonds between father and children. Family purity and affection are the best guarantees of a prosperous and fruitful earth.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 5.—MATTHEW I.

The Genealogy of Jesus Christ (1-17).—Perhaps copied from the public records. To help the memory the names of our Lord's ancestors are divided into three lists of fourteen each. The words begat and son mean, in many cases, only descendant. There was a strange admixture in the blood that flowed through the veins of the Second Man. Godless kings like Joram, Ahaz, and Manasseh; impure women like Tamar, Ruth, and Bathsheba; patriarchs and kings; princes and nobodies; Jews and Gentiles. All the race was represented in Him. All ranks and conditions poured their confluent streams into the ocean of his being. He is, therefore, well qualified to be the Priest, Saviour, and Judge of all. He is the Son of Man.

The Incarnation (18-25).—The betrothal was a public and binding ceremony. The mother of Jesus was an unusually lovely character, deeply taught in Scripture, and full of the noblest traditions of her people. What an encouragement it should be to holy women to know that they may be as much to Jesus as she was (xii. 50). May our souls be betrothed to Christ (2 Cor. xi. 2). (19) What an agony must Mary have passed through as an undeserved suspicion lay upon her. Nothing but unwavering faith in God, by whose will she was brought into such a condition, could have carried her through. Let those who are unjustly suspected trust in God for their vindication! (20) In our perplexities, let us look up for illumination. God's angels are not far away. They minister to us still. But we have to be perfectly quiet, to retire from the busy rush of the world, that we may understand what they would say. Heaven's perpetual message to earth is, Fear not. (21) This announcement is full of comfort for those who dread sin more than they do hell. Jesus saves us from the latter by saving us from the former. He deals with not only the penalty but the power of sin. Take this as the watchword of your life, whenever you are tempted, "Jesus saves." (22) Note the perpetual testimony of the New Testament to the inspiration of the Old. "The Lord spake through the prophet" (R.V.).

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6.—MATTHEW II.

The Wisdom of the World Seeking Christ (1-2).—Probably they were Persian magi, whose astronomy was mingled with astrology. Mere nature-worship could not satisfy them; they needed an Incarnation, a Saviour. Their journey was a confession of the inadequacy of any religious system which does not contain a revelation and a sacrifice. (Acts xvii. 23.) Some say that the star was the unusual conjunction of Jupiter, Saturn, and Mars, coupled with Balaam's prophecy (Num. xxiv. 17). But the fact of it travelling to stand over the stable (9) makes this unlikely. Each heart has a star beckoning towards Christ, if only it would follow. It was a mistake to turn aside to Jerusalem; they lost their star while there, and it led to the death of innocent babes. Ah! how many mistakes arise from trusting in human prudence.

Jerusalem Troubled (3-8).—This was Herod the Great, specially great in his crimes. Evil-doers hate the light. Nobody knew of the King, or wanted him. People dreaded a renewal of the civil wars that had rent the land. The kingdom of God is established outside the proprieties and conventionalities of this world. We must go outside Jerusalem to find it. (4) Chief Priests were those who had served in that office, for which there was an annual election. (5) We may know the letter of Scripture, but refuse to obey it. (6) Bigness is not greatness, nor littleness insignificance. Rule, i.e., as a shepherd (Micah v. 2). (8) How useless it is by craft or might to counterwork the purposes of God. Herod resembled a mad bull charging an express locomotive.

The True King and His Gifts (9-12).—Live up to the light you have, and you shall have more as you need it. Be willing to do, and you shall know. Unto the upright a light ariseth in the darkness. (11) How noble is the faith that sees God in the lowliest surroundings! How beautiful the homage of age, with wealth, wisdom, virtue, to the light that shone in that lowly lanthorn. (12) Gold for the king; incense as Divine; myrrh and frankincense for the sacrifice and burial. Mary's meagre preparations were thus supplemented, and money was provided for the needs of the journey to Egypt.

The Fugitives (13-23).—God's guidance comes by stars, or dreams, or angels. Directly Christ is born into the heart, the devil essays his destruction. (15) Egypt had sheltered the chosen seed, and now Him in whom its history was headed up. (16) The number of children perhaps reached thirty, but this was sad enough. (20) All that seek the young child's life die. This was the fate of Pharaoh, Sennacherib, Herod. (21) Always the young child is mentioned before the mother. (23) Nowhere are these literal words found, but we know that Nazarene was a term of reproach; and by this appellative Matthew probably refers to the contempt with which Christ was regarded.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7.—MATTHEW III.

The Herald and His Message (1-4).—The first three words cover thirty years. The greatest of woman born springs fully equipped on the arena. We see the forest tree, but think little of the long years of training. He comes of a line of priests; cousin to Christ, and six months older. His greatness shown in his humility; that he pointed men to Christ, and they went; and in his independence of creature comforts. (3) He was content to be a voice (John i. 23). (4) The strength of his spirit was in proportion to the simplicity of his life. Most of us pamper the body too much to be strong souls. Locusts were largely eaten, and tasted like shrimps.

His Audience (5-12).—The people always discover the real man, and will come any distance to hear him (Luke vii. 19). The ritualism of the Pharisees, the negations of the Sadducees, fail to satisfy the soul-hunger in them or anybody else. (8) We may arouse the conscience to passing conviction, but true repentance is evinced by fruits. (9) The Jews believed that they were God's chosen people by right of birth. John strikes at this deadly pretension. The pebbles on the shore of the Jordan could become children of Abraham, whilst those of merely natural birth might become castaways. (10) This and the two following verses end with fire. He who receives the middle one escapes the other two. God must either consume the sin or the sinner. Fire will cleanse or consume. (11) Christ also baptizes. We need something more than a negation. Not water only but fire (Acts i. 5). (12) Ask Christ to make your heart his floor, and to winnow out of you all that is not of Himself in your schemes, opinions, and acts.

The Bridegroom (13-17).—In his baptism the sinless Lord identified Himself with sinners by being immersed in waters where so many had preceded him, confessing their sins. (14) The holiest men are most sensible of the sin within themselves and their need of cleansing. The cousins do not appear to have met before, but from a divine intuition, John recognised the Master. (15) Jesus accepted the rank which John assigned Him, but sought his co-operation. "It becometh us." Would that He might ever speak so to us. We must ever act becomingly.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8.—MATTHEW IV.

Tempted (1-2).—Our most radiant experiences are succeeded by dark hours of conflict, for which they prepare us. God's love suffers us to be tempted, not that we should fall, but that we should know ourselves, and pre-eminently his resources of grace. There is a dark kingdom of evil, with a personal head, who was the great antagonist of the second Adam, as of the first. He always comes to us, when we are weakest, at the end of a fast. Christ was tempted to substitute his own way and will for his Father's.

Tempted in the Desert (3-4).—Adam, in the garden, provided with all he needed, yielded to sense, and the garden faded into a desert; Christ, in a desert, deprived of all, withstood the appeal to sense, and preferred to wait till his Father saw fit to feed Him, and He turned the desert into a garden. The gist of this trial lay in a faith that would utterly believe in God, and a refusal to use for Himself the power that had been delegated for the use of others. Thus He became ultimately able to feed thousands with the bread of this life and the next. The devil is fond of instilling doubt. Do you live on the words of God?

Tempted in the Temple (5-7).—Christ had conquered by his faith; now the tempter endeavours to drive his faith to presumption. He had quoted Scripture; Satan does the same, wrenching a verse from its connection and the analogy of Scripture. Our Lord quotes again from Deuteronomy, his favourite book, and compares Scripture with Scripture. It is written again. Satan cannot throw us down; he can only suggest that we should throw ourselves down. Guard your thoughts and he is powerless. God will preserve us when duty demands that we throw ourselves down, but not when we act on a whim or in bravado.

Tempted on the Mountain (8-11).—Power is good. It was the one desire of Christ to acquire, as man, power wherewith to save men. Would it not be the acme of self-sacrifice to worship evil, and so get power to do good by? Destroy yourself, Son of Man, that you may rule and save a world! The suggestion was abhorrent to our Lord, and He set Himself to win the empire by following the path of suffering and pain that led to the cross. When that was over He said, having wrested the sceptre from Satan's hands, all power is given to Me (xxviii. 18). Satan is the prince of this world, but his usurped power is doomed. Christ's victory is for us all, in so far as we abide in Him. (11) Heaven had eagerly watched the conflict, now angels hastened to bring heavenly food.

The Ministry in Galilee (12-25).—This paragraph covers John ii., iii., iv. Christ settled in the north, lest He might hasten the conflict with the religious leaders of the people, and because the population was so dense and neglected. (13) Wherever He went the light of morning broke. (18) There were many stages in the call of disciples. This was one.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9.—MATTHEW V.

This was not the first sermon (iv. 23), but the first important one. The manifesto of the king! It was preceded by prayer, and by the calling of the disciples, to whom it was primarily addressed (Luke vi. 12, 13).

The Beatitudes (3-16).—Each is a gate into Blessedness, enter by which you will. To have one is to have all. The world thinks poverty, hunger, meekness intolerable; Christ deems them conditions of blessedness. When we have attained this octave of the Blessed Life, we shall become salt, arresting the world's evil, and light, cheering its night.

The New Teacher and the Old Law (17-20).—With what authority He speaks! A greater than Moses is here. But the old law must remain, its jots and tittles, the dot of the i, the crossing of the t, because realised in a completer fashion, than by external and ritual observance. Christ fulfils the law through us by his Spirit, as the noon the dawn, and the man the child.

The Re-Edition of the Law (21-48).—Murder and its root in anger, impurity and its root in the sinful glance, oaths and retaliation, and the law of love, pass in review, and are reminted. (22) Raca is contemptuous, fool full of loathing. The judgment was the magistracy of any town; the council the Sanhedrim, that punished by stoning; hell-fire was the Valley of Hinnom, where offal was burnt. (48) The only perfection we can aim at is that perfect love which copies the example of our Heavenly Father in its even-handed tenderness to the good and bad, the thankful and ungrateful.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10.—MATTHEW VI.

Introductory Warning (1).—For alms read righteousness, R.V. This is a general heading for the three divisions that follow.

Alms (2-4).—That we should give alms is taken for granted, and with our right hand. If we seek the praise of men, we may easily get it, but it is the only reward we shall ever get. How lovely to do things for God only to see. (4) R.V. omits openly. His best rewards are within.

Prayer (5-15).—The Holy of Holies was such a prayer closet. Each soul should have its own. Thy closet. The Father is always waiting for thee there. Thy Father is in secret; seeth in secret; and knoweth all. (8) It is good that He can read thoughts, and sighs, and fears. (9) The disciples' prayer is a model for private devotion, as well as a formulary for public use. Begin with God. Avoid selfishness. Pray for forgiveness as often as for bread. Never pray except you have forgiven and as you expect forgiveness.

Fasting (16-18).—We may fast from many things besides food. Do not seek the pity and praise of men. Keep a happy face, lest men think ill of God.

Freedom from Care (19-34).—Live only for God, He will give thee treasures. Let thine eye be single, He will fill thee with light. Serve Him as thy one Master, He will find thee in all that is necessary for the body He has given thee. (25) Anxious thought won't help thee, and it is needless. (28) Will thy Father treat thee worse than the servants of his realm? (32) Let those worry about these things who do not know the Father, but such cares are not for thee. Do his work, and leave Him to provide.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 11.

The Twelve Chosen.—Mark iii. 6-19.

Golden Text.—Jno. xv. 16.

(6) The Pharisees had been defeated in their conflict with Jesus in the synagogue. Filled with envy and hatred, they left the house of worship to plot a murder! The Herodians were a political party, who favoured the schemes of Herod Antipas, whose lives were grossly licentious, and whose doctrines were as sceptical as those of the Sadducees. Bitterest hatred existed between these and the Pharisees, but they forgot their differences in their common antipathy to Jesus. Would that Christians were as wise in their conflict with the powers of sin.

(7, 8) Jesus did not unnecessarily expose Himself to his foes. When it was no longer safe to preach in thesynagogue, He did not stay to insist upon his rights, but went elsewhere and preached to those who were willing to hear. His followers came from all parts. Idumea, or Edom, at the extreme south of Palestine, below the Dead Sea. Beyond Jordan, the district called Perea, and including all the country east of the Jordan from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea. Tyre and Sidon were coast cities of Phœnicia, to the north-west of Palestine. These crowds show how widely our Lord's influence was felt. Their following Him did not amount to actual discipleship, but in many cases it led to that. In others it was a mere transient feeling of interest, which soon subsided.

(9-12) How much is crowded into these few verses! Our Lord appears as the centre of a great throng of people, eager not only to hear his words, but to receive from Him the blessing of healing. Among all the various forms of disease represented in that crowd, there was none to whom the touch of faith failed to bring the healing.

The call of the twelve Apostles was an important event in connection with the Church of Jesus Christ. The call was made from "a mountain" (13), probably Karun Hattin, on the western side of the Sea of Galilee. It was "adapted by its conformation to form a place for short retirement, and a rendezvous for gathering multitudes." Luke vi. 12 tells us that Jesus spent the whole night in prayer. He sacrificed the sleep which He so greatly needed after the toil of the previous day, in order to be prepared for the important work which was to follow. Our Lord's example teaches us to enter upon no important undertaking without special prayer. Does not the neglect of this rule explain our frequent failures?

Twelve was the number of tribes of Israel, whose names are upon the twelve gates of the New Jerusalem, while the names of the Apostles are on the foundation stones (Rev. xxi. 12, 14).

They received a special call (13). Five of them had been called before; but this call, given to the whole twelve, was final. He called "whom He pleased," not that there was anything arbitrary in his choice; He had regard to their attachment to Him, and their fitness for his service. (See Golden Text.)

In order to prepare for their future work they are chosen "to be with Him" (14). It is useless for any to go if they have not first been in his fellowship. Nearness to Jesus—intimacy with Him—is essential to every successful worker. In Him they would learn their work, and how to be empowered for it (15). Whom He sends He qualifies.

Who were they? There are four separate lists given (Matt. x. 2-4; Luke vi. 14-16; Acts i. 13, and here). Of Simon, the only thing recorded is that he was "surnamed Peter." "Galilee and the surrounding lands were remarkable for massive stone structures. The most conspicuous of these were sacred edifices, temples, and the foundation-stones of these temples were invariably large and imposing. It would be with a view to these large foundation-stones that our Lord would call Simon a stone."—Morison. The term Boanerges, given to the next two, referred either to their vehement and zealous disposition (Luke ix. 54), or to some peculiarity of voice which fitted them for preaching.

Of the rest little need be said here. Philip must not be confounded with the evangelist of that name (Acts vi. 5). Bartholomew is the Nathanael of John i. 45. Matthew—also called Levi—is the author of the first Gospel. James, the son of Alpheus, called James the Less to distinguish him from the brother of John. Thaddeus, called Lebbeus in Matt. x. 3, and Judas in Acts i. 13, is probably the author of the epistle of Jude. Simon is called the Zealot (Luke vi. 15), and before his conversion belonged to an extreme political party pledged to resist Roman rule. Judas Iscariot, the only one who was not a Galilean, belonged to Kerioth, a village of Judah. His name has become infamous by his betrayal of Jesus Christ.

It is worthy of note that these were for the most part plain men, occupying lowly positions. Yet how great the honour that attaches to them since they heard and responded to the call of Christ.

MOORISH LITTLE ONES.

Dear Children,—Many of you know something about Morocco, and I want to interest you in your little brown brothers and sisters in that strange land. It is a country four times the size of England, and yet millions of its people still know nothing of Christ and his salvation. Slaves are constantly being bought and sold in the markets; prisoners, chained together in loathsome dungeons, are daily dying of fever and starvation; the upper-class women are shut up for life in their windowless houses, while the poorer ones are worked liked animals, and often tell us they are no better than the donkeys. There are no schools for girls; the women can neither read nor write; and, although there are schools for boys in all the towns and villages, yet their only lesson-book is the Koran, the false teaching of which is driven into their heads by constant repetition and many blows.

The whole land is sick with sin and sorrow, and only the Great Physician can heal its wounds. But in the midst of all the darkness there are now a few rays of light, and in several of the towns and villages the people have been hearing of the only One who can take away their sin and lighten their sorrows.

Lately we have been trying to reach the children and teach them of Jesus, and are praying that this tiny ray of light may grow into a big sunbeam. A little house was taken last year and we began with the boys, but about Christmas the girls began asking to come. Feeling that the girls of Morocco are even more in need of teaching than the boys, we opened the school for girls in February of this year, and now have twenty-seven who come fairly regularly and are making progress. They all learn reading and sewing, as well as Bible history and texts. We leave the door open and the parents come in and out, as they like and see all that is going on. At present only two children have been taken away, dear little twins about seven years old; their mother has been for them three times and beaten them for being in the school, yet still they want to come!

We try to "mother" the children and brighten their lives as much as we can, attending them when sick, and feeding and clothing the poorer ones as far as funds will allow. For the little girls of Morocco are not so well loved as the boys, and I could tell you many sad tales of those unloved, untaught, uncared-for children. Yet, alas! not untaught, for in their homes they learn every kind of evil, and cheat and lie and steal from babyhood. So you will not wonder that we long to reach the children, and impress the truth on their young hearts while the clay is still soft. They often have meals with us, and have learned to close their eyes and thank God before taking anything. They are also beginning to understand the texts they learn. Aiweesha, a little girl about five years old, had, with the rest of the class, learned the text, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," etc., and it had been explained to her. Next day she had a cake given her. She ate about half, then suddenly stopped, and, calling out in Arabic, "and thy neighbour as thyself," she pushed the remainder of the cake into her little neighbour's mouth.

The boys, too, learned numbers of texts, and one of the old scholars came in one afternoon when I was speaking of Sidna Aisa to a village lad. The lad was saying that Jesus was only a prophet. I was trying to show him it was not so, and amongst other things said the stars were beautiful and given us by God, but they were not equal to the sun, etc. "Yes," chimed in my former pupil, "and a star can only give a little light to a few people; the sun gives light to everyone, and that is just like Sidna Aisa, for He said, 'I am the Light of the World'" (quoting one of the texts he had learned).

A larger house has been taken for this work among the children, with good schoolroom and garden. It is hoped many more children will be reached this winter, but this means more money will be needed for rent, teachers, food, etc., besides the expense of moving into the new house.

What can English children do to help? I will tell you what one little girl, only eleven years old, did lately. She had £10 in the savings bank, and she took out £1 and sent it to me in a letter, saying it was for the poor children and prisoners in Morocco. She was delighted to have something "of gold" to give to God. We may not all have gold to give, but prayer and sympathy we can all give, and if you ask God He will show you what He wants you to do for Him.

More messengers and more money are needed to send the Light throughout the length and breadth of dark Morocco and all along the countries of North Africa: lands so near to England and yet so very far away! Surely we do not sufficiently remember that "God so loved...that He gave."

When our hearts are filled with his love, we too shall give our greatest treasures for the salvation of men.

"BARMY WILLIE."

In our issue of July 26 we published under this heading an account of a boy who had come under the notice of Mr. Wheatley, superintendent of the St. Giles' Christian Mission. Several of our readers sent contributions to 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, and expressed a desire to hear further of "Barmy Willie," and the help afforded him. We therefore publish the following sequel:—

"Willie has returned from his trip to the seaside, where he has been staying for the last six weeks. He has had the desire of his heart gratified; he has seen a number of big ships and no end of little ones, and has been working right merrily with his spade and pail. We were privileged to witness his joy, when one day on the pier he saw two large steamers take up passengers for London and elsewhere. Willie has wonderfully improved during his holiday, one could hardly recognise in the stout, sturdy boy, with full rosy face, the poor little shrunken form one was so concerned for a few weeks ago."

"HE LOVED ME."

God! help me raise a hymn of praise
To Jesus; sent by Thee
Down from above, in boundless love,
He gave Himself for me.

Chorus—He died on the tree,
From sin set me free,
His love is my plea,
Self-surrendered for me.

The doom of death, by dying breath
He wafted quite away;
Our sins forgiven, in hope of heaven,
We love Him and obey.

When lost the track, He brings me back,
He holds me with his hand;
He ne'er forsakes, no promise breaks,
My Home his Promised Land.

No more my own—his, his, alone—
His law my love obeys;
His arm we bear, his crown we share,
We sing his endless praise.

Spread then his fame, extol his name,
His glory ever sing;
Himself He gave my soul to save,
My Jesus and my King.

MENDI MISSION, SIERRA LEONE.—Some time ago it was determined to establish a mission in the Mendi country, which lies behind Sierra Leone, in the interior of Africa. The work was undertaken by the Free Methodist Missionaries, who fixed their headquarters at Tikonko. A mission-house has been erected, some of the materials for which were sent out from this country, a school has been opened, and there is regular preaching. The Chief is favourable, and gives the missionaries considerable encouragement. An arrangement to prevent overlapping has been made with the American missionaries, who, with Rotafunk as the base of their operations, are also working in the populous Mendi country. Rev. William Vivian, the general superintendent, is in this country on furlough.

THE EMPIRE AND THE L.C.C.

In the decision of the London County Council, by a large majority, to uphold the recommendations of its Licensing Committee, respecting the Empire Theatre, the cause of public morals has achieved a notable triumph. Such a decision was the only true answer to the interested and unblushing clamour that has filled the air during the past weeks. All sorts of unworthy methods were used to influence the judgment of the Council, but happily they did not succeed. Those who believe that God regards, and interposes in, the details of human affairs will find in the outcome of Friday's proceedings a gracious answer to the many prayers that ascended to Him, not only on that day, but since this agitation began.

THE FIVE HOURS OF PRAYER

at St. Martin's Hall, Charing Cross, on Friday, were a most memorable time. Arranged for by the London branch of the B.W.T.A., the proceedings were largely sustained by the ladies belonging to that body. A goodly number of brethren were also present, and took part in the prayers and brief exhortations. The hall was well filled throughout. The prayers offered up were exceedingly earnest in tone, and were marked by a note of strong, faithful expectation that God would hear and answer the cry of his people in this matter, affecting so closely the cause of social righteousness and purity. The prevailing conviction might be expressed in the following stanza from one of the hymns sung:—

For right is right, since God is God,
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin.

Mrs. Chant and those who attended with her at the meeting of the County Council to sustain her hands in addressing that body, were frequently remembered in the multiplied petitions in St. Martin's Hall, that grace and strength might be given according to the need.

The long session of five hours was presided over by Mrs. Aukland, but various friends took charge for half an hour at a time. Dr. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, who was in charge for the first half-hour, gave good cheer to those present by telling of answered prayer in a somewhat similar civic crisis in Manchester a few years ago. The drink licensing of a leading place of amusement was to be decided. It was believed that a majority of the Town Council were in favour of granting the licence, but when the division took place some of those voted the other way, and the licence was refused. A member of the Council, who related the circumstance to Dr. Horton, said he could not account for it at the time, but he afterwards understood it when his wife told him that some godly women had spent the morning of the day in prayer; while the Council were deliberating, the prayers of these good women were rising up to heaven. In like manner Dr. Horton believed that the London County Council would be moved of God to a right decision in answer to prayer. A little company of them who believe would be too much for the hosts of those who are upholding iniquity. Dr. Horton was so confident as to the issue that he asked the gathering to join there and then in a song of praise to God for what He was about to do.

Among the other speakers were Mrs. Owen, on the eve of returning to China for mission work; in a few heartfelt sentences she combated the idea, held apparently by some professed Christians, that vice is a necessity. She pleaded also for sympathetic, loving action towards those unhappy sisters who are leading a sinful life, so that they might be redeemed from such a horrible calling. Some strong utterances fell from the lips of Rev. J. Baillie, of Bloomsbury, particularly as to the evil effects on the little children of the prevailing moral laxity. He said he had observed a great change for the worse of late years in the street dancing of the children; and this he attributed to the evil pictures on the hoardings, and the dances in vogue at the music-halls. Supposing it were true that the closing of some of the halls should intensify the evils of the streets, he would almost welcome such a result, because then the public conscience would be aroused and something would be done towards the purification of the streets. The streets are the possession of the community; surely it is in the power of the community to make them clean; at present the London streets compare most unfavourably with those of Paris and other European capitals. Later in the meeting Mrs. Ward Poole gave a short and stirring address. She said that this matter of the Empire Theatre was only one part of the great question that must be dealt with as to cleaner streets and purer places of public amusement. We have it in our power largely to answer our own prayers with respect to these important objects, and we must not longer be content merely to go to church and hear sermons, or go to prayer-meetings and pray; we must go forward and work for the removal of these evils as though everything depended on our own efforts. We must gain correct knowledge and communicate it to others, so that we may know what we have to deal with.

IN THE COUNCIL CHAMBER.

The scene at Spring Gardens, where the County Council meets, was very different to that in the prayer-meeting on the other side of Trafalgar-square. Instead of the calm and reverent hush, there were crowding and bustle, and great excitement. Those who had no special pass or claim on entrance found it exceedingly difficult to pass the charmed portals. By dint of persistence our representative found his way at last into the densely crowded gallery, in the course of the afternoon. The case of the Empire had been under discussion for some time. A veteran Q.C., Mr. Murphy, had stated the case for the directors of that gilded palace of pleasure. He had been very moderate and even humble in his speech; knowing doubtless the weakness of his case, and that the tribunal before him was not likely to be moved by inflammatory harangue. Mrs. Chant, too, had made her speech — intense, plain-spoken, high-toned, and powerfully pathetic in its plea for the removal of gross public incitements to vice. From the subsequent references to Mrs. Chant's words, even by her opponents, it was clear that she had made a great impression; one belligerent advocate of the Empire in the ranks of the councillors admitted that if eloquence were to carry the day the Empire would not have a chance. The serious debate went on for hours, now on one side and now on the other. One had no difficulty in seeing, before any division took place, that the prevalent feeling was not in favour of the status quo, though hints at compromise were well received.

The blunt, outspoken, hard-hitting speech of Mr. John Burns was listened to with deep attention, as he ruthlessly exposed and condemned the tactics of the Empire authorities and the attempt to "Tammany Hall" the Council by a bogus labour agitation. Mr. Burns's ideals may not be of a high spiritual kind, but it was with a feeling of thankfulness that one saw his great powers of speech, and his influence as a labour leader, thrown on the side of public decency and order. He expressed much sympathy with the fallen woman, and when his remark that he would rather open his doors to her than to a virtuous woman, evoked some rude laughter, he retorted, "Yes I would; there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety-and-nine just persons that need no repentance."

At last the voting came on Mr. Routledge's amendment, which would have left matters as they were. It was lost on a show of hands, and a formal division revealed the splendid fact that by more than two to one the Council declared for a reform; the numbers were

SEVENTY-FIVE TO THIRTY-TWO.

Various amendments were afterwards moved with the view of toning down the original recommendations of the Licensing Committee, but none were carried, though in some cases the voting was close. At last the amendments and the original motion had approached so near each other as to be virtually the same, and in the result the Committee's recommendations were finally carried almost exactly by two to one. The Chairman, in a matter of fact way, passed on at once to the next item of business, and almost before we could realise it we found that the many prayers offered during the day had indeed been fully answered. Once again wisdom was justified of her children.

THE HISTORICAL ACCURACY OF THE BIBLE.—Rev. Dr. Kinns, who is well known for his writings in confirmation of the Old Testament, has consented to deliver a series of midday lectures in St. Michael's Church, Cornhill. The subject will be "The Historical Accuracy of the Bible, as confirmed by reference to the Assyrian and Egyptian Monuments in the British Museum and elsewhere," and the lectures will be six in number, delivered on successive Tuesdays, from November 6 to December 11 inclusive. Each lecture will begin at 1.15 p.m. The aim is to reach business men during their luncheon hour, but others, ladies also, will be equally welcome.

NEWS FROM THE "WILD WEST."

Readers of the "Life and Letters of Rev. Wm. Pennefather," and friends of the "Irish Church Missions," are familiar with the name of Roundstone, the little town far away in the wilds of Connemara, from which I write. It is most picturesquely situated on a deep Atlantic bay, amid grand mountain scenery, remote from the beaten track usually taken by tourists when visiting these parts. This, added to the fact that it has hitherto afforded but very scant accommodation for visitors, has caused it to be but little frequented. Two hotels have just been opened under Protestant management.

In spite, however, of many drawbacks, a good work has been going on for years in the large parish of which Roundstone is the centre, owing to the zealous and untiring efforts of one of God's faithful servants, Rev. Canon McCormick. The parish church at Roundstone was erected in 1841, by the late Rev. Wm. Pennefather, of Mildmay, a fact which must ever give the spot a hallowed interest for God's children who revere the memory of that devoted servant of the Lord.

During Canon McCormick's ministry, a rectory has been built, and excellent school premises, the "Newton Buildings." At Canon McCormick's request, whom I met at Keswick fifteen months ago, a friend and myself have held a fortnight's mission in the "Newton Buildings;" and night by night we have had the hall filled with earnest and attentive hearers, while God has given us reason to know that definite fruit has been borne for his glory. Bible readings have also been held, and meetings for children.

When visiting an old Roman Catholic woman the other day, who listened earnestly to what I had to say, an angry voice from without (a neighbour) exclaimed from the adjoining cottage, "I'll kill you when you come out."

How deeply grateful one feels, that such a work as Canon McCormick is carrying on here is still possible. From the summit of Ben Lettery, visible from the room in which I write, the sainted Wm. Pennefather pleaded with God for Roundstone and its neighbourhood. That prayer was heard, and is still being answered in the manifest tokens of blessing which I have witnessed during my short stay here.

Simultaneously with our special mission, Canon McCormick has had another enterprise in hand for diffusing Gospel light in the surrounding district, which, too, has been wondrously blessed. Two young colporteurs, day after day, for five weeks, have made excursions into the islands and glens and mountain hamlets, some days travelling as many as thirty miles to sell God's word. Some 600 Testaments, Bible portions, and Gospel books have in this way been sold to Roman Catholics in homes where the Bible had never been seen or read before.

Not the least interesting fact in connection with this special effort is that in the extremely wild district around Moyrus, which a well-known Christian worker has likened to the "Country of the Gadarenes," and where, as will be remembered, the few resident converts have been, and are, exposed to bitter persecution, one of the colporteurs in two visits sold 113 Testaments and "portions" of God's word. Who shall say what a rich harvest this may mean?

The little church in Roundstone has been recently restored and enlarged, and is now most comfortable. William Pennefather was the first to preach within its walls, and the same old Gospel is still faithfully proclaimed Sunday after Sunday. It indeed serves as a bright beacon amidst the dark mass of ignorance and superstition around. I regret, however, that it has still on it a debt of about £150. We trust that English friends will not allow this incubus to remain.

THE COMPASS PLANT IN TEXAS, growing from three to six feet high, has leaves that point north and south, so that the traveller can tell his direction even at night. This fact was denied. But a careful observer found the young leaves standing edgewise to the earth always point north and south; but the older leaves, loaded with dust and dew, lose this power and point in all directions. Every Christian should be a compass plant pointing to Jesus Christ. Only those Christians loaded down with sins and cares, and worldliness, fail to do so.

REV. ANDREW THOMSON, D.D.,

SENIOR MINISTER

U.P. CHURCH, BROUGHTON-PLACE, EDINBURGH.

The United Presbyterian Church of Scotland traces its origin to two secessions from the Established Church, which took place near the middle of last century. These two bodies, known as the Secession and the Relief Churches, united with each other in 1847. The United Presbyterian Church, thus formed, is a powerful factor in the religious life of Scotland, and maintains seven large and prosperous foreign missions. We present our readers to-day with a sketch of Dr. Andrew Thomson, a distinguished minister in Edinburgh, who holds a foremost position in that Church, and exercises a widespread influence beyond it. He has been abundant in labours and usefulness, and even now, when venerable by his years, he is still vigorous and active in duty.

Dr. Thomson was born at Sanquhar, in Dumfriesshire, graduated in the University of Glasgow, and studied theology in the Hall of the Secession Church. Immediately on the completion of his preparatory course, his attractive power as a preacher secured him a call to Edinburgh, and he was ordained in midsummer, 1837, over a large and important congregation in Lothian-road. In this charge he proved his worth so well, that after five years' service he was transferred to Broughton-place, Edinburgh, one of the largest and most important congregations in the United Presbyterian Church. He was inducted there as colleague and successor of Dr. John Brown, the learned and famous New Testament Exegete. On the death of Dr. Brown in 1858, Dr. Thomson became sole pastor. He continued to discharge alone and unaided the duties of the pastorate till the spring of 1885, when Dr. John Smith was associated with him as colleague. This fortunate and happy association has relieved Dr. Thomson of one-half of his congregational work, and of more than half his responsibility. He still gives himself to pulpit work with a vigour and freshness marvellous for his years. Planted in the house of the Lord, he flourishes in the courts of our God, and brings forth fruit.

In any estimate of his long and active ministry, that which has to be first noted is his fidelity to the claims of his office and his congregation. Broughton-place has been his first care. He has neither thought nor time for any claim that interferes with this. While attentive to every part of his pastoral duty, he has concentrated his chief energy on the pulpit. This was with him a work of love, and the Master had fitted him for it with special adaptation. Dr. Thomson has the natural gifts of an orator. His eloquence, however, is subordinate. It is only the handmaid of the Divine burden with which he is charged. He is a messenger from God announcing truth and salvation to them that hear. From the beginning of his ministry he has been in the best sense of the word a preacher of the Gospel. His ministry has been strongly evangelical. Studiously watchful to present the truth in its manifold variety of aspect, he never drops out of view its soul-saving and sanctifying end.

While making Broughton Place his first care, Dr. Thomson has not done so in narrow and exclusive fashion. He has been a willing servant of the United Presbyterian Church, and has liberally responded to the numerous demands which during his long ministry have been made on him for pulpit service on special occasions. With his views of evangelical truth, and his conviction that the Gospel is the only sufficient remedy for the sins and miseries of the world, he could not fail to have his heart in missions. His interest in this regard is shared by his congregation, of whose missionary spirit and activity he has been the mainspring. Awake to the needs of the home-heathen, his congregation has at much cost and with many labourers maintained a large and successful mission in the Canongate, Edinburgh, and has been rewarded in much blessed fruit.

The Foreign Missions of the United Presbyterian Church have had no warmer or more willing supporters than the minister and members of Broughton Place. With the view of intensifying their interest in the missions, they charge themselves with the support of certain missionaries, whom they naturally regard with pardonable partiality as their own. While giving the first place to the missions of his own church, Dr. Thomson has catholic sympathies with all missionary work. The Free Church of France, the Waldensian Church, and Continental Missionary Societies have found in him a most sympathetic friend and effective advocate.

One would scarcely think of Dr. Thomson as an ecclesiastic, taking that word in its ordinary acceptation. But in the ecclesiastical affairs of the United Presbyterian Church he has been prominent from the first. Few important questions have been brought before Presbytery and Synod in the settlement of which his voice was not heard. He has been largely drawn upon for service on the administrative boards, and especially in the Mission Board, of the Church, and the practical sagacity of his counsels gives him just influence in the deliberations. In the gratifying growth of the Church, since the Union in 1847, he has been conspicuous in every forward movement. There have been three such movements, which are specially noteworthy. One was the Union negotiations with the Free Church, which lasted for ten years, and although they did not issue in union, they resulted in an eirenicon which has a permanent value for all the Presbyterian churches in our country. The second movement was for the reorganisation of the Theological Hall. This occupied a large committee for several years. The committee had to deal with the innumerable questions both of principle and detail which were involved in a change of system, and the institution of a new college. The third movement (one that has been since followed by other Presbyterian churches) was the revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith, with the view of securing liberty of opinion on some statements in it, which do not touch the substance of the faith. In all these movements Dr. Thomson was one of the trusted men of his church, and as convener of the committee which reorganised the Hall, it fell to him to present the scheme and have it inaugurated.

Dr. Thomson is not a public man in the sense of taking part in political or debatable secular matters; but in matters of general interest touching benevolence, or morals, or religion, his place has always been in the front rank. He readily consents to plead every cause that is dear to the hearts of the benevolent and religious community. He has always been equally willing to render the less conspicuous, but really harder and more valuable, service of acting on the directorate of important institutions, and he has given many years of ungrudging service to the Indigent Gentlewomen's Fund, the Royal Infirmary, the Heriot Trust, and several others besides.

This brief record of his work is not yet complete. Dr. Thomson has been busy with his pen. Besides numerous biographical sketches and other short productions he has given through the Press, there are three books which have gained for him deserved credit. One is "A Historical Sketch of the United Secession Church," the Church in which he was reared, and to the principles of which he has been true and loyal. The second is a charming account of Palestine, which was visited by Dr. Thomson some years ago. Travellers visiting Palestine will find it a most serviceable guide. The third is the "Life of Principal Harper," with whom Dr. Thomson had been closely associated in work and in friendship during a long term of years.

Dr. Thomson also wrote a book entitled "Great Missionaries," published by Messrs. Nelson, which had a large circulation in its day. His latest book, "Samuel Rutherford," was published some years ago by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, in a series of biographies entitled "Men Worth Remembering." It reached four editions, and Mr. Spurgeon once expressed a wish in his magazine that it might reach forty-four editions. Another notable literary production of Dr. Thomson's was a paper on the Sabbath, read at a great meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in Geneva in 1861. It obtained a circulation of nearly half a million, having been published in French, German, Dutch, and Italian.

A minister of Christ, who is so richly endowed with talents, which he has used faithfully and liberally in unwearied and varied service for nigh sixty years, and who during all these years has been a pattern of high-toned living and Christian deportment, has naturally risen to a high place in universal esteem. This has been markedly shown on two occasions. When George Heriot's trust, a wealthy educational and charitable endowment, was put some years ago on its present footing, it fell to the trustees to elect as one of the governing body a clergyman to represent the non-Established clergymen in the city of Edinburgh. The choice rested unanimously on Dr. Thomson.

The esteem with which he is regarded was proved in a more marked fashion on the occasion of his jubilee on March 29, 1887. Besides a service of public worship in Broughton-place Church in the early part of the day, a public meeting was held in the evening in the Synod Hall, the most commodious building in Edinburgh. Over 3000 people were present. His congregation was there en masse. The United Presbyterian Church, the sister Evangelical Churches in Scotland, the City of Edinburgh, distant mission fields, Continental Churches, and numerous societies were there in the persons of leading representatives. No one who was present in that large gathering can forget the scene. Nothing but good service lovingly rendered through a lifetime could have elicited from so many quarters the genuine expressions of regard which were then given to Dr. Thomson. He is still hale, and has not yet taken a place among those who "only stand and wait." May the Master continue him for a little while longer in the active service to which his life has been given!

DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

Gatherings for this purpose were held at the Ealing Municipal Buildings from October 16 to 19. Among the speakers were Captain Tottenham, Rev. F. C. Spurr, Rev. H. Graham Thwaites, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Rev. M. Rainsford, Rev. E. W. Moore, and Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston. Friday was devoted to hearing accounts of missionary enterprise in various parts of the world.

Meetings for the Deepening of Spiritual Life have been again held in Paris, as during the three previous years. We had Revs. E. W. and C. G. Moore with us, and the three days were times of much profit and blessing. Pastor Theo. Monod, Dr. Thurber, Revs. H. Bramley Hart, S. H. Anderson, and others took part. We greatly desire to widen the basis of these meetings, and make them useful to a larger number of Christians in and around Paris, and we trust that next year the way will be opened for this. Many are praying for it.

W. Soltau.

A meeting was held in Rotterdam Oct. 23, 24, and 25. Eight pastors of Free Evangelical Churches accepted the invitation. The morning and afternoon meetings were especially for believers. Notwithstanding this, in these meetings sinners came to the Saviour. The evening meetings were held in one of the greatest halls here in Rotterdam. About 2500 people were present and listened to the Gospel message. The result of these meetings was the strengthening and quickening of God's children, and the enlarging of Christ's Kingdom.

AGGRESSIVE WORK.

Fancy 44,000 spectators at a League football match! What a wonderful game it has become in our land! I was returning from this match lately, when twelve of us managed to cram into a railway carriage. Here was a fair opportunity for speaking a word in season, and without delay I availed myself of it. Some looked through the windows, and appeared rather uncomfortable, and others glanced at one another, but gradually all became interested, and for about twenty minutes the conversation continued without a discordant note.

Amongst other remarks, I asked if they could guess what it was which none of us brought into the world, but which all of us were obliged to take out of the world? This rather perplexed them, and none of their conjectures were correct; but when I told them it was "our character," they exclaimed, "That's good!" As I dwelt upon this phase of the truth, their attention was thoroughly held until we approached our journey's end.

I was not aware that any of my hearers knew me, but one of them said he knew two young men who had become converted by my speaking a word to them in a road not far away. I questioned him about the circumstance, but there was no doubt upon his mind about it. How gloriously encouraging, and how gracious of the Lord to use us in this way!

Some months ago I stood outside the door of an evangelistic service, asking individuals, as they retired, whether they were saved. A gentlemanly-looking man replied, "Yes: I found the Saviour at one of your Hengler's Circus meetings a few years ago."

A friend I lately met told me he was pleased to say that a gentleman whom he knew well informed him I had spoken to him in a railway carriage about spiritual matters, and the conversation resulted in his salvation. And so it is, by accident apparently, that we hear at times of the fruits of our labours, but how kind of the Lord to allow us to know of such cases to prove that his Word shall not return void.

In June last I met a man I had known many years, who was now retired from business. I asked him how he managed to spend his time after so active a business life? He replied he had always something in hand. That he had been on the magistrates' bench during the day, and one way or another time passed away. "Well," I said, "have you got your soul saved yet?" The effect was most convulsive, for his face flushed and looked very angry. He then shuffled and danced about like a hot pea, and shouted out, "You asked me that question thirty years ago on board a steamboat. It's a ridiculous question to ask anybody. Don't you think every man has his own religious views?" and much else of similar import.

Dear me! I thought, how this question must have struck home for him to remember it readily so long ago. I remembered nothing about it. It could not possibly have been over twenty-six years ago. But imagine the harpoon sticking in him for twenty-six years! Poor man! what a time he must have had! However, a quiet answer turns away wrath, and we were as good friends as ever before we came to separate.

A well-dressed man touched me on the shoulder, as I was entering a shop, and said, "Do you remember asking me awhile ago whether my soul was saved?" I replied, "No; I don't remember it. Yet it is quite possible I may have done so." "Yes," he said, "you did; and it was a great piece of impertinence." He then hurried off very quickly, without giving me an opportunity of replying. Now, some people might fancy that harm had been done here; but my opinion, based upon nearly thirty years' experience in the work, is quite the reverse. Man, in his natural condition, is asleep in his sins, and he protests against anything which tends to awaken him; yet his happiness or misery eternally depends upon his being awakened or not. Our course, as believers, is clear. We must obey the command, "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Not fearing harm, but believing "the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation," and then with confidence leaving the results with the Lord. "Yes," someone replies; "but you must do the work in a wise and right manner." Quite so; but don't you think, after all these years' practice, one may have discovered how to do it wisely and aright?

GLIMPSES OF LESSER TIBET.

In Mrs. Isabella Bishop's book Among the Tibetans (Religious Tract Society) there are many graphic descriptions of natural scenery, of travel-adventure, and of native manners and customs. In the Nubra region, we are told, only the eldest son is allowed marriage, with the result that polyandry is rigidly inculcated and upheld. The resolute determination not to abandon this ancient custom is the most formidable obstacle in the way of the reception of Christianity by the Tibetans. Curiously enough, the women cling to it. They say, "If I had only one husband and he died, I should be a widow; if I have two or three I am never a widow."

The reader of Mrs. Bishop's book will be interested in the glimpses she gives of Christian missions and missionaries; these are in connection with the Moravian Church. Here is a brief sketch of

A TIBETAN POSTMASTER.

"Joldan, the Tibetan British postmaster at Leh, is a Christian of spotless reputation. Everyone places unlimited confidence in his integrity and truthfulness; and his religious sincerity has been attested by many sacrifices. He is a Ladaki, and the family property was at Stok, a few miles from Leh. He was baptized in Lahul, at twenty-three, his father having been a Christian. He learned Urdu and was for ten years mission schoolmaster in Kylang, but returned to Leh a few years ago as postmaster. His ancestral dwelling at Stok was destroyed by order of the Wazir, and his property confiscated after many unsuccessful efforts had been made to win him back to Buddhism. Afterwards he was detained by the wazir, and compelled to serve as a sepoy, till Mr. Heyde [a Moravian missionary] went to the Council and obtained his release.

"His house in Leh has been more than once burned by incendiaries. But he pursues a quiet even course; brings up his family after the best Christian traditions; refuses Buddhist suitors for his daughters; unobtrusively, but capably, helps the Moravian missionaries; supports his family by steady industry, although of noble birth, and asks nothing of anyone. His 'Good morning' and 'Good night,' as he daily passed my tent with clockwork regularity, were full of cheery friendliness; he gave much useful information about Tibetan customs, and his ready helpfulness greatly facilitated the difficult arrangements for my further journey."

MISSION WORK AT KYLANG.

Speaking of the work of the Moravian Mission in this village, Mrs. Bishop says:—

"It is in winter, when the Christians have come down from the mountain, that most of the mission work is done. Mrs. Heyde has a school of forty girls, mostly Buddhists. The teaching is simple and practical, and includes the knitting of socks, of which some four to five hundred pairs are turned out each winter, and find a ready sale. The converts meet for instruction and discussion twice daily, and there is daily worship. The mission press is kept actively employed in printing the parts of the Bible which have been translated during the summer, as well as simple tracts written or translated by Mr. Heyde. No converts are better instructed; like those of Leh, they seem of good quality, and are industrious and self-supporting. Winter work is severe, as ponies, cattle, and sheep must always be hand-fed, and often hand-watered.

"Mr. Heyde has great repute as a doctor, and in summer people travel long distances for his advice and medicine. He is universally respected, and his judgment in worldly affairs is highly thought of; but if one were to judge merely by apparent results, the devoted labour of nearly forty years and complete self-sacrifice for the good of Kylang must be pronounced unsuccessful. Christianity has been most strongly opposed by men of influence, and converts have been exposed to persecution and loss. All honour to those noble German missionaries, learned, genial, cultured, radiant, who, whether teaching, preaching, farming, gardening, printing, or doctoring, are always and everywhere 'living epistles of Christ, known and read of all men.'"

THE GEMEREK PASTOR.

The following letter has been received by Rev. W. A. Essery, hon. sec. Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

My dear Sir,—I have been intending for some time past to write you a letter in regard to the imprisoned preacher, Marderos Kalosdyan, and his family, in order to let those who have helped them know of their condition and further needs. In order to care for them better, and that the children might have the advantages of good schools, the family has come to Talas, where we live, a suburb of the city of Cesarea, about five miles distant. The family consists of Nazli Hanum, the mother, and five children, two boys and three girls. The oldest is a boy about twelve. Even the youngest will be able to go to the kindergarten. Nazli Hanum herself will thus be able to spend a good deal of time as a Bible-reader, for which she is thoroughly fitted, being one of our most earnest Christian women. The trials through which she has passed will enable her to come very close to the hearts of others.

While we have to ask Christian friends to help support these unfortunate ones, we have urged the friends here also to do what they can for them, and from the village of Gemerek, where the preacher lived and worked, they promise to send such things as they raise in the village. The expenses which will have to be met here are for house rent, clothing, fuel, schooling, and the ordinary daily living expenses. Just now supplies must be laid in for the year, because in this land things have to be bought in the season when they are found.

We have brave and encouraging letters from Marderos Effendi himself. The cultivated refined prisoner must be in the vile quarters of the common prison in closest contact with the lowest and filthiest characters, or else hire a separate room in the prison. The prison fare supplied is not sufficient to keep an ordinary man in health and strength. When I visited this brother in prison in Angora at the time of the trial, I heard suddenly a great noise of shouting and quarelling from another part of the prison. On asking what it meant he told me that it was the time of giving out the daily rations of bread, and the prisoners were selling, at about half price, part of their coarse bread to the poor of the city, in order to get something to eat with the remaining portion. Having no means of earning money, he is yet compelled to incur expense in order to live in decency. The money for this can only be supplied by friends.

It is lawful for prisoners confined in these fortresses to be let out on parole within the city, but to secure the execution of this law requires a bribe of nine or ten pounds to the governor of the castle. Consequently this liberty has not been accorded to our brother.

He writes us of a Bible-class of sixty-five members, which he is conducting among his fellow-prisoners. Many of the political prisoners, he says, are educated men, but know nothing of the Bible, and he has found a most interesting work in which to engage. Some Armenian priests were also there, and these were urged to hold religious services by their fellow-religionists on the ground that it was a pity if they could not show as much zeal as this Protestant. But the noise and confusion of the Armenian service proved so distasteful to the prison authorities that it was forbidden, while the quiet Bible-class suffers no hindrance.

I hope that fellow-Christians in England will continue to help this family as they have already done. We shall have to make our appeal several times more, I suppose, since the sentence does not expire until January, 1899. William S. Dodd, M.D.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.

The twenty-third yearly statement by Mrs. Hilton, reporting on the work of the Stepney Crêche, is a very interesting booklet, both from the pathos of its facts, and from the glimpses it affords as to the environment and the daily life of the London poor. In her long and intimate experience of helpful and sympathetic work among East End mothers and children, Mrs. Hilton has become cognisant of facts which, by skilful weaving, would constitute one of the strangest social romances ever penned. There are many circumstances coming daily and weekly under her ken that she could never embody in her annual reports. The degradation and ruin wrought by the drink, and the terrible inheritance that too often falls on the innocent children, are constantly passing before her like a black panorama; all this, added to the anxiety and strain of actual effort to alleviate want, sorrow, and suffering, makes the mental and physical burden overwhelming and almost unbearable. We trust all readers of this report will have that fact in mind, when reckoning up their estimate of the work and its claims on their sympathy.

The work of the Crêche and Home has been sustained during the past year with unabated efficiency, notwithstanding much physical weakness on the part of Mrs. Hilton. The claimants on the good offices of the Institution have been as numerous and as needy as ever, and the responses have only been bounded by the too small resources of the Crêche exchequer. It is not pleasant to read in the report that the invaluable country home at Feltham could not be fully utilised because of the scarcity of funds. Many new Crêches also are starting up in different parts of town and country, each drawing around it a circle of sympathisers, and this tends doubtless to make friends lose sight of the parent institution, which has been at once an inspiration and a model in the founding and framing of similar bright spots in the darkest corners of Darkest England.

One or two of the "cases" mentioned in the report will suffice to indicate the blessed ministry of help, in seasons of crisis, that goes on in connection with the Crêche and Home:—

"A mother came to ask admission for her two little girls, Mabel and Dorothy, aged five and six years. Her husband had been in prison eight months, and would be released in another month. The poor woman had suffered terribly in her endeavour to keep the home together, but she said, 'It would indeed be dreadful if he had no home to come to when he came out.' It was pathetic to witness her anxiety to give hope to the poor father, and, as it were, concealing the rents in the household by various loving devices. In asking me to take the little girls she said, 'You see, if he was to see so many of us at once, he would lose heart.' She had a baby four months old in her arms. Seeing me look at the child, she said, 'I hope you do not think he is not a good father and fond of his children.' I did not question this, as I was so grieved at the case of the poor woman and the little girls. They were in a terrible state of distress, but thoroughly respectable. I consented to take Dorothy and Mabel, trusting that there might still be some brightness in the days to come.

"Another case was that of a mother who had been ordered to hospital to undergo a serious operation, but at first could not be persuaded to leave her little boys, Willie and Herbert, who had never been away from her a day in their lives. At last she consented to leave them with us; our nurse kindly attending to all her directions about them, which soothed her very much. They were with us four months, by which time the mother, with restored health, was able to take charge af them.

"The last case in this list is the saddest of all. It was that of a babe of some three days old, who was placed in the outer passage of the Crêche one cold winter night. There is something very sad in the circumstance of so young a babe being so thoroughly outcast and alone. Our infirmary nurse gladly took charge of it, and tended it with loving care for six weeks, when the frail little life ended."

Per contra, it is particularly pleasing to read the following:

"Many of our girls whom we have trained for service at Feltham are filling good and useful positions, and we are often cheered by receiving loving gifts and grateful acknowledgments for the care taken of them. One of our girls said: 'Dear Mrs. Hilton, how little we knew of all you were doing for us, and I am afraid that many of us were very ungrateful, but we all know it now and love you, if we don't say so.' Six of these girls are servants in the Crêche. One, who is too delicate for service, is needlewoman at the Feltham Home, and another is second servant there."

Copies of this booklet can be had from the publishers of this paper, or from Mrs. Hilton herself, whose address is Shore House, Shore-road, South Hackney, London, N.E.

THE OPIUM TRADE.

The annual meetings of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade were held on Wednesday week at Manchester, having been deferred from the spring on account of the absence of the hon. secretary, Mr. J. G. Alexander, in the East. The meetings, though not largely attended, were representative, there being delegates present from London, Bristol, Birmingham, Hull, Leeds, Liverpool, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Halifax, and other places.

The prayer-meeting, from 11 to 1, was felt by many to have been the best part of the day. During the first hour the subject was China, and Rev. Frederick Brown, missionary from North China, presided. He told of the earnest prayers and efforts of the Chinese Christians for the overthrow of the traffic. During the second hour the subject for special prayer was the opium traffic as affecting India, Burmah, the Straits Settlements, Hong Kong, and the Dutch East Indies. Rev. W. B. Phillips, who has been for fifteen years labouring in the London Mission at Berhampore, Lower Bengal, and subsequently for three years at Calcutta, said that in 1878, two years after his arrival, he wrote home of the evil caused by opium in his field of labour. Whilst he did not think it could be truly said that opium is in India a serious hindrance to missionary effort, as it is in China, and whilst the evil wrought by the habit lies beneath the surface, it is nevertheless doing very real and serious injury amongst the people of Bengal.

Mr. Alexander afterwards briefly commented on the opium question as it affects the other British dependencies in the East. In Burmah there is cause for great thankfulness in the recent adoption of a stringent prohibitory measure as regards the Burmans and Karens, though this measure does not apply to the immigrants from China and India, or to the hill tribes of Shans and Kachins. In Ceylon there is a very active agitation against the traffic, in which the leaders of all the various races, Dutch burghers, Cinghalese, and Tamils, have heartily joined; and a measure of prohibition would probably have been granted ere this were it not for the fear of embarrassing the Indian Government in the defence of its opium revenue. Much earnest prayer was offered that all these eastern lands may have speedy deliverance from the curse of opium, and that our own country may be delivered from the stain of participation in the traffic.

The afternoon meeting of delegates and friends of the cause was presided over by Sir Joseph Pease, M.P., and addressed by three members of Parliament, who had taken part the previous day in the meetings of the United Kingdom Alliance for the suppression of the liquor traffic, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mr. W. S. Caine, and Mr. Thomas Snape. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, who divided the House of Commons on the question in 1870, said, in his own humorous fashion, that he was supposed to be a man of one idea, but that he really had two—one, that the liquor traffic is a very bad thing, and the other, that the opium traffic is almost as bad. Surely it was no reason that because we were fools enough to kill ourselves with drink, we should be knaves enough to kill the Indians and Chinese with opium.

A resolution was adopted, calling "upon Her Majesty's Government to give immediate effect to the declarations made by the responsible Ministers in the House of Commons debates of 1891 and 1893 that they no longer desire to force the opium traffic upon China, by instructing Her Majesty's Minister in Peking officially to communicate to the Chinese Government the wish of this country to withdraw the article 'Opium' from the Customs tariff annexed to the treaty of Tientsin, and to co-operate with the Chinese Government in measures for the effectual stoppage of the traffic." Subsequent resolutions thanked the 105 members of Parliament who voted against the appointment of the Opium Commission last year; thanked the witnesses who, notwithstanding strong official pressure, came forward in India to testify before the Royal Commission to what they had seen and known of the injurious effects of opium; called attention to information just received from India that the price to be paid to cultivators for opium has been raised 20 per cent., as at once discrediting the official evidence put before the Commission to prove the profitableness of the poppy crop, and contravening the resolution adopted by Parliament last year, which pressed the Indian Government further to diminish the cultivation of the poppy; expressed sympathy with Mr. Dyer and the three Bombay missionaries in their recent imprisonment, and the conviction of the meeting that there was solid ground for their complaint as to the toleration afforded by officials to the opium dens of Bombay; and expressed satisfaction that the possession of opium by Burmans, and its sale to them, except for medicinal purposes, has now been rendered unlawful.

At the evening meeting, Sir Joseph Pease again presided, and explained the position of the question in Parliament. Mr. Alexander narrated some of his experiences in acccompanying the Opium Commission through India. As regards opium smoking, the evidence given in India was practically unanimous: officials, army doctors, native gentlemen, and missionaries alike condemned the practice, with scarcely any exception, and, unless the Commission reports against the whole weight of evidence, it must recommend further measures for stamping out this form of the habit. As regards the more prevalent habit of opium-eating, the evidence was very much divided. Mr. Alexander also recounted his interviews with Chinese statesmen, of which a narrative has already appeared in our columns.

CIVIC REFORM.

On Sunday last from more than two hundred London pulpits sermons were delivered setting forth the need of a deeper sense of civic responsibility on the part of the best people in our great community. These utterances were in view of coming elections for the School Board, and for boards of guardians and vestries.

In the Queen's Hall conferences on these subjects were convened, afternoon and evening, by Mr. W. T. Stead. He gave a lengthy address at each meeting, dwelling on the importance of the forthcoming elections, and describing the various ways in which he considered Christian men and women ought to respond to the calls made upon them. The evening meeting was devoted specially to the duty now resting on good women to seek election on boards of guardians in order that they might help to humanise and Christianise the methods of dealing with the pauper population, particularly the children, the aged, and those unhappy erring sisters who have recourse to the workhouse in view of motherhood.

Various other friends gave addresses bearing on the subject, and in the evening an open conference elicited many contradictory views. It was resolved to found a National Social Union, which should unite "all who love, in the service of all who suffer," and foster combined action in the directions indicated. Those desiring further details should apply to Mr. Stead, Mowbray House, London, W.C.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—The voluntary workers of this society assembled in goodly numbers at Exeter Hall last week, to ask God's blessing on the work of another winter. Mr. J. J. Drysdale presided, and an address was given by Dr. Lawson Forster, of Hare Court Chapel. London has been carefully mapped out by the committee for immediate work, and successful gatherings have already been held at Paddington, Westminster, Bow, and Chelsea.

BOOKLETS FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.—Among booklets and tracts recommended by correspondents in response to recent inquiries are:—"How we are Saved," by C. H. Spurgeon (1s. per 100, C. Glass & Co., 33, E. Howard-street, Glasgow); "Safe through the Blood," by C. H. Spurgeon (British Gospel Book Association, Liverpool); "Living by the Moment," (2s. per 100, Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling); "The Salvation of God," by Captain Dawson (2d., J. F. Shaw & Co.); "A Saviour for You," "Heaven, and How to Get There," "Faith—What it is, what it Does," "The Precious Name," "Thy Day" (1d. each), all by the late S. M. Haughton. They may be obtained through Messrs. Partridge, Paternoster-row, or from the depôt, 5, Hazelwood-road, Northampton.

OUR SOLDIERS IN IRELAND.

I think it will interest readers of The Christian to know that we are having very much encouragement in our work amongst the men in the seven Soldiers' Homes in Ireland of which I have charge. Never have our coffee-rooms been more successful, or meetings in the majority of the Homes better attended; never have we seen more spiritual result in the work than just now, thank God! And, like all work which God is blessing, it is growing. A nice, compact, new building at Ballincollig, co. Cork, is taking the place of the crowded-out little labourer's cottage which hitherto has had to serve as Soldiers' Home for the cavalry regiment stationed there.

In Queenstown we have moved this month into a large house, which the owner recently in great part rebuilt, intending it for an hotel; it was a flourishing public-house, and is in the best possible position for catching the soldiers and sailors as they come ashore. With great joy we saw the barrels of beer, etc., turned out, and "Soldiers' Home and Sailors' Rest" taking the place of the former title of the house, "The Retreat Bar."

I do thank God that we need never turn a soldier or sailor away from the doors of our Home in Queenstown, for I can never forget the nights in the tiny old Home, when I have stood at my bedroom window watching soldiers and sailors, to whom I had been obliged to refuse shelter, walking up and down the streets, while the pitiless rain fell heavily; but worse than cold and rain were the awful temptations to which I could see they were exposed on those streets, and oh! how my heart has ached many mornings when mere lads have come to me and said half reproachfully, "I wish you could have taken me in last night, Miss, it would have saved me from so much." And I knew what that "so much" meant.

For this enlarged Home at Queenstown I still need £1000, and to complete the new building at Ballincollig at this present moment I am in pressing need of £600. I also require an income of £2000 annually to maintain the seven Homes, which is a serious responsibility in a poor country like Ireland, and some of our Homes, such as Ballincollig, are in very poor localities indeed. In asking the help of friends across the Channel I can plead that the large majority of soldiers quartered in Ireland are English and Scotchmen, and I can assure friends that anything they give will go directly to the benefit of these men, for the twenty-five ladies who assist me give their services gratuitously—they give their lives, their all, to the work.

Next month one of my most valued workers, accompanied by another lady, sails (God willing) for India, to commence work amongst the soldiers at Rawal Pindi. One who has served God in the army there for several years, writes: "I am satisfied myself that a Soldiers' Home here and in every large cantonment would be a great help to our soldiers cantoned in this far-off land, surrounded by the strength of Satan's kingdom. Do not suppose that anyone can serve year after year in the midst of 284,000,000 of Hindus and Mohammedans without the inroads to the mind of doubt and unbelief, or in the evil surroundings of tropical life without the tendency to degenerate; and when I let my mind dwell on these things I long for Miss Sandes to hasten the despatch of qualified lady workers to open a branch Home at Rawal Pindi, believing that with its commencement God will give her courage and opportunity to extend these Homes. I think Rawal Pindi is the best to begin at, as it is the Aldershot of India, a centre of military influence and activity."

I would be grateful if some kind friend would give a harmonium or American organ to my co-worker to take with her to India. May I also ask the prayers of each reader for these two ladies going to India, and for the rapidly extending work amongst soldiers in Ireland with its increasing needs. (Miss) Elise Sandes.

A SPECIAL CONFERENCE was held in the Mission Hall, Pear-street, Westminster, on Thursday week, when Mr. J. H. Esterbrooke gave an account of the origin and progress of the London Band of Hope movement, instituted by him at Westminster in 1847. Some of these who signed the pledge at the first meeting were present.

TIBETAN PIONEER MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to inform your readers that a distinct advance has now been made by Miss Annie Taylor and her party. After sojourning six months in Darjeeling, working at the Tibetan language and otherwise undergoing training for their future work, they have, so to speak, struck camp, and gone forward some four or five days' journey to Gnatong, in the border state of Sikkim, and situated just on the border of Tibet. Travelling and residence in Sikkim having recently been brought under special Government regulations; they had to obtain passports from the Bengal Government before they were able to make the advance. Most of the party left Darjeeling on September 28, Miss Taylor, with two others, remaining behind a day or two to superintend the despatching of their boxes, 118 in number. Of these, about half were to be taken as far as Kalimpong and left there for future use, all the rest going on to Gnatong, where Miss Taylor was in hopes of securing huts for the party to live in.

Gnatong is 12,000 feet above sea level and very cold, and should the party have to live on inferior food they are likely to find their new experience very trying physically. The life itself, amongst the encampments or villages of the border tribes, will be very similar to living in Tibet itself, and this experience, which they are gaining so much sooner than was expected, will doubtless prove far more valuable than if they had remained on in the comparative luxury of residence in Darjeeling. They are taking with them seven of their Tibetan teachers and servants, as well, of course, as Pontso.

This move forward has been a very great undertaking, and we beg from all those interested in this a very definite and prayerful interest. Nothing less than the power of God behind the movement can be expected to sustain an enterprise of this character. As in the early history and initial stages of other missions difficulties have occurred, within as well as without, so has it been with this, with this result, that two of the brethren, under the advice and counsel of missionary and ministerial friends of experience in Darjeeling, are not going forward with the rest. This fact must not be taken as reflecting in any way upon the two brethren in question, who may yet nevertheless do excellent work in the foreign field in other associations. There has in no case been any shrinking from the trials and hardships that it is known must be faced.

Mr. Rylands Brown, the pastor of the Union Church in Darjeeling, and who has taken great interest in the Mission, writes that he sometimes fears the great strain on Miss Taylor will prove too much for her, and expresses the hope that the co-workers at home may be blessed in "holding the ropes." Will the friends of the work remember to do this?

Before leaving Darjeeling the party was photographed in their Tibetan costumes. Copies of this photograph (8½in. by 6in.), to a limited number, may be had from the Hon. Sec., at the address below, at 1s. 8d. each, including postage.

A balance-sheet for the first year of the Mission's existence, made up to August 28 last, together with list of donations, has been sent to all known donors. Any donor not having had a copy can have it on application. To those friends who are desirous of knowing about the funds we can thankfully say that as far as we are aware (for Miss Taylor does not mention the subject) every need has been supplied. The receipts for the two months since the balance-sheet was published amount to £57.

William Sharp, Hon. Sec. and Treasurer.

INTERESTING JEWISH BAPTISM.—Very recently a Jewish merchant, temporarily residing at a West End Hotel, expressed to Christian friends his desire to become a Christian. He was directed to Mr. D. Oppenheim, of the London City Mission, who satisfied himself as to his convictions and motives, and introduced him to Rev. J. B. Barraclough, vicar of St. Thomas', Lambeth, who, after careful examination and prayer, had the privilege, on October 23, of admitting him into the Christian Church by baptism. It may be mentioned, as an exceptional experience in Jewish mission work, that instead of needing temporal relief the convert presented, as a thankoffering to God, £5 to Mr. Barraclough for the poor of his parish, and £5 to Mr. Oppenheim for needy Jews in East London.

WINTER MISSIONS TO INDIA.

Dear Sir,—I write to emphasise the plea made in your columns by Rev. E. N. Thwaites, of Salisbury, for winter missioners for the mission field. From a happy personal experience, I can testify to the incalculable good that such missioners can do, if the right men are chosen.

In 1888 I was permitted, as the superintending missionary of the C.M.S. in Lucknow, to welcome to that city Rev. Filmer Sulivan and Mr. Edward Clifford as the winter missioners sent out by the C.M.S. during that year. And what a quickening their coming brought among us! It was as though a flood of new soul life was sent direct from heaven by the Holy Spirit's power—not only into our own C.M.S. native Christian community, but also into all the Christian churches in Lucknow.

For weeks beforehand all denominations had been preparing by special united prayer-meetings for this winter mission; and when at last the brethren came, the blessings of the revival ran over our own borders, and found its way amongst the surrounding masses of Hindus and Mohammedans. Our rural catechists, who were manning the outposts of distant heathen villages, went back to their solitary posts full of new courage and power. Our city outdoor preachers resumed their daily pleading in the bazaars more in earnest than ever.

Our Christian day-school teachers, who had 500 non-Christian boys under their charge, gave themselves afresh to their work with a stronger conviction that the Gospel is the power of good for salvation. Our Zenana missionary sisters, together with their Biblewomen, seemed to run on their errands for the Master with lighter feet. Our Church workers, from the native pastor downwards, went forward as men and women who had seen the glory of God. In these, and in many other ways, the effects of the Revival were visibly seen.

With such an experience of what winter missioners in the foreign field can do, as special instruments of God, and after hearing Mr. Thwaites's story of how the Lord has used him during his recent visit to India, I feel moved publicly to urge the importance of the plan which he proposes. In shaping the scheme, it is to be hoped that four points will be kept steadily in view:—

(1) Aim at making the scheme a permanent and independent one. (2) Insist on the missioners returning to England after one year's work, so as to keep up their freshness, and to make them invaluable as deputation speakers. One hot season might be spent on the hills, where (in India at least) the missioner's work is as much needed as down in the plains. (3) Employ home clergy and laymen as much as possible. This will prevent the drawbacks of professionalism, and add to the influence of the missioners abroad, and to their testimony when they return home.

I may here say that we often found English lady visitors helpful by the addresses they gave through interpreters to our native Christian women and children. We have many pleasant recollections of work done for us in this way by Lady Aberdeen, Miss McInnes, Miss Beynon, and others.—Yours sincerely, Henry Lewis.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

A meeting of the voluntary workers in the Homes was held on Monday week at 459 and 461, Holloway-road, N., to invoke the Divine blessing upon the work during the coming winter. There was a representative gathering of those who conducted religious services, Bible, temperance, and other classes in the Homes, and an earnest spirit of prayer characterised the meeting.

Mr. J. J. Drysdale, a member of the committee, occupied the chair, and several brethren referred to instances of blessing which had followed the preaching of the Gospel to the inmates. Mr. W. J. Taylor, the secretary, said that ever since the first Home was established in 1857 the primary object had been the eternal welfare of every young woman and girl admitted, and he hoped the time would never come when that standard would be lowered. It was necessary to feed, clothe and house the inmates, and finally place them out in useful positions in life, but all these things were of secondary importance. The Society sustains seven Homes and an Open-all-night Refuge for 240 inmates; and the office is at 200, Euston-road, N.W.

HENRY VARLEY'S MISSIONS.

DUBLIN.

Under the auspices of the City of Dublin Y.M.C.A. Mr. Henry Varley conducted a two weeks' mission to men only in the Metropolitan Hall, Lower Abbey street. Our hearts overflow with gratitude to our Heavenly Father for this visit of his honoured servant. Truly, the weeks of special prayer before the mission were abundantly answered, and many souls are thanking the Lord for the mission. It began with a reception given by one of the vice-presidents, an old friend in Y.M.C.A. work, Mr. Wm. Fry, and each night during the mission the hall was packed with young men eagerly listening to the words of life that fell from the evangelist.

In the afternoons Mr. Varley gave Bible talks, and the hall was crowded out with Christians. He was enabled to deal effectually with the objections to Christianity so often raised in this nineteenth century, and to those young men who are trying to reason out the Gospel for themselves. Night after night the hammer of the Word of God was wielded in the mighty power of the Spirit, convicting men of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment to come.

The name of Henry Varley is closely associated with the great question of social purity, and his lecture on "The Curse of Manhood" was earnestly listened to by over 1500 men. We dare not venture to count up the numbers that received definite blessing during the mission, but the Spirit of God was very manifest in every meeting. "The Lord knoweth them that are his." Every denomination of the city was represented by those who attended the mission, and of those who professed to receive blessing. Weak children of God have been lifted up, backsliders brought home to the Father's house, and many prodigal sons led to the Saviour. A large number of young men gathered on Sunday night at 9 o'clock to a testimony meeting conducted by Mr. W. A. Boyd, general secretary, and an address was delivered at the close by Rev. David Carnegie, of London.

Rev. T. B. Robertson, Rector of Newmarket-on-Fergus, co. Clare, is to conduct a week's mission to men only during the Y.M.C.A. week of prayer. We ask the Christians of England and Scotland to remember Ireland in prayer: that the Y.M.C.A.'s of this land may help in leading our men to the feet of the soon coming King. B. A. W.

GLASGOW.

We are informed that Mr. Varley's recent mission in Glasgow was of remarkable interest. Since then he has been in Dublin, as reported above.

Returning to Glasgow, Mr. Varley began on Sunday a fresh series of services. In the evening the City Hall was packed. It is said that more than four thousand were present, while hundreds could not get in. The power of the Lord was manifest, the Word had free course, and a profound and solemn awe held the great assembly. More than 2000 remained to the after-meeting and many confessed Christ. The Monday afternoon Bible reading was also a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

In a few days Mr. and Mrs. Varley will be leaving England for their Australian home, closing thus an evangelising tour which has lasted three and a-half years. They will be thankful for the continued prayers of fellow-labourers in the Gospel.

B. AND F. BIBLE SOCIETY.—Last week the Oxford Auxiliary of this Society had its annual meeting. Sir W. W. Hunter, who presided, spoke of the wonderful work done in recent times in the spread of the Sacred Scriptures, and the noble part in that work played by this society. Among the other speakers were Rev. G. W. Sawday, Sir Charles Aitchison, Professor Burrows, Dr. Fairbairn, and Canon Christopher. The last-named, who is hon. sec. of the Oxford branch, recounted some deeply-interesting experiences of Bible work abroad.

DARLINGTON.—The third annual convention of the Durham and Northumberland Union of the B.W.T.A. was held in Darlington October 23 and 24. Delegates and representatives from nearly all the branches were present. Encouraging reports were read from the branches, which now number thirty-two, as compared with nineteen a year ago. The Anti-Opium cause was ably presented by Rev. A. W. Prautch, of Bombay. Each afternoon a school of method was held, which was both instructive and amusing. A large public meeting brought a most successful convention to a close.

THE HOWARD ASSOCIATION.

The new report of the Howard Association should be read by all who are interested in the subject of Prison Reform, and the prevention of Pauperism and Crime. The topics discussed are numerous, but we can make reference to only two or three.

We are told that the drift of present discussions on prison matters has been to approve and support the reforms advocated by the Association—these including the further diminution of child imprisonment, and the entire separation of juvenile from adult prisoners; a more liberal treatment and better selection of the warders; an extended provision of prison visitation on the part of suitable public representatives, whether municipal or otherwise; and an increase of facilities for the visitation of women in jail, by judicious ladies. The Association, whilst advocating an extension of the separation of prisoners from evil influences, has, at the same time, specially urged the necessity of such ameliorations of cellular discipline, by means of suitable labour, exercise, instruction, reading and visitation, as shall secure the separation from becoming injurious isolation or solitude.

The report mentions with pleasure the fact that of late H.M. Commissioners have encouraged visits of lady visitors to female prisoners. Not long ago scarcely any such visitors were admitted, but in answer to a question in Parliament, the Home Secretary stated that in twenty-nine, out of the sixty prisons in England and Wales, lady visitors are now allowed access to prisoners of their own sex. It is hoped that this permission will be extended for all the fifty-four prisons containing women. In Scotland, the valuable services of lady visitors are more encouraged than in England. For example, at Glasgow, about twenty ladies are permitted access to the prisoners; and it is acknowledged, by the local authorities, that the results are very hopeful, both to the prisoners and to their officers.

The Association has been prosecuting inquiries as to the mischievous tendency on the part of some magistrates to send insane or doubtfully sane offenders to prison rather than to lunatic asylums. Again and again, in his inquiries, the secretary, Mr. William Tallack, was informed that the separation of the short-term prisoners from each other tends to improve rather than injure their mental health. In countries where there is no cellular separation of prisoners—where, as in France, the vilest abuses take place in jail, even to the officially admitted extent of constant unnatural crimes—there the accusation of producing insanity may have weight. An eminent French authority, Dr. Emile Laurent, who for many years was medical officer of Paris prisons, declares that "of all the schools of vice, the most dangerous is, without contradiction, the (non-cellular) prison. When a man has made two or three sojourns in the prisons of Paris, or the 'maisons centrales,' he has nothing more to hope for. He is a gangrened member that it is necessary to cut off permanently from the social body."

The report contains a well-digested mass of information. Copies may be had from the office of the Association, 5, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C.

A BOON TO POOR MOTHERS.—In order to allow tired mothers, who cannot leave their children at home, to attend public service on Sunday, Rev. Charles Townsend, pastor of the Woodland Avenue Presbyterian Church, of Cleveland, O., has established a sort of nursery in the chapel of the church. Mothers bring their children there and leave them during the service in the hands of trustworthy persons. The privilege is a free one open to all mothers, and many have enjoyed it.

ELLESMERE HALL, ORDSALL, SALFORD.—Though it is only a little over twelve months since we opened this hall, we have had to enlarge it, as it soon became too small to accommodate those who wished to hear the Gospel preached. The Mission is a light in a dark neighbourhood. Many souls have been born again here, and we have had some very remarkable cases of conversion. We are close to the Salford Docks of the Manchester Ship Canal. Not long ago a sailor entered the Hall, with the result that he was converted, and we have reason to believe that he will publish the glad tidings of salvation in foreign lands. Many gamblers have given their hearts to God, and bookmakers have renounced their evil life. Drunkards and profligates have been induced to lead sober and virtuous lives. The sympathy of the Lord's people and supplies of tracts would be welcome.

GROVE ST. INSTITUTE, GLASGOW.

The second annual missionary conference in connection with Grove-street Institute, Glasgow, was held on Saturday and Sabbath last; the workers are deeply grateful to God for the blessing that has attended the meetings. Beginning on Saturday afternoon with the motto, "Our eyes are towards Thee," the Conference ended on Sabbath evening with a large and enthusiastic missionary meeting. Missionaries were present from nearly all parts of the world. Among those who took part in the meetings were Mr. Herbert Hudson Taylor, Rev. Chas. H. Judd, Mr. and Mrs. Graham Brown, Mr. Geo. Miller, and Miss Ramsay, from China; Rev. W. Aitkambi, (himself a native), Hon. Emily Kinnaird, and Mr. Geo. Alexander, from India; Dr. and Mrs. Kerr, from Morocco; Rev. David Baron, missionary to the Jews; Messrs. A. W. Bell, of Nyassaland; Peter Whytock, of Ikau, Congo; Arthur Mercer, of South Africa; D. R. Logan, of Ceylon, and other friends.

Throughout the meetings the presence and power of the Holy Spirit were felt. As the missionaries told of the needs of the different lands, and of the great things God was doing through his servants, many hearts were moved. The result of the conference has been that the missionary spirit at home has been stimulated, and Christians made to realise more their responsibility in regard to the heathen, who are perishing for lack of knowledge of the Gospel. A striking feature of the meetings was the emphasis laid by the missionaries on the importance of prayer in connection with the great work of evangelising the world on the part of Christians at home. ## Letter to the Editor.

MILITARY CANTEENS.

Dear Sir,—A letter headed "Sabbath Desecration in India," which appeared in your issue of October 25, has attracted my attention, as it contained the following curious sentence, which I think is calculated to convey a very false impression:—

"However, it is not more inconsistent than to provide first a canteen, where facilities are given for men to get drunk if they choose, and then pay temperance advocates to try to encourage the men not to drink."

As an officer in the Army, I think I may speak with some authority, and I unhesitatingly affirm that a regimental canteen cannot, and does not, afford facilities for men to get drunk. On the contrary, it helps to keep men in barracks and out of the public-house. Every man is, of course, a free agent, and cannot be forced to drink nothing but water, and surely it is far better that he should be able to obtain a small quantity of unadulterated and wholesome beer inside the barrack walls than that he should go outside, and spend his time and money in a low public-house.

A man can only get beer in moderation in the canteen. A non-commissioned officer is always stationed at the canteen to prevent anything approaching to excess in drinking, and the building is daily inspected by an officer. I enclose my card, and remain yours truly, R. H. .

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Rotherhithe Free Church Gospel Temperance Society was held last week. Mr. F. N. Charrington, L.C.C., took the chair, and in the course of an animated speech said he was glad to see that the National Temperance League was about to start an active campaign for obtaining total abstinence pledges. He thought that was a good undertaking that should be taken up by societies all over the country.

SELF-GOVERNMENT IN AFRICA.—A short time ago Rev. R. M. Ormerod, of Golbanti, East Africa, was afraid that, through fear of the Masai, the neighbourhood would be depopulated, as the people threatened to remove to Witu, on the north side of the Tana river. At present, however, there is a great influx of population through dread of the Somalis on the north. The increase of the population has induced Mr. Ormerod to introduce civil government. Taking a leaf out of the Parish Councils Act, he has established a Council of five persons, to whom is entrusted the care of the people. Their functions are various and important. They have to make and enforce regulations for good government, hear and decide on all criminal charges, attend to the wants of the sick, seeing that they are provided with food and medicine; deal with strangers who want to be admitted to the Christian settlement; and, finally, to examine the stockade every night to see that the four doors are duly fastened, so that the population may rest in peace.

IRISH NOTES.

The governors of the Presbyterian Orphan Society have just added the names of 228 children to their already large roll of orphans.

A new hall, to seat 2500 persons, and which has cost about £10,000, was opened on Thursday evening in connection with the Belfast Methodist Mission. The hall is the largest public building in the city.

A conference of colporteurs in connection with the Irish Missions of the Presbyterian Church was held on Tuesday week in the Assembly's Hall, Belfast. Ten colporteurs made brief statements in reference to their labours, of which they spoke most encouragingly and hopefully.

On Sunday week a united communion service was held in Trinity Presbyterian Church, Cork, at which the local Methodist, Congregational, and Presbyterian churches were largely represented, and at which a suitable address was delivered by Rev. Jas. Robertson, of the Methodist Church.

It is stated that a strong effort is being made to secure the services of Rev. Professor Watts, D.D., LL.D., of the Assembly's College, Belfast, to fill the theological chair in the Columbia College, South Carolina, an institution which is the principal Presbyterian seminary in the Southern States of America.

A meeting to bid farewell to Revs. J. Shillidy, J. Sinclair Stevenson, Mrs. Scott, Miss Stavely, and Miss Wilson, who are going out to India as Presbyterian missionaries, was held on Thursday evening week in Duncairn Presbyterian Church, Belfast, Rev. Dr. Tod Martin presiding, and there was a large attendance.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The West of Scotland Mission to the outdoor blind has upwards of 1300 persons under its care.

The Northern Association of Congregational Churches had a series of conferences at Woodside, Aberdeen, last week. Practical topics were earnestly handled.

A deaconess hospital in connection with the Established Church of Scotland has been opened at Edinburgh. The building, with its complete outfit of medical appliances, has cost £3400.

A very interesting missionary meeting was held last week in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, in connection with the U.P. presbytery. Addresses on women's work were given by Mrs. Chalmers, of New Guinea, Hon. Emily Kinnaird, Mrs. Mitchell, of Pondoland, and others. The claims of missionary effort were forcibly urged and illustrated.

At Douglas Support, near Coatbridge, the family seat of the Rev. Sholto Douglas, a very interesting conference was held on Friday of last week. Fifty-six ministers, besides ladies and laymen, assembled to listen to addresses by Dr. Robert Anderson and Dr. Bullinger on the "Second Coming" of Christ. During the afternoon free discussion was invited. The meeting was felt by all present to be refreshing and stimulating.

A meeting was held in connection with the Railway Mission in the Waterloo Rooms, Glasgow, on Saturday evening. There were about 800 present, the majority of whom were railway men. Councillor King presided, and addresses were given by Provost Colville, Mr. Nixon (general secretary), and others. Six new branches of the Mission have been opened in Scotland during the last year, and the work is progressing very satisfactorily. The general secretary has been addressing large meetings at Dundee, Aberdeen, Montrose, and other branches during the past week. Mr. Ferguson of Kinmundy presided at the meeting in Aberdeen, and spoke warmly in support of the Mission.

A FLOURISHING MEN'S MEETING is held on Sunday afternoons in St. Peter's Church, Langdon-road, Dartmouth Park Hill, N. It is carried on by Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield, who says in the second annual report: "We have an average of some five hundred men, and on special occasions eight and even eleven hundred men assembled together in God's house on the Lord's Day, and even this does not reveal all, owing to the alternate Sunday duty which many have to perform. How many men to-day have to thank God for St. Peter's men's service! From how many women's lips do we hear 'Our Jim is altered,' 'Our home is different!' The changed lives, the brighter homes, the happier wives, the more joyful children, the better observance of God's law and day, these are the greatest and best tokens of progress, and these it has pleased God to give. If I am asked the secret of this, I answer that, as on the day of Pentecost, so here, there has been unity, prayer, and effort." There is in connection with the meetings a sick and thrift club, and the collections have not only covered expenses, but helped many good causes. Mr. Ditchfield's address is 15, Hargrave-road, Junction-road, N.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondent.]

CAMBRIDGE.

On the evening of Sunday week. Rev. H. C. G. Moule delivered his annual sermon to "Freshmen," The preacher took as his text 2 Tim. iv. 17, "Notwithstanding the Lord." About 500 members of the University were present, and many seemed deeply impressed by the earnestness with which the speaker delivered his words of advice.

On the same evening a meeting of the Nonconformists' Union was held, when Mr. Anderson, of Exeter College, Oxford, travelling secretary of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union, addressed the meeting.

A large number of keen Christian Freshmen have come up this year. There are thirty-five graduates at Ridley this term, being two in excess of the accommodation. Two prayer-meetings are held daily in the Henry Martyn Hall, at 12.5 and 1.5. The average daily attendance is forty.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule hopes to continue his Sunday Bible readings later on in the term.

The weekly meeting of the C.M.W., was held in the Henry Martyn Hall, on Friday last. The speaker was the Rev. Walter Moule, nephew of Principal Moule, late of Corpus and Ridley, now at the Missionary College at Ningpo, China. He gave a very interesting address on the work being carried on in the College.

On Sunday last, the University sermon was preached in Great St. Mary's, by the Bishop of Dover. Canon Girdlestone preached at St. Paul's in the morning on the Jewish question.

A meeting of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society was held in the Alexandra Hall on Monday night. The meeting was presided over by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, and was addressed by Mrs. Chowdhoy, a native Indian lady, followed by Miss Cowley, a Zenana missionary, who gave us many interesting facts about the school-work in India. The hall was well filled, and much enthusiasm was displayed during the proceedings.

PATIENCE IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

Writing with reference to a recent note on some of the discouragements which missionaries have to endure in Central Africa, Rev. T. Hamilton Hoste, American Baptist Missionary at Lukunga, says:—

"In the present condition of affairs in Africa to handle successfully another man's work, without at least temporary loss and confusion, appears to me to be the very crown of experience and wisdom, and to fail to do so argues nothing more than a very natural incompetency to do something which one knows nothing about, and cannot fairly be cited as a reflection upon the judgement and wisdom of one's predecessor.

"This leads me to advert to the injurious system of periodical furloughs now in vogue in many African missions. I know that it is commonly supposed to have been proved to be salutary in decreasing the mortality among missionaries in Africa. As I challenged the system in the October number (1891) of the Regions Beyond, had a proof really existed I suppose I should have heard of it. The effects of this system, added to the high rate of mortality in this country, are unquestionably injurious. If you want to make your work a real and lasting success—stick to it."

SOUTHPORT HOME OF REST.—This Home for working girls and women, which was opened in April, 1893, has been so much appreciated that it was found necessary, in the spring of this year, to move into larger premises. The new Home has accommodation for about twenty-five. Only cases of convalescence are taken, but when necessary medical advice is given gratis. The matron is a true Christian, and her influence is already telling very much. Inquiries should be addressed, The Secretaries, 9, Alexandra-road.

THE BIBLE AT LYONS EXPOSITION.—The Bible stall, directed by M. Besse, is doing something to place the Scriptures in the hands of those who have never seen them. Reporting of the past three months, M. Besse says: "A countrywoman, reading over the kiosk, La Sainte Bible, asks with simplicity 'What is to be seen inside there?' She thought perhaps some diorama was on view! We explained our object, and she seemed surprised. A nun said: 'Being a nun, I know the Gospel; when you have read it once that is sufficient.' I reminded her that man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God. A Paris coffee-house keeper asked me for something to read to his customers. I sold him a New Testament. Priests often visit the kiosk; several have bought Bibles and booklets, very few engage in conversation."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Lambeth Baths winter meetings will be resumed for the season on Saturday evening.

An eight days' Gospel Temperance Mission was held during last week in the Town Hall, Battersea.

The annual meeting of the Kingston Total Abstinence Society was held last week. The report stated that the number of members was about 100.

The Upper Norwood Total Abstinence Society is pushing forward vigorously. Revs. J. G. Train and Dr. Monro Gibson have been recently amongst the speakers.

A Band of Hope has been started under encouraging circumstances in connection with the West Dulwich Congregational Church. Nearly 100 young people attended the opening meeting.

The Regent's Park Chapel Total Abstinence Society held a special meeting last week, when Mr. F. Cowley gave an address on "Law and Liquor," and Mr. A. Pearce-Gould, F.R.C.S., who presided, spoke of several phases of temperance reform, emphasising personal endeavour.

New headquarters at 390, Brixton-road having been opened in connection with the Brixton and Stockwell branch of the B.W.T.A., a tea was recently given to the working women members, and was well attended. On another evening a tea and entertainment were provided for the "Y" branch.

During the last ten days a Gospel Temperance Mission has been conducted at Bedminster, Bristol, by Mrs. Hawkes, W.T.A.U. The meetings included drawing-room, Christian Endeavour, factory, and public meetings. Much enthusiasm prevailed, and at one factory as many as fifty-eight signed the pledge.

The Methodist Times of this date (November 1) publishes a special supplement, containing a full report of the evidence in the recent trial for perjury, at the Old Bailey, of Mr. J. Crabb, Wesleyan class-leader and temperance advocate. This was a great test case, in which the licensed victuallers put forth all their power to crush a poor man who tried to do his duty in the temperance cause. Every temperance worker ought to have a copy.

On the invitation of Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. J. K. Barney, of Rhode Island, U.S.A., is in this country, and is prepared to speak for Gospel temperance at meetings of all kinds. Mrs. Barney has been called the "Elizabeth Fry" of America, because of her successful work for the W.C.T.U. among prisoners. She is likely to prove an acquisition as a temperance speaker. Arrangements for her meetings are being made by the superintendent of the speakers' bureau of the National B.W.T.A., Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

In connection with the annual meetings of the Weston-super-Mare branch of W.T.A.U., a well-attended afternoon drawing-room meeting was held at "The Lodge," when addresses were given by Lady Elizabeth Biddulph and Mrs. Servanté. This was followed by the annual public meeting in the Victoria Hall, which was well filled by an enthusiastic audience. Mr. J. Jackson Burstow, J.P., C.C., presided, and the meeting was addressed by Lady E. Biddulph and Mrs. Servanté. The annual report was presented, which showed that an admirable work had been done, and that during the past year sixty fresh members had been enrolled.

The annual meetings of the council of the Church of England Temperance Society were held last week in Wakefield, under the presidency of the Bishop of London, who referred in his opening address to the prospects of temperance legislation. In the Music Saloon a crowded meeting of women was held; on Monday evening the Wakefield branch held its annual meeting in the Town Hall, Dewsbury. The Bishop of Wakefield, who presided, said he had been a total abstainer for over twenty years. The annual report stated that branches had been formed in seventy-one of the 166 parishes in the diocese. On Tuesday night a meeting of the United Kingdom Railway Temperance Union was held.

A conference of the Friends' Temperance Union of London yearly meeting, and the members of Bristol and Somerset, Devon and Cornwall, and Western quarterly meetings was held at the Friars' Meeting House, Broad Plain, Bristol, last week, the object of the conference being "to discuss some of the moral, social, and religious aspects of the temperance reformation, and the connection therewith of the Society of Friends, and its adult schools and missions." Amongst the subjects for consideration were, "The Use of the Press in Promoting Temperance Truths." "Methods of Promoting the Temperance Cause." A meeting was held, to which ministers and church officers of various denominations were invited. Mr. Fielden Thorp, of York, spoke on "The Claims of the Total Abstinence Movement on the Church of Christ," and Mr. F. Sessions on "Christian Ethics and Temperance Influence." A meeting was held for teachers, presided over by Mr. F. Sessions, and [illegible] F. Thorp and others.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A HANDSOME building, costing about £4000, has been erected in Johannesburg, as a home for the Y.M.C.A.

Mr. A. Nichols has been appointed general sec. at Melbourne, in succession to Mr. A. P. Stockwell, who has returned to America.

Some members of the Plymouth Association have built and launched a "jubilee lifeboat," which is to be called the Sir George Williams.

The Association at Irvine has lately secured a hall for itself, consequently the members expect to extend operations during the coming winter months.

At the fourth anniversary of the Richmond (Yorks.) Association, held in the Town Hall, Mr. B. D. Procter read a satisfactory report of the work.

The Dundee Y.M.C.A. Sunday Bible-class has been rapidly and largely increased within the past few weeks. There has been an addition of seventy names to the book fund.

Mr. William Henderson has been engaged in visiting Associations in Dumfries and Galloway, and lately in Ayrshire. Reports are received of times of refreshing in both districts.

The annual business meeting of the Calne Association took place on the 22nd ult. There was a good attendance, and an excellent report and clear balance-sheet were presented.

The Brighton Association is running an excellent series of song services on one evening in each week, which is being largely attended by young persons of both sexes engaged in houses of business.

A series of revival meetings, lately held under the auspices of the New Bedford, Mass., Association, was largely attended by working men. At one meeting there were 400 mill boys present.

The Newcastle Young Men's Magazine reports vigorous work, decided progress, and a good spirit. The flourishing Sunday afternoon Bible-class has held its fifteenth anniversary with much interest.

The Middlesbrough Association, which has for some months past been in a somewhat languishing condition, has been much revived by a visit from Mr. W. Hind Smith. Friends are rallying, and there is prospect of a good winter's work.

Mr. R. Henderson Smith, Scottish Travelling Secretary, is presently visiting in the Dundee district. Co-incident with his visits the Bible-class work has been resumed for the winter in the Laurence Kirk, Kinneff and Kirriemuir Y.M.C.A.'s.

The Young Men, organ of the Sydney Y.M.C.A., is bright and lively, affording good evidence that the recent crisis tested but did not destroy the work. Another member of the Association, Mr. C. B. Garnett, has started for mission work in China.

The Misses Henderson, of Edinburgh, have kindly handed over at a nominal rent their large house and garden in Rotterdam-street, Thurso, to the Y.M.C.A., thus putting the Association in that town in possession of premises at once commodious and homelike.

Mr. R. H. Fisher, general secretary of the North Liverpool Y.M.C.A. has started an attractive little mid-monthly journal in the interests of his association, entitled Unity. Folkestone has also launched an organ of its own under the title of The Monthly Record.

The quarterly report of the National Council (Scottish) states that the Y.M.C.A. and Fellowship Union organisations are becoming among the most important training grounds for foreign mission work. "We are constantly hearing of movements among our Associations for the cultivation of the missionary spirit."

The seventh annual public meeting of the Burton Y.M.C.A. has passed off with great éclat. Alderman T. B. Lowe, J.P., the president, occupied the chair, and the principal speakers were Alderman H. H. Bemrose, president of the Derby Association, and Archdeacon Sinclair. Short reports were presented by the officers, showing an excellent twelve months' work.

The Kerry Evening Post, reporting the South of Ireland District Conference, which has just been held, says the attendance was very large and the proceedings enthusiastic. Mr. R. McCowen, J.P., presided over the public meeting, and addresses were delivered by Mr. R. Mabin, Mr. Robt. McCann, and others. Mr. J. C. Newsom, of Cork, was elected president of the district.

The membership of the Madras Association has increased in the past year from 268 to 393, and the aggregate attendance in the rooms on both sides of the city has been 74,115. Nine men's Gospel and devotional meetings and Bible-classes are held weekly, with an average attendance of 295. At least ten associate members have, during the past year, confessed Christ as their Lord, two of them having been baptized from heathenism. The receipts amounted to 4671 rupees, covering all expenses and leaving a balance of thirty-three rupees, all raised locally.

The Hereford Corn Exchange was well filled upon the occasion of the annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. The Dean of Hereford presided. Mr. F. Lawrence read the annual report, stating that the Association was progressing in a very satisfactory manner. The addition of a reading room had been a great comfort to the members. The Dean said he had had some experience of young men's societies, and could testify to the great work the Y.M.C.A. was doing all through London. He felt that if they could only get the young men on the side of religion they need have no fear whatever for their beloved old country of England.

The annual conference of the South-Eastern District Union took place at Brighton on the 24th ult. While many associations reported good work, others were unable to do this; and a practical discussion took place as to the means to be employed to maintain the work already in existence and to establish it in new centres. It was agreed that, while the principles of Y.M.C.A.'s are fixed and unalterable, their organisation and methods must be flexible and adapted to the varying conditions of young men as they are found in the rural and agricultural districts, seaside resorts, as well as in the larger manufacturing and commercial centres.

The Lord Mayor of York, presiding at a Y.M.C.A. meeting held the other evening in the old Town Hall, Scarborough, said:—"I often wonder if you young men fully realise the important fact that this world, with all its prizes, is your inheritance. The men of mind and men of action who work the old ship, one by one, month by month, will relax their hold, giving place to young men. Young men of grit, of hard work, must make to the front in these days; the namby-pamby, lavender kid glove, and cigarette type must take a back place, or go under when the money their fathers earned is all squandered. I should not like to preside here among you young men without offering you just one word. Be real, abhor shams. An insincere man, a hypocrite, this world loathes. Shakespeare calls him a man who steals the livery of heaven to serve the devil in. Be industrious. Men of painstaking toil make the world and save the world. Be pure. Sin, uncleanness, make men weak, make men cowards. 'Conscience makes cowards of us all.' Aim high and climb well, but never make the prostrate form of a brother man a stepping-stone on which you may climb to a higher height. Be kind, be brotherly. Don't bet. Never handle dirty money. The winner of a bet should feel a sense of theft, because he has rendered no service and given no equivalent."

There was a crowded gathering of young men at Exeter Hall on Friday evening, when a reception was held by Sir George and Lady Williams, to inaugurate the winter's work, and to signalise the reopening of the premises after extensive internal alterations and improvements. No pains had been spared by the general secretary, Mr. J. H. Putterill, to make the occasion a thoroughly enjoyable one; and his efforts were crowned with complete success. Both large and small halls were requisitioned, as well as the council chamber, reading and drawing rooms, the parlour, the restaurant, and the corridors and annexes. The decorations were profuse; the band of the Royal Fusiliers had been engaged; there was a recital on the great organ; and other excellent instrumental and vocal music was performed. There were also a great number of interesting art and other exhibits on view. Through the generosity of many friends special displays were made of Christmas supplements, pictures, panels, and photographs, of pottery and electrical and telegraphic apparatus. There was a limelight exhibition of Association pictures; and Sir George and Lady Williams kindly placed on view the many interesting souvenirs recently presented to themselves in connection with the jubilee. At nine o'clock the guests assembled in the large hall, where short addresses were delivered by Sir George Williams, Mr. J. H. Putterill, His Highness Prince Ademuyiwa, and Mr. E. J. Kennedy. We hope the ranks of the Association will be largely reinforced as one result of this most interesting gathering.

THE SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION is showing an interest in time-expired men. The secretary, Mr. A. H. Wheeler, writing in behalf of Christian soldiers returning from India during the trooping season, says:—"Coming back into a market already glutted, these men have the greatest difficulty in getting situations, although most of them have exemplary characters of long standing. I feel sure it has only to be made known, to enlist the sympathy of a great number of readers of THE CHRISTIAN. I shall be glad to forward particulars to anyone having situations vacant." The headquarters of the Association are at Plymouth. There are now 130 branch and regimental secretaries of the Association in the United Kingdom, and the roll of officer members is rapidly increasing. One of the latest enrolled is General Lord Wolseley, who has also become a member of the joint council of Y.M.C.A.'s and S.C.A.'s at Exeter Hall.

THE Y.W.C.A.

THE Newtownards Branch has inaugurated its winter session by a capital meeting, when cheering accounts were given of progress and results, not least in the Bible-class.

A conference of Y.W.C.A. secretaries of Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford has been held at the charming Holiday Home at Greystones. Much time was spent in prayer, and various practical matters were discussed. Papers were also read on themes such as "The Spirit-filled Christian," "The Vessel and its Use," "Our Responsibility," and so on.

The twenty seventh anniversary of the Finsbury Institute, 14, Finsbury-square, has been celebrated. Miss Baldwin, the superintendent, is one of the oldest Y.W.C.A. workers. A good number of students are attending the evening classes, and the gymnasium continues popular. The spiritual work also is prosperous. The Sunday and week evening Bible-classes are well kept up by the members.

The annual meeting of the Ealing Institute has been held at the Shaftesbury Hall, Ealing, when there was a large attendance. Major-General Hutchinson presided. The report, read by Mr. W. Hedges, shows that considerable prosperity has attended the work of the past year. The members and associates number 171, making, with thirty-six hon. associates, a total of 207. The Bible-classes are well attended, and highly appreciated. The members have their own representative in the foreign field at Jaunpore. Rev. J. Summerhayes, Mr. Wellington Taylor, and the chairman spoke in commendation of the work, and an address was given by Rev. E. A. Stuart.

The thirteenth annual tea was recently given to the members of the King's Cross Y.W.C.A. at Percy Institute. Some alterations and improvements have just been completed, and very bright and pleasant were the rooms. About 138 responded to the invitation. Tea was followed by a bright and enjoyable meeting, during which twelve new members were received. Mr. W. T. Paton, although still suffering from his recent illness, had come to speak a few stirring words, which were followed by an earnest address by the Hon. Emily Kinnaird. The work of the Institute is being greatly blessed in the neighbourhood. Regular visits are paid to the large factories around, and open-air meetings are held during the summer months, every effort being made to induce the young women of the neighbourhood to come to the Bible-classes and prayer-meetings held at the Institute.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

ENDEAVOURERS of New York and Brooklyn have held an Inter-urban Rally, in which Mr. Sankey, amongst others, took part.

In Montreal one prayer-meeting Endeavour committee meets weekly with the aged who cannot attend church prayer-meetings.

The Cumberland Presbyterian expresses the opinion that a present and pressing need is not fewer or less fervent interdenominational Christian Endeavour conventions, but more and more frequent denominational Endeavour conventions.

"The indications already are that the Christian Endeavour Society will exert its influence on the temperance question, and exert it in a very practical way, not stopping with mere resolutions," so says the editor of the Birmingham, N.Y., Republican.

At Clear Water, Mo., a church has been organised as the outcome of a two weeks' revival, brought about by the little Christian Endeavour Society. This is the first church in the place, although there has been a Sunday-school here for several years.

The Upper Holloway (Baptist) Y.P.S.C.E. celebrated its second anniversary on October 18. The pastor, Rev. J. R. Wood, presided. The report showed that the present membership is seventy-nine active, eight associate, fifteen honorary, total 102; the numbers having nearly doubled since the first anniversary. By means of the Missionary Prayer Union, the Society has undertaken the support of a native preacher in Dacca, Eastern Bengal. Gospel and children's services and temperance meetings are conducted by this Society, also assistance has been given in open-air services and at various halls.

CONFERENCE HALL, CLAPHAM-ROAD.—A united Christian Workers' meeting was held on Thursday, October 25, for tea and conversation. At 7.30 the meeting was presided over by Rev. C. H. Sturdy; and short addresses were given by Revs. J. Grundy and Henry Hewitt, Mrs. Meredith, and others, representing the various sections of the Church of Christ, and of Christian work. These meetings are to be held (D.V.) the last Thursday in each month, and accredited Christian workers can obtain tickets from the secretary, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Theodore Meyer, the venerable Presbyterian missionary to Jews in Whitechapel, is about to retire owing to advancing years.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, B.A., has acceded to the request to become the consultative editor of The Independent and Nonconformist, the official organ of the Congregational denomination. This change has been brought about by the retirement of Rev. D. B. Hooke, who has become secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society.

Dr. Newman Hall.—Last Sunday and Monday Dr. Newman Hall was preaching at Cardiff, Tuesday and Wednesday at Newport, Thursday afternoon and evening at Abertillery at the County Union. At all his evening sermons, whatever the occasion, the sermon merges into a mission prayer meeting, and hands are held up in considerable numbers for prayer and confession.

The Late W. I. Palmer.—The Friends' Quarterly Examiner for October 30 contains an article on William Isaac Palmer, the philanthropist, who was a member of the Society of Friends. It is written by Mr. William Noble, who was closely united with Mr. Palmer in connection with efforts to propagate total abstinence principles. The article is specially interesting at the present crisis of temperance reform, as it contains several extracts from William Palmer's letters, which have proved prophetic.

Mr. James Crabb, whose prosecution for alleged perjury has been followed with the deepest concern, has been acquitted. The circumstances were these:—"Mr. Crabb believed he saw a policeman drinking while on duty, and a prosecution of the publican who sold the liquor followed. That prosecution failed, Mr. Crabb's testimony being uncorroborated. The Licensed Victuallers' Central Protection Association then instituted a prosecution against Mr. Crabb for perjury. That base and groundless charge was completely disproved."

Rev. John Gow has been labouring in New Zealand with great acceptance for the past twenty-nine years, where, according to the "Story of the Otago Church," "his dignified presence, good sense, and wise counsel in the Church courts there have been held in high respect, whilst outside of denominationalism altogether he has been a recognised leader and trusted counsellor in revival and evangelistic work. His old flock in Carmyllie, Forfarshire, amongst whom he laboured for over seventeen years as successor to Dr. Wilson, will be interested to hear that Mr. Gow is still enjoying good health, although now considerably beyond the allotted "threescore years and ten." Miss Isa C. Gow, niece of Mr. Gow, who, after being engaged in deputation work throughout Scotland whilst home on furlough from Rajputana, India, is now returning to her old sphere of labour, would, whilst thanking the friends who have sent her papers in the past, take this opportunity of informing them that her address is again, Mission House, Beawar, Rajputana, India. She expects to reach India about the end of October by P. and O. s.s. Arcadia, leaving Sydney, October 1.

THE SOLDIER does not expect always to march in dress parade. Doubtless such military displays are occasions of exultation; but that is not what men become soldiers for. The fatiguing march, the exposure, the deprivation, the terrible battle with wounds and death momentarily threatening, are the services for which he has enlisted. He who endures them is a good soldier. So a good soldier of Christ must be able to endure hardness, and must expect it. Paul learned how to suffer, and we account him a hero, because he did not murmur nor charge God foolishly, nor abate one jot of his faith. His faith was stedfast, trial did not weaken or alter it. His emotions were changeable, but his faith was fixed; and he went through all his sufferings in a spirit of triumph, because his faith was so strong.—N. Y. Independent.

MISSIONARY PRAYER UNION.—More than the usual interest attended the quarterly meetings of the Missionary Prayer Union, in the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, on Sunday, October 28. Rev. R. Wright Hay, of Dacca, preached morning and evening, and addressed the Sunday scholars and the members of the Prayer Union in the afternoon. The report, read by Mr. Feller (the secretary), showed that there are now eighty-seven members of the Prayer Union, and that the amount received from them during the last quarter is over £26. Part of the collections taken on Sunday will be added to this amount, so that about £35 will be sent up for the support of Mr. Hale, their own missionary in Agra. Pastor Geo. Wainwright read a letter from Mr. Hale, which reported that though he had been down with fever he had now fully recovered, that he had acquired the language, and that he was learning more useful lessons as to methods of work from the American Methodist Mission.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. James Wharton is holding a three weeks' mission in the Congregational Chapel, New-road, Tuebrook. The meetings are being well attended. Prayer is asked that there may be great showers of blessing alike to saint and sinner. H. G.

Mrs. S. J. Alexander, of Dalston, has conducted a mission at Queen's Park, Kilburn. Many sinners yielded themselves to the Saviour, while great blessing was realised by Christian people. At the farewell tea and meeting, on Oct. 23, Mrs. Alexander gave a short address to the new converts.

Liversedge.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is conducting a twenty-two days' united mission in the various Nonconformist places of worship here. A special feature of the work has been the services for men on Sunday afternoons. The mission closes on Sunday, November 11. Much blessing is attending the effort.

Messrs. Weaver Brothers are having a good mission in Leith. The meetings are being held in the Central Hall, which is the largest in the town, but too small for the crowds coming together. The ministers are helping heartily. Blessing is being granted, and men and women are coming out and confessing Christ.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has completed a series of evangelistic meetings in the Free Church, Bervie. The services aroused the interest of all classes. The meetings extended over two weeks, and the attendance increased to the end. There were cases of professed conversion, and the spiritual life of Christians was deepened. A. W.

Mr. Charles Minor.—Colonel Hadley writes to us from New York: "Mr. Minor has been addressing large audiences at St. Bartholomew's Mission. Many have, through his earnest efforts, surrendered to the Saviour. He has received a call to lead a meeting at the Madison Square Church Mission (Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst's), and other requests for service are coming in."

Walton-on-the-Hill, Epsom.—Mr. John Johnson, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fortnight's Gospel services in the Mission Hall here. The meetings were well attended and very impressive. Believers have been much blessed and encouraged. Men who seldom came to hear the Gospel were brought to their knees, and several have professed faith in Christ. H. Witton.

Mr. E. P. Telford.—The Farwig Wesleyan Mission Hall, Bromley, Kent, on Sunday night, was thronged to the doors, and an overflow meeting was held in the schoolroom, conducted by Mrs. Telford. At the close of Mr. Telford's sermon in the large hall one after another rose in all parts of the great audience and testified their decision for Christ. The mission continues until Friday, November 2.

Gospel Tent Work in Bath. — For fourteen weeks our large wooden-sided tent has been pitched in Oldfield Park. This summer, not only has there been a great interest awakened, but likewise sustained throughout the season. A goodly number have professed conversion. Backsliders have been restored, and the children of God greatly helped, strengthened, and encouraged in the Divine life. Jas. A. Vicary.

Mr. Henry Bray, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a successful mission at the United Methodist Chapel, East Harptree, Somerset. The meetings were well attended and thoroughly appreciated. The Spirit of God was evidently at work in the hearts of the people, several having testified of good received during the mission. Believers realised the meetings to be "times of refreshing," and many have been led to rejoice in the full and free salvation that has been proclaimed.

Barnstaple.—Mr. David Rea, of Belfast, has concluded ten days' Gospel meetings here. Each Lord's day the music-hall (the largest hall in the town) was filled. God's people have been stirred up, helped, and blessed. Many souls have passed from death unto life. There was a very evident work of God's Spirit in deep conviction of sin and repentance, and subsequently the peace through believing, and confession with the mouth unto salvation. The daily prayer meetings were well attended and a very blessed season; a large number of requests for prayer and praise were sent in. We thank God for our brother's visit. W. H. S.

Mr. W. R. Lane closed an eight days' mission at the Conference Hall, Y.M.C.A., Stratford, on Sunday last. It was a season of very great blessing, for which we are devoutly thankful to God. Over one hundred were dealt with in the inquiry room by earnest workers, who, with the Word of God in their hands, pointed them to Jesus, the Saviour of sinners. On Thursday and the two Sunday evenings the meetings were attended by about 1800 people; on other evenings from 700 to 800. The first few meetings seemed to be especially blessed to those whose hearts had grown cold. Many of these were again restored, and were filled with the joy of the Lord. B.

Mr. William Forbes closed his mission at Blochairn Free Church, Glasgow, on Thursday last. The congregations were large, and many were found in the inquiry rooms. He has since given addresses in connection with Rev. George Gladstone's church.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions, among others, have been arranged for November:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Oct. 20—Nov. 5, St. Paul's, Hounslow; Nov. 10-26, St. John's, Chelsea, S.W.; Rev. J. S. Barrass, Nov. 15-26, Edensor, Longton, N. Stafford; Rev. T. E. Cleworth, Nov. 25—Dec. 3, St. Paul's, Southsea; Rev. A. J. Harrison, B.D. (Evidential Missioner), Oct. 28—Nov. 2, Hoddesdon, Herts; Nov. 16, 23, 30, Birkenhead Church League, Y.M.C.A. Hall; Rev. J. H. Haslam, Nov. 10-21, Purley, Surrey; Rev. Canon Lester, Oct. 31 and Nov. 1, Eccleshall, Stafford; Nov. 24—Dec. 3, Woolton, Liverpool; Rev. Dr. S. C. Morgan, Oct. 27—Nov. 3, Lawley, Salop; Nov. 4-14, Dawley, Salop; Rev. Dr. Morris, Oct. 28—Nov. 12, All Saints, Kilvey, Swansea; Nov. 17-27, Etruria, Stoke-on-Trent; Rev. James Stephens, Oct. 20—Nov. 9, Skelton, York; Nov. 4, St. Martin's, Charing Cross, W.C.; Nov. 19-28, Business Young Ladies' Association, Manchester; Rev. F. S. Webster, Nov. 17-24, St. Cuthbert's, Wells.

OBITUARY.

MISS MARY HAKE, BARNSTAPLE.

Many will hear with sorrow of the departure of Miss Mary Hake, of Barnstaple, so well known for her faithful and thoughtful hospitality to servants of Christ. It had been her privilege for many years to minister to her honoured father and to his beloved yoke-fellow, Mr. R. C. Chapman.

MR. JAMES WATT, BERLIN.

The death is announced of Mr. James Watt, agent general for Germany and Switzerland of the British and Foreign Bible Society. He resided in Berlin, but died suddenly while on a visit to Lausanne. He was under fifty years of age, but if the length of life is to be reckoned by deeds rather than years, his record must be pronounced a full one. He was at once a cultured and amiable Christian. Having lived in Persia and Russia, and prosecuted studies in Oriental as well as European languages, he was a very valuable agent of the Society which he represented. He will be seriously missed by the English community in Berlin.

REV. JANI ALLI, CALCUTTA.

Many will hear with regret of the death, on the 15th. inst., of Rev. Jani Alli, M.A., of the C.M.S. Mohammedan Mission in Calcutta. He was a convert from Mohammedanism, having been brought to Christ through the teaching received at the Noble College at Masulipatam. He had many friends in this country; his last visit was in 1892, and those who heard him in public were greatly impressed by his earnestness, humility, and spirituality—an impression which was deepened on being brought into closer relationship with him. A life such as Mr. Alli's, as the result of missionary labour, amply compensates for the toil and money expended.

REV. C. W. FORMAN, LAHORE.

This devoted servant of Christ, who for forty-six years has laboured in India, has been called home. He belonged to the American Presbyterian Mission. His work began in 1848 at Lodiana, whence he moved in the Punjab on its annexation. Thousands of men now occupying positions of every grade in and out of Government service were trained for the duties of life in the school founded by him. This school has been somewhat pre-eminent among the Mission schools of the Punjab as an evangelistic agency. Throughout all his long years of labour he was a preacher as well as teacher, being peculiarly successful in bazaar preaching. Says The Punjab Patriot (non-Christian):—"A prince among missionaries, Dr. Forman will long be remembered in this province, not only as a believer and worker in Christ, but for the noble unselfish life that he led throughout his long career, extending over nearly two generations. In everything that he did the life and teachings of the Prince of Peace were his guide."

THE MORAVIANS are declared to have been not only the first community to send missions to the heathen and the lepers, but also to prosecute the evangelisation of the Jews. Of course, the reference is to the beginning of modern missionary enterprise, which is a return in some measure to the primitive model, when scattered believers "went everywhere preaching the Word." In the October Moravian Quarterly the following extract is given from a private letter:—"Have you ever been to Herrnhut, in Germany, among the Moravian Brethren? I was there last month. Never in my life have I thought that there was such a town in the world where every resident is a true Christian; where spiritual life is at the highest state; all the inhabitants like one family; a short service in their chapel every day in the week. As I think of my visit there I feel as if I had been to a fairy land."

Notes and Comments.

THE disastrous foundering last week of the s.s. Wairarapa on the coast of New Zealand, with great loss of life, is one more illustration of the perils of the sea. The disaster, which happened during a heavy fog, has created a profound sensation throughout the Colony, and much sympathy will be felt in this country, to which several of the ill-fated passengers belonged.

Commissioner H. H. Johnston's report on his three years' work as administrator in British Central Africa, issued as a Blue Book, is a valuable document, and deserving of study by all interested in the civilisation of the Darkest Continent. His remarks on the slave trade are in the main full of encouragement, but the baneful traffic yet lingers in certain districts. The industrial and civilising work of the various missionary societies in Central Africa is highly spoken of.

The struggle over the "Empire" Theatre, which the directors are prolonging by legal proceedings, is raising a host of related questions with which Purity workers have long been familiar. The great principles underlying this reform have been grasped in refuges and homes for the fallen. The accommodation for domestic servants, especially in rich houses, is one of the things on which light will have to be shed. If there has to be so much air for children in schools and for workmen in factories, there ought to be decent sleeping places for servants, and they ought not to be so situated in the house as to put domestics in the way of temptation.

To us it is an astounding question to ask, "Should the same standard of morality be required from men as from women?" and the asking of it reveals a strangely degraded state of feeling in the community. Do men wish to be thought of as a lower moral order than women? Are they morally weaker? Has God made a different law for them? Are we also to relax the law of truthfulness and honesty in order to suit them in the market? After all the talk we have heard of the superiority of men to women, this is a dreadful fall from the pinnacle of superiority. We have no doubt, however, that the manhood of England will uphold the equality of the moral standard. The law of God says nothing about sex.

In every moral struggle, while the issue will be decided by principle, the evil falling before the good, the phases and the length of the struggle are often greatly affected by the money which is on one side and the want of it which is on the other. Generally the long purse is on the wrong side. Any form of iniquity to be assailed is generally a vested interest as well. The difficulty over Diana is the difficulty as to making money out of the manufacture of her shrines. The mere worship or superstition counts for less than the profit and the living. It was the same with slavery. It is the same with heathenism; with the drink traffic; with impurity. Money is the grand citadel. Its power can only be undermined by moral means. Conscience must be aroused, and once that is done, neither 70 per cent. nor 100 per cent. can save the evil thing. The fight now in London is not with impurity alone, and as such, but with rich men who are exploiting girls for gain.

It is hardly possible to read the account of the destruction of any city or state that has once enjoyed a proud pre-eminence in the world without being struck with the fact that its weaknesses and dangers abound among ourselves. That they have more powerful and living counteractives here than they had in former days may be true, and, if so, the problem is so far changed; but all depends on that. How like our modern London in several respects is the picture given in the Story of Venice as told by Alethea Wiel. She says:—

> A passion for amusement, gambling, masquerades, and every kind of revel had absorbed the Venetian mind; the characteristic of the age was frivolity, licentiousness, and wantonness, and an indelible stamp has been left on the Venetian life of that century by this marked and universal characteristic. Never before were morals at so low an ebb; conjugal fidelity was an unknown quality; and the example set by the rich spread like a disease through all ranks of the town.

We seem to be in danger from the exacting business demands in the day which create a craving for amusement at night; the abnormal on one side never fails to create its evil correlative on the other. Only the quiet holy service done for God can keep mind and heart in that stable repose which has no need of doubtful pleasures.

As Mr. Athelstan Riley, and others who have agreed with his School Board policy, are now, with doubtful purpose, declaring themselves "supporters of the Compromise of 1871," some who would act conscientiously in the impending contest are finding difficulty in making up their minds. It seems to us unquestionable that any concern which Mr. Riley and his friends may show for the Bible and its teachings, is directed mainly to the attainment of ecclesiastical ends. The fact that Mr. Riley is an avowed High Churchman has not had the notice it deserves, while the additional fact that he is the editor of a book inculcating Mariolatry and other Popish errors has only just been made known to the general public.

In The Echo of October 31 an account was given of Mr. Riley's little book "The Hours or Little Office of the Blessed Virgin Mary," taken from the Sarum Breviary. It consists of eight "services," to be recited daily at stated intervals. "Hail Mary!" is frequently repeated, and the Virgin is addressed as "Mother of all Grace," and "Mother of God!" To proclaim himself "a loyal member of the Church of England," and to declare that he has "not the slightest intention of forcing his private religious opinions upon the children of the people," are considerations that afford no guarantee whatever of Mr. Riley's competency to conserve the highest and best interests of the rising generation.

Amid the prevalent party dust-throwing Christian people are in danger of overlooking the fact that the party styled "Progressive," as well as some of the Independent candidates, stand consistently by the Compromise of 1871, with its syllabus of Bible reading. The fact that Secularists fall into line with these candidates, in opposition to the Reactionary party, with its strong sacerdotal supporters, is not at all surprising; and surely Christian Progressives cannot be blamed on that account. It is for earnest Christian people to do their utmost to retain the Bible in the schools; by throwing the weight of their influence into the opposition, they will at once neutralise High Church machinations, and ensure the continued combination of religious education with a proper regard for liberty of conscience.

Rev. T. J. Gaster, vicar of All Saints' Camberwell, in a circular letter, thus hits the nail on the head:—

> The circular, though Scriptural, is only a trap to catch votes for the candidates approved of by the section of the Established Church popularly known as "Sacerdotal" and "Romanising." (2) The circular is (figuratively) written on tissue paper, and when held up to the light you can see the Pope, "Cardinal" Vaughan, and the English Church Union behind it. If the lower middle-class children are to be religiously taught on open Bible principles, and not through the medium of a test invented by Sacerdotalists, we must take care to vote for candidates who advocate "AN OPEN BIBLE AND NO CIRCULAR."

It is said by The British Weekly that in one of the crowds which were dispersing after service on "Citizen Sunday" a remark was made to the effect, that "the time will soon come when we shall have to appoint a special Sunday in the year for preaching the Gospel." No doubt the demands for special forms of service which pour in upon ministers are becoming burdensome. Yet there is a good side to them. They are—as in Temperance Sunday—a kind of moral support to the minister, and they also serve to give point to his practical application of great evangelical principles. Indeed, if the topics and lessons, such as the duties of citizens, are not in the Gospel they had better not be dealt with at all; but these great themes are there. They only want to be treated as Gospel themes in a Gospel spirit. From what we have observed, we cannot but think that great good will come to London out of "Citizen Sunday."

A writer in The Westminster Gazette is drawing aside the curtain which has hidden the mysteries of Theosophy from public view, and the exposure is humiliating in the extreme. The signs and wonders of Neo-Buddhism all disappear before the searchlight of reasonable inquiry; and the Mahatmas, who have been apostrophised as Sages, and obeyed as Masters, have been traced to the point of nirvana, or personal non-existence, and then, by a process rather shocking to the initiated, found "re-incarnated" in the "astral bodies" of schemers, whose game of hoax has, it is hoped, now come to an end. All the "objects" of the Theosophical Society are now discredited ; but especially is it shown that a thirst for the marvellous has been met by a system of bamboozling which has been carried on since Madame Blavatsky's death pretty much as it was for years before. The writer speaks of Mrs. Besant with personal respect, but in view of the childish phenomena—messages from Mahatmas, etc.—by which she has been "taken in," he maintains that in future any evidence of hers on questions calling for the exercise of observation and common sense will be of no value whatever.

It is clear that the information embodied in these articles has come from the inner circle of the Theosophical Society. This means that some have discovered the deception which has been practised upon them. So far, good. The exposure gives a new meaning to "The Occult Philosophy," and will, we trust, afford a new point of departure for some who have been ensnared by the system. To account for the universe without the postulate that God is; to think of religion without allowing that God has spoken; to talk of a brotherhood of humanity without recognising that God loves: these are the impotent positions of Theosophy. The spiritual needs of man claim a hearkening to God's message and a response to his appeal,—to cease from human supports, and to centre the affections in, and rest the soul upon, a self-revealing God, who graciously says, "Beside Me there is no Saviour." We trust "The Light of the World" will speedily illumine those who are, in an unexpected sense, in these articles brought face to face with "Isis very much Unveiled."

The civic struggle in New York for purity of government and uprightness of character in the Government is now at its hottest. The veteran Dr. Cuyler has entered the fray, sounding a clear war-note in an article on Tammany Hall in The Evangelist. He says: "The popular uprising this fall is an uprising of the public conscience among good citizens of all parties, all creeds, and all colours." Bad and self-seeking men have too long been allowed to run the political machines in the great American cities, but better days are evidently dawning.

We know that the devil can cite Scripture freely for his own purposes. Some of his disciples across the Atlantic are doing the same thing, judging from the following paragraph which we take from the Boston Congregationalist:—

> Some of the good women in New York City, having sought to cleanse the streets of indecent theatrical posters, have been met by the impudent misapplication of the Scripture passage, "To the pure all things are pure." The meaning of that verse, evident not only to the average Greek scholar but to any clean-minded man who reads it in English, is not that things in themselves impure become pure when seen by a pure man, but that everything which belongs to a pure man is pure. In other words, a decent person will not allow himself to be surrounded by indecencies. The passage, shamelessly quoted in defence of coarse and disgusting pictures on the walls and fences of the public streets, is a severe indictment against the character of the people in any community in which such pictures are to be seen.

Whatever view may be taken of some of Count Tolstoi's utterances, we think that earnest Christians of all churches will agree with these words which he recently sent to an English correspondent:—

> The community of which mankind now chiefly stands in need must consist, not of men who will unite in pursuit of certain economical aims advantageous for themselves, like that "Brotherhood Trust" of which you sent me the description, but of those men who are dispersed everywhere, and have once for all renounced all worldly aims and have devoted themselves to the service of God.

Unselfish consecration to the good of man for the sake of the love of Christ has always been the power which has told upon the life and habits of the world, and it is as much wanted to-day as ever. The clamour for improved social conditions—and we plead for these improvements—only serves to make us feel more deeply that we must change the heart and save the soul, if we are to do any permanent good.

In his "Samuel Rutherford and Some of his Correspondents" (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier), Dr. Alexander Whyte has given us a book for which all lovers of a pure spiritual life will thank him. He has vividly placed before us some of the ablest and most devout of the Covenanters, both men and women. His book, wherever it is read, will do much to redeem the Covenanters from the odium which has come upon them from the writings of men who could not understand them, because they did not sympathise with their principles and aims. He points out in one place that it was a remarkable feature of a remarkable time in Scotland, that so many ladies of birth, intellect, and influence, were found on the side of the persecuted Covenanters. There was something not unlike it in the ten years' conflict that culminated in the Disruption. It seems to us to be characteristic of all times of intense religious feeling. There were more of the higher classes associated with Nonconformity in the years of persecution than we can remember ever since; and Methodism had more of them at the beginning than it has now. Conflict and suffering for the truth always do good in every class.

A sight of the deepest and most sacred thoughts of a devout heart sometimes produces a deep and saving impression upon the ungodly. Is it not largely the secret of the influence of the Psalms? The deepest feelings and thoughts of souls seeking God or rejoicing in Him are here told forth with perfect simplicity, and men through all time feel their tone of reality. Here is an instance from the time of the Covenanters. Lady Boyd kept a daily journal, which she was busy writing one night, when her godless son returned from a hunting supper-party. He ventured to knock at her door, and ask why she was up so late. "Without saying a word, she took him by the hand, set him down at her table, and pointed him to the wet sheet she had written." He read it, rose up, and without saying a word went to his own room. All his days he looked back upon that night as the time when he was saved from the snares of sin. Testimony to the grace of God and to the reality of the Divine life is beyond price.

The experience of holy men is often a useful guide to other souls. These words of Baxter's are full of meaning to those who have been led out of the wilderness of self into the fulness of Christ. "I was once," he says, "wont to meditate most on my own heart, and to dwell at home and look little higher. I was still poring either on my sins or wants, or examining my sincerity. But now, though I am greatly convinced of the need of heart acquaintance and employment, yet I see more need of higher work; and that I should look more often upon Christ and God and heaven than upon my own heart. At home I can find distempers to trouble me, and some evidences of my peace; but it is above that I must find matter of delight and joy and love and peace itself." And truly we are changed into the image of the Object we contemplate. To look unto Jesus is to become like Him.

A German writer has been making a special study of the phrase, "In Christ Jesus." He finds that it is used 164 times in the Pauline writings. The conclusion he reaches is that the formula is used to express the relation of the Christian to Christ Jesus; it is the proper Pauline expression of the highest concentrated inner fellowship of the Christian with Christ. Perhaps the ordinary Christian mind has as clear a conception from experience as can be gained from any amount of study and investigation, valuable as that may be. It regards itself as livingly united to Christ Jesus, drawing from Him all support and inspiration to be on earth as He was. He is the Vine, we are the branches. He has all fulness, and from that fulness we are permitted, and by union with Him are able, to draw all grace. In Him we shall be glorified, in Him and with Him.

The Oxford Convention.

The twenty years that have elapsed since the Conference of 1874 have given ample time to review the whole movement now associated with Keswick. It is, of course, not to be wondered at that the High Church party stand aloof, since a movement embracing Churchmen and Nonconformists could not be tolerated according to their principles. But it is perhaps a little surprising that some who call themselves "old-fashioned Evangelicals" should still view the teaching with suspicion, or at least with doubt.

For what was to be heard last week at Oxford? The clearest and most unmistakable disavowal of any perfectionism, or removal of the roots of sin; the entire denial that the teaching leads to passivity and "quietism"; the insistence on the most absolute sincerity of heart and life before God the greatest possible honour placed upon Christ's Person and Work, and the Power of the Holy Ghost, and the clearest prominence to God's Word as the warp and woof of the teaching.

The truths taught were admittedly not new, but old truths newly emphasised, and so far from being antagonistic to the soundest and most old-fashioned evangelicalism, they were clearly the complement of it, by enabling the believer to see how Christ is made to us not only righteousness for a guilty past, but sanctification for a needy present; and how the Holy Ghost can and will make real to us the "unsearchable riches of Christ" for daily life, daily worries, daily duties, and daily service.

So long as the movement has the keen analysis and intellectual power of Mr. Webb Peploe, the solid and balanced scripture knowledge of Messrs. Moule and Brooke, and the practical, earnest spirit of Messrs. Hopkins and Meyer, to say nothing of some of the younger men who are worthily coming forward on the same lines, it will not and cannot be otherwise than blessed of God. T.

"Christ, the Wisdom of God."

"Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip?"—John xiv. 9. "The brightness of His glory, and the express image of His person."—Heb. i. 3.

The superiority of our Lord Jesus Christ to his own age and to every age cannot but impress all honest readers of the Gospels. The point should be constantly insisted upon, especially in these days, when so much stress is laid upon the doctrine of man being the result of his environment. Jesus was the opposite of his environment, nor can we conceive of any age that could have given Him being; rather are the ages, so far as they become purer and nobler, the effect of his influence upon them. He makes them, not they Him. Dr. Fairbairn gave earnest expression to the truth of our Lord's superiority the other day at Oxford, when he said,

Jesus far transcended all the conditions of his life. How brief that life was! Three years in public, and twenty centuries in inexhausted power! Can you explain it through the conditions? Here are we, a free people, with centuries of freedom in our blood; He, the son of a bonded race, and, yet the very father of freedom. We, the heirs of a splendid inheritance of learning and letters; He, unskilled in letters. We, with all the world open to us—distant lands brought near; He, shut up in a little land, amid a little people hating the Gentile and fearing the Roman Governor. The only explanation is that this Person came straight from Eternity, out from the bosom of the Father, sent here to declare Him.

With all that is said here as to the ascendancy of our Lord Jesus above all the conditions of his life we cordially agree. But we confess to a deep and painful sense of incongruity and anomaly in the assertion that "this Person, who came from Eternity, out from the bosom of the Father, sent here to declare Him," was "unskilled in letters." Was He really so? The words remind us of the wondering question of the Jews, "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" They did not find Him unskilled in letters, but were amazed that, having (so far as they knew) never learned, He should have been so skilled in letters that they, who had learned, were unable to answer Him.

Is there not prevalent misconception of who Jesus was? The prophets foretold of Him as Immanuel, God with us. The Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, whose goings forth have been of old, from everlasting. The Spirit of Jehovah shall rest upon Him, the Spirit of wisdom and understanding, the Spirit of counsel and might, the Spirit of knowledge, and of the fear of Jehovah. Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, and against the Man that is my fellow! The evangelists declare that He is the Son of God, that the only-begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath revealed Him. He said Himself, "I and my Father are one; he that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." The apostles declare that He was God manifested in flesh. They quote of Him such Psalms as say, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever!"

We do not derogate from his humanity when we say that He is more than man. Man as he is does not represent the true humanity. The image of God is defaced, and the image of the evil one has been impressed upon us. But Jesus is truly Man; He, and not one of us, is God's ideal Man. He was unique. He was not born into the world as we are, but by the immediate power of the Holy Ghost. The words He spake were the words of God. The Father was well pleased in Him, and his command has gone forth to all the world, "Hear ye Him." Are we not wanting in reverence, and even in consistency, when we contrast with ourselves, as "the heirs of a splendid inheritance of learning and letters," Him in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and in whom dwells the fulness of the Godhead bodily? What are learning and letters in comparison with Christ, the power of God and the wisdom of God?

It may be said that these words refer to Him in his resurrection glory. Yes, but what He was from Eternity and will be to Eternity, that He was when He was here on earth. To this the Transfiguration bears witness, when the glory of God, which filled the living temple of his body, shone for a moment through the veil of his flesh. A poet has said of the stars:—

Soft they shine
Through that pure shrine,
As beneath the veil of Thy flesh divine
Beams forth the light
That were else too bright
For the feebleness of a sinner's sight.

Union of the Churches.

We have heard a good deal of projected union among the Churches of recent years, and the conferences convened at Grindelwald have brought the matter more particularly under our notice of late. What amount of success will be achieved by these it is yet too soon for us to determine; but that every year seems to make a very considerable amount of ultimate success more probable may be very generally conceded. That their success in any considerable degree may involve a very real danger to our Christian liberties is perhaps not so patent to all; and yet to every thoughtful man, able in any measure to recognise the signs of the times, it must be sufficiently evident.

While we all deplore the divisions of the Church visible, and would hail any arrangement by which they could be terminated, consistent with the conserving of sound doctrine and Christian liberty, humanly speaking it yet seems impossible but that such minor differences should exist. But we are compelled to cultivate and maintain, notwithstanding these, that humbleness of mind and kindly love and sympathy one toward another which God requires of us in his Word. Very much more than mere outward differences (often very unimportant and more apparent than real), we have to deplore the jealousies, heart-burnings, and mutual distrust which undoubtedly exist between different branches or divisions of the Church, and which foster and foment political agitations and all uncharitableness. "If ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another."

There is too much reason to fear that while this is proceeding, a mutual enemy is advancing, and rapidly gaining in power and in influence. It is a striking fact that while the Church and Nonconformists of England are thus seeking a basis of reunion, there is an ever-increasing rapprochement apparent between the former and the church of Rome, while the Pope is even now presiding over a conference in Rome with a view to the reunion of the long-sundered Greek and Roman churches. Hence we see a chain being forged before our eyes, which, if it can be completed, will unite into one vast system or church the whole of Christendom, with ramifications in every country of the world, controlled and directed from Rome, adopting ultimately, in all likelihood, her doctrines and Jesuitical tactics, and animated by her spirit. What this will mean to those who refuse to enter her fold or receive her teaching, those can tell us best who have carefully studied the past, or lived in lands where of the Church of Rome is still felt and feared.

In the Book of Revelation, where we learn the most of what it has pleased God to reveal as to the more immediate future of this world, we have a vivid picture in chap xvii. 1-5, very suggestive, in view of the above, of the splendour of this mighty church or system in the last years of her existence. Her power and might, her riches, the splendour of her vestments, as well as the multitude of her blasphemies, are there set forth, while she is further represented as guiding and controlling the "beast," or world-powers of the day, rendering these entirely subservient to her will and purpose. What will be the condition of the faithful who shall refuse to submit to her sway, and shall cleave unto the Lord, in these days, may be gathered from verse 6, where she is represented as "drunken with the blood of the saints and of the martyrs of Jesus."

We can see, then, in the movements referred to above, one of the most serious dangers which beset us in these last days, and note the marvellously rapid march of events which is dragging along this poor, oppressed, sin-stained, rebellious world, ever nearer to the dark and troublous times which will mark the close of the "Times of the Gentiles," but which we know will also be the throes of the birth of a purer, fairer day, when "He shall come whose right it is," and whose arm alone can quell and silence the overwhelming enemies of the truth, and establish and maintain the world-wide reign of righteousness, justice, and peace. That the perils and persecutions of that time shall utterly fail of their object in depriving even one of the Lord's people of the promised inheritance is manifest from Rev. vii. 9-17, where we are shown in heaven the mighty throng of the redeemed, who, having "come out of great tribulation," now stand for ever in the presence of God, and serve day and night in his temple that blessed One who, through all the fiery trial, has yet brought them safely home. May we have grace given us to be "diligent, that we may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless."

REVIVAL AT BRISTOL.

It will be cheering to many to know that a remarkable spiritual revival has spread in Bristol. A few weeks ago it was stated that at Redlands Chapel, of which Rev. Urijah Thomas is pastor, there had been a large ingathering of souls. A similar report comes from Zion Chapel after a seven days' mission held by Rev. R. Balgarnie. During the mission a large number of special requests for prayer were handed in. The congregations increased every night, and the after-meetings were crowded to the door. Many names were taken of persons professing and anxious to decide for Christ. These for the most part were not outsiders, but young people belonging to Christian families, Bible-classes, and other institutions belonging to the Church.

A meeting was held at mid-day of employés belonging to Messrs. Wills, which was largely attended—indeed, such was the interest awakened that it was deemed advisable for the pastor, Rev. R. G. Davies, to continue the services over the following Sunday, from which a further ingathering is expected.

Dr. Balgarnie begins his next mission at New Barnet on November 10.

Intellectual Spirituality.

The following are extracts from a recent review of a book for young men by a popular writer. We do not name the author or the reviewer, or the periodical in which the critique appeared, because we do not wish to fix attention on the author of the book, but to suggest that the strictures are capable of much wider application. In these shallow and superficial days we are all in danger of forming a conception of spirituality without attaining it; of recommending spirituality without ourselves being spiritual.

It is evidently intended to be a young man's book. Young men are fond of straight speaking, they like unconventional addresses. In this direction it will suit them. But they like earnestness too, they like a man with great convictions. Here the book is not so satisfactory. It stimulates the mind often, but it does not stir the heart. It never makes one feel. Thus it falls far short of being an ideal young man's book. After reading the best of these addresses, the natural remark to make is, "That's very well done," but the heart is never made to throb with noble impulses, caused by the writer's words. Take, for example, the best address in the volume. The teaching is that every man who has done anything in the world has been mad, i.e., according to the world's standard, and that every reform wrought has been wrought by madmen. But the address, unless we are mistaken, will never move the reader to madness. Perhaps that is because we cannot feel that the writer is mad. He says, "The great fault with the Church to-day is that it is not mad enough. There was a time when those who were impassioned by the love of Christ went out to win the world for Christ without fixed salaries. They literally took with them neither scrip nor purse, and they succeeded." In another place he says, "If you are going to be mad you must get it done before thirty." The feeling one has after breathing the atmosphere of these addresses is, that the writer is more than thirty, and that he prefers a fixed salary.

This last seems a somewhat unkind remark; one perhaps which is scarcely fair in the review of a book. It is something like hitting below the belt. But in this commercial age we are all in peril of making merchandise of the things of God; like Lot, of leaving the place where the man of faith abides; of pitching our tent towards Sodom; of sitting in the gate of the doomed city; and then Zoar ("Is it not a little one?"—a little item of self-will); then the cave in the mountains, and the tarnished name for ever.

The reviewer proceeds:—

The general teaching is ethical rather than religious. The young man may safely go to this volume for healthy moral sentiments, but here again it falls short of being an ideal young man's book. No one, we think, would be led to see and feel Christ as a Saviour through reading it. The greater part of it might have been written by a Buddhist or a Mohammedan. We do not condemn this. All true morality is Christian morality, and an address may be truly Christian without the use of Christ's name. At the same time we feel the lack of a living Christ. His name is used often, but He always seems a long way off. Christianity is a system to be "argued out," rather than a Saviour to be realised, a new life in the soul. If Christianity is simply high moral teaching, this is essentially a Christian book; but if it is more, if it is a perfect Saviour abiding in the heart, making the truest manhood possible, we must go elsewhere to find it truly expressed.

To how much of the preaching and teaching and writing of the day will not these sentences apply? And even sometimes when we hear of a living Christ it seems as if his earthly life were meant, rather than his risen and glorified and high-priestly life at the right hand of God.

"There are congregations and preachers who, after a lifetime of talk about Christianity, have not even the glimmering of a conception of what Christianity really means." This is a sweeping assertion, and one we should not like to echo, but we must confess, after a careful and honest reading of this able book, that if we knew a young man who wanted before all things an exposition of Christianity, we should not recommend to him these addresses.

We have not read the book, and know not how far the review is accurate. But as we have said, it is capable of very wide application. This is a day of intellectual, as in the past there have been periods of physical, development. But the inmost part of man's nature, the spirit, in which alone we can worship the Father in spirit and in truth, may be lying as utterly fallow in an age of psychical as of physical activity.

Sabbath-Breaking in India.

A friend acquainted with India, referring to Colonel Hart's Order about Sunday games, mentioned in our issue of October 25 (page 13), assures us that our correspondent made one serious mistake in speaking of the canteen as a place "where facilities are given men to get drunk if they choose." He says:—

The men are allowed to drink there in what is generally understood by "moderation"; any man showing signs of liquor in his manner or person could not and should not be served, and the N.C. officer, always on duty in the canteen to check irregularities, would be punished should he allow men to get drunk, or when drunk to get liquor. That irregularities do happen is quite possible where men love drink, and have no scruple of conscience, for any law may be occasionally evaded. The Government, however, does all it can (short of prohibition) to stop drunkenness, and to discourage, though it allows, moderate drinking.

Having every desire to believe and affirm the best of our Government, whether in India or at home, we gladly give publicity to this more favourable view of the canteen, while reserving to our original correspondent the right of reply or explanation. His view is confirmed, it will be seen, by another correspondent, whose letter is given on p. 23.

From the same quarter, however, from which the above correction comes, we are urged to use every endeavour to get the Order in question brought before Parliament, and, if possible, before Her Majesty. It is the thin end of the wedge, and should call not merely for prayer, but for the most vigorous protest in this country, from which India is governed.

It is quite hard enough for men to lead good lives in India without encouraging open laxity. It is absurd to think that we have had the country for a hundred years and that it should remain for Colonel Hart to have discovered the necessity for a public approval of this flagrant disregard of the Day of Rest. Should not Christian people at home, where there is some strength in the old faith still, make a most energetic protest against this most unnecessary and God-dishonouring Order? It is a challenge thrown down; will no one outside the army who values conformity to the Christian religion accept it?

Col. Hart is an extremely clever man, and a very distinguished officer, but this Order, though seemingly a privilege to the men, and though placing him in the light of a champion of their liberties, can easily be read by one having the key to the situation, as an attack upon Christianity. Let the Order as published be widely circulated and placed in the hands of Christian members of Parliament, and announced to God-fearing English men and women at home, and good will come of it. It should not pass unnoticed. We are surprised at the Indian Commander-in-Chief's weak acquiescence when he might so easily have said that it was not customary with a Christian nation to play games on Sunday, and thus have had the Order cancelled.

A HOME FOR BIBLE WORKERS was dedicated at 55, South Ada-street, Chicago, October 18. There are two houses—one a home for those in charge, if needed, and a larger house, in which about sixty young women can live. The work is intended to be carried on as an arm of the regular Bible work of the city. It has thus far been eminently successful.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

THE ISRAEL OF GOD.

In these last days Science has discovered how much more there is in the material universe than our fathers knew. We have photographed the sun, analysed the moon, and seen millions of worlds with the telescope, which ancient human eyes had not looked upon. Even in coal-tar, which used to be regarded as worthless waste, we find exquisite colours, concentrated sweetness, and other products of utility and value.

But in the Word of God, in which the Creator comes nearer to us than in the material creation, Learning is finding less and less of the presence of God, of the Deity of Christ, of the inspiration of the Spirit. Nay, even among some who are faithful to the Word, there is a tendency to belittle and to depreciate it, to magnify the letter and eliminate the spirit, forgetting that Letter held by, spirit scanted,

Saw the synagogue supplanted.

It is said that there is no such thing as a spiritual Israel. But Israel was the centre of a whole system of ordinance and worship, which is nothing but ritualistic formality, if it has no spiritual meaning. And if the worship have a spiritual significance, so must the worshipper. For the worship was devised for the worshipper, not the worshipper for the worship.

"Israel" is the largest of human names. From Peniel it looks before and after. For Jacob is a son not only of Abraham, but of Adam, and the effects of the Fall are very visible in him, though he be one whom God loved and chose. And the gates of the City bear the names of Israel's twelve tribes.

At Peniel Jacob the supplanter becomes Israel, a Prince of God. The name was given not for any natural or national reason, but to mark a spiritual change, for self was crippled and in his helplessness Jacob denied him-self, and clung to God. His new name was spiritual from the first, and in the fulness of time, Jesus, who Himself is the essential Israel, declared Nathanael, of Cana-in-Galilee-of-the-Gentiles, to be an Israelite indeed, not for any natural or national reason, but because he was without guile, the chief natural characteristic of his father Jacob. If "Israel" commemorates a spiritual victory, and "Israelite-indeed" denotes spiritual character, are we not led on to regard "the Israel of God," as those who walk by the same rule—the new creation in Christ Jesus?

Jacob is Israel; the whole twelve tribes are Israel; the ten tribes as distinct from the two are Israel; the believing people of God are Israel (Rom. ix. 6; xi. 26; Gal. v. 16); Christ Jesus, God's elect servant, is Israel, in whom He has been glorified (Isa. xlix. 3).

There is a people to whom Abraham is a father as pertaining to the flesh (Rom. iv. 1); there is a people to whom he is a father, according to the Spirit of promise (ib. 11; Gal. iii. 29; iv. 29). There is an Israel after the flesh (1 Cor. x. 18); there is an Israel after the Spirit, who, though Gentiles after the flesh, are the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, to whom the promises were made (2 Cor. vi. 17—vii. 1; Gal. iii. 1, 2; iv. 22-31).

I respectfully appeal to beloved brethren, who are lovingly and Scripturally interested in Israel after the flesh, desiring to win them to the obedience of faith in their own Messiah, to consider that if anti-typically and spiritually "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us," then we must anti-typically and spiritually be Israel. For as the paschal lamb was the foundation of Israel's individual and national deliverance, so Christ our Passover is the foundation of our individual and corporate salvation.

Otherwise, must we not revise our hymns, change our habitual utterances in prayer, and re-cast the most spiritual portion of our Christian literature?

LET THEM SEE JESUS.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

The great aim of true Gospel preaching is to make men see Jesus Christ. The minister who is not content to hide himself so entirely behind the cross that his audience shall "see no man save Jesus only," is not called of God to the ministry. The Gospel contains a system of salvation; but it is not the system that saves anybody. Nineteen-twentieths of our average congregations believe the chief propositions of Christianity as much as they believe that Columbus discovered the West Indies. But that faith works no saving change in heart or life. The only saving faith is that which sees Jesus, submits to Jesus, and joins the soul to Jesus.

It joins person to person, the sinner to the Saviour. Christ did not formulate a creed and ask his auditors to subscribe to that creed; his constant call was, "Come unto Me!" "He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life." It was not the Atonement as a glorious doctrine, but Himself as the Divine Atoner, whose blood cleanseth from all sin. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." What a monstrous mistake it is to prepare the most eloquent discourse, or to present the most orthodox discussion of theology in such a way as to project either discourse or discussion in front of the cross, and conceal the crucified Lamb of God.

Paul was careful never to play the theologian at the expense of the Christ preacher. He determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. His own conversion had been produced by a revelation of Christ to him. About the main thing which he tells us of that conversion was that he "saw the Lord in the way," and the Christ thus manifested to him had made a new man of him. So anxious is he that everybody shall understand just what his religion means that he emphatically declares, "I live,

YET NOT I, BUT CHRIST LIVETH IN ME."

Some ministers lament the fewness of conversions under their preaching. May not one cause be that they do not converge all the shafts of their pulpit light upon one point, and that point the Divine, atoning, loving Saviour? People come to church on Sunday—some of them weak and weary, others sorely tempted, others conscience-smitten, and others hungry for comfort. Having made a sad failure in their own attempts, some of them want a power out of themselves to lift them into a better life. Feeling the prick of sin through their own consciences, they desire to be delivered from the dominion of these besetting sins. Others come with aching hearts and long for a comforter; often behind smooth faces are concealed the terrible scars which temptations or trials have inflicted. If all these people could make their desires known, they would cry out,

"WE WOULD SEE JESUS."

Oh, my brethren, is not the chief demand upon our ministry that first, last, and all the time we should be holding up Jesus the Sin-bearer, Jesus the Life-giver, Jesus the Sympathiser and Consoler, Jesus the Intercessor, and Jesus the Centre and Glory of the Gospel of salvation? If we fail in making our congregations see Him, then the most eloquent discourse is a pious sham.

Perhaps there is another cause for the small number of conversions in many communities. It is that men of the world see so little of Christ in the daily lives of those who profess to be his servants and "witnesses." There is no argument for Christianity equal to that which is presented by a pure, honest, and beautiful life inspired by Christ's Spirit. Nothing repels and disgusts the unconverted like the daily contact with those who profess Christianity and manage to make it odious. Dr. Horace Bushnell once said, "We preach too much, and live Christ too little." There are people who go home from church saying, "What a capital sermon that was!" and that is the last of it. They devour sermons greedily with but

VERY LITTLE GROWTH IN GODLY LIVING.

We emphasise that word living. Is it church going, or praying, or Sunday-school teaching, or any one, or even many, modes of special service that is the main duty of Christ's followers? No, indeed. All these good things ought to be done; but the weightier and more vital thing is to live Jesus Christ boldly and beautifully before the world. The best sermon may set forth how to live; but a noble and holy life is the actual achievement. No words that Paul ever sent to Rome or to Corinth have impressed the world more than the "living epistle" in which he copied his Master so grandly every day.

Dr. Bushnell was right. There is more good preaching than good practising. The downward pull of inconsistent Christians during the week counteracts the upward pull of the best discourses on the Sabbath. Jesus Christ demands of us more than a formal confession of Him; He demands conduct, He demands character, He demands the copying of his example. "If ye love Me, keep my commandments." Is this possible? Yes, it is not only a possibility, but a duty, and ought to be a delight. We may, by our Master's promised help, so live that when men see us, they may see Jesus.

BISHOP TAYLOR'S WORK.

At the last conference of the Angola district of his African Mission, Bishop Taylor was able to render a very encouraging report of the previous year's operations. The district extends inland nearly 400 miles, and contains six principal missions, and four sub-stations, manned by twenty-two white missionaries, and six native missionary helpers. The cash values, with no debts, belonging to the six mission stations, representing real estate, buildings, machinery and tools, furniture, merchandise and cash, reached the total of £7805 0s. 4d.

This includes a trust fund of £1619, which is fed yearly by surplus profits. No record is kept of the farming or mechanical industries, though but the commercial and cattle-growing industries for the year show a net profit of £629. Of this amount £470 14s. 4d. was paid out for the household and personal expenses of the missionary workers and forty-six native children in the Mission nurseries. Of the remaining £158 15s. 4d., £43 10s. 10d. was paid into the Trust Fund, and the rest was divided between the deed and tax, cemetery, and contingency funds.

Writing from Loanda on September 13, "just returned from a walk of over four hundred miles among my Angola missions," Bishop Taylor says, as to the nurseries:—"The children are redeemed from heathenism before they are old enough to become heathen, and are being trained as our adopted children for missionary work. The Divine Founder of missions adopted but a dozen disciples for special missionary training. We prize the special nursery training of about for each station much more highly than we do public school teaching, however needful in its own line of service."

The Bishop continues:—"Jesus could send and feed millions of missionaries without the gift of a shilling from anybody, but He wants all his people to share with Him in the personal blessedness of this work. But few of them comparatively can go, though all can send. Yet the healthy growth and effectiveness of the work at the front require that at the earliest moment possible it shall become self-supporting and self-propagating. So this organised work in Angola receives no money from home except the use of the trust fund. We receive money from our patrons for the purchase of new mission sites and farms, and the erection of new mission houses, with tools, implements, etc., required for the early development of self-support, also the outfit and passage of new missionaries from their homes to Loanda, the port of entry; thence their travelling expenses and support are supplied from the before-named sources of supply. The travelling expenses of the presiding elder, in his labours on his district, the travelling and other expenses of the missionaries on account of the annual meeting of the district conference, etc., are paid out of the contingency fund, which is kept up by the appropriation of 2 per cent. of our business profits.

"This work in all its varied details is thoroughly systematised. At 4 a.m. an alarm clock strikes on every station. All not confined by illness are up, washed, and dressed in about fifteen minutes. Then an hour or more is devoted to and the study of the Holy Scriptures, aided by commentaries. Ample time is given for all to unite in singing suitable hymns, witnessing for Jesus, and prayers, often as many as twenty in their turn leading in prayer, some in English, others in Portuguese, and all can pray in Kimbundu, the native language of a vast region of the country, and first reduced to writing and print by my pioneer missionaries in Angola, eleven of whom have not been a day out of the province since their arrival, nine and a-half years ago, and have no thought of being absent a day, until they shall be called from labour to reward.

"This organised work in Angola would live and spread out, and on, until the Millennium, if not another shilling were given to it from any home sources; but with the business footing we have, it would be real economy annually to double the amount of our trust fund, by which, without much extra working expense, we could more than double our net profits, and support year by year double or treble the missionary force at present in the field. Any society sending missionaries to a new field would have to support them from a missionary treasury indefinitely for many years, but to this work in Angola, and on easterly into the Dark Continent, we have only to pay their passage out, and have them hitch on at once to organised assured self-support. Meantime we shall teach our native churches to support their ministers.

OUR MERCHANT MISSIONARIES

were merchants at home before they became missionaries, and are men manifestly holy in heart and life. Many native traders come hundreds of miles to see them, and say, "We have heard of you in our own country, and that you won't cheat us, nor tell us lies, and we want to trade with you."

I have here called attention only to my missions in Angola district, to exhibit, not a theory, but the demonstrable facts of self-supporting missions, growing facts of five years' standing. My missions in Congo district, Cape Palmas district, Sinoe district, Grand Bassa district, and others, are all on the same path, to reach the same goal of self-support. Under God, our heroic brother, Rev. E. H. Richards, is on the march in South-Eastern Africa, opening a line of missions on this same plan of self-support, beginning at Inhambani, and to extend into South Zambesia.

Countless thousands of godly men and women in the United States of America and in Great Britain and her colonies prayed, during an unbroken campaign of thirteen years, from 1862-1875, for "California Taylor," as the humble leader of an extraordinary work of God, extending through the Australian Colonies, Tasmania, New Zealand, South Africa, Ceylon, India, the West India Islands, British Guiana, South America, and in many of the principal cities of England, Ireland, and Scotland, and the Canadas. Where are those praying fathers and mothers? A large proportion of them have gone to their reward in heaven. Where are their sons and daughters? Following the godly example of their parents, I hope. I think if the ministering spirits of those children, "who always behold the face of our Father in heaven," should break the intelligence to those sainted sires and mothers, that, under a special commission from God, to establish self-supporting missions in Africa, is still marching on, and that legions of their children are still praying for the old man, and helping him in his great work, just the same as did their fathers and mothers in the days of their pilgrimage, would not such intelligence, by such messengers, add to the joy of our loved ones there? Pray for the servant of your sainted dead. If you wish to write him, address, care of Rev. Ross Taylor, 150, Fifth-avenue, New York, U.S.A.; or, care of Mr. John Terry, 7, Great Winchester-street, London, E.C.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY. — Thursday, November 29, is the Day of Intercession for Foreign Missions, and the committee of the C.M.S. propose to hold a meeting for prayer on that day at Sion College, from 3 to 5 p.m. In a circular on the subject, after remarks on the work and workers, we read:—"If this Intercession Day is a time of heart-searching, heart-surrendering, heart-pleading, the Lord will answer with abundant blessings both abroad and at home. Sons and daughters, encouraged by thankful parents, will be cheerfully ready to rise and follow their Lord, taking up their cross; parish workers will ask whether the Master does not need them elsewhere, and whether their home places will not in all probability be well supplied after they are gone, and a greater blessing experienced for their going; and those who are bidden to stay at home will freely and joyfully give of their substance to support them that go forth."

WAS MAN ORIGINALLY A BEAST?

By Rev. JAMES GALL.

Since Mr. Charles Darwin placed the theory of evolution on a scientific basis, and traced the genealogy of man to the brute creation, there has been a growing tendency in the public mind to accept his conclusions, and to regard the narrative in Genesis as a mere fiction, and the allusions to it by our Lord and his Apostles as a harmless concession to popular superstition.

So long as this speculation was confined to such men as Mr. Darwin and his followers, who made no profession of Christianity, there was not much danger; but when such a man as Mr. Henry Drummond, a professor of the Free Church College, Glasgow, whose Christianity has never been doubted, but which he has done much to adorn, issues such a book as "The Ascent of Man," which tells us that he was originally a beast, and makes "Natural Selection" take the place of Christ in his elevation, we are confronted with what is really a new religion, and formidable, not so much from its arguments, as from the source from which it comes. What makes it the more dangerous is that while it undermines the foundations of Christianity, it disarms suspicion by assuming towards it the most friendly attitude. He claims to have discovered a new element in evolution, the element of Love, which raises it to the rank of a religion, identical with Christianity. How far it is identical may be judged from the following synopsis of his theory:—

First. Instead of man being made in the likeness of God, he was made in the likeness of a beast. Second. There never was such a person as Adam, and never such an event as the Fall. Third. Man was once a fish, afterwards a beast, then a savage, hunting and fighting up through the Stone, the Bronze, and the Iron ages. Fourth. There was a time when suddenly the beast became possessed of an immortal spirit, capable of holding converse with God, and, unlike his ancestors, will have to stand before the judgment-seat of his descendant, to give account of the deeds done in the body. Fifth. Sin was merely the continuance of the instincts of the beasts. Sixth. There was no need of an atonement or any interference on God's part to enable man to rise.

I have seen several reviews of this book, but none that I have seen goes to the root of the matter, by showing that the conclusion to which the Professor has come

IS A MORAL IMPOSSIBILITY.

Will you allow me a little space in your journal to explain?

Evolution supposes that sin is merely a continuation of the bestial instincts of the lower animals. This, however, is impossible, because sin is not an instinct but a disease. An instinct is a wholesome faculty given by God for the benefit of the animal in which He has planted it. Throughout the animal kingdom we do not find a single instinct that is not given for the preservation or happiness of the animal itself, or the species to which it belongs. I do not say that it is beneficial to other animals, for in some cases it is given for their destruction, but for the animal itself it is always beneficial. A disease, on the contrary, is an abnormal state of the body or the mind, and is not conducive either to the preservation or the happiness of the creature. The question therefore arises: Is sin an instinct or a disease? Is sin conducive to the welfare or happiness of the person who sins? or is it injurious to his welfare or happiness? There can be but one answer. It is a disease, the most loathsome and deadly that ever afflicted humanity. It has been the prolific source of all the miseries and crimes that have made some parts of the earth an Aceldama. Not only does the man himself suffer, but it carries misery all around. Surely evolutionists are not entitled to assume in opposition to the Bible, and in support of a mere hypothesis, without proof, that man who is the crown and glory of creation is an exception to every other of God's works, and that he alone of all his creatures was interpenetrated with a loathsome disease when he came from his Maker's hands. It is thus morally certain that man was created in healthy innocence, and the Bible is proved to be true. The fall of man becomes a well-established scientific fact, however that fall may have taken place. Moreover

THE PROFESSOR'S THEORY IS DISPROVED

by Evolution itself. What is evolution? It is the survival of the fittest. Let us take any animal we choose as the ancestor of man. I would have chosen an anthropoid ape as the likeliest, but no; for some reason which he does not mention, the author tells us that it is not in the line of man's ancestry; so that "an anthropoid ape could as little develop into a man, as could a man pass backward into an anthropoid ape. The analogy might with equal relevancy have been drawn from a squirrel or a sloth." Let us then take the squirrel, for any animal will do: and the first ascent towards man will be its progeny No. 1, which would be more fitted to live than the squirrel. The second ascent No. 2 would be its progeny, more fitted to survive than No. 1. And so on, every new species being more fitted to survive than its predecessor. How is it then that none of them survive, while the squirrel from which they sprang remains, although every one of them was more fitted to survive than the others, through a long succession of new species? But that is not all. We cannot suppose that in each evolution there were only two of the species, a male and a female; their greater prolific power would enable them to multiply and replenish the earth, till they and their ever-increasing number of kindred species would shoulder out their less prolific neighbours, till they became the widespread dominating fauna of the world. Where are they? Neither on the earth above nor in the rocks below is a trace of them to be found. And why? Simply

BECAUSE THEY NEVER EXISTED.

So far as the creation of the lower animals is concerned, the theory of evolution is not inconsistent with Scripture, provided we admit that at every ascent the Spirit of God introduced into the fœtus the new element that was to be evolved, as at the Incarnation. "Let the waters bring forth," and "Let the earth bring forth," are sufficient to cover all that the theory requires. But when it is affirmed that the only thing that God did in the creation of man was done millions of years ago when He created a few minute sacs (Darwin says perhaps only one), into which He breathed a life that enabled them to evolve the whole animal kingdom, including man, without any intervention on his part, it is insulting to reason. Take the firefly as an example among millions. There are at present two great problems exercising the ingenuity of scientific men. The first is how to obtain more than a tenth part of the power lodged in our fuel, which is all that our best steam-engines can obtain. The other is to construct a flying machine able to raise itself in the air by its own power. Mr. Maxim tells us that the reason why we have not succeeded is that we have not tried it on a large enough scale. And yet here is the firefly which has solved both problems, extracting from the fuel the whole power lodged in it, with wings vibrating two hundred times in a second, and the whole contained in an egg not so large as a small pinhead. Yet evolutionists tell us that this was evolved by what they call "natural selection."

(To be concluded.)

MR. NOBLE AT KIDDERMINSTER.

During the past week a series of meetings have been held in the carpet town by Mr. William Noble, which appear to have revivified the temperance cause and produced effects that are bound to be beneficial and lasting. Old temperance men are reconsecrating themselves to the cause, and new converts are asking for protection from their old temptation.

If any of Mr. Noble's addresses could be placed higher in power and eloquence than others, we should select the one delivered on Sunday week in the Town Hall on "Doubts," when he held over a thousand people for over an hour. The Congregationalists of Kidderminster deserve a word of praise for the assistance they gave to Mr. Noble's mission by placing their beautiful Baxter Church and schools at the disposal of the committee, and for assisting in every way to make the meetings a success. The chairman at every meeting was a deacon, which speaks well for the temperance element in the church.

As a fitting conclusion to a very successful mission, Mr. Noble gave to a crowded audience on Tuesday evening his lecture on "John B. Gough." A number of pledges were taken at each meeting, and the opinion is freely entertained that much good has been done.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

On Saturday afternoon last a meeting was held at the Mansion House to commemorate the centenary of the London Missionary Society. The attendance was so large that an overflow meeting was necessary, and this took place at the Cannon-street Hotel. Sir George Williams presided over the main gathering, and bore testimony to the rapid growth and immense value of the work of the Society.

The occasion was one that could not but arouse memories full of interest as to the growth of the Society, while the records of earlier days came to mind with a new significance. On Tuesday, November 4, 1794, eight Evangelical ministers met at Baker's Coffee House, Change-alley, Cornhill, to consider the establishment of a society on a broad basis for sending missions to the heathen, and this resulted in the formation of the L.M.S. The Society has never departed from the broad basis on which it was founded, and during its century of work has sent out more than 1000 missionaries, not reckoning their wives, among them such distinguished men as John Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison (the first Protestant Missionary to China), Medhurst, Ellis, Mullens, Gilmour of Mongolia, and Dr. Mackenzie, of Tientsin.

In pioneer work in lands little known, in translating the Bible, in the preparation of Christian literature and educational manuals, the Society's representatives have always occupied an honourable place. Its chief fields of labour are China, India, South and Central Africa, the West Indies, Polynesia, and New Guinea. The Society has on its present staff 258 missionaries, seventeen of whom are qualified medical missionaries; 1,476 native ordained pastors and evangelists; over 12,000 other native helpers; 94,192 church members; 404,795 native adherents; 1,891 schools; 125,984 scholars; and ten hospitals. The Society never possessed an abler band of agents, or such openings for work, or such promise of success as now. A centenary fund of £100,000 has been opened, £34,000 of which has already been promised.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary of the Society, said that of the eight ministers who founded the Society two were Church of England, two Presbyterian, and the remaining four Congregational. In twenty-five years missions had been established at Sierra Leone, in South Africa, North America, India, Ceylon, and many other places. The Society had not lost the enthusiasm of youth nor the enterprise of its founders. Older missions had been consolidated and extended, and new spheres of work had been taken up. The need for education had been met by the establishment of schools. The first medical missionary went out in 1840, and special institutions had been formed for training native missionaries.

Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe said there was something to stir the hearts of all men in the magnificent romance of missionary labour. All who were Christians should do their utmost to spread the doctrine of Jesus Christ through the length and breadth of the world. Principal J. Oswald Dykes, of the Presbyterian Church of England, spoke of the need for missions; and Rev. Dr. Glover, representing the Baptist Churches, in an eloquent address dwelt on the great changes wrought by missions in spreading education and putting down slavery. But (he continued) European civilisation cursed if it did not bless; it crushed if it did not save. People said, Civilise first and Christianise after; but if they civilised first there was nothing left to Christianise. The only hope for Africa from the curse of slavery and drink lay in Christian missions.

Rev. E. P. Rice, of Chik Ballapur, missionary of the Society, gave an account of the work in India.

RAILWAY MISSION.—The secretary will be glad to hear from any ladies willing to undertake Christian work as voluntary self-supporting workers among our railway men at any of the great railway centres. There are magnificent openings for Gospel work among our railway men, and any lady whose way to the foreign field is not open will find a splendid sphere for Christian service among the railway men who so greatly need a special effort to bring the Gospel to them. An earnest voluntary lady worker is now greatly needed to act as superintendent of the Hastings branch, where there is a beautiful mission hall. Address, the Secretary, Railway Mission, 1, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

DR. DALE'S NEW BOOK.*

Dr. Dale's latest volume on Christian doctrine expounds, "in an orderly and systematic manner, all the principal doctrines of the Christian Faith." The discourses are thoughtful and devout, free—perhaps too free—from dogmatic statements, yet not wanting in definiteness or certainty. Dr. Dale writes as one who knows what he believes and why he believes it. Yet he seeks not to force his convictions on others, but rather to awaken their thought and to guide their inquiry. For this purpose he makes extensive use of the Scriptures, and many readers will feel that the most valuable chapters in the book are those which contain a condensed summary of the New Testament teaching upon the Humanity and the Divinity of our Lord, and the Personality of the Holy Spirit. Upon these themes the Scripture facts and statements are so skilfully marshalled that it is difficult for anyone to read them without having his own conceptions of these truths made clearer.

We are so deeply impressed with the value of these discourses that we regret having to object to any part of their teaching. One thing, however, demands attention. In the chapter on the

the following words occur:—"To whatever human limitations his knowledge of God may have been subjected, there is nothing to suggest that what was hidden from Him lessened the value, or even the completeness, of what He knew; or that He was ever uncertain of his ground" (page 106). We had marked these words as indicating that Dr. Dale, while recognising limitations to which our Lord appears to have subjected Himself, yet believed that upon every subject with which He dealt, He was absolutely infallible. But a lengthy note (pages 286-292) deals with this very question, and makes Dr. Dale's position less satisfactory than we had supposed. The drift of this note may be gathered from a few quotations.

Is it necessary to suppose that all the traditions which we must assume that He (our Lord) accepted in his childhood. . . . were true? . . . Is it any derogation from his Divine greatness and glory to suppose that He may in these particulars have been involved in the intellectual errors of his family as part of the humiliation to which He submitted for our salvation? And if. . . . there was any element of human error, what limits can we set to the possible presence of that error? May we not say that it was not He who was liable to error, but that He accepted, in regions outside the range of spiritual illumination, the defects and limitations of the intellectual condition of the race? (Our italics.)

It will appear to the thoughtful reader that a note like this contains a contradiction of the statement which forms part of Dr. Dale's proof of our Lord's divinity. For, admit that our Lord was "involved in the intellectual errors" of his time, and that we do not know "what limits we can set to the possible presence of that error," then what becomes of the

of his teachings? Who can say where the error ends and where the unquestionable truth begins? It is true indeed that Dr. Dale says, "While vindicating freedom for criticism, I must not be understood as regarding with any confidence all the conclusions on which the more 'advanced' critics of the Old Testament are in general agreement"; yet it does appear to us that he has given away much—far too much—to those whose conclusions he is not prepared to accept.

We would be as modest in criticising Dr. Dale's statements as he is in making them; but we would suggest that in attributing Psalm cx. to David, an instance referred to by Dr. Dale, our Lord was doing more than echoing an opinion current in his days. As Dr. Maclaren has shown in his concluding volume on the Psalms, the whole force of our Lord's argument in Matt. xxii. 41-46 is lost if David was not the author of the words quoted. And are there not other statements of Jesus which have a bearing on all his teaching? For example, to what words does He refer when He says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away"? Or when He says, "I speak not from Myself, but the Father which sent Me, He hath given Me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak" (John xii. 49); and again in his intercessory prayer, "For the words which Thou hast given Me, I have given them" (John xvii. 8), does He not make the Father responsible for all his utterances? If not for all, then for which? Who could undertake to settle a question of such importance? In our judgment Jesus refers to all his teaching, and to allow fallibility in anything is to shake the very foundations on which our faith rests. We submit that these words of Jesus imply that the infallibility of the Father and his own infallibility stand or fall together. The question is one of vital importance.

The real influence and significance of this book do not lie so much in the Discourses, in which Dr. Dale is in substantial agreement with other evangelical teachers, but in the Notes, in some of which he modifies, and even contradicts, the teaching of the sermons. This disagreement is probably the result of Dr. Dale's later reading in NEOLOGIAN CRITICISM.

The Note which regards the story of the Creation of Man as a myth (pages 322, 323) is a case in point. The two sermons, on Man and Sin, to which this Note relates, contain some of the most valuable and practical passages in the volume. Yet even in these we are, in some measure, shocked to read of "those who first constructed and first received" the story of the Creation. We are not prepared to believe that such a story was "constructed" by any persons. Nor is it clear to us, though Dr. Dale asserts it as beyond question, that the first chapter of Genesis "belongs, at least in its present form, to a very much later date" than the second (page 174). These statements in the Discourses themselves prepare the way for the bolder statement made in the Notes.

Unfavourable criticism of a book generally so excellent is distasteful to us, and we gladly turn from criticism to indicate some of the features which we admire. On the doctrine of the Holy Spirit Dr. Dale's Scriptural exposition leaves nothing to be desired. His treatment of the subject of "Sin" is characterised by robustness of thought, keen insight into the workings of the human conscience, and fidelity to Scriptural statement. The complaint so justly urged against some preachers, that they do not make sin appear exceeding sinful, has no application to Dr. Dale. With remarkable skill and destroys some of the excuses which some men make for their sin. Nothing could be better than the following:—

HE REVEALS A MAN TO HIMSELF,

It (i.e. the Gospel of Christ) does not regard human sin as being merely a calamity which appeals to the Divine pity, but as a crime which deserves the Divine condemnation. It does not regard human sin as being merely a disease which requires the exercise of the compassionate skill of the Divine Physician, but as an offence which deserves Divine punishment (page 179).

A little further on we are reminded that "there is sin and there is righteousness in what we are, as well as in what we do." "Human conduct is not a succession of isolated acts, it reveals certain permanent moral qualities which constitute what we call character." "An habitual liar is a liar, not only when he is actually telling a lie, but before and afterwards; while he is silent he is a liar as well as when he is speaking falsely, for in his very life there is an absence of reverence for the authority of truth" (pp. 201, 202).

One other quotation referring to those who, against their own conviction, reject the gift of God's grace deserves notice.

The man knows that he ought to receive the grace and to submit to the authority; but, at the very centre of his life, there is a hostile force which resists the authority and rejects the grace. He is conscious that it is he himself, and not another, that resists and rejects. . . . What must be the malignity of the sinfulness which refuses this wonderful redemption—a redemption achieved by the incarnation, the death, and the resurrection of God's eternal Son. He says that he "cannot" receive the Divine grace, and that he "cannot" submit to the Divine authority. "Cannot"—and yet, while he pleads that he "cannot," he is conscious that this is the supreme and damning proof of his guilt (page 209).

* Christian Doctrine. By R. W. Dale, LL.D. (Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.)

THE B. AND F. BIBLE SOCIETY.—A consignment of Congo New Testaments was made by the committee some time ago, and the translator, Rev. W. H. Bentley writes:—"All the New Testaments which have come to hand have been taken up at once, and a number of our boys here have worked specially for their copies, which are thus already paid for before they have arrived."

HOUNSLOW SOLDIERS' HOME.—Miss C. V. Meyers, who has been working this garrison town for over three years, has felt strongly the need of a Home and Institute for soldiers. This she has been at length enabled to open. Cols. Philips, Thompson, and Sandwith, and Rev. A. E. Bull, who were among the speakers at the opening, expressed their thankfulness that such a Home had at last been provided. Under the present superintendence it is expected to be a centre of earnest personal effort. The address is the Soldiers' Home, White House, Hounslow.

CONFERENCE AT STRATHPEFFER.

By a Correspondent.

When in February last a tentative conference of Free Church ministers was held in Forres, those present resolved to organise a second on a wider scale to be held at Strathpeffer on October 22-25. In the interval communications reached the committee from various quarters, cordially approving of what was proposed, and suggesting that the scope of the meetings should be extended so as to include laymen as well as ministers. The committee did not see its way clear to make the suggested changes on this occasion, but the existence of a desire for the change clearly indicates that there are many in the North who long for such spiritual help and stimulus as may be expected from such meetings.

For the meetings at Strathpeffer, Macgregor's Hotel was secured; and if home comforts can add to the success of any gathering, this ought to be more successful than most. Everything possible was done for the comfort of the members and of friends who attended one or more meetings. The gathering was both large and representative. There were ministers present from Caithness and Sutherland in the north, from Skye in the west, and from Moray in the east. The meetings were presided over by men who are representatives of various localities, and whose presence there may do much to remove the prejudices which in many quarters undoubtedly exist against "Keswick meetings."

There were no papers read, nor were there formal addresses, except by those who presided, but there was much earnest and interesting conversation. Life in the Spirit and walk in the Spirit gave the keynote for one of the most interesting discussions to which we have had the pleasure of listening. A summary of it is impossible, but the line of discussion was as follows:—Does "Life in the Spirit" mean spiritual life without active spiritual work—a kind of dormant spiritual existence? Or, does it mean what we understand by ordinary Christian life? If the latter, then does "Walk in the Spirit" mean something more? A fuller possession, or higher life, which is within our reach if we seek it by absolute surrender? Such a subject could hardly fail to be intensely interesting anywhere, but much more in the Highlands, where many of the ministers are supposed to be rigid Calvinists. As the discussion proceeded, and views were compared freely, it was found that what differences existed were more in forms of expression than in substance, and that practical unanimity prevailed.

Another meeting was devoted to "Good Success," and all present felt that from such gatherings men returned to their work much strengthened and ready to take up their duties with renewed energy. To succeed, one must have organisation, method, hard and long-continued work; but these in themselves can never bring permanent lasting spiritual fruit. To ensure that, and have good success therein, the first and chief preparation must be within ourselves.

Altogether, the meetings were a signal success; so much so that the Strathpeffer Conference may in future be looked forward to as a permanent factor and a growing power in the Highlands. The next meeting will be held, God willing, in October, 1895.

NEW FOREST GIPSY MISSION.

By the kind permission of Mrs. F. Logan, a drawing-room meeting was recently held at Bournemouth, presided over by Rev. F. E. Molyneux, vicar of Bransgore, who, having a large gipsy population in his parish, could speak from personal knowledge as to the value and importance of this Mission.

Mr. Bullen gave an interesting account of work done by his wife and himself amongst this wandering people, who frequent various parts of the Forest during the greater part of the year. He spoke of the difficulties of teaching owing to the migratory habits of the people, but the Gospel was being better understood, and efforts of a definite spiritual character were appreciated by these wanderers. Help of a material kind is frequently supplied by Mrs. Bullen in the form of a blanket or other necessaries in maternal cases, thus bringing some brightness into their life and surroundings.

Clothing, simple illustrated books, cards, primers, or subscriptions will be gratefully accepted. Parcels may be sent to Holmsley station (L. and S.W.R.); or Heathfield Farm, Bransgore, Ringwood, Hants.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 11.—MATTHEW VII.

Our Attitude towards Man (1-6).—There is no harm in forming conclusions about each other. But Jesus condemns the incessant search for motes. We are all apt to fix on faults and overlook virtues, and considerations of motive and circumstance which, if properly weighed, would lead to different conclusions. Our criticism shows that we are conscious of the faults in ourselves which we condemn in others. Their presence within makes us quick to detect them. As we treat others, they will treat us. (3) Let us more often consider the heavy beams that lie in our character and obstruct our estimates of men and causes. (4) Do not be a blind oculist. Only those who have passed through deep experiences of deliverance can deliver others. (6) The utmost mercy may yet perceive men to be as dogs and swine. So our Lord was silent before Herod and Pilate.

Our Attitude towards God (7-12).—These promises are true of the spiritual realm. God admits us to his secret treasures, and says we may have what we will. But there are blessings which are not to be had for a single asking or seeking. There are devils that only go out after prayer and fasting. Let us understand what Jesus meant by receiving, finding, entering the open door. (9) We may argue from man's love to God's, always remembering that his infinite love only gives good things. He never gives stones or serpents. (12) We can afford to be generous with such a Father. What we count our rights are the rights of others: let us respect them.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 12.—MATTHEW VIII.

Impurity (1-4).—Divine words were followed immediately by Divine acts. The leper recognised a purity in Jesus which would antidote all uncleanness; his only question was as to Christ's willingness. Never doubt that with Jesus the cans and wills are co-extensive. The true Priest can touch defilement without being defiled. He can make thee clean at this moment. Then, emancipated soul, flee away to freedom and song (see Lev. xiv. 4).

Impurity and Disease (5-17).—The centurion had a deep religious nature, that attracted him to the Jews, on account of their religion; generosity in building a synagogue; solicitude for his servant; faith in Christ's power to exercise the same authority over disease as himself over soldiers; humility, "not worthy." The centurions of the New Testament are a remarkable group. If you would secure obedience, you must learn to obey. To exercise the power of a force, obey the law of the force. Oh, to be Christ's body-servant, doing things for Him. The hardiest faith is not found where conditions are most propitious. (13) Our faith is the measure of blessing. It is only as we act in obedience that we discover all we have received. (15) Christ saw, touched, welcomed her ministry, in the strength of which He was able to bless multitudes. How thronged his audience-chamber perpetually is! But in healing others, he always suffers Himself. Virtue goes out of Him. By his keen sympathy He bears what He cures.

Dispositions (18-27).—Christ repels the impulsive; incites the hesitating and halting; calms the troubled. He was homeless, that we might have mansions; sorrowful, that we might have joy; willing to forego sleep and breast storms, that we might have peace. The winds and sea of your life shall presently hush themselves, beneath his word.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 13.—MATTHEW IX.

Christ's Power to Forgive (1-8).—Sin lies at the root of suffering. In this case there may have been some special connection. How inventive and ingenious is human love. The whole five were animated by a faith that opened the stores of Christ's heart. It was as easy for Him to say the one sentence as the other, but the power that accompanied his utterance in the physical sphere showed that there was equal power in the spiritual. They were right: He either blasphemed, or was the Son of God. Mark that title, "Son of Man" He was the last Adam, the Second Man.

Matthew and his Feast (9-17).—Levi indicates his priestly descent. He had lost all self-respect to become the abhorred instrument of the Roman Government, collecting dues on all merchandise that crossed the lake. Our Lord sees veins of gold and gems of great value in most unlikely places. It is where men need Christ most, He is found. When souls yearn for love, He becomes their Bridegroom. Wherever his Gospel enters, it works within after its own fashion. New is undressed cloth. Skin bottles, when old, become dry, and crack. So the forms of the old dispensation.

A Cluster of Miracles (18-34).—No grief appeals to Christ in vain. He always arises to follow. The woman's faith was imperfect. She believed there was virtue in his dress, as some poor ritualist in his crucifix, she was selfish enough to care only for healing, not for the Healer; she was full of fear. But her trembling touch won from Jesus the boon she needed. The incident at first fretted, but afterwards helped, Jairus. (27) Similar sorrows make men consort. They recognised Jesus as Messiah. His question awakens further faith. It is blessed to meet his appeals with "Yea, Lord." Note the unobtrusiveness of the divinest service. (32) Dumbness is often enough due to Satan's thraldom. Oh, that all the dumb tongues of the saints were unstopped, so as to utter the praises of Emmanuel!

The Needs of the People (35-38).—A new chapter in Christ's history opens at this place. To the eye of Christ, the people seemed like a harassed flock. Fainted might be better rendered "thrown down," as if the sheep could not move another step. We must behold; compassionate; pray; do our best to send out labourers; and go ourselves, even to a cross, that we may save.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14.—MATTHEW X.

The Mission of the Apostles (1-5).—Pray for labourers, and you will be chosen as a labourer. Begin as a disciple, you will become an Apostle. Christ never sends on a mission without providing requisite power. These men were various as the stones in the New Jerusalem, on which their names were inscribed, but each served a distinct purpose. There is no knowing what Christ will do through those who are yielded wholly to Him.

Marching Orders and Assurances (6-15).—The Divine order is—to the Jew first. The kingdom of heaven is the proclamation to men that God has anointed Jesus as King, and the demand to yield Him homage, and accept his code. (8) The twelve, in their beneficent miracles, bear the signet-ring of the King. (9) There was some modification of these rules after, when their sphere was extended beyond Palestine (Luke xxii. 36). But the Gospel is meant to be self-supporting. The missionary should be a herald, giving his message and passing on. Let the native Christians provide for the maintenance of their own church-life.

Meritable Suffering and Compensation (16-42).—The raw flesh will always smart when salt is rubbed in. The whole world has sought to bar the progress of the Church. And the conflict will enter every home in which a disciple of Jesus is found. (23) When your work is clearly finished, go elsewhere. (25) The more we resemble Christ in character, the more we shall be treated as He was. Oh, why do you court beds of down, when He trod the way of the cross? But, on the other side, there is the peace that comes back again, there will be the public recompense before assembled worlds, there is the indestructibility of spiritual qualities, the Father's Spirit speaking in the heart, the Father's care hovering over the life, the being counted worthy of Christ, the finding of the secret of life, the identification with Christ, so close and intimate, that He will accept every welcome given to his servant as for Himself. Go over the chapter carefully, and count up these compensations.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 15.—MATTHEW XI.

The Voice of Vindication (1-19).—John's faith had faltered, consequent on the long depression of the prison, his apparent forsakenness, the Lord's delay to establish the Kingdom. Where is the Messiah's face or fire? The best answer to doubt is the manifestation of Christ's power and love in dealing with human need. These miracles are still taking place throughout the world. (7) These questions needed no reply. All knew how far removed such considerations were from the Baptist's heart. His characteristics were heroic firmness and indifference to material ease. (11) A child on a mountain can see farther than a giant in the valley. (12) This is a lament, that men had thought to right the world by violence rather than by the cross (14; Mal. iv. 5, 6). (16) Men are fickle. Live thou to please God and do his work.

The Voice of Upbraiding (20-24).—The Judge weeps as He pronounces the doom of those that had rejected Him. They would have crowned Him King, but refused to repent (John vi. 15). They had not persecuted Him, but had not accepted. Indifference to Christ is the damning crime of men.

The Voice of Thanksgiving (25-27).—He answered some voice of God speaking in his heart. The wise are they who trust, the babes who mistrust, their intellectual eminence and acumen. The child-heart shall see open-eyed into the mysteries of heaven. (26) At times we can only say "Yes, Father," to God's dealings (see R.V.). (27) The Spirit reveals the Son, and He the Father. Christ must be Divine if only God can know Him.

The Voice of Pleading Mercy (28-30).—Labour covers the active, heavy-laden the passive side of life. The invitation is two-fold—to commit and submit, to come and bow under the yoke, which is the Father's will revealed in daily Providence or in the Word. Meekness and lowliness, submission and obedience, are the secrets of the blessed life.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 16.—MATTHEW XII.

Christ's Sabbath (1-13).—How poor Christ must have been! The Pharisees were always on his track, on Sabbath and week-day alike. Christ taught that ceremonial obligations must subserve a higher law, and illustrated it first by the case of David, secondly by the hard work done in the temple on Sabbath-days. And where He was there was the temple. Could the meek and lowly one have made such a claim had He not been conscious of his Deity? (9) This poor man seems to have been used as a bait to draw out Christ's compassion, and then entrap Him. But He taught that legal observance must give way before personal necessity and compassion for others. (13) When Christ gives power, we must immediately use it, though not vividly conscious of it.

Christ's Unobtrusiveness (14-21).—The true work seeks not the notice of men, but the accomplishment of saving, helpful ministry. The work is its own reward. Note the characteristics that are dear to God. Bruised reeds are souls that have been trampled upon. Smoking flax, those from whom the better life has nearly expired. These were Christ's chosen materials for the basis of his kingdom.

The Gravity of Christ's Replies (22-46).—He spoke always from the standpoint of eternity. Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost is to deny our convictions of God's truth for selfish and worldly ends. It cannot be forgiven, because it petrifies the conscience. (39) Spiritual unfaithfulness is adultery. (40) How clear this prevision of his death. (40) Rather, large fish. A shark can easily swallow a man. (44) It is not enough for Satan to go out. We are never safe till Christ come in to garrison and keep the heart.

The Family of Christ (46-50).—Mark tells us that they desired to prevent his further collision with his foes. It was mistaken interference. We may be in close affinity with Jesus, if we live like Him to do his Father's will.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17.—MATTHEW XIII.

The Sower (1-23).—The varying results were due not to the seed, which was in every case identical, but to the ground. There are four variations. The path, trodden by many feet. The stony, i.e., a slight superficial soil with rock beneath. The inability of the land to bear corn and thorns, and the successful conflict by which the latter crush out the former, representing in this so well the effect of anxiety with the poor, and of wealth with the rich. We must hide his Word in our heart. (11) Parables veil truth for those who are satisfied with the story, and do not penetrate to its hidden depths.

The Tares (24-43).—This was a species of rye grass, which, in its earlier stages, closely resembles wheat. Professors and possessors are closely mingled in this world. But God will reveal his own. Satan and his evil angels never sleep. Let us beware of them.

Mustard Seed and Leaven (31-33).—The world is Christ's field. His kingdom grows from insensible beginnings. Bigness is not greatness. Beware of each speck of the leaven of sin, cherish each grain of holy impulse.

The Net (47-50).—This restless, stormy world is a sea. The preaching of the Gospel attracts many who will one day be rejected. Are we good, through living union with the Righteousness of Life of Jesus?

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, NOV. 18.

The Sermon on the Mount.—Luke vi. 20-31.

Golden Text.—Verse 31.

The fullest account of this sermon is given by Matthew (v.-vii.). It was delivered immediately after the appointment of the twelve apostles. A declaration of the principles and characteristics of his kingdom seemed necessary then. Our Lord addressed his disciples (20), but with the view of making them his messengers to the people whose needs moved Him to sympathy.

The Beatitudes (20-26) describe the persons whom our Lord invites and welcomes into his kingdom, in contrast with their adversaries. The blessing belonging to the one is made all the greater in contrast with the woes pronounced on the other. Matthew gives eight beatitudes (3-10). Luke only mentions four. Of these four, the first three describe the condition for entering the kingdom, while the fourth (22), which refers to persecution, marks the transition to the woes upon the persecutors.

Matthew describes more particularly those who are blessed. Not all the poor—the hungry—the mourners; but those who are consciously poor in spirit, whose mourning is in consequence of their sin and need, and whose hunger is for righteousness. Emptiness, conscious guilt, utter inability to remedy our condition, self-abasement—these are the points of contact between us and the Saviour.

The contrast to these conditions is described in the woes that follow. The full, the self-satisfied, remain unblessed. Such was the Pharisee in the parable (Luke xviii. 10-14); such were the Laodiceans (Rev. iii. 17, 18). Such are all who know not their sin, nor their need of a Saviour. Consider whether the beatitudes or the woes apply to you.

Note how differently these are regarded by men. Whom our Lord pronounces blessed the world hates and persecutes (22). Does such treatment destroy their blessedness? (see Acts v. 41). And those on whom Jesus pronounces a woe the world applauds (26).

These beatitudes warn us against seeking happiness in mere circumstances; what a man is determines his joy or sorrow.

The Law of Love is the theme, not only of the remaining verses of our lesson (27-31), but occupies almost the whole of the sermon to verse 45. The golden text is the brief and concise expression of this new law. It has been called the Golden Rule. It contrasts with the spirit of retaliation, which says, "Do to others as they do to you." It exceeds even the teaching of the Rabbins, "What is disagreeable to thyself do not do to thy neighbour." It summarises the practical precepts which precede and follow it.

The manifestation of this spirit of love is described actively (27-28), and next passively (29-30).

In its active form what does it mean? That our treatment of those who injure us is to be regulated not by a desire for self-protection, much less by a spirit of revenge, but by consideration for them. He who commits a wrong against another does a greater wrong to himself. How can we undo the injury he has committed against himself? Pity for him, and prayerful effort for his good should be our answer to his ill-treatment of us. Such is the teaching of Paul (Rom. xii. 20-21), and such was the practice of our Lord himself. A godly man, on reading such counsel as this, exclaimed, "Either this is not true, or we are not Christians." It is only as Christ lives in us that such counsels can be obeyed.

In its passive form, it means that love is to be long-suffering (1 Cor. xiii. 4). No limits can be set to the endurance of love. "The natural heart thinks it does a great deal when it respects a neighbour's rights Jesus here describes a charity which seems to ignore its own rights.—Godet." Thus Christ conquered. He yielded to his enemies—to death—to Satan, and by yielding obtained a glorious victory over all.

Illustrations.

When Dr. Duff read verse 27 to a number of Hindoo youths, the impression produced was so deep and intense that one of them exclaimed "Oh, how beautiful, how divine! This is the truth."

"What can Jesus do for you now?" said one to his slave whom he was flogging. "Him teach me to forgive you, Massa," was the reply.

Peter Miller, a Baptist pastor, walked sixty miles to Philadelphia to intercede with General Washington for the life of a man just sentenced to death. He could plead nothing in his favour, but had to say, "I have not a greater enemy living than that man." The General granted the pardon; and Miller at once walked another fifteen miles to stay the execution. The condemned man was being led to the scaffold, and seeing Miller, he said, "There's old Peter Miller. He has walked from Ephrata to have his revenge gratified in seeing me hung." Miller produced the pardon, and secured his enemy's release. Was not that the best kind of revenge?

OLD CLOTHES.

I daresay you will think this a very funny subject to talk about, and not at all interesting. But if you will reflect for a moment or two, you will probably remember that "old clothes" have filled a very prominent place in the history of our own country.

When Alfred the Great was defeated by the Danes, he was glad to conceal his dignity, and under the protection of "old clothes" found a place of refuge with a cowherd, where, tradition informs us, he was scolded by the good man's wife for letting the cakes burn. When James the Second abdicated, we are told that the barbarous Judge Jeffreys, filled with fear for his own safety, disguised himself in "old clothes," and attempted to leave the country, but was captured by the enraged populace, and died soon after in the Tower of London. Under the friendly covering of "old clothes," Charles was glad to hide his royalty, while with bill in hand he pretended to cut faggots after his defeat at the Battle of Worcester.

And turning to the Bible, we also find that "old clothes" find a place in its pages. It was chiefly through the artifice of "old clothes" that the Gideonites imposed upon Joshua, and led him to make a treaty of peace with them.

Now, why did people resort to such means when they wished to get out of difficulties? There is a very interesting incident in the life of Samuel which will, I think, give us the true answer. You remember that Samuel was sent by God to Bethlehem to see Jesse, in order that he might anoint one of his sons to be King in the place of Saul. When Samuel reached Jesse's house, he had not the least idea which son it was to be; and so, as soon as Eliab came in, who, I suppose, was a fine-looking fellow, he at once concluded that he was to be Israel's future king; and there is no doubt that Samuel would have anointed him and not David if the Lord at that very moment had not spoken to him. "But the Lord said unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature, because I have refused him; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

And so, because men judge by "the outward appearance," "old clothes" have become a refuge for the wealthy when they wish to escape from danger or capture, like the men you have been reading about. But after all, this is a wrong standard, for many persons who are good and noble-hearted are condemned on account of their poverty, which compels them to wear "old clothes." When you see a boy with a suit that does not fit him well, it may be because his parents are poor, and therefore cannot afford to buy him a new one, say to yourself, "After all, this is only the outward appearance."

James Garfield, who from a canal boy became President of the United States, made headway against great difficulties, mainly because he was not ashamed of "old clothes." Just before he started for the Chester Seminary, his mother said to him, "I wish you had a better suit of clothes, James, but we shall have to make these do, I guess"; to which the sturdy lad, free from pride, replied, "Good enough, anyway." What a suit it was, and the only one he had; trousers were coarse, far outgrown, and reached only half-way down to the tops of his boots. They were nearly out at the knees, but his mother skilfully repaired them. His waistcoat was much too short, and the whole was completed by a well-worn coat, the sleeves of which only reached a little below the elbows.

The boy who likes nuts does not trouble himself about the "outward appearance" of the shells, but is intent on the kernels; and so a new hat, or dress, or apron, or suit, is after all only the shell, only the outside, whose value is very little compared with the body, which should be "the temple of the Holy Ghost." Do not be dissatisfied because your hat is not so modern as some girls wear; enough that it answers the purpose for which it was made; do not fret because you are not clothed in gay apparel, but remember that "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit" is very much better.

Looking at the outside, at the mere surroundings of things and persons, often imposes heavy burdens and hard conditions, and spoils simplicity of manner, and turns life into a struggle which is hard to bear, in order that a great show may be made of dress or of furniture. And it will be well for your peace of mind, when you are tempted to think of outside things, to remember that they will soon become "old clothes."

When the Lord Jesus Christ came into this world on his mission of mercy and love, He was rejected because of his lowly position. "Is not this the carpenter's son?" said they. But God, who "looketh on the heart" and careth not for the outward conditions, said, "This is my well beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

The clothes may be good, but the heart may be bad; far better to wear an old dress which covers a "new heart" than to be dressed in fine things with the heart unrenewed; far better to be concerned about being made into "a new creature" by the Saviour, and have "a new song" put into the mouth, although one has to wear "old clothes," than have new things to wear, with a soul that is "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked."

C.M.S. MEDICAL MISSIONS.

Many of our young readers may not know that the Church Missionary Society has twenty-five medical missions, two of which are in charge of qualified natives; two are for awhile not occupied on account of the lack of men, and the remaining twenty-one are in charge of twenty-seven medical men, all of whom have British qualifications. The Committee of the C.M.S. Medical Mission Auxiliary Fund have formed a juvenile branch, the object of which is to form local associations to interest children, and collect money for the support of beds and cots in the C.M.S. Mission Hospitals. Missionary boxes and collecting cards for the juvenile branch are issued; also a tiny magazine, which will be sent free to collectors, and will contain accounts of the different beds and cots. The cost of supporting a bed is £10 per annum, and a cot £6 per annum.

The central secretary of the juvenile branch, Miss Ware, 13, Stafford-terrace, Kensington, W., will be glad to hear of any lady willing to become a local secretary.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

Transient as the hues of morning,
Earthly forms like shadows pass—
Forms the fairest, life adorning,
Fade and wither like the grass.
As I view my vanished history,
How the lonely spirit grieves,
For it tells of trial and mystery,
Buried hopes and faded leaves.

Though the sad heart droops in anguish,
Jesus notes the silent tear;
Though in suffering I languish
Faint and weary, God is near.
Though the storm-clouds loom above me
And the chill winds round me moan,
Need I murmur? He will love me,
Making all my cares his own.

Though the furnace-fires surround me,
Jesus walks amid the flame;
Darts of hell can never wound me
While I trust his precious Name;
"Persecuted, not forsaken,"
Trusting God whate'er befall,
He my case has undertaken—
He will bring me through it all!

The Dead Czar & his Successor.

The days of national isolation have passed for ever. So closely knit are the peoples of the world that no great bereavement can happen anywhere on the planet without a regret and a mourning that are universal. So the whole civilised world stands reverently and sympathisingly around the bier of the dead Czar. Britons are specially interested in the fortunes of the Russian dynasty, for our own Royal house is already kin to it by marriage ties, and another link will soon be added. It was fitting, therefore, that our Heir Apparent and his consort should have joined the circle of mourners at Livadia.

Now that Alexander III. has gone to his account, the Press are recording his good deeds, and extolling the most attractive sides of his character. Regarding him as a man, a husband, and a father, the chorus of praise is unanimous. As a ruler, and as the greatest autocrat of his time, the verdict is much less harmonious. No esteem for his individual qualities can blind us to the unhappy persecutions of Stundists, and of the Semitic people, that have marked and marred the later years of his reign. Possibly we may have looked for too much from him. The most benevolent despot cannot always ensure that his will shall be obeyed. Yet we are told, on all sides, that for years past the Czar has been the keeper of the peace of Europe. We believe it is largely true, and the fact will help to embalm his name in the memory of every lover of international peace and concord.

How comes it that such a true lover of his kind did not use his unique powers and opportunities towards the internal peace, the religious freedom, and the true prosperity of his own vast empire? The real answer, probably, is that he suffered, as do many humbler men, from the excess of his good qualities. In religious matters he appears to have been severely orthodox, according to the Russian idea of that abused word. It is charitable to suppose that in the measures which he sanctioned for the suppression of all faiths unblessed by the State, he verily thought he was doing God service. It is hard to conceive of such an attitude in days when the New Testament is such an open book. But on no other supposition can we even begin to understand the Imperial action toward the loyal, peace-loving, Christ-worshipping people known as Stundists. There is no doubt that in an empire so vast as that over which a Czar rules, most of the administration must be left to inferior officials. This is especially the case in a country like Russia, where autocracy is triumphant, and the rights of the common people are neither recognised nor incarnated. Still, the head of the machine is expected to supply its guiding principles, and the late Czar cannot be held guiltless of the crimes of Torquemada.

"The king is dead; long live the king." Even in the midst of the national obsequies there has been in St. Petersburg a day of rejoicing at the proclamation of the new Czar, Nicholas II. His brief imperial manifesto has found a place for these welcome and hopeful words:—"In the presence of the Most High we record the solemn vow always to make our sole aim the peaceful development of the power and glory of our beloved Russia, and the happiness of all our faithful subjects." A shrewd political observer has expressed the view that the Princess Alix of Hesse, to whom the young Czar is espoused, is a woman of strong character, and will be likely to exert a powerful influence over her husband. As she is closely allied to many European Courts, her marriage with the Czar may prove one more pledge of the continuance of the peace of Europe. To that hope all Christian hearts will utter a fervent amen. Who knows but she has come to the seat beside the throne, providentially, for such a time as this?

Bits from New Books.

PREACHERS AND DOUBTERS.*

There is scarcely a form of avowed unbelief that is not the precipitate of unavowed unbelief, and few forms of the latter that were not at first simply doubts, and few doubts that do not arise from difficulties. If, then, our positive teaching takes shape in our minds, with the difficulties it may suggest steadily in view, and if, in the resulting discourse, we meet, without saying so, those difficulties, we shall have helped the doubter in particular; while the congregation as a whole will have been helped also, and will feel, what congregations greatly like to feel, a sense of thoroughness, power, and mastery in the preacher. It is sometimes said that it is enough that the light should shine; the darkness will go away of itself. Yes, provided the light shines into and not simply over the dark places. Sometimes reflectors are needed for this. But it is enough to turn the light into dark hearts, no need to tell them they are dark. The incoming light will make them conscious of that.

THE APOSTOLIC EPISTLES.†

When Paul had founded churches, he instinctively followed the custom of his people and the example of the other apostles, by writing to these communities when he could not visit them. A letter like that of James, and a series like those of Paul, were felt to be even more effective means of edification than spoken addresses, as they could be preserved; and they were hence greatly valued. Paul himself, indeed, set their authority as high as his spoken words (2 Thess. ii. 2-15; iii. 14), and required them to be read before the assembled churches (1 Thess. v. 27); while some were designed as "circular letters," to be sent to a number of churches, one after the other (Col. iv. 16; 1 Cor. i. 2; 2 Cor. i. 1). The letter to the Ephesians, for example, and even that to the Romans, appears to have been intended for this general perusal. The Sunday after the receipt of such an apostolic missive would, therefore, be a red-letter day in the little communities, nor would the interest in such correspondence cease with a single reading. Preserved by a special official, it would be read time after time as a sacred treasure, yielding permanent instruction and comfort.

GETTING AND LOSING.‡

Perhaps I speak to some who are just about to choose for themselves a business or profession. Take care lest you fall into the same pit as Lot. Before you turn your face to Sodom and Gomorrah—to the promising situation in London or Glasgow—learn about something more than the well-watered plain. There may be a good wage and better prospects, but if they are only to be had at the price Lot paid for them, you had better break stones on the road-side. Nobody will misunderstand me, I hope, if I say that there are some professions in life in themselves honourable enough, yet for some so beset with dangers, that they will do well to think, not twice only, but twenty times before they embark in them. It is not every young man, e.g., who ought to think of becoming a commercial traveller. I am casting no reflections on a large and estimable body of men; but I know of what I speak, and those who best know the peculiar temptations of life "on the road" will bear me out when I say that there are many young men, fitted perhaps in all other respects, whose moral fibre is unequal to the strain which such a life puts upon it. Take care that you do not risk "the shire" for the sake of "the hundred." If you make your choice as Lot made his, you will pay the same penalty. God help us to be wise before the fiery hail of his judgment is about our ears!

And you who are already in business, are you "getting in the hundred and losing in the shire"? What about your advertising, for instance? Is it honest advertising, or is it what we call "puffing"? You shop-keepers, Christ wants to look at your window-bills and your circulars. Let us spread them out here before Him in church, and then sing our hymns and offer our prayers. And as to the things you sell, would it trouble you if you knew that only last night He stood among your customers: you served Him across the counter? Are you offering nothing to the least of these his brethren you would be ashamed to offer Him? I judge no man; let every man judge himself. And if neither Christ nor your own conscience condemn you, who am I that I should sit in judgment over you? But this I say to you, that if your grocer's licence, or your drink shop, or your brewery shares, or your transactions on the Stock Exchange are making you uneasy, and you are trying to hush the barking of conscience with this sop, "There's money in it; there's money in it," then beware lest thy money and thy business and thou perish together, and thou lose both the hundred of the life that now is, and the shire of that which is to come.

GLASGOW YOUNG MEN.

The Y.M.C.A. of Glasgow had a most successful anniversary last week. A host of friends, fully representative of all sections of the community, sat down to tea in St. Andrews Hall, and a very happy and lively social hour was spent. For the subsequent public meeting the great hall was crowded, with Lord Overtoun in the chair, and many influential citizens in attendance.

The report submitted by Mr. W. Oatts, the secretary, showed a vast amount of effort, well sustained throughout the year, for the welfare of young men. The membership of the united Associations has increased by 589, and now numbers 9946. Fellowship meetings, educational classes, Gospel work, temperance and purity effort have all been vigorously maintained.

The speeches were full of interesting matter, worthy of the occasion. Lord Overtoun, as ever, was fresh and forceful. He had some happy reminiscences of the London Jubilee meetings, and then he dealt earnestly with the great import of work among young men, who are soon to be the leaders of the world's thought and work. The Lord Provost was hearty in his commendation, and very candid in his advice to young men as to their companionships. Mr. Charles Fermaud, of Geneva, and Rev. Egerton Young, of Canada, held the attention of the vast throng as they discoursed on the special matters relating to their respective spheres of life work. Altogether the gathering was full of inspiration and go, that must prove a stimulus to the Glasgow workers among young men.

MR. HENRY LAKIN is now concluding a mission at Red Lion Hill, East Finchley. He earnestly desires that his many Christian friends will plead for him and for real, definite conversions to God during this special effort.

THE LATE

SIR THOMAS McCLURE, BART.

THE Christian merchant and gentleman whose portrait accompanies this brief life sketch was born in Belfast during the early years of the present century. His earthly career began a few months after the historic battle of Trafalgar, where Nelson uttered his famous motto, and where, also, he fell. That motto was destined, in the providence of God, to find a lofty and far-reaching fulfilment in the baby boy who came upon life's scene at so unquiet a period. His home was one of piety and refinement, his father a leading merchant, his mother a worthy daughter of the manse.

During his youthful years it was feared that a brave and noble soul was to live during the earthly journey in a very frail tenement of clay, but with care and the blessing of God, the early delicacy passed away, and a kindly, consistent, exemplary, and most beneficent life was given to the century and the country—one of God's most precious gifts to a utilitarian and Heaven-forgetting age.

Young Mr. McClure was not out of his teens when, through a truly fraternal letter from his brother William, the claims of Christ were so brought under his notice as to lead to his early decision to be the Lord's. His brother's letter emphasised that such decision would not lead to moroseness and gloom, but to peace and joy. No one will be surprised to learn that this true Andrew, who sought his own brother's salvation with such diligence, became one of the most distinguished and honoured ministers which the Irish Presbyterian Church has had within its ranks.

It was not until after this critical period that Mr. McClure entered upon a business life with his father. He soon proved himself a young man of sound judgment, and full of wisely-directed energy and enterprise. Beyond this he brought to bear upon his commercial life the highest code of morality, viz., the teaching of the Scriptures, a copy of which always lay on his office desk. Ere long he was known to be a man of

STAINLESS HONOUR AND LOFTY INTEGRITY.

He believed that in business one should seek to carry out the injunction, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." To Mr. McClure this sacred principle became ultimate and absolute law. It was his constant endeavour to carry it into practice in the affairs of everyday life and even down to the details of that life; his honour always was the good old vernacular "honour bright." God's blessing rested richly upon the undertakings of the young merchant, so that the promise of the 1st Psalm regarding the godly man was made good to him.

And all he doth shall prosper well.

His gifts to God's cause kept pace with his growing prosperity, and he believed in and practised most conscientiously the grace of systematic giving. He took a deep interest in Church extension and in any movement whose object was for the good of the people and the glory of God. Many churches were indebted to him for friendly and timely aid, and he is generally regarded as the founder of a beautiful edifice in the suburbs of Belfast, in which there has been for many years a flourishing congregation. While he was a broad and catholic-spirited courtly gentleman, the Irish Presbyterian Church was the church of his convictions and affections, and he showed his deep love and loyalty to her by bequeathing to her funds, subject to certain life interests, half of the wealth with which God had blessed him. The opening words of his will are singularly beautiful :—

I have always been of opinion that this world's goods should not be devoted solely to personal enjoyment, but that there are other nobler and greater ends to which the same should be applied. In my life I have endeavoured, so far as in me lies, humbly to carry this my view into practice, and for many years past I have devoted almost half of my income to the support of religious and benevolent objects. It is in this spirit, therefore, that I leave the one-half of my estate and properties to trustees for religious and charitable purposes, as is hereinafter done in this my will in more technical and legal language.

He was a man who instinctively shrank from display and show, and sought to do quietly all he could to further the cause of right and truth in the land. When ripe in years, mature in experience, and still growing in the esteem and affections of his fellow-citizens, Mr. McClure was invited to enter Parliament. He yielded to the wishes of his fellow-citizens, and sat for Belfast for six years. He was afterwards returned for co. Derry, which he represented for seven years. During his Parliamentary career he won the respect and esteem of all classes for unvarying political fairness and unswerving honour. With the most painstaking diligence he set himself to master the great questions of national interest which at that time filled the public mind, and he was signally successful.

In the year 1874 the Queen was pleased to offer the honour of a baronetcy to this true friend of the people, and the then Prime Minister (Mr. Gladstone) wrote saying, "I trust you may accept it as a just tribute to your own character and services."

During no part of his life did Sir Thomas McClure allow anything to interfere with his

DAILY STUDY OF GOD'S WORD.

It was his habit to devote a portion of time each day to Scripture study, meditation and prayer. In these seasons of retirement he was wont to pray audibly, and pour out his heart to God in confession of sin, in seeking guidance for daily duties, and in commending family, friends, church, and country to the care and blessing of his Heavenly Father. It was in this way that he was kept in touch with supernatural realities, and was enabled by Divine grace to wear "the white flower of a blameless life" to the end.

His closing years were spent in happy retirement, during which he continued a devout and daily student of the Holy Scriptures. He loved nature: the music of her birds and the brightness of her flowers made him glad. He loved God's house, and when possible was a reverent and constant worshipper. He continued to the last bright and buoyant, and was wont to whisper to those who thought things were going sadly wrong, "No vain regrets; no vain regrets." He firmly believed that God was on the throne, and that truth, righteousness, and equity would yet prevail when "the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea."

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Maull & Fox, 187a, Piccadilly, London, W.)

His latter end was not only one of peace, but of calm triumph. His path was that of the just, which shines more and more into the perfect day. He had no fears and no misgivings. A few days before his departure he addressed most earnest but inaudible words to a young relative who stood near. The meaning of the message, however, was well understood when he was seen pointing upward and whispering, "Meet me! meet me!" He loved John iv., 1 Corinthians xv., and Psalm xxiii. In the valley of the shadow he was able to sing—

Goodness and mercy all my life
Shall surely follow me,
And in God's house for ever more
My dwelling place shall be.

The dust of the departed sleeps in the old family burying ground, Belfast, now to be found in the centre of the city. For many a year the material, moral, and spiritual interests of the northern Irish metropolis lay very near to his heart. Now his remains rest near her throbbing heart of commercial activity and enterprise.

Ireland has had many sons who have done her high honour in the domain of commerce, of mind, and of morals, but among those who have proved the feasibility of recognising and honouring and obeying God in all the details and ramifications of an extensive and extended mercantile and public career, no more illustrious example can be found than the one whose life is now chronicled. His motto (with his crest) was Spectemur agendo, "Let us be judged by our actions." Viewed from this vital standpoint, his life will long continue fresh and fragrant, just because it had in it and on it the stamp of Almighty grace. "The righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance."

CONFERENCE AT OXFORD.

MANY readers doubtless remember with interest and thankfulness the Oxford Conference of 1874, which proved to be the parent of the movement which is now so generally associated with Keswick. It was there that quite a number of those who have since been greatly used of God received increased light and joy into their lives. When, therefore, it was proposed to have another conference in Oxford many could not but revert in thought to the former one, and with prayerful expectation seek for much grace and power on the second. The conference was held last week, and proved a time of very definite blessing.

The committee were kindly granted the use of the large and magnificent examination schools, and the hall was filled every evening. Mr. ROBERT WILSON presided with his accustomed ability, and with one exception the speakers were all well-known Keswick names. The preliminary meeting was addressed by Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE, and was a searching reference to the difference we make between our acceptance of God's mercy in Christ for salvation and his grace for sanctification. We accept the former absolutely, while we often refuse the latter in its fulness as impossible and beyond our present capacities. At a ministers' meeting, Mr. Webb-Peploe dwelt also on this point, and asked whether it was necessary that there should be such failures in our lives while God's grace is all sufficient. With these solemn questions ringing in many ears and hearts the conference began.

On Tuesday Dr. E. G. JENKINS and Rev. H. C. G. MOULE addressed the Conference, the latter specially emphasising our bounden duty (from Rom. vi. 12, 13) not to allow sin to reign, but to present ourselves to God, and allow Him to reign and rule.

Rev. J. B. FIGGIS, of Brighton, spoke on Wednesday, putting the question, "Am I living the best possible life and in the best possible way?" The best possible life was a life of faith—they would never live it by effort or endeavour. It was also a life of love, and a life of hope. It was a resurrected life, a life of the risen Son of God. Resurrection implied a previous death, and so they would find it. They could not live Christ until they had died with Him. Rev. EVAN H. HOPKINS then addressed the meeting on "Service."

On Thursday the first address was given by Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR, of Notting Hill, on the "Fulness of the Holy Ghost," a fitting subject with which to close the Conference. Mr. Macgregor rapidly reviewed several parts of the book of the Acts, and showed that this gift of the Holy Ghost was distinct in thought, though not necessarily in time, from the gift of regeneration. God's purpose is that we should not only have life (John iii.), but a full life (John iv.), and an overflowing life (John vii.), and this is only possible through the Holy Ghost. The presence and fulness of the Spirit will bring new power, new peace, new joy, new hope, and, best of all, new ideas of Christ Jesus, our Lord. Mr. Macgregor's words were felt to be "with power," and many rejoiced in the testimony. Mr. HOPKINS followed on the same subject, leading up to the after-meeting, when many indicated their desire for this "gift of God" for daily life and work. Thus closed a Conference whose influence will assuredly tell for good in and through many lives.

Rev. HUBERT BROOKE gave Bible-readings each afternoon, to the great enjoyment and profit of the large audiences present.

Some London Missions.

LONDON CABMEN'S MISSION.

Well-nigh a quarter of a century's experience among cabmen, whose calling makes them sadly familiar with the darker side of London life, might well afford material for a notable book. So it seemed to me, one day last week, on visiting the superintendent of the London Cabmen's Mission, and hearing something of what he had to tell.

But let me introduce the worker himself. Mr. Dupee was definitely led out into Christian service in the great revival of 1859-61. Coming to London in 1871, he was unexpectedly led to begin work among cabmen. Friends were raised for him, and ere long he built the hall adjoining King's Cross Station (M.R.), and close by a whole series of cab yards. There were initial difficulties, but once confidence had been gained, the men proved willing to hear, God gave blessing, and many have been saved. Nor was this at the beginning only, it goes on still. A few evenings ago, a notorious character was convicted of sin in the hall, and now appears a changed man. So it has been right through from the first.

ALL DAY WITHOUT A FARE.

There are at present over 15,000 licensed cabdrivers in London, and between four and five thousand of these are believed to be godly men, bearing, in difficult circumstances, faithful testimony. Every class and condition is represented among cabbies; many now waiting for fares having been clergymen, barristers, doctors, officers, and independent gentlemen. Their calling is often hard and thankless, exposed to all weathers; on the box, sometimes, sixteen hours at a stretch, without earning sufficient to pay for the hire of their cab. If the Gospel is to be carried to them, it must be while on the rank. For years this earnest missionary has been doing this single handed; now he has the help of a colporteur, who visits the men in all parts of London, distributing Christian literature and testifying the Gospel. This personal dealing, in brotherly fashion, is the secret of the work. Moreover, distressed, sick and dying cabmen all over the metropolis look for counsel and comfort to their "own missionary," who has often, in obedience to a sudden call, to trudge off late at night to Brixton, Paddington, North London, or some other distant part. Apart from this, regular mission work is carried on in the hall itself, evangelistic, temperance, prayer, and other meetings, in which Christian cabmen help most usefully.

Abundant evidence is afforded that the mission is a feeder of the churches. The converted men join themselves to some company of Christians, and both clergymen and ministers have testified that Christian cabmen are amongst their best helpers. Case after case was narrated to me of conversion and newness of life. One point emphasized by the missionary was this: at least £20,000 in value is left annually by the public in cabs, and restored by the honesty of the drivers, much of this being in the form of purses and loose coin, which might easily be appropriated. This honesty, he believes, is largely due to the Mission work; and it forms, he feels, a strong plea for larger help for this agency on behalf of a much-enduring and useful class. Particulars may be had of the superintendent, Mr. John Dupee, 165, Hemingford-road, Barnsbury, N.

HOME FOR CRIPPLE GIRLS.

Almost immediately opposite Madame Tussaud's well-known building stands a large six-storey house, bearing the inscription "The Cripples' Home," and devoted to the care of afflicted and helpless girls. Having in the course of explorations in bye-paths of service seen something of the aimless life led by such cripples in their own poor homes, I was greatly interested, on Wednesday last, in visiting this Home, and observing what they can be taught to do under proper tuition. Moreover, not only are they helped to help themselves, but a new interest is given them in life—for, previously, many of them had been made to feel themselves but incumbrances and burdens on others.

The Home is intended for a hundred girls, and I noticed only one empty cot, though there may have been one or two more unobserved. At all events, it is about full, and more than once lately it has had over the hundred in residence—it is so hard to refuse some special cases.

The matron in charge showed me over the Home, and introduced me to inmates and workers. I was glad to find that since a previous visit a lift has been introduced, to the great comfort of many helpless ones unable to mount the staircases. Lift accidents are guarded against by the simple expedient of locking the door leading to the lift, so that it cannot be used except when some responsible matron is at hand to see that all is right.

The ground floor is used for reception and business purposes. Here also is the schoolroom, where I found a number of girls engaged, at the moment, in writing letters to friends, and proud of their newly acquired penmanship. Many, it seems, are apt scholars, others are slow and dull, requiring great patience and gentleness. On the first floor are the workrooms, airy and pleasant. These were filled with busy young workers, intent on plain sewing and embroidery, beautifully executed. In the straw-plaiting room, hats, bonnets, baskets, pretty mats and all kinds of fancy articles were being produced, for many are exceedingly clever in contrivance and execution. In the knitting-rooms machines were at work on socks, stockings, "Tam o' Shanters," and woollen goods of many kinds. The second and third floors are devoted to the dormitories, each under the charge of a monitor, all well ventilated, bright, and cheerful. Still higher the upper floor is set apart as the infirmary. I was thankful to find it empty; but in view of the physical condition of the inmates, it is kept ready for any emergency. All these matters, as well as sanitary arrangements, are vigilantly looked after by the ladies' committee, who give time and care to the oversight. Descending to the basement the laundry, kitchen, and dining-hall were duly inspected. Everywhere I found evidence of scrupulous care in the way of cleanliness and comfort.

While the physical and mental welfare of the girls is thus attended to, their higher spiritual interests are earnestly heeded. The whole atmosphere of the Home is Christian; morning and evening prayers are no mere functions; Bible classes are held by earnest Christian ladies; and inmates who can go out attend Portman Chapel. Rev. Percival Smith, the vicar, is ever ready to visit and help in any way. It need scarce be added that medical and surgical care is constantly provided. Moreover, it is rendered voluntarily by eminent practitioners. For some time a Seaside Home—most needful in some cases—has been open at St. Leonards; but a more commodious one has become necessary, and the committee must either build, purchase, or rent another seaside Home as funds permit.

If any, on reading these few notes, become interested, the best thing they can do is to go and see for themselves. The hon. sec., Miss Wellesley, 17A, Marylebone-road, N.W., will gladly afford information desired. Orders for hats, bonnets, baskets, mats, needlework, and knitted goods are most welcome.

HOUSE OF REST, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.

Rev. W. Darlow Sargeant gave a fresh practical address on "Prayer," at the House of Rest on Friday afternoon. He defined prayer as the soul moving in the presence of God; its expression is only real when irrepressible and direct from the heart. Until Christians have learned to pray when circumstances appear dead against them, they know nothing of the spirit of prayer. He urged all to expect and look out for answers; faithlessness in this respect is the infidelity which hurts God.

In the evening, Dr. Montague Miller spoke on the victorious Christian life, which (he said) is disciplined and husbanded by God Himself.

AN ENGLISH COLONY OF MERCY.

We have already published intimations of the plans of some friends interested in dealing with the present industrial distress by starting a "Colony of Mercy" after the model of Pastor Bodelschwingh's famous institution in Germany, which Miss Sutter has so well described in her book. These friends have issued a circular from which we extract the following:—

"One or two considerations appear to indicate the present as a suitable time for the successful realisation of our object. Land can at present be secured on exceptionally favourable terms, whilst the Guardians of the Poor in the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, and Essex, and of some London Unions, are disposed to assist the work of Home Colonisation, by the payment of 5s. a week per man. Under these circumstances, it is reasonable to believe that men so employed, aided, and directed, would provide by their labour for the remaining cost of their maintenance.

"The initial outlay of such a movement must however, be considerable, not only in the procuring of land, but also in the erection or alteration of buildings, the purchasing of implements, and the out-going costs until the crops are sold. On the other hand, the gain of a successful experiment would be incalculable. It would realise (more or less) the dream and hope of social reformers, who can devise no better remedy for the evils under which our State groans, than the bringing of the people back to the land. It would absorb much of the wasted life of our great pauper populations, applying it to work which, conducted under such wholesome moral conditions, could not fail to be redemptive in its character.

"A friend has consecrated a great sorrow by devoting the money left by a beloved son, who has recently died, to the relief of human suffering. This son was distinguished by an unselfish devotion to the poor and the sick, and his father being desirous that the work and influence of his son's life should be remembered and continued, has placed at our disposal, £500, which he hopes, with the aid of his relatives, to increase to £800 or £1000. We reckon that another £1000 will be necessary for a safe and satisfactory commencement of the work upon a farm of 100 acres, and we earnestly plead with those who share our convictions of the need of this effort, and who see with us the great opportunity afforded by the present condition of our rural districts, to enable us by their co-operation to go forward without delay."

The Hon. Secretary of the movement is Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, and the office is at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. The committee include such well-known men as Archdeacon Sinclair, Dr. Monro Gibson, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Dr. R. F. Horton, Rev. Peter Thompson, Dr. Clifford, Rev. H. Price Hughes, Mr. Walter Hazell, M.P., etc.

OUR BLUEJACKETS.

Parliament has recently voted a large sum of money for the increase of our Navy, but as ships are useless without men, 14,000 boys, seamen, stokers, and marines are to be added to the service—7000 this year and 7000 in '95. Extra accommodation of every kind will be urgently needed at our Royal Sailors' Rests to enable us to receive and house these men when ashore. A grand opening presents itself at Devonport. Some premises, suitable to our requirements in every way, are in my possession; they adjoin the present buildings, and they give space for all that I want. It would be a thousand pities to lose this splendid opportunity of going forward. To meet this vast increase of our naval forces, I want £5000 to build dormitories, reading and recreation rooms, and a hall for social, philanthropic, and spiritual work.

Never was a clearer case for prompt action. To stand still at the present moment is to go back; to hesitate is to be lost. Work of this kind is left by the Government to the enterprise and patriotism of the country, to whom I confidently appeal at this important juncture. If this grand chance of extension is lost, it will be a dark day for the Royal Sailors' Rest, which has worked so successfully for eighteen years. Friends willing to give, or promise, £100 and upwards, will be of the very greatest help in this emergency.

At the end of the year some dainty booklet is usually expected from the pen of Margaret Stewart Simpson, the accomplished wife of Professor Alexander Simpson, of Edinburgh. This year, with the national thistle emblazoned on its cover, we have the story of her ancestress, Lady Nairne,* the author of "The Land o' the Leal" and "Buy My Caller Herrin," and other songs, in which are manifest two essentials of true poetry, sympathy with man and faith in God. It was thus that "Lady Nairne passed through the crisis of her life:—She was on a visit to the old Castle of Murthly, when an English clergyman had also arrived. He was a winner of souls. At morning worship she was in her place with the household, and listened to what God's ambassador said on the promise, 'Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out.' Faith grasped it. From that hour she never had one doubt of God's love to her in Christ. But that forenoon she was seen no more. Her fair face was spoiled with weeping when she again appeared. Her eye had caught the glory of the Son of God, and burned with love to Him, of whom she could henceforth say, 'Whose I am, and whom I serve.'"

Those who know Mrs. Bevan's books, "Three Friends of God," "The Quiet in the Land," "Trees Planted by Rivers of Water," etc., will be glad to learn that her exquisite translations of many pilgrim songs are now published separately.† As we have quoted above the conversion of Lady Nairne in the hope that it may lead some reader into rest, so we desire that the following beautiful verses may unveil to seeking souls the secret of that rest.

"I AM NOT."

John i. 21.

"I am not." O words unwelcome
To the lips of men.
"I am not." O words that lead us
Back to God again.

Speech of him who knows the pathway
To that refuge sweet,
Where is covert from the tempest,
Shadow from the heat.

Speech of Heaven, from wise men hidden,
Unto children taught;
Few the words of that great lesson,
Only "I am not."

Heart of man, another language
Is thy native speech,
Spoken by a thousand races,
All alike in each.

"I am"—rich, or wise, or holy—
"Thus, and thus, am I."
For "I am" men live and labour,
For "I am" they die.

For "I am" men dare and suffer,
Count all loss as gain,
Toil and weariness and bondage,
Sin and grief and pain.

In the blessed Gospel read we
How a rich man bade
Christ the Lord, and his disciples,
To a feast he made.

Well it was to feed the prophet:
Thus the rich man thought,
But amidst his wealth and bounty
Lacked he "I am not."

Then there came a sinful woman,
Eyes with weeping dim—
"I am not," her heart was saying—
She had looked on Him.

He beheld her broken-hearted,
Ruined and undone,
Yet enthroned above the angels,
Brighter than the sun.

All the while in dust before Him
Did her heart adore;
"I am not," that song of gladness—
"Thou art, evermore."

For his heart to her's had spoken,
To his wandering lamb;
In the speech of love eternal
He had said "I AM."

Now she thirsts no more for ever;
All she would is given.
None on earth hath she beside Him,
None beside in Heaven.

Oh, how fair that heavenly portion,
That eternal lot—
Christ, and Christ alone, for ever,
Ever "I am not."

† Hymns of the Spiritual Life. By Suso, and Others. By Frances Bevan. (James Nisbet & Co. 1s. 6d.) Being in large type, and inexpensive, this book of songs will be a welcome gift to the sick and suffering, in hospitals and infirmaries, as well as in private homes. The Gospel for the sinner and the saint wells up here from hearts which proved it in days of deeper spiritual experience, when men made less haste, and believed, like children, more profoundly.

MISS STEER'S ANNIVERSARY.

The sixteenth anniversary of the Bridge of Hope was held on Wednesday in last week in the hall, Betts-street, E., when capital meetings were held afternoon and evening, many warm friends rallying to the support of the work. Naturally the stir made in regard to West End vice found reflection in the course of the proceedings, and vigorous words were spoken. The general feeling was that while the protesters at the West End are working to check the spring of evil at one of its sources, the workers at the East End are labouring to save the miserable victims.

In the afternoon Mrs. Ormiston Chant delivered an earnest and inspiriting address to workers, dealing with current events, and with Rescue experiences among various classes.

A number of children were present representing the seven Cottage Homes. The friends were deeply interested in these little ones and their sweet songs, inasmuch as most of them have been saved from bad homes and from vicious or cruel parents. The sorrows of life had pressed so heavily on some of them that when they came in at first they had lost their childishness, and almost forgotten how to smile. But it is wonderful what changes can be wrought by care and love; and the happy faces and well-cared-for look of the children who came from these Homes to sing at the annual meeting last week was proof enough of the love they now know and the wise way in which they are brought up.

The report stated that "The mission is threefold. There is first the rescue work, carried on at the Ratcliffe Highway Refuge; the preventive work, in the children's Cottage Homes; and lastly the Night Shelter. Since September 30, 1893, we have received into our Homes 257 women and children. Of these, 182 were rescue and seventy-five preventive cases, which, with the numbers in the Homes on September 30 last, makes a total of 446. Of this number, after a short stay in the Refuge, we have passed on forty to other Homes. We have also found situations for ninety-four young women and girls, most of whom have passed through the laundry department or one of the training Homes. In the Refuge we have fifty-six beds, which are always full, and in the mothers' and babies' Homes beds for twelve adults. In the Night Shelter we have given 4169 night shelters, and have dealt with 881 individual cases. We have 135 children under our care in the children's Cottage Homes."

Full and deeply interesting details of these branches are given in the report, which ought to be read and pondered. The balance-sheet shows that the whole of this important work has been carried on for £3850, of which over £800 has been earned in the Homes. We regret to notice that a loan of £200 has had to be raised from bankers. Although little was said about funds at the meetings, we know that Miss Steer is greatly in need of liberal help. She is, however, full of faith that the work being the Lord's, He will incline the hearts of his people to send what is needed for its support.

Mr. A. E. Fletcher, who presided at the evening meeting, dealt in his opening address with the causes lying at the bottom of the evils deplored, and the ruin of so many girls. After dwelling on the present West End protest, he recalled an earlier East End protest, which was the means of closing certain places of ill repute. This had cost him in the Law Courts some £1000, but he had never regretted it, an avowal loudly cheered by reason of its evident bearing on present events.

Mr. Joseph Howard followed with a warm plea on behalf of the work carried on at the Bridge of Hope. Miss Bolton, of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, spoke feelingly of Miss Steer's readiness to receive and befriend the unhappy and ill-treated little ones rescued by her society.

Rev. J. H. Scott, Rector of Spitalfields, bore testimony to the reality, simplicity, and hopefulness of the work. From his own parish twenty-three have this year been admitted into the Bridge of Hope.

Messrs. W. F. A. Archibald, Percy Bunting, and W. A. Coote followed, warmly supporting, each from their own point of view, the claim of the Bridge of Hope as a means of escape for the fallen, and a valuable preventive agency for endangered and wronged children.

Miss Steer herself spoke, all too briefly, of her joy in the service, albeit that it is one involving tears of agony in many a pitiful case. She reminded her friends that while figures are given in the report, figures are but the dry bones, every case is a living reality of sorrow and pain. Some of these mean months of anxious prayer and effort. At present every bed is full, and by reason of sheer lack of room they are compelled to refuse all but the most pitiful cases. In fact, as one of the workers said, "We are always saying No," and that merely because there is no place to put any more.

Rev. Peter Thompson spoke as a near neighbour who had found Miss Steer's open doors—so long as there was room—a valuable help to his work.

Mr. J. Williams Benn, M.P., closed the proceedings by recalling early memories of the state of things in the district, and thanking God for the way He had used such workers as these not only in saving many lost ones, and rescuing many helpless children, but also in suppressing some of the worst forms of temptation.

JOTTINGS FROM SYDNEY.

There is a great outcry in this colony about bad times, depression of trade, etc., some blaming the extravagant habits of the people, some blaming one thing and some another. Real poverty, however, such as is to be found in our large cities in the old country, is quite unknown here. The working classes earn large wages, yet they are too often thriftless and improvident, living from hand to mouth, and making no provision for a rainy day. The roar and rush of traffic in this city of over 420,000 inhabitants are heard on Sundays as on week-days; the trains, cars, etc., are patronised on that day alike by churchgoers and pleasure-seekers.

In New South Wales the Bible is taught in the day-schools during school hours, and clergymen of any denomination may give further instruction to the children also during school hours. In Victoria the Bible has been utterly banished from the schools, and to prevent any kind of religious instruction being given to the children, even the name of God has been eliminated from the books. "Them that honour Me I will honour," holds good for colonies as well as for individuals, as Victoria will doubtless yet learn to its cost.

The Chinese quarters in Sydney are to be found in one of the lowest parts of the city. Thither we betook ourselves on a recent Sabbath evening, to see the work going on in the slums. In turning into one of the streets, the familiar words met our ears,

Jesus is merciful, Jesus will save, sung by a band of workers who were assisting Rev. J. Young Wai. We joined the band, then followed them to the Chinese place of assembly, where between sixty and seventy Chinamen were gathered together to hear the Gospel proclaimed in Chinese, with great vigour and earnestness, by their pastor. Even those of us who did not understand a word of what was being said, felt stirred by the natural eloquence of the speaker.

It is refreshing to meet, wherever one goes, with little knots of people, sometimes with single individuals, working steadily, it may be quietly and unnoticed, for the good of others and for the glory of the Lord.

THE ANTI-OPIUM CAMPAIGN.

Our devoted sisters, Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell, began their special anti-opium campaign by important meetings in Manchester last week. By way of introduction, Dr. Bushnell spoke at a meeting called by the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Union, in connection with the Prison Mission work of that Society, and on Sunday morning at Central Hall. On Sunday evening, at Free Trade Hall, the two ladies took part in the services of the Manchester Wesleyan Mission, speaking with great acceptance to large congregations.

On the invitation of Mr. F. W. Crossley, J.P., and Mrs. Crossley, a representative gathering, which included many of the best known workers for temperance and social reform in the city, was held at the Central Hall, to give those present an opportunity of meeting Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell. Tea and coffee having been served, both ladies gave short addresses, directed particularly to show the close association of vice with the opium habit.

THE PUBLIC MEETING

held on Monday evening in the Free Trade Hall was greatly lessened in point of the numbers attending by the very severe weather, but was, notwithstanding, a large and influential meeting, composed, to a striking extent, of thoughtful and representative people.

Mr. F. W. Crossley, J.P., who presided, said that was not merely a philanthropic or social reform meeting, but one which, in faith, was held under God's guidance. To reach the attitude of mind necessary for the consideration of this painful subject, it was needful to beware of the general tendency of the time, which drifts in an opposite direction to the one essential to sound judgment in these matters. It places material wealth and present happiness in front of all else. Anything that produces momentary happiness is too often looked upon as a gain in itself, and the cry is that people will be good if given good things. That is not so. Therefore, we must avoid that delusion, and prepare ourselves to abandon luxury and money, when these stood in the way of righteousness, if we would rightly judge of such questions. That is Christianity, whether it be popular or not. Righteousness first; compared with that, riches not only second, but nowhere. Having referred to the impossibility of weighing questions of revenue derived from opium, against the evils produced by it, and to the duty of listening to and respecting the testimony of those who are devoted to the good of their fellows, Mr. Crossley quoted the testimony of Dr. Griffith John that "if opium continues its ravages for the next forty years, as it has done in the past, the Chinese will be a nation of imbeciles." He also cited the views of Sir Thomas Wade and other authorities against opium, concluding a thoughtful address by expressing high confidence in the two speakers of the evening.

The addresses of Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell were most impressive, and produced a marked effect on the meeting. Mrs. Andrew described the visits she and Dr. Bushnell had paid to typical opium dens in China, and showed with great clearness the unquestionable and close connection between opium smoking and immorality. She described the opium dens as centres of degradation, where women in large numbers are kept for the vilest purposes, and where in some instances even little children and young girls are being trained for a life of vice. They had seen with their own eyes the revolting scenes she referred to, and unhesitatingly affirmed that opium is the prolific cause of fearful degradation of both womanhood and manhood, the ruin of home, of business, and of character.

Dr. Kate Bushnell disclaimed any desire to attack the Royal Commission, but yet thought they were entitled to reply to the published evidence as given in the newspapers. She and Mrs. Andrew had together visited fifty places, and made close investigation into the cases of 250 opium victims, asking in every case close questions, which covered the entire ground. Many diseases which some witnesses professed to be cured by opium were without doubt caused by it. The speaker made a telling point when she said that the very men who had lately defended opium, were those who had been proved to have given false testimony in respect to state-regulated vice in India.

Both addresses were listened to with close attention, and the audience frequently testified approval by applause. On the motion of Mr. Councillor McDougall, seconded by Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, the following resolution was unanimously passed:—

That this meeting, having heard from Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell the deeply interesting account of their investigations made personally in China, Hong Kong, the Straits Settlements, and India into the facts relating to the use of opium by the people of those countries, and being firmly convinced that the opium habit is both a moral and social evil of the gravest nature, regards with the deepest concern the connection of this country with the opium traffic, involving as it does national complicity in a great wrong, inflicted upon unwilling peoples, contrary to morality and righteousness; this meeting, therefore, calls for the immediate removal of the opium curse, the suppression of the opium trade between India and China, the placing of the retail sale in India, as is already the case in England, under restriction as a dangerous poison, and directs that copies of this resolution be sent to the Prime Minister and to Her Majesty's Secretaries of State for Foreign Affairs, for India, and for the Colonies.

The meeting began with prayer offered by Rev. Arnold Streuli, and was closed in a similar manner by the chairman.

The next meeting of the series will be held to-morrow (Friday, November 9) at Hope Hall, Liverpool, when Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., will preside. Other meetings will be held at Birmingham (Central Hall, November 12), Leicester (Temperance Hall, November 16), Hull (Royal Institution, November 22), Newcastle-on-Tyne (Central Hall, November 23), Middlesbrough (Temperance Hall, November 29), and Leeds (Albert Hall, November 30).

MOVEMENT AMONG MOSLEMS.

About fifteen months ago at Amritsar, in consequence of the violence of Mohammedan opposition to Christian teaching, Dr. Martyn Clark, of the C.M.S. Medical Mission, organised a public discussion, which extended over two entire weeks. The champion of Islam was Mirza Ghulam Ahmed, while the Christian cause was in the hands of Mr. Abdullah Athim, one of the earliest converts from Mohammedanism in that part of India. The debate took place in the presence of deeply interested audiences, and resulted in much inquiry.

The Mohammedan, who professed to work miracles but would not avail himself of opportunities when afforded to him, delivered himself of a prophecy which we are glad to say has failed of fulfilment. He declared that within fifteen months, as a direct revelation to him from God, his opponent would die, and that this judgment would attest the truth of Islam. Later on, he included Dr. Martyn Clark in a like doom, provided, of course, the two did not repent and become faithful Mohammedans.

In an article in the November issue of the Church Missionary Intelligencer, Dr. Clark says:—"Those who live in our enlightened homeland, and know not the ways of the East, can have no conception of the immense force and effect of this solemn and categorical declaration amongst the masses in this dark, superstitious, ignorant country. From Madras to Peshawur, through the length and breadth of broad India, thousands upon thousands of men have been watching with thoughts intent on the far northern city, where Islam had thrown down the wager of battle, and where God Himself would decide." The fated day, September 5, has now long passed, but just before it arrived Dr. Clark said that alongside the watchfulness there was a losing of heart on the part of the Mohammedans, some of whom professed to have been Divinely informed that the Mirza was an unreliable prophet! Dr. Clark reported several fresh baptisms, and was hoping for great things, being assured that "men will in hundreds upon hundreds break away from Islam."

ROYAL SAILORS' REST, PORTSMOUTH.—Miss Weston has issued a tastefully got-up booklet, containing an account of her work for the last year. It is entitled, "What will they say in England? They'll say 'twas nobly done," and includes the immediate relief that Miss West organised for the widows and mothers of men lost in H.M.S. Victoria, and an interesting report of advance at the Rests and elsewhere.

LAMBETH BATHS WINTER MEETINGS.—The thirty-third series of these famous Saturday evening meetings was begun at these baths on Saturday. Mr. Causton, M.P., was in the chair. The superintendent (Mr. W. Mottram) reported that the financial conditions were satisfactory, and that the old debt had been wiped off. During last winter they had collected £200 in pence from visitors to their entertainments. The chairman congratulated the promoters of the mission upon the success of their work in saving many who seemed well-nigh overborne in the flood of intemperance.

WORK FOR POLICEMEN.

In connection with the International Christian Police Association, Miss C. Gurney and Mrs. Walker have nearly completed a mission journey around the world, during which they have been able to visit many of the police forces of the United States, Canada, Japan, China, the Straits Settlements, Australia, and Ceylon, and are now in course of visiting Madras, Calcutta, Bombay, and other principal cities of India. They praise God for the many openings He has given them in his service; for the kind and hearty welcome given by the police in all quarters, and the opportunities for witnessing for Jesus both among the police and in general missions; and the souls won for Him. They give thanks also for the constant kindness and hospitality shown them by so many of the Lord's servants in different places. They earnestly ask prayer for the new branches started, and others encouraged in the countries and districts above named. There are openings for several consecrated lady workers who would go forth in simple dependence upon God.

The headquarters of the International Christian Police Association are at the Police Institute, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C. Hon. sec. in charge, Mrs. D. H. Small, to whom all communications should be addressed. The work is at present in great need of support, £500 being required to meet liabilities before the end of the year. One generous friend has already promised £50 if the remainder be subscribed within two months. The need is great and the time is short for reaching the police forces of the world. Will not the Lord's stewards lay this to heart and consider what He would have them to do?

NORTH AFRICAN MISSION.

Some encouraging news has lately come from the workers in different parts of the field. Mr. W. Summers, writing from Alexandria, tells of the decision of a Moslem for Jesus Christ, almost the first fruits of this work in Egypt. He appears to have got a good grip of elementary truth, and is a devoted Bible student. He shows great earnestness of purpose, and the fact that he is in comfortable circumstances gives greater confidence as to his sincerity. Mr. Summers, we regret to add, records the continued ill-health of Miss Johnson, one of the workers; she is compelled to seek medical advice.

A long and interesting account of work from Miss Trotter at Algiers gives many particulars of itinerant journeys to villages in the oases of the Soudan, before the very hot weather set in. In most places the people were found accessible, and there were not a few hopeful features. The good seed of the Kingdom was freely scattered about, and it is trusted that definite fruit will soon appear. We also have a charming narrative of a tour made by Miss Smith and Miss Cox, among the villages in Kabylia and Algeria.

These devoted brethren and sisters, tilling such difficult soil, need to be upheld by constant prayer.

KESWICK EVANGELISATION.

The various denominations of Christians have united in an endeavour to evangelise this town thoroughly during the winter. Cottage meetings are being held in various parts of the town; five every week. About forty friends have volunteered to conduct these meetings and visit the different yards previously. A united monthly prayer-meeting is arranged to plead for God's blessing on the effort. It is hoped that early next year the services of an evangelist may be secured for public meetings, and that a great and a good work may be accomplished for the Master.

MISSION HOMES IN PARIS.—Miss Mouncey, 22A, Queen's-road, Bayswater, writing with respect to the Homes founded by Mrs. Travers Lewis, says:—"The mother Home, 'Avenue Wagram,' is quite full of young women, many of them well-born and well-educated. The free registry is much valued. The ladies who sit at the bureau have indeed a busy time, and are often weary before the hour of closing arrives; but it is a work of love for the Master, and is much blessed and owned by Him. Day by day we are astonished at the variety of appeals made to us. Our friends need to pray that we may have wisdom to give proper advice in all difficulties."

THE SOUTH AFRICAN KESWICK.

BY MRS. CYRIL GREEN.

As Keswick Missionaries, and those to whom there cluster around the word "Keswick" so many holy and happy memories, we naturally looked forward with deep interest to the "South African Keswick" held annually at Wellington, a little town about three hours by train from Cape Town, nestling, like our English Keswick, in the very midst of grand mountain scenery. The meetings were held in the Goodnow Hall, a fine building standing in the grounds of the Huguenot Seminary, and capable of seating about 500 people.

Rev. Andrew Murray, Chairman, brought us the first evening right into the presence of God. As he spoke of the principles which actuated the life of Christ on earth, and traced from the Gospel of John his dependance on the Father, his self-abnegation, and marvellous humility; and went on to prove that this was the life He was longing to live over again in each of his servants, a hush fell on the meeting, and many hearts must surely have been stirred to think how utterly their lives had failed of God's great purposes for them. This impression was deepened and intensified the next day, when Rev. J. G. Gregson, following on the same lines, turned us to 1 John i., 1-4, putting before us a high ideal of a life of perfect oneness and "partnership" with God. He showed that this life is no phantom, but a blessed reality if we accepted the motto of the Convention, "Christ our Life," and each one personally appropriated that Divine life.

In the afternoon, Mr. Spencer Walton spoke of what the Christian life ought to be, viewing it in a fivefold light—the life of a bondslave, a soldier, an athlete, a husbandman, and a worshipper; and illustrating each point by some passage in the Word of God. At the close a number consecrated themselves anew or for the first time to the Lord. Mr. Dudley Kidd's deeply-searching address in the evening on "Now put off thine ornaments from thee," brought many face to face with the fact that the self-principle still lingered in their lives.

As Wednesday was devoted to breaking down and humbling, Thursday was given up to pointing out the remedy for all the failure in Christian lives. Rev. Mr. Ferguson's address on Heb. x. 22 (the four marks of a truly consecrated Christian), was specially helpful in showing the need for great watchfulness and prayer lest any little inconsistency might mar the beauty and injure the influence of an otherwise Christlike life. Mr. Gregson, after pointing out that the chief causes of failure to-day are disobedience and unbelief, showed what would be the results of a life of obedience.

In the afternoon, Rev. Mr. Daintree spoke on "Opened eyes, opened ears, and opened lips." Then Mr. Murray, in words which made a deep impression, spoke of denying self, tracing all failure in church life, in home life, and indeed every department of life to this one root—self; and showing the remedy for this failure: the death to self, and the resurrection-life of Jesus taking the place of the self-life. In the evening we heard a fresh voice, that of Mr. Daniel Jackson, whose words on "I will dwell in them and walk in them" were, we afterwards learned, very helpful to many.

Friday morning and afternoon were given up to missionary topics. In the morning, there was an address by Mr. Frank Huskisson on the filling of the Spirit as the indispensable equipment for service. Mr. Walton spoke on Isaiah xliv. and xlv., the pattern servant, his aim, his work, and the secret of his success. The afternoon meeting, though two hours and a-half long, was all too short for the great subject in hand. It began with a forcible address by Mr. Daintree on the Church's neglect of the Great Commission. Miss Sheasby spoke as representing the work amongst the Malays in Cape Town; Miss May Grimes and Miss Jessie Gibson told of their work in Pondoland and Tembuland; Mr. Suter, of the work in Natal; and Mr. Cyril S. Green, as representative of the English Keswick Mission. We were forcibly reminded of Keswick, when a telegram of greeting was read from the S.A.G.M. missionaries in Swaziland, ending with the information that a horse and saddle, total cost £15, were greatly needed for the work there. A lady walked up to the platform and laid down £1, to be quickly followed by others with larger or smaller sums, until over £16 were given.

The evening meeting was felt to be a very solemn time. Mr. Gregson told the story of how God had led him and his beloved daughter in the matter of the filling of the Spirit. Mr Murray led us into the holiest of all, and showed how it was God's will that his children should live in unbroken, unclouded communion with Himself. Many earnest souls gathered again at 10 o'clock for a season of prayer, which proved to be a time of rich blessing.

Saturday morning's testimony and praise meeting was bright with joyful testimonies from full hearts. We were naturally much interested when Mr. Murray, in the name of the South African Keswick, thanked the English Keswick for sending Mr. Gregson, and acknowledged the debt of gratitude which here in South Africa we owe to the English friends. The different addresses given will be published in the Christmas number of The Pioneer, so that others may share with us in the feast of good things we have been enjoying.

JAPAN CHRISTIANS AND THE WAR.

The London correspondent of The Scotsman makes the following statement:—

"I learn from Japan that the enthusiasm of the many native Christians and their pastors and teachers for the war against China is even greater than that of other classes. Not merely do they know that their change of religion has caused their patriotism to be suspected, but they are convinced, and they preach, that this is a righteous war. As the reserves continue to be called out, Christian preachers and Buddhist priests alike march merrily to the front, leaving churches, schools, and temples behind for the time. The Christians have always had a missionary zeal for Corea, and they see no hope for the future of its twelve millions of people, so long as China does nothing herself, and resents the spirit of her Japanese partner under the joint treaty. The widow of Joseph Neesima, the Japanese who learned so much in America and became a reformer among his countrymen, has gone to Hiroshima to take charge of the nursing work among the wounded, like another Florence Nightingale. The Doshisha Nurses' School offered twelve of its graduates to the Government, which, after refusing their aid, has sent several of their Christian nurses to the front. Meanwhile, all over the producing districts of Japan and at the ports prices have risen so seriously, even of the necessaries of life, that the poor are suffering, and the self-supporting churches find it increasingly difficult to thrive as hitherto, while contributing to the war and losing their leaders for the time if not for ever. But all are hopeful, and expect a bright period for Corea and such changes as will bring China abreast of Japan in progress of all kinds."

SAILORS' REST, DUNKERQUE.

The Rest is now widely known as a safe and happy shelter, where a British sailor finds a warm welcome and friendly greeting, and where many have been led to accept the salvation of God. Whilst doing our utmost for our own countrymen, we are solicitous about the thousands of Scandinavian, German, and Russian sailors who pass several weeks of each year in this port. In August a young Swede, member of the German Y.M.C.A., came over from London and joined us in our work. His labours among his fellow-countrymen have been greatly owned of God to the conversion of many. He is an untiring worker; he visits the ships, distributing booklets, etc., in the various languages, and holding meetings on board when possible. The pastor attached to the Swedish embassy in Paris has arranged to hold a monthly meeting for Scandinavians, for which purpose we have placed our large room at his disposal. Several meetings have been held by the pastor; on the last occasion the room was crowded out.

We are full of thankfulness for this answer to our prayers. To retain our Swedish brother in the work £40 is needed for his support. We trust this sum will be guaranteed by some of the Lord's stewards.

D. Stewart Mackenzie, Resident Sec.

WINTER MISSION TO INDIA.

Dear Sir,—I think if the question of sending out a special winter mission to India were referred to any body of Christians there would be a general agreement in the desirability of the scheme. In this highly-favoured land we have Christian conventions by the score, quiet days, missions, and helps of every description; but in our heathen mission-fields there is plenty of discouragement, of loneliness—yes, and a spiritual creeping paralysis, the effects of isolation, uncongeniality, and climate, which those who have been in the situation can fully appreciate. How can we Christians at home encourage our brothers and sisters at the front? By sending bands of true-hearted, spirit-filled, all-on-fire brethren to meet them and their converts and let them enjoy days of Heaven upon earth, as some of us enjoy at Keswick.

Two years ago a model trio, Revs. H. Brooke, C. Inwood, and George MacGregor, went to Canada, and last year another party, with Rev. F. Paynter, went to Italy, and great blessing accompanied both these winter missions. Why should not India receive similar help? Surely three men of the description I have suggested could be found for this winter campaign. Rev. E. N. Thwaites could estimate the cost, and an appeal might be made for funds.

A small committee in London would be necessary for the details, but to make this mission a success as far as men can make it, it would be necessary for the great missionary societies working in India to agree on the routes to be taken, the stations to be visited, and to ensure a hearty welcome and co-operation from all the workers in the mission field of India.—Yours faithfully,

Wm. Hatt Noble (Major-General).

CHRISTIANS IN KURDISTAN.

Dr. John H. Shedd, missionary of the American Presbyterian Board, writes to The New York Independent:—

"Two of our missionaries have returned from a three weeks' tour in the border districts under Turkish rule. The sad story of misery and oppression and privation they tell compels us to report that the Nestorian Christians are being stamped out of their ancestral homes. The process is an old one. The people are tenacious and cling to the fields and graveyards and stone churches of their fathers; but village after village is being uprooted by the cruel taxation and misrule of the Turk and the repeating rifle in the hands of the Kurd. In the annals of the past we read how the wild mountain eastward from the plains of Assyria was Christianized, and held in the Christian name for many ages. The strong fortress and town of Arbil was captured by the Moslems six hundred years ago, and the population driven into the mountains. The many valleys eastward, now possessed by Kurds, were once Christian, as attested by the ruins of churches in many places. The process of stamping out the Christians has been going on before our eyes in the last thirty years, especially in the districts of Zaboor and Shemisdeen."

After giving some harrowing details, Dr. Shedd adds: "The story might go on to other districts; but this is enough to show how Moslem rule crushes the Christian population, and to show how hopeless is any steady missionary work in the midst of such turmoil and misery. How hard it is for the poor Christians, many of whom are Protestants, and all of whom might be as safe and prosperous as their Moslem neighbours are, if they would give up their faith."

DOVE ROW DRIFT CHILDREN'S MISSION.—An interesting gathering took place on Wednesday, Oct. 31, at the Morley Hall, Triangle, Hackney, when upwards of 1100 poor children, with their parents and friends, met to hear what had been done with their donations to a fund for sending the invalid and cripple children of the locality to the seaside. £8 4s. had been given in pence, halfpence, and farthings by the children connected with the Dove Row Drift Mission, towards this object. The fund was further supplemented by other donations and help from the Ragged School Union, with which the Mission is affiliated. Thus the workers were able to send over 100 children to the seaside and country homes for a fortnight's stay. The Hon. Sec., Mr. C. J. Montague, reported that 3200 Hackney and Haggerston children had enjoyed a day at Loughton.

THE OUTLOOK IN IRELAND.

THE BIRDS' NEST.

I recently paid a visit to the Birds' Nest, Kingstown, and, as an illustration of what is being done by quiet, steady, persistent work here, I think a few words about this Institution will interest your readers. Kingstown is the station for the mail boats to and from Holyhead. It was but a little fishing village when George IV. landed there in 1821, but it is now a thriving town, its lovely bay and picturesque hill scenery well known to every tourist who visits the Emerald Isle. It is a strong Roman Catholic centre, most of the lower orders and a large proportion of the middle classes belonging to that creed. There is an imposing Roman Catholic church near the railway station, and there is also a convent with a home for "rescued children." This latter owes its origin to the Birds' Nest established here many years since by Mrs. Smyly.

The shades of night were falling, and the lights twinkling on the ships in the harbour, as well as in the houses dotting the amphitheatre of hills around Kingstown, when I wended my way to the Birds' Nest. It lies in the suburbs, among some fine trees, with streets of villa residences all around. The little girl who answered my ring at the door wore the uniform of the place, a dark gown with snow-white bib, and her healthy, rosy face beamed with Celtic good nature. I soon saw the lady superintendent, who, although it was after visiting hours, invited me to go through the establishment.

There are one hundred and sixty-five children living on the premises, and more than twenty at lodgings. The great majority are girls, the residue consisting of between twenty and thirty small boys. The girls were at their sewing-class, and very creditable work they turn out. But what was my surprise upon entering another hall to find the small boys each plying his needle also. The girls have also cooking classes, and are trained in washing and other laundry work. All the children get one hour's religious instruction in school daily; half that time is devoted to learning by heart "the hundred texts," and the other half to a Bible-class. The dormitories were a sight to look at. The windows on either side were open, commanding a view of the sea and distant hills, while the air was pure and perfectly sweet. Each bed had a Bible upon it, while charts containing appropriate Scripture texts hung from the walls. The girls are kept here until they are sixteen or seventeen, when they are placed in suitable situations. The boys are drafted to another establishment when they reach their eleventh year.

I saw all the children assembled for supper in the refectory, and shall not soon forget the sight. Ranged along two of the tables were four rows of little mites with smiling faces and chubby cheeks. They started the grace before meat, which was taken up by four rows of little boys at the other end of the refectory in thundering chorus, the refrain being concluded by the grown girls in the middle. I could not help feeling that He who loved little children was present. I went into the kitchen, where I found two tame pigeons, the special pets of the children. There were only two in the infirmary, called here "the nursery," and they were merely suffering from slight colds. The children are taken out to walk daily if dry, and take recreation on the premises if the weather is wet.

This is but one of seven homes for children, all owing their existence to Mrs. Smyly, and all under her care. They give shelter and all the comforts of home life to six hundred and thirteen children at the present time, and there are applications for several whom they cannot at present find room for. They are nearly all the children of Roman Catholic parents, and are all carefully trained and grounded in the saving truths of the Gospel. I have never met children so well instructed, and great care is taken to lead them to the Saviour as soon as they are of an age to come to a decision. Now here is a mighty work on the Lord's side, and it has been growing for many years. The lower orders of Roman Catholics are notoriously thriftless, and often grossly intemperate in the large towns. When either of the parents is carried off by death the children are left destitute and exposed to serious dangers because of the bad example around them. Then it is that some Christian lady or gentleman suggests the Birds' Nest as a refuge, and so the little ones are gathered in when their minds are soft as melted wax, and taught to look to Jesus and to love Him.

"Do you ever have any trouble now from the priests?" I inquired of the lady superintendent.

"Oh, yes. But things have been much quieter of late: in fact we have not had a single demonstration at our door during the last year."

This used to be a matter of constant occurrence. The children may starve or wallow in rags and filth and Rome will not move a finger. But let Mrs. Smyly act the part of Good Samaritan, and immediately the parent or guardian will be sent here to demand the child back. I have known cases in which the children, even when legally withdrawn from one of the homes, escaped from the Nuns and returned to the old nest. This speaks well for the motherly tenderness displayed by those in charge of them. Any person is welcome to visit the Kingstown Birds' Nest between the hours of eleven and two daily. I do not think any Christian man or woman could enjoy a greater treat than to make the acquaintance of over a hundred and sixty happy, healthy Irish children whom I saw there. It is a noble work, and the promise, "they that turn many to righteousness (shall shine) as the stars for ever and ever" will be its crowning reward.

JEWISH NOTES.

In the latest issue of The Hebrew-Christian Mr. Hermann Warszawiak, of New York, speaks of eighteen months' work as follows: "We had some 390 meetings, seventy-eight of which were 'chief meetings,' held on Saturday afternoons with a regular attendance of hundreds of Jews. I was able, with the help of God, to visit during this time several thousands of Jewish homes, stores, and workshops, and preach Christ to them then and there. More than one thousand Jews came to see me privately at my dwelling, some hundreds of whom really came to inquire after the truth as it is in Jesus; and I also received between 1500 and 1600 Jewish letters of all kinds from those who have attended the meetings."

From Oct. 26 to Nov. 1 meetings were held in Cambridge in connection with a forward movement on behalf of missions to the Jews. Though made under the auspices of the London Jews Society, the movement was designed to awaken a deeper interest in the unique history and prospects of the scattered people, and to excite a Christian concern in their evangelisation, no matter by what agency. Among the preachers were Revs. Canon Girdlestone, F. L. Denman, H. O. Allbrook, and H. C. G. Moule. Public meetings were also addressed, the speakers including Mirza Narollah, from Ispahan. The gatherings in the rooms of undergraduates were very encouraging, and several offers for mission service were made.

JEWS AT SUNDERLAND.

Two members of the Mildmay Mission Band, Messrs. Redwood and Goldstein, have been working for a fortnight among Jews and Gentiles at Sunderland. They spent the first few days in visiting and conversing with some of the many Jews in the town, and distributing Testaments to such as would receive them. As is usually the case they had a varied reception; some being civil and apparently friendly, others being hostile and even abusive.

Gospel meetings were held each evening, from Sunday, October 28, to Sunday, November 4, in the large hall at the Pottery Buildings, kindly lent by Mrs. Backhouse, which have proved times of blessing to many, and in which a considerable number have professed to receive Christ as their personal Saviour. Open-air meetings have also been held each evening in the quarter where the Jews congregate a good deal, and numbers of them have consequently come within sound of the Gospel.

Through the kindness of Pastor Marsh the brethren continue their mission in Bethesda Free Chapel during the present week. I.S.

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—On Sunday last Revs. R. H. Noble (of London) and A. Mackinlay (of Cork), deputies for the Irish Evangelical Society, spoke in Emmanuel Church (Rev. J. Mountain's) and Mount Pleasant Church (Rev. W. Cowper Smith's), Tunbridge Wells, on mission work in Ireland. They showed the value of the work of the Society, and said that unless the friends of Ireland gave more liberally some of the agents would have to be withdrawn.

NORTH LONDON GOSPEL SAMARITAN MISSION.—The seventh anniversary of this Mission was held on Thursday, November 1, at Holloway Baptist Chapel. About 200 friends took tea together, after which a public meeting was held, Mr. T. Smith in the chair. Addresses were given by the Chairman and Rev. J. R. Wood; also by the hon. pastor of the Mission, Mr. H. Bird, and the two Mission sisters, Sisters Edwards and Pearson. The latter devote the whole of their time and services to the visiting of the people in their homes, carrying with them the glad news of salvation, and ministering to the wants of the sick and dying.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a mission being held in Clifden, co. Galway, a dark centre of Romanism.—For a revival mission, to be conducted next week by Rev. F. E. Heape, at the Rotunda P. M. Church, Aldershot.—For a pastor that he may obtain a small church where he can preach the Gospel.—For the conversion of a widow's two sons.—For an effort by the Edmonton Baptist Church to distribute 1000 "C. H. Spurgeon's sermons" every week.—For special services by Rev. G. H. S. Gardener and Mr. Opie Rodway at Mount Pleasant Baptist Chapel, Bristol, during the week.—For a mission at the Gospel Mission Hall, Stonehouse, Glos., November 11 to 19, where the Romanists have now opened a mission room.—For a young man, who away from home, has fallen into evil ways. PRAISE.—For blessing given at the afternoon Bible readings at Banbury, given by Miss Grace Abbett.

BELIEVERS IN A DILEMMA.

Sir,—The unbiassed Scriptural standing of The Christian in holding forth the Word of Life may plead a sufficient ground for claiming the sympathy of unprejudiced readers, who, like ourselves, are in "difficulties" in an isolated parish, where the teaching is emphatically this, with its corollary, "When you were baptized you received your new nature," especially with the sequence, "Beware that you do not, by carelessness and neglect, forfeit this possession and become castaways, as St. Paul feared he might." But letting alone the latter, which has provoked without cause (Luke xx. 35, 36; John x. 28; xiv. 26) endless controversies, the former is such a directly deadly dogma of clergymen as yet unconverted, that we cannot see our way to "having to listen to this unscriptural teaching." These last words occur by way of sympathy of one of our most highly-honoured members; but as we are fully persuaded it is not our duty to listen, but the contrary, we are shut out, after earnest appeal.

There may be other members of the Church of England similarly placed, who cannot be reconciled to endure, and apparently to coincide with, this teaching, notwithstanding the advice of an excellent treatise of a deservedly-honoured minister of our Church, who would seem to encourage attendance where he says, "There are scores of devout men from whom I totally differ on important Church matters with whom I should count it a privilege to kneel in prayer." Are these "devout" men devout in the only proper sense of being new creatures in Christ Jesus, taught of God the Holy Ghost? Our Lord said, "Every one who is of the Truth heareth my voice," and "He that is of God heareth God's words." We dare not tolerate protested error. Other denominations do not provide an alternative; so we are

Out in the Cold.

PUBLIC-HOUSES AND THE GOSPEL.

Dear Sir,—As a younger worker for Christ I was much encouraged by the article in your issue of November 1 on "Public-houses and the Gospel." I often wonder that so few workers take up this work, for here is an effort that many could engage in in their spare time, without letting the special church, chapel, or mission hall to which they may belong suffer by their absence.

Two years ago I felt strongly that I, as an individual, was in a manner responsible, and ought to do something among the public-houses. After praying about the matter I began, with some fear and trembling, to distribute tracts and to speak a few words for the Master. After the little experience I have had (I hope to gain more), I am glad to say that I have not received a harsh word from a single publican; never anything more than a little good-humoured "chaff" sometimes, though I have conversed with their customers for half an hour or an hour at a time.

The customers themselves never make any opposition, except some poor man who has become ill-tempered through the drink. One such told me a short time since that I was "a blooming lunatic, and ought to be chained up," but on the whole I find that I am well received, and also have had cases that have encouraged me to go on. And so I will go on, praying that God may bless the seed sown, and that it may bring forth fruit to his glory.

Who among my fellow young men in Christ will make this a matter of earnest prayer? Who will help to carry the war into the enemy's camp? "The Lord your God which goeth before you, He shall fight for you" (Deut. i. 30).—Yours truly,

A. H. B.

OUR BOYS.

Sir,—I am sending a request for prayer for a young man I have met with, who is in imminent danger from the temptations which beset boys away from home. But at the same time I cannot resist asking you to urge Christian mothers to see if it be not possible, by close watching and earnest prayer, to discover what kind of lives their boys are really leading. It seems to me that a large majority so readily take for granted that their boys are pure and innocent, and thereby lose the opportunity of helping to save them, when, as in this case, they leave home and straightway fall before temptation.

May I not entreat all mothers who may see this, to take any steps possible to them at once to discover whether any evil tendencies may be corrupting their boys when removed from their care? This may very likely meet the eye of the mother of the very boy for whom I am asking prayer, and who, as he himself told me, would break her heart if she had any idea what his hidden life was like.

Surely if they have no other means of finding out, mothers might make it a matter of constant prayer, that God would open their eyes and see what their boys really are in his sight.

A Worker.

MILITARY CANTEENS.

Dear Sir,—On the subject of military canteens, concerning which "R. H." writes in your current number, I offer my experience as an officer of the army, and I may say it is a subject which I have always studied.

Though facilities are not given for men to get drunk if they choose, there is no doubt that a great deal of drunkenness does take place in them. The non-commissioned officer referred to seldom attempts to do more than put a stop to fighting and other such disturbances, and if a man will take his liquor quietly, no one will interfere with his taking as much as he pleases.

The plea in favour of canteens is that they keep men out of public-houses, where the liquor they would obtain would be less wholesome for them, and there is something to be said for that argument. My experience is that they do more harm than good, and most certainly in places where the drink shops are some distance from the barrack gates. Many men, and especially young soldiers, who have not been accustomed to drink are tempted to spend their evenings in the canteen, where they are allowed to go in undress, who would never take the trouble to dress in order to leave barracks for the sake of a drink. The old topers, who would do so, do it under the present system, as they do not find the canteens sufficiently exciting, some order being kept there.

I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that canteens are principally an encouragement to men to drink who would not otherwise do so.—Yours truly,

E. S. C.

MR. AND MRS. HENRY VARLEY.

These honoured servants of Christ have received with deep thankfulness a cablegram from their son Frank, that he escaped the sad fate which overtook so many of his fellow passengers on board the s.s. Wairarapa, which was wrecked last week. Our readers will, we are sure, join them in thanksgiving to God for his deliverance. His recent letters tell of much blessing in his evangelistic labours in Melbourne and elsewhere, as well as in his own personal experience. They breathe a spirit of intense devotion to the service of God, and manifest the joy of the Lord as his great strength.

Mr. Henry Varley has concluded a mission in the City Hall, Glasgow, in which great interest has been manifested. The closing meeting on Sunday evening was specially remarkable for solemnity and power. Quite 2000 rose in the after-meeting to testify to blessing received during the mission. Mr. and Mrs. Varley are leaving England for Australia on Thursday week (15th), viâ Brindisi.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

Each pang the children suffer thrills their Maker's heart.

The other day a little girl was carrying her brother, who was no light weight. When someone said to her that he was too heavy a burden to carry, she said, "He is not a burden; he is my brother."

If every man would watch his house,
Then all would be defended;
If every man would help his child,
The world would soon be mended.

Those parents who deliberately choose to educate their children by the insufficient light of tradition and instinct, refusing to study and profit by the fuller light given to the present generation of parents, do so at their own and their children's peril.

It is the prompter of sad feelings, and suggestive of many a sad thought, to watch the child cross the zone which separates the life of unconscious naturalism from that wherein begins to dawn the fact of its own distinct life and importance.

If parents had not altogether forgotten about their own childhood, they would make abundant allowance for the restlessness of their children. Pray think that they are brimming over with energy, its impulses being necessary to their growth.

First of all, believe that your boys can grow up pure. How then shall you begin to minister to it? Make yourself and their mother all in all to them. Give them as much of your companionship as you possibly can.—Archbishop of Canterbury.

A child who has always been encouraged to tell all her troubles to her mother, knows that she will find a patient and loving hearer and counsellor, and will not be apt in her youth—the time when she most needs counsel and advice—to do anything she cannot tell her mother all about.

We are all given to talking too much to children; we seldom get them to ask questions, nor do we even ask them many questions ourselves. Judicious questioning will do more to impress a lesson upon the mind of a child than if we talked for hours.—T. J. Ainsworth.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

[From our own Correspondent.]

On Sabbath morning Principal Moule commenced a series of Bible readings in the Henry Martyn Hall, on the epistle to the Ephesians. Mr. Moule pointed out ch. i. ver. 3, which indicates the blessed presentness of our spiritual possessions, and said that we have only to take the key, namely the Word of God, and fit it to each individual promise, in order to realise their full extent.

The speaker at the weekly meeting of the C.M.U. on Friday, November 2, was Rev. F. Burt, of the Eastern Equatorial African Mission. Mr. Burt is a co-worker with Rev. Douglas Hooper, and hopes to return to the mission field on Thursday week. He gave much encouraging news of the Mission and many instances of direct answers to prayers he had experienced.

Weekly prayer meetings have been started in two colleges (Caius and Magdalene) this term, where they have never been held before. Nearly every college now has its prayer meeting.

IRISH NOTES.

The Archbishop of Dublin has issued an appeal asking for contributions towards the £6000 required to form an Episcopal Endowment Fund for the Reformed Church of Spain.

A short Gospel mission was held in Portadown last week by Bishop Taylor, of West Africa. Thirty-two years ago Dr. Taylor conducted a series of evangelistic services in the North of Ireland, which were most successful, and much of the fruit of which remains to the present time.

Pastor H. E. Stone has agreed, at the invitation of the friends at Victoria Chapel, to conduct a ten days' mission in Belfast, commencing November 13. Earnest prayer is asked that the Divine blessing may rest upon this movement. Already signs of blessing have been manifest, and believers were baptized a fortnight since, and more are to be baptized next Sunday.

A Christian Endeavour Society has been established in connection with Abbey-street Methodist Church, Dublin, and has already fifty members. A new departure has also been taken by the same church in establishing an "At Home" in its school-room on Sunday evenings for young people in shops, schools, and offices. Over 100 persons attended the first meeting.

The sessions of the Theological Colleges in connection with the Presbyterian Church were formally opened last week under hopeful auspices. At Magee College, Derry, Professor Henry dwelt on the preparation and training needed for the Christian ministry; in the Assembly's College, Belfast, Professor Walker delivered an able address on the recent criticism of the book of Psalms.

 In a recent obituary notice of Rev. James Martin, of Belfast, the writer, referring to the good influence which the deceased had exercised over the present Lord Mayor of Belfast, stated that Mr. Martin had "saved him from moral shipwreck" in early life. We are informed that this statement is a much exaggerated representation of remarks recently made in public by his lordship, on which it was founded. What the Lord Mayor said was that Mr. Martin had been very kind to him on his first coming to Belfast as a young man. We regret having given currency to the erroneous statement.

A LAD OF TWELVE YEARS was asked by his teacher how long he intended to continue at Sunday-school. The reply was, "I think as long as I live." "What, when you are grown up?" said the teacher. "Then I am going to sit in your place."

A GREAT MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION has been arranged by the Metropolitan Tabernacle S.S. Young Christian Association, to be held on Wednesday, November 21, at 7 p.m., in the Tabernacle. The speakers include Pastor T. Spurgeon, Dr. Harry Guinness, Messrs. F. Marcus Wood and A. K. Langridge. Sunday-school teachers, Bible-class members, and Christian Endeavourers are heartily invited. It is expected that the meeting will be one of great interest.

JERUSALEM.—Mr. D. C. Joseph writes: "We have suffered great loss; three of the workers among Israel have been called away within a fortnight. Our brother, James K. Cruickshank, only a few months arrived from America, died on Monday, October 8; our sister, Miss Robertson, fell asleep on Sunday, October 14; and our friend Mrs. Hornstain for a great number of years a mother in Israel, was taken from us on Friday, October 19. We need the prayers of the Lord's people on behalf of Israel. The Lord will fill up the places with men and women after his own heart. The Lord comfort Zion."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Greenock Sabbath School Union has been celebrating its semi-jubilee.

Mr. W. R. Lane is this week holding a Gospel mission at Finnieston Free Church, Glasgow.

The Poor Children's Dinner Table Society, of Glasgow, is preparing for the winter's work. It needs more public support.

Rev. G. McHardy, Congregational pastor, Kirkcaldy, has had his semi-jubilee, when his friends and neighbours of all sections of the Church gathered to bid him God speed.

Rev. Egerton Young, of Canada, has lectured on behalf of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society. His graphic descriptions of pioneer work in the far North-West were much enjoyed.

This week the Scottish Temperance League are celebrating their jubilee by a series of meetings in Glasgow. The City Corporation last week gave a conversazione in honour of the event.

On Sabbath next Rev. F. B. Meyer expects to preach in Glasgow three times—forenoon at Rev. Dr. Corbett's, Camphill; afternoon at Rev. H. Mair's, Wellpark; and evening at Rev. Dr. Macleod's, Park Church.

West Port F.C. Church, Edinburgh, has held its jubilee. The congregation resolved at a thanksgiving meeting to dedicate themselves anew for the fuller and better accomplishment of the great work of raising the fallen.

An interesting meeting was held in Edinburgh last week, in connection with the Scottish Women's Bible Study Association. One speaker noted the hopefulness of the fact that the society was for the "study," not the mere reading of the Scriptures. Twenty new students joined the society.

The Free Church of Scotland is about to open in Edinburgh an institute for the missionary training of young ladies. The services of Miss Small, late of Poona, have been secured as superintendent, and the systematic study of the Bible and of such subjects as Christian evidences and doctrine will be provided for.

Dr. Landels' ministerial jubilee was signalised last week by a great gathering of friends at the Dublin-street Baptist Church, Edinburgh. Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, presided, and many brethren from other denominations were present to show fraternal good wishes. Dr. Landels was presented with a thousand guineas as a token of regard.

The Wynd Free Church, Glasgow (Rev. J. Riddell's), is well known for its aggressive work in this city. Mr. Donald Fraser (late travelling secretary for the S.V.M.U.) is at present assisting the pastor, and he organised and carried out a foreign missionary week, October 15-21. During the week there were no fewer than eighteen missionary meetings, seven of these being for young men and women and for children, and two for ladies. These were addressed by thirteen missionaries from various fields, China, India, Ceylon, Morocco, Lovedale, and the Congo being represented. The last meeting was a "Great Missionary Consecration Service," at which thirty persons publicly gave themselves to the Lord for service in the foreign field. Others have since indicated their willingness to go if the way is made clear.

Writing to the local press on the work of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, Mr. A. MacKeith, the treasurer, says:—"The branches more immediately in want of help are the Evangelistic, the Bible Training Institute, the Bonar Memorial, the Fresh Air, and the Girls' Home. Since the opening of our Girls' Home, 732 girls who were in danger of going astray have been sheltered, and either restored to their homes or got into service. Many of them have been found, after careful investigation, to be entirely friendless, or to have friends so utterly regardless of their welfare as not to deserve the name. Domestic service, especially in Christian homes, offers to such girls the most secure retreat from the experiences they have formerly known, as well as the best guarantee that they will be kindly treated and well guided; and it is gratifying to record that the conduct of the girls so disposed of has been on the whole so good that the demand for them is constantly maintained."

BELLEVILLE MISSION.—November 1 and 2, set apart in France for the memory of the dead, once more afforded to the workers of Miss de Broen's Belleville Mission the privilege of distributing tracts and leaflets, with portions from God's Word, to the multitudes that crowd the different cemeteries on those two days. Fifteen thousand five hundred tracts and leaflets were distributed at the gates of the cemeteries. Père la Chaise, Pantin, and Ouen, with the fervent prayer that souls might be saved and led into the kingdom by these messages from God's own Word. The people took them gladly, and the number of those that refused was only small. L. K.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The annual report of the Cape Town Y.M.C.A. records the healthy condition of all the agencies of the Association. The gross membership now numbers 617.

The workers at Westbourne-grove Association are looking forward with hopefulness to the mission to be held by Mr. C. Cook, November 18-23. They will be glad of fellowship in prayer.

The new premises at Newton Abbot were formally opened on Friday, 26th ult., at a most successful gathering. The new buildings comprise reading and meeting room, opening on the street, centrally situated in the town, classrooms, lavatories, and a new gymnasium.

The annual meeting of the Cork Association was held on the 30th ult. in the new building in Marlborough-street. The attendance of friends was very large. The president, Mr. J. C. Newsom, occupied the chair, and the secretary, Mr. T. A. Bailey, presented an excellent report.

The annual meeting of the Lincoln Association was held last week, when Mr. Ruston presided over an enthusiastic assembly, composed mainly of young men; and the meeting was addressed by the Dean of Lincoln, Mr. Thorne, Mr. Alderman Bemrose, Mr. Mills, Mr. Hind Smith, and Mr. T. Moffett.

The King's Lynn Association had at its annual meeting much progress to report. The president, Mr. C. W. Perry, said they had included lady associates in their society; and after twelve months' experience, he was more than ever convinced that these lady associates had proved to be most effective agents in God's hands to lead young men to the Christian Association.

The annual public meeting of the Shrewsbury Y.M.C.A. was held in the Working Men's Hall on October 30. An address was given by Mr. Allan, and reports of the work by the secretaries of the various meetings. This Association, which has been in existence forty years, has during the past year made progress in reaching more young men, as well as in extensive evangelistic work.

Mr. W. Müller, who has done most excellent work as general secretary of the German Y.M.C.A. in London, has relinquished his position in order that he may devote his time and energies wholly to the carrying on of the Christian Home for Artisans, which is identified with this branch of the Association, and which, but for some such step in its behalf, would probably have had to close for lack of funds.

The annual conference of the North Midland District Union, held last week at Lincoln, proved a most helpful gathering. Approval was given to a project securing jointly with the Midland district the services of Mr. F. C. Bennett as travelling secretary. The Conference resolved to try as an experiment in the district a county form of organisation, in the hope that while not interfering with the corporate advantages of the Union, the Associations in each county may be enabled to co-operate more closely.

The Pleasant Saturday Night meetings for young men, inaugurated by the Exeter Hall Association, have so far been very successful. Canon McCormick's lecture on "The Siege of Derry" attracted a large audience, over which Mr. J. F. Farwell presided. The address last Saturday evening (3rd inst.) was by Mr. J. Williams Benn, M.P., L.C.C. Dr. Pentecost has commenced his series of addresses on "The Reasonableness of Christianity." The first, delivered on October 31, was well attended and greatly appreciated.

A successful conference of the Associations in the North-West Metropolitan District Union took place at the Central Association, Stafford Rooms, Titchborne-street, Edgware-road, on Tuesday evening last, when, despite a heavy downpour of rain, about forty delegates attended, representing eight out of the ten Associations. The meeting was presided over by Mr. G. A. Kidner, and the National Council was represented by Mr. W. H. Mills, secretary. A paper presented by Mr. F. A. Graham upon "How the Members may be Helped to Realise and Discharge Their Responsibilities" led to an interesting discussion.

The National Executive met on Friday afternoon, under the presidency of Sir George Williams. The travelling secretaries submitted reports of work done throughout the country, and plans were discussed for future undertakings and engagements. The executive resolved to communicate with secretaries of Associations, urging them to include in their programmes provisions for lectures and meetings designed to give information in regard to special forms of temptation, and to the widely prevalent evils of intemperance, betting and gambling, and impurity, and to help young men to resist any and every form of temptation in the direction of such evils; also that a small pamphlet be prepared for circulation among the Associations, which shall give information as to methods and plans of work that have been successfully employed for combatting these evils, and which may be recommended to the Associations for adoption.

The first annual meeting of the Putney Association was held at the Assembly Rooms. Mr. E. Rawlings occupied the chair. Rev. Donald Mathieson said it should not be hard to form a Y.M.C.A. in Putney, but they must remember that they would have to work very hard to maintain it in working vigour. The chief feature of the Y.M.C.A. was the Bible class, upon which everything else rested. The great danger they had to fear in a Y.M.C.A. was lest their study of the Bible should be narrow, and should not lead them to carry the lessons of the Bible into actual practice. Mr. George Clarke, Mr. Lennard (the secretary), Rev. J. Rodwell, Rev. R. A. Redford, and Mr. T. G. Smith also gave brief addresses.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Miss Bethune and Miss Collins, of Princess House, Brompton-road, will be leaving shortly for India to take up work at the Y.W.C.A. Institute and Home in Calcutta.

The effort of the "Fisher Band" at the Hampstead branch to gather in girls who do not attend any place of worship on Sunday evenings is meeting with encouraging success. The other Sunday evening the room was crowded, the younger girls having to sit on the floor.

A mission has been held at the Y.W.C.A., Gipsy Hill, Norwood, by Miss L. Perks, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester. Many were gathered in; there was blessing both in the afternoon Bible-readings and evening addresses. The members' tea followed, and was well attended, when Rev. J. G. Train gave a most telling address.

Pleasant Saturday Afternoons are being organised at the Central Institute, 316, Regent-street, for young women in business who have no friends in London with whom profitably to spend their half-holiday. Occasional visits will be paid to places of interest—museums, picture galleries, etc. Miss Willmot will gladly supply cards of invitation.

The Belfast Institute has had lately visits from Mrs. Pollen, India; Miss Fanny Kinaham, Mr. Cecil Polhill Turner, and Mr. and Mrs. James Macaulay, of China. Two members have started for the foreign field, Miss May Spence, B.A., for Benares, and Miss Martha Wilson for Ceylon. It has been decided to give up having the annual sale of work, the members and other Christian friends being asked to give direct to the Lord's work the amount they would otherwise have spent on the sale.

The Associations (says Evangelical Christendom) are making good progress in Germany. A society, which erected a home for factory girls in Berlin, and intends building a second one now, has appointed a pastor as secretary for the work, as it was no longer possible to satisfy the increasing demands without a man who dedicates his whole time to this important work. In connection with this, a new effort has been made to do mission work at the railway stations. This is particularly important at the quarter days, when many young women come to the metropolis. A number of ladies volunteered to spend the first days of October on the railway stations. Often a severe struggle was necessary to release the girls from the hands of unscrupulous agents and such as wanted to secure them for vice. In many cases the ladies were successful; but as, alas! too many young women only come to Berlin to seek liberty and amusement, they often object to such well-meant help.

THEATRICAL MISSION.—A new branch home for the reception of employees at Olympia was opened at 33, Maclise-road, Kensington, last week by Lady Trelawny. It transpired that the premises could accommodate seventeen boarders, whilst there were rooms where the supernumeraries and dancers could read and write, and pass away in an enjoyable manner the short interval between the performances in the huge building not 100 yards distant. Everything, indeed, seems to have been provided for their comfort, though in an appeal for funds it was mentioned that books and pictures would be very acceptable to the management.

THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS held their anniversary meeting on Thursday, at the headquarters of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society. Mr. Wm. Green, who presided, spoke on the evils of the drink traffic. Mr. Williams Benn, M.P., urged parents not to indulge in intoxicating drink, for the sake of the example to their children. Captain Blackburne (who had given up command of a P. and O. steamer because his conscience would not allow him to carry opium in the vessel), Mr. Spence, and others also spoke. At the conclusion a number of pledges were taken, and an inquirer, a mate of a vessel, was dealt with and professed conversion.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

THE Christian Endeavour at Auburn, Cal., conducts meetings at the county jail every Sunday.

Once every month a New Orleans society holds a meeting, at which everything recited or sung is given from memory.

In Kansas City, Mo., a Gospel wagon is used to hold meetings every Sunday afternoon in parts of the city without churches.

The Vermont C.E. Union was held at Newport, October 2, 3. The vital needs of the work were recognised, and the best ways of meeting them presented by various workers.

As nearly all the delegates to the recent California convention of Y.M.C. Associations were Endeavourers, four of the societies in Oakland held a union meeting attended by more than a thousand.

The C.E. Societies in Cleveland, O., have divided the city among themselves by districts, and assigned each district to the especial oversight of a committee, which is to report at once to a central committee any breaking of the laws by saloons, or other evils in their district. The names of the law-breakers are published in the newspapers.

The New York State C.E. Convention was held at Albany, October 9, 10. The membership was increased last year by 13,090. The character of the services was of the usual order, and all the meetings were full of life and enthusiasm. Rev. Dr. W. R. Taylor preached the annual sermon, and prominent speakers from different parts of the States and Canada took part in the discussions.

The first anniversary of the Parker-street C.E., Barnsley, was celebrated on Sunday week, the evening service being conducted chiefly by the members themselves. On Monday evening a public meeting was held in the chapel, the pastor presiding. On Thursday evening a missionary meeting was held, when an address on Mission work in India was given by Rev. R. H. Tregillus.

A meeting in connection with the Christian Endeavour Society was held in the Public Hall, Caergwile, near Wrexham. Mr. Sauvage gave a ten minutes' address on the increasing need of earnest spiritual work among the young people. Mr. Roberts gave a short account of the results which have arisen from the work of the society in Southport. Rev. J. B. Morgan traced the history of the C.E. movement, and the results already achieved, speaking with great enthusiasm of the possibilities before it.

NEW ZEALAND NOTES.

THE Christian Endeavourers of Auckland are supporting a missionary among the Chinese in that city, and the Endeavourers in Wellington have sent to Melbourne for a missionary to labour in their city.

The Australian council of the China Inland Mission has been led to appoint councils in Auckland and Dunedin; the former has already sent its first probationer to the field. Miss Blakeley, widely known and loved by the poor of Auckland, among whom she has laboured for the past five years, has left that city for China. A large number of friends assembled in the Y.M.C.A. to bid her God speed. Miss Wilson, who proceeds to the C.M.S. Niger Mission, was farewelled at the same time.

Miss Blakeley visited Wellington, Christchurch, and Dunedin en route, and addressed missionary meetings, at each of these a number signified their willingness to proceed to the mission field. Miss Wilson addressed several gatherings of the Gleaners' Mission in Napier, and was much encouraged at the earnest spirit manifested by those present.

RESCUE WORK IN BRIXTON.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me, through your widely read paper, to appeal to others than our parishioners in Brixton, on behalf of the quiet, practical effort that we have been for some years making on behalf of "the fallen"? Our lady superintendent spends two evenings every week working in the West End. Our "Home" is such in reality and in spirit. Most of those who come to us remain for six months and leave with many regrets.

Of the 117 girls who have passed through our home in the last three and-a-half years, and the majority of whom we are still in touch with, quite half are now doing well, happily married, back with their own people in the country, or in situations as clerks, lady helps, nurses, etc.

We have not hitherto asked the public for help; but the necessity of the case compels us to do so now; our neighbourhood is getting poorer, and unless funds are forthcoming we must curtail our work and take a smaller house.—Yours very truly

MARCUS RAINSFORD, JUN.

Brixton Church, S.W.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen J. Alexander will conduct a mission at Islington (Popham-road) from November 18 to 29 inclusive, for which prayer is requested.

Miss C. Wilson, of Carlisle, has held a mission in the Gospel Hall of the Newcastle City Mission. The power of the Lord has been present and a large number have professed conversion. M. G.

Mr. Gerald Coultas, who has been holding special meetings in the West of England, praises God for manifest blessing. He is now revisiting the North, and desires prayer for much blessing.

Mr. Opie Rodway has had an excellent mission at Hawkesbury Upton, with crowded meetings and tokens of conversion. He began a fresh series at Mount Pleasant, Bristol, on Saturday evening.

Guernsey.—Mr. James Eyres has concluded a month's mission in the mission hall here. The services were largely attended. The workers have been greatly stirred up, and not a few unsaved have been gathered in.

Rev. Thomas L. Johnson has concluded some special services in connection with St. John's Church, Boscombe, Bournemouth (Rev. S. A. Selwyn, vicar). On Sunday next he commences an eight days' mission at Christ Church, Bournemouth.

Mr. V. Albinson has held an eight days' Gospel mission in the Evangelical Hall, Homerton. Each meeting seemed to increase in power, and at the closing service many confessed Christ. Sinners have been brought to the Saviour, backsliders restored, and believers quickened.

Wandsworth-road.—The Howard-street Gospel Mission has closed a most successful series of open-air missions, commenced on Good Friday and continued to Sunday, October 28. Sinners have been converted and many drunkards have become sober men and attend the meetings. J. SOAMES.

Swindon.—A fifteen days' mission has been conducted by Rev. W. Michael Smith in Trinity Hall. In all some twenty-four meetings were held, embracing Bible-readings, services for children, addresses to workmen at the G.W.R. works during the dinner hour, and evangelistic services.

Princess's Theatre.—Crowds continue to make their way to this theatre on Sunday evenings to the evangelistic lantern services conducted by Mr. Josiah Nix. Last Sunday evening this great building, which seats over 3000 persons, was crowded in every part, and it is estimated that between 500 and 6000 had to be turned away from the doors. C. J.

Bournemouth.—On Sunday, November 4, Mr. Henry Thorne commenced a ten days' mission in the West Cliff Tabernacle. Large congregations gathered morning and evening, and listened with deepest interest to both addresses. "The Angel wrestling with Jacob" was the theme of the evening address, and was expounded with considerable clearness and force. A number of inquirers were seen at the after meeting. In the afternoon Mr. Thorne preached at the Shaftesbury Hall to a large congregation.

Rev. John McNeill and Mr. Burke held mission services in the Exhibition Building, Adelaide, for two weeks, drawing enormous crowds to the services. At a farewell breakfast given to them, the Mayor of Adelaide and several others bore testimony to the great services rendered to the cause of religion by these brethren in their nine days' mission. From Adelaide the evangelists went to Brisbane, where great preparations had been made and high expectations entertained. They were to begin in the Exhibition Buildings, Sydney, on October 7.

Cheltenham.—A three weeks' mission, from October 14 to November 4, has been held in St. Paul's Mission Hall, Cheltenham, conducted by Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings have all through been well attended, and not a few have, we believe, accepted Christ as their Saviour. Mr. Collins has the gift of presenting the Gospel powerfully and clearly, and the increasing numbers attending the meetings from week to week testified to his acceptance with the people. We are praising God for his visit here, and hoping to see him again in the future. FRANK W. DODD.

Mr. J. Crofton Rainey concluded on Sunday a very successful fortnight's mission service at Wallingford. From the first the meetings were well attended, but as the mission proceeded the interest deepened, and there were many tokens of blessing attending the preaching of the Word. It has been a means of blessing to many of God's people in this town in leading some to seek a fuller consecration of themselves to Christ, and helping many in their Christian life. Many went to the inquiry-room as seekers, with the result that they were led to Jesus.

Hop-pickers in Kent.—We have closed the fourth year of our Gospel mission to the hop-pickers in the district of Edenbridge. A tent was employed on Hever Lodge Farm for some 250 London pickers. Meetings held every night produced excellent results. Several volunteers and three London City Missionaries enabled us to visit about twenty-five farms and speak to each picker about salvation while at work. Some 2500 have been thus personally dealt with. Open-air meetings were held during the dinner hours, and the best Gospel literature distributed among them. We need a magic lantern, and several tents instead of one. DAVID SMITH.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Thomas L. Gulick, well-known in connection with mission work in Spain and the Sandwich Islands, has been appointed secretary of the American auxiliary to the McAll Mission in France.

Rev. Charles Wilson, M.A., so well known for his work at Blackheath, has tendered his resignation of the pastorate of the Congregational Church, Blackheath, which he has held for fourteen years. He is chairman of Milton Mount College.

The late Mr. John Horniman, the Quaker tea merchant, has left personalty amounting to £313,762. He leaves munificent legacies to the Peace Society, Children's Hospital, Moravian Mission, and other religious and charitable associations.

Prince Ademuyiwa, the Christian African Prince now visiting this country, Haastrap of the Independent State of Jebu Remo, on the west coast of Africa, was present on Friday at the meeting of the City Corporation, when the Lord Mayor made his valedictory address. He was permitted at the close to speak a few words.

Rev. W. Gray has, it is announced, decided to retire from the secretariat of the Church Missionary Society, in consequence of the increasing weakness of his eyesight. He was for many years missionary in Tinnevelly and at Madras. In 1874 he was invited to Salisbury-square to take charge of the correspondence connected with India.

Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances Willard are domiciled in an apartment hotel on Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, U.S., where they will spend the winter (says an American contemporary). Lady Somerset's son will attend lectures in some institutions of learning, and finish the writing and editing of a book of travel. Miss Willard has been ill, but not as seriously as reported, although she is not yet able to receive her friends to any extent.

OBITUARY.

THE BISHOP OF COLCHESTER.

THE Right Rev. Alfred Blomfield, Bishop Suffragan of Colchester, died at his residence, Park House, Brentwood, Essex, on Monday morning. He had been suffering for some time from an obstruction in the throat, which prevented his taking the necessary food. He gradually grew weaker, and for some days all hope had been abandoned of his recovery. He was a son of the great Bishop of London, was ordained in 1857 and 1858 by the Bishop of Oxford (Dr. Wilberforce), and he spent a great portion of his life in hard clerical labour.

MR. J. T. MARSHALL.

We regret to hear of the sudden death of Mr. J. T. Marshall, at his residence, Thurlow-road, Hampstead. He was by profession a solicitor, and for many years past took a warm and practical interest in Christian work. He was a helper of several Evangelical societies, but the two in which he took the greatest interest were the Church Association and the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews. He was sixty-nine years of age, was married three times, and by his last wife, who survives him, he leaves four sons between the ages of nine and seventeen.

COL. PUGET, TOTTERIDGE.

Many will hear with deep regret of the falling asleep of this devoted servant of Christ, who for so many years has been an earnest helper of many Evangelical institutions. Born in 1827, he entered the Army, and served in the 8th Hussars in the Crimea. On retirement he gave himself to Christian usefulness, working heartily with any denomination so long as the labourers were faithful to Christ. In the London City Mission, the Trinitarian Bible Society, and the Y.M.C.A. he took special interest, and did most valuable work as a Bible teacher at Exeter Hall. Many missions and Gospel halls owed much to his liberality and helpfulness. He had resided at Totteridge for fifteen years, where his chief delight was to carry on mission services in the little hall originally built by his father, and in which he himself preached on the Sunday evening before he took ill. One of his last public acts was to preside at the Anti-Opium meeting held in his mission hall on October 10. The funeral took place on Friday, when many who had loved Colonel Puget for his life and labours assembled to testify their affection and esteem.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Sunday Reading for the Young, with its hundreds of illustrations and excellent letterpress, is better than ever. A glance at this cheery volume enables one readily to understand the popularity of Sunday in the juvenile world. (3s. and 5s., according to binding. Wells Gardner, Darton and Co.)

Our Own Gazette, edited by Mrs. Stephen Menzies, is a bright and useful monthly, which we are glad to learn is widely read by young women. Volume XI. contains wholesome stories, sketches, and items of practical interest; also moral and spiritual counsels specially addressed to young people. The volume will be very welcome as a Christmas present. (2s. 6d. 18, Paternoster-square, E.C.)

"LIVES OF GOOD MEN."

No kind of reading is at once so interesting and helpful as truthful accounts of noble work done by devoted men and women. In this category we must give a high place to Beneath the Banner, by F. J. Cross (1s. Cassell & Co.), which furnishes brief sketches of the noble lives and brave deeds of over thirty of the world's benefactors in our own time. It is a veritable multum in parvo. Strange but True is the title given to a series of "thrilling incidents in the life of a missioner"—who is Wm. Sampson, the Cornish Evangelist. They illustrate the familiar proverb that "truth is stranger than fiction." (1s. C. H. Kelly.) Three interesting little works of this biographical class, published by Messrs. Partridge (1s. 6d. each) are Through Prison Bars, by W. H. Render, the lives and labours of John Howard and Elizabeth Fry; Among the Maoris, by Jesse Page, a record of the labours of Samuel Marsden, Bishop Selwyn, and others; and Reginald Heber, Bishop of Calcutta, by A. Montefiore. Sir Henry Layard, his adventures and discoveries, by Alfred E. Lomax (1s. S.S. Union), makes a welcome addition to the "Splendid Lives" Series.

BOOKS OF ADVENTURE.

Deeds of daring and stories of adventure by flood or field have a perennial charm for boy readers. A splendid specimen of this class is Mr. Manville Fenn's First in the Field (5s. Partridge & Co.), descriptive of bush and convict life in New South Wales. Through four hundred living and moving pages Mr. Fenn leads us, and after many a thrilling experience lands us in a very satisfactory conclusion. Mr. Rainey's illustrations are excellent. My Strange Rescue and other stories of sport and adventure in Canada, by Mr. J. Macdonald Oxley (3s. 6d. Nelson & Sons), is scarcely less exciting, though not so rough; it affords an admirably vivid introduction to the free and open life of the great North-West. Boris, the Bear Hunter, by F. Wishaw (3s. 6d. Nelson & Sons), is a Russian tale of Peter the Great and his times. The historical element is prominent, and the book will be specially interesting just now, when Russia is passing through a great national experience. Cold Out of School, by A. J. Daniels (3s. 6d. Cassell & Co.), is a collection of humorous sketches of school life that will fascinate fearless and healthy lads. The School's Honour, and other stories, by Harold Avery (2s. 6d. Sunday School Union), is another book relating to school life, full of spirit and movement. Under the War Clouds, by E. F. Pollard (3s. 6d. Sunday School Union), is a well-told tale of the Franco-German War, founded on strict fact. Into the grimmer features of the narrative are interwoven incidents of a more tender and romantic kind. Stories of the Lifeboat; and Stories of the Victoria Cross, by Frank Mundell (1s. 6d. each. Sunday School Union), contain vivid pictures of brave actions in times of peril. All these books are cleverly illustrated.

STORY BOOKS.

Several of these may be grouped together. A Difficult Daughter, by E. Everett-Green (3s. 6d. Sunday School Union), is a clever character study that will have its lesson, we trust, both for parents and children. The author will doubtless furnish a sequel some day. The Bevans, by W. T. Emms (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly), tells the story of a feud between neighbours, with its tragic outcome, and how sin found itself out. Messrs. Partridge & Co. issue a cheap edition (2s.) of Mrs. Webb's popular Bible story Naomi: or the Last Days of Jerusalem. Another new and cheap edition is that of the delightful and true-to-life story Stepping Heavenward, by Mrs. Prentiss. It is one of the "Endeavour Library," and we hope it may see many more editions. (2s. 6d. Sunday School Union.) Rev. A. R. Buckland, editor of The Record, has made another venture into the realms of fiction with The Patience of Two. (2s. "Church Monthly" Office, 30, New Bridge-street.) It is a lively story of the ups and downs of London life, with some side-lights on the shady aspects of City enterprise. Ringing Bells, by Resse Rockwell (C. H. Kelly), is an American tale, showing how common duties became transfigured when done from right motives. Another excellent tale from across the Atlantic is Sherbourne House, by Amanda M. Douglas (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), telling of misunderstanding and righted wrongs, and introducing reminiscences of the American Civil War. Led by Love, by M. A. Paull (Mrs. John Ripley), is a high-toned story, exhibiting love as leading to service and sacrifice, and demonstrating its magnetic power and spiritual influence. The characters are varied in type—some beautiful, others sadly defective—and turns of experience which point wholesome morals eventuate in a climax at once satisfactory and illustrative of the truth implied in the title. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Max Reichner, Pastor, by H. O. Ward, is a very readable story, illustrative of the persecution which was endured in Bohemia, in the seventeenth century, by such as held the Reformed faith. Young and old should be stimulated by instances of Christian loyalty such as this book describes. (Elliot Stock.)

Public Prayers. By a Congregational Minister. (Elliot Stock.) This little work is calculated to assist those who aim at an acceptable expression of the innermost desires of others in public worship.

Sea Spray and other Poems, by Jeannie Bednall, is a little volume of choice verse, tastefully illustrated by H. G. Baguley. The get-up of the book harmonises with the very attractive contents. (Elliot Stock.)

The Union Mission Hymnal, edited by Rev. F. C. Spurr, incorporates "Hymns for Heart and Life." In the music edition the harmonies of the non-copyright pieces have been revised by Professor H. C. Banister. (1s. 6d. Marlborough & Co.)

Is There a Devil? or Why Sin is Permitted. By E. Huslier. (Millington Brothers, 8 and 9, Hayne-street, West Smithfield, E.C.) This is a book dealing with great subjects in a simple manner. The author writes as an Evangelical Protestant, and exposes the errors of Rome and her offspring.

The Rights of God, by Rev. F. C. Spurr, is a small volume of addresses, emphasising an important aspect of saving truth. At the same time the pages contain expressions that we cannot approve, and an unaccountable number of ideas gathered from Roman Catholic sources. (Penman & Co.)

Wulfgang: Champion of the Inspired Word of God (6d. G. Stoneman), is a "vision" designed to "clear the horizon of the destructive elements of the controversy in regard to the religious instruction of the young." Much valuable counsel is given in the course of this curious little book.

Rev. C. A. Fox contributes the fifth of the "Keswick Library" series. (Marshall Bros.) His topic is, Victory Through the Name, and the little work is an exposition of the spiritual significations of some divine names mentioned in the Old Testament. There is here a wide field for Mr. Fox's sanctified imagination and deep insight. These chapters are intensely practical, as well as illuminating.

Crux Mundi: Cruces Christi: Nomen Domini. This pamphlet discusses ancient mysteries and Christian symbols; crosses, as prevalent in paganism, mentioned in Scripture, and found in ecclesiastical art; the Union Jack and the Great Pyramid. There is much curious information gathered from sources old and new, reliable and doubtful; and, in conclusion, comes an unobtrusive identification of Britain with Israel! (1s. Nisbet & Co.)

Ruysbroeck and the Mystics.—The luminous essay by Maurice Maeterlinck, has been translated from the French by Jane T. Stoddart, and added to the Devotional Library. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Selected passages from Ruysbroeck's own work are also given. The writings of the old Flemish monk have features all their own, and these pages, showing much spiritual insight, are calculated to stimulate thought and excite admiration in many devout minds.

Confidential Talks with Young Women. By Lyman B. Sperry. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) Dr. Sperry has followed up his "Talks with Young Men" by a similar work addressed to young women. It deals with the most vital topics, and in such a way that greatly needed information and instruction are conveyed without any objectionable adjuncts. Every young woman who values health, character, and high life-purpose should give a careful study to these wise pages.

The Temperance Bible Commentary. By Dr. F. R. Lees and Rev. Dr. Dawson Burns. (6s. National Temperance League.) Here we have a new edition (6th) of a book of reference which has proved of peculiar service to temperance speakers and writers. The authors endeavour to deal with every mention of a reference to "wine" and "strong drink" in the Bible, explaining the original meaning as far as possible, so that workers may no longer find themselves in a difficulty when questions as to Biblical statements are sprung upon them.

The Apostles: Their Lives and Letters, is the second volume in the "New Testament Hours" series, by Dr. Cunningham Geikie. Beginning with "The Days after Calvary," he goes on to describe Pentecost, and contemporary affairs in Judea. Then the story of the Apostle Paul is developed, a large amount of archæological and topical information being embodied in the lucidly-written narrative. The problems that agitated the Early Church are dealt with in due course, and the General Epistle of James and those of Paul to the Thessalonians are given in full and suggestive paraphrase. This new work of Dr. Geikie's is calculated to afford much help to students of the New Testament. (6s. Nisbet & Co.)

The Authorship of Deuteronomy, by Sir William Muir, is a brief but forcible essay, showing how unreasonably the higher critics refer to tradition as the source of parts of the Pentateuchal narrative. Sir William is perfectly familiar with tradition as it has clustered round the name of Mahomet, and he contrasts this in its fanciful and incredible character with the sober and consistent statements made regarding Moses. He concludes that Deuteronomy is "fact and not fiction; a history of the day, not the echo of a bygone tradition." This is a little book that should bring to a pause some who are in a hurry to endorse advanced views on Old Testament subjects. (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.)

The Jewish Problem: Its Solution. By Rev. David Baron. (1s. and 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) This new edition, carefully revised, of a work dealing with Israel in history and prophecy will assuredly find many readers; for as year by year the Jews rise into greater prominence, a growing interest in them is being shown by earnest Christians everywhere. "The Jew" is a problem which many find it difficult to understand; but Holy Scripture supplies the solution, and Mr. Baron indicates it with the insight of a Hebrew and the faith of a humble follower of Christ. This is a very useful book, not only opening up a subject of deep interest, but supplying the key to a sound interpretation of portions of the Word of God that have little definite meaning to many Christian people. Dr. Pierson's hearty introduction gives the story of the origin of this little work.

The Noble Army of Martyrs, and Roll of Protestant Missionary Martyrs from A.D. 1661 to 1891. By James Croil, Montreal. (Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 1334, Chesnut-street.) This is a valuable work, from the pen of one who has long made foreign missions a settled study. After an account of those who witnessed unto blood in the Early Church, the Reformation period, and the Covenanting days of Scotland, the author presents his descriptive list of men and women who, as witnesses for Christ, have met with death by heathen violence in foreign lands. The pages revive glorious memories of some "of whom the world was not worthy"—memories which, as Mr. Croil says, are "the common heritage of Christendom." The roll contains the names of 130 persons—European and American missionaries, and their wives and assistants. Brief and comprehensive, the work will prove of special service to the compiler of a fuller martyrology.

The Christmas issue of The Graphic (1s.) is a remarkable combination of pictorial humour and light reading. The large supplemental picture of the Princess of Wales will be treasured by many.

Evangelical members of the Church of England will be glad to possess The Church of England Almanac for 1895, compiled by Henry Miller, of the Church Association. We note among the other contents a list of E.C.U. perverts to the Church of Rome. (1d. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

Shakespeare's Daughter: A Homily on Her Epitaph, is the first of the "Torbay" series of Gospel booklets. (3d. Charles King, 113, Lower Union-street, Torquay.) Attractive in appearance and striking in style, this booklet is likely to prove of real service in bringing the Gospel before educated people.

The Religious Tract Society has added to its series of Penny Tales for the People The Councillor's Wedding, by Mrs. Prosser; The Mystery of Elmhurst, or, His Old Home, by T. S. Millington; Found on the Wold, by Mary E. Ropes; My Scarlet Shawl, or, Out of Debt, Out of Danger, by George E. Sargent.

Notes and Comments.

MESSRS. MORGAN AND SCOTT have in the press a new work on Prophecy, by Mr. Geo. F. Trench, B.A., containing some important modifications of existing views on the glorious reign of the Lord Jesus Christ, subsequent to the millennium and preceding the eternal state. Further particulars will be duly announced.

Several of our readers have complained that circulars of a nature not in harmony with the character and contents of THE CHRISTIAN, have been delivered with their copies as received from newsvendors. These circulars are inserted by local dealers, whose action we cannot control. All insets emanating from our office bear the heading, "Supplement to THE CHRISTIAN."

"Let sleeping dogs lie" is a wise old adage. The School Board Compromise was working as well as, even better than, could have been expected, when the sacerdotal party waked up the dogs of war. They had no better plan to propose; the only effect of their action has been to make a difficult situation a thousand times more difficult. Our own judgment is in entire accord with those who advocate the reading of the Bible in Board Schools without doctrinal teaching. The formula of the Bible Society is a very good one, "Without note or comment." The controversy so wantonly forced upon the country would, if carried out to its ultimate issue, involve a new staff of teachers, elected either as secularists, on the one hand, or as sacerdotalists on the other. The status quo is far better than either of these solutions, and as the minority is more committed to this than the majority, we trust they will be supported.

The Guardian is most anxious to smooth away the fear which is felt in so many quarters, that the policy of the London School Board will, if endorsed at the coming election, result ultimately in the adoption of secular education. Its reassuring words do not reassure. It seems to overlook the facts of the case. Around the Compromise of 1871 have been gathered Churchmen, of every party except the High party, and Dissenters of every denomination. By the new policy that condition of things has been broken up, and whether it will be reconstituted again by the election of November 22, remains to be seen. The new policy rallies all the men of High Church views and Romanists together with a certain proportion of Low Churchmen. If they win, the Press, the Labour Unions, the Socialists, and the Nonconformists will join on the secular platform to wrest the schools from the priests, and sooner or later they will do it. Then will come new combinations. But let the Sacramentarians be warned in time; they are driving the capital city on to the rock of secular education. On page 10 we give further notes and correspondence on this subject.

The defeat of the Empire Theatre in the court of law gives, we should think, the finishing stroke to the work of the London County Council in cleansing that place of amusement. We have much to be thankful for; we should be thankful for a Council which, by such a large majority, voted on the side of purity; we should be thankful for the impetus which has been given to the purity cause in almost its every phase; and we should be thankful for this lawsuit, which has shown our friends and everyone on the side of a better life how careful we should be in seeking even good ends. "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves."

From appearances in the old world and the new we judge that the purification of municipal life, is beginning in fair earnest. The action of the London County Council is notice to all caterers for the pleasures of the multitude that they must not pander to vicious tastes. More efforts will be made to bring every place of amusement into a condition of decency. But the news from America that Tammany Hall has received a staggering, if not a deadly blow, is as surprising as it is gratifying. Dr. Parkhurst's brave labours are beginning to bear fruit. Conscience has been pricked, and the better portion of the community set in motion; once committed to action they are not likely to draw back. Something gained, they will be anxious to carry it forward to its proper effects. The recent elections have only prepared the ground for action. That everything will be done to prevent the realisation of the hopes of the party of reform we may be sure. Gold will be freely used; but truth unsparingly but kindly spoken must be as freely used by the other side. Iniquity will hide its head.

In connection with the victory at the polls in New York City on behalf of purity of administration, we are glad to read the following in the telegraphic correspondence of The Times on Monday:—

> The citizens of New York, in their gratification at the overthrow of Tammany, are getting up a testimonial for the Presbyterian clergyman, Dr. Parkhurst, who was the leading spirit in the crusade which has been so successful. There will be a public demonstration in his honour. The Republican managers are arranging to pass a law, when the New York Legislature assembles, which shall give the Mayor, Mr. Strong, power to remove all Tammany officials from office. The New York Committee of Seventy will continue in existence for the purpose of assisting the officials to secure honest, economical, and efficient city government.

We were rejoicing over the news that there has been a considerable falling off in the receipts of the Monte Carlo gambling den, when we read in The Times that the Communal Council of Ostend has granted facilities for gambling in the Kursaal there on certain conditions, involving a yearly disbursement of £25,000 a season. The correspondent cogently remarks that "if any less profitable mode of making capital out of human weakness were under consideration, the conditions would be deemed prohibitive."

A very impressive article on "The Anglo-Saxon, and the World's Redemption," by Rev. D. L. Leonard, of Oberlin, appears in the current Missionary Review of the World. The writer, after a running glance at the great world mission fields, almost exclusively in the hands of the English-speaking people, thus applies the facts:—

> For eighteen centuries the Anglo-Saxon was under Divine tuition, in preparation for the performance of his peerless part in preaching the everlasting Gospel unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people; behold, at the end of the nineteenth the call has been heard, the mission has been accepted, and a great army of English-speaking men and women are scattered everywhere abroad, with ardent love and zeal fulfilling their lofty commission! For every true disciple of Christ in America and Great Britain, what solemnity, what inspiration, are in the thought! Who are we that we should be thus ordained, and set apart, and inducted into an office of such infinite moment to the uncounted millions of humanity? If we are unfaithful and derelict, for the vast majority there is no hope. Alas! for the frequent shortcomings and transgressions of the past. Nevertheless, the gates of entrance into the whole wide world stand open most invitingly. The outlook is encouraging in the extreme; for the time that has elapsed and the number of the toilers engaged, the harvest of the century is amazingly large. As the second century of modern missions is about to dawn, in tones more imperative and more thrilling than ever before, the heavenly call sounds out: Lo, I am with you! Into all the world! To every creature!

The Daily News of Monday last, publishes the following from a correspondent in Italy:—

> It is positively asserted here that a commission of dignitaries of the Anglican Church will shortly arrive in Rome to confer with the Pope on a return to religious unity. Such an event, occurring immediately after the meetings concerning the Oriental Church, is considered of the highest importance.

Such an item of news is significant of the progress which Rome has made in our professedly Protestant Church. The question of reunion is much to the front just now, but the organisations of Christendom, and especially that of the Church of Rome, must be distinguished from the Church of Jesus Christ. The pursuit of a false unity will not help, but hinder, the manifestation of the true.

The difficulty and even peril of ending a lying superstition is powerfully shown in that of the Holy Fire in the Greek Church. The priests of that Church pretend that once a year holy fire, miraculously lit, is obtained in the Chapel of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem. Thousands of pilgrims, many of them from far-away places in Russia, assemble to see the light given, and get their own tapers kindled from it. They seem to think that some virtue comes from the very smoke, and hence they put the lighted tapers inside their dresses to smoke them. The original light is evidently got by a trick, as many of the priests admit, but they believe that to disabuse the minds of the ignorant multitude, who are firmly persuaded of its Divine origin, would, by putting an end to the exhibition, arouse a storm of wrath, the consequences of which might be disastrous in the extreme. Evil becomes too strong for those who have promoted it and profited by it to keep it under control. Priests, politicians, professional men, and tradesmen could all give illustrations of this truth.

The Centenary of the London Missionary Society contains the promise of more than monetary advantage, though no doubt a large special fund will be raised. It ought to be used, and we believe will be used, for the highest spiritual purposes. The mere remembrance of the way in which the Society was founded is itself a call to prayer and a motive to believe God's faithfulness. That eight ministers of different denominations should have met to call upon God for guidance and help with regard to the evangelisation of the heathen world, is a fact full of significance of the highest kind. It shows how entirely we can dispense with a number of so-called indispensable aids, and how sufficient God is for everything. These "founders" of the Society had God alone to hang upon, and they did hang upon Him with the weight of their great need.

It is now suggested that the L.M.S. should promote missionary conferences throughout the whole country, and that they should, wherever practicable, be preceded by "a quiet day." This arrangement would call the whole of the Independent Churches to prayer, and the effect would be sure to be good. Souls would be drawn into closer fellowship with the Father, the Son, and the Spirit. Faith would be confirmed and zeal inflamed. There would follow a deeper appreciation of divine methods of doing divine work. The younger members would almost certainly catch the spirit of missionary consecration. Altogether, we regard the "quiet day" as the most pregnant suggestion we have seen for the observance of the centenary. The effect will spread as a gracious spiritual influence to the ends of the earth, and will remain at home as a permanent force for truth.

A venerable minister, formerly the Principal of a college, recently told his brethren some of his experiences in the ministry, all of which were interesting and helpful; but perhaps the most suggestive was that which related to the way in which he had accepted service just as he was called to it. He had never stayed to ask whether anything was great or small, whether it would bring him honour or not, whether it was the kind of thing that would promote his present welfare. Being satisfied that it was the will of God, he simply went on with it, and allowed it to unfold its own consequences. That this quiet unassuming way will stand the test of life is evident from his reward, looked at from the temporal point of view alone. Beginning life in a remote village, in a church which never paid him £80 a year, he became a tutor of students for the ministry, sat among the Revisers of the Scriptures, and was welcomed into the ranks of the foremost men in all branches of the Church. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

Professor Banks is surely right when he says that "the personal factor counts for more in the Christian ministry than in any other calling." Doubtless in every calling it is of supreme value, though some callings are reduced to the level almost of mechanical operations. "In the ministry the messenger and the message cannot be separated, mind speaks to mind, heart to heart. Faith creates faith. Souls must be won by souls. Men must hear God and truth speaking through me. I must be to them their better self, pleading with them for their good. 'We are ambassadors on behalf of Christ.'" These facts press home the solemn necessity for every minister to be in deep sympathy with Jesus, and to keep his heart so pure and true, that the Spirit may speak through him.

A day's work sometimes gives us a better idea of results than a longer period. At the Clerkenwell Police-court on one day six lads of fourteen years of age were fined for gambling, six of fifteen years, two of sixteen years, four of seventeen years, one of eighteen years, and one of twenty years. What should we get from all the police-courts for all the days of the year? The Anti-Gambling League must resolutely strike at the greatest offenders, and when they have done that the boys will learn the folly of gambling, if not its wickedness.

THE BIBLE IN FRANCE.

The latest report of the Evangelical Society of Geneva describes the work of colportage carried on by agents of the Society in France. The most imposing obstacle to the diffusion of the Scriptures in Roman Catholic countries is the clergy; but notwithstanding this, moved by a zeal that no earnest Christian can disapprove, the colporteurs do not hesitate to offer the Book for sale at convents, and the residences of the priests! Those clerics who resent this as a provocation to opposition, are reminded that while St. Jerome said that "to be ignorant of the Scriptures is to be ignorant of Christ," the present Pope has only recently spoken of the importance of the study of the Sacred Word to the flock of Christ.

Meantime, generally speaking, the priests seize any copies of the Scriptures they can find in the houses of "the faithful," and either tear or burn them with complete satisfaction. Here and there, however, the colporteurs find curés of another type, and some account is given of visits to villages where the priests have been exceedingly kind. In one place in Ain the colporteur was welcomed into the priest's house, where a friendly conversation was engaged in. The Scriptures were read, and afterwards, in church, the priest told his parishioners of the visit, thus opening their hearts and homes to the "Good Protestant" colporteur. In a town of Charente, many persons showed themselves friendly, but that was about all. They said in effect, "I was born a Roman Catholic, and do not wish to change my religion, but were I to begin life again I would rather be a Protestant." In another place, in the Lower Alps, a similar disposition prompted a remark in this form, "Our religion is not yours. We cannot change, it is not worth the trouble!" At the base of these utterances is stolid indifference, an utter failure to realise the difference between Gospel truth and Popish error.

Superstition and ignorance go hand in hand. Wherever Romanism rules, these are found. Of a district in Charente the colporteur writes: Sorcerers are in request here. There is one woman in particular who is reputed to have dealings with the dead; and people consult her to know what has become of deceased friends, and for instructions as to how they may assist in their purgation. These means consist in masses, vows, offerings, and so forth. The clergy know full well that the sayings of sorcerers cannot be relied on, but many of them shut their eyes to what goes on, because, in recommending masses, the sorcerers procure for them a good source of revenue.

This ignorance and the cruelties of bull-baiting, especially in the south, support the demand of the colporteurs when they say "Spread the Gospel." The disposition to buy books varies greatly in different places, and it is by no means in the centres reputed to be wealthy and enlightened, that most purchasers of Bibles are found, and most hearers appear at the public meetings. For instance, at Bordeaux, a New Testament which had been left on the table of a restaurant, was thrown into the street; while in a village of poor and Roman Catholic Savoie, the colporteur found in the hands of villagers many New Testaments, the possessors of which had refused to give them up to the priest, who was collecting such books for destruction.

Communications regarding the work of the Geneva Evangelical Society should be addressed to M. le Pasteur Rimond, L'Oratoire, Geneva.

World-wide Evangelization.

What true Christian is there, who prays in the words and in the spirit of the Lord's Prayer, "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," that does not rejoice to live in our days, when millions upon millions upon millions that a neglecting Church has left in darkness in Asia, Africa, aye and in Europe and America, and in the isles of the sea, are found ripe and ready to hear the joyous glad tidings of the Father's love in Christ Jesus!

Our call to-day is not to rejoice, but rather, with sobs and tears running over the cheeks, not only of our women, but down the beards of us men, to run and seize a basket, to hasten and carry the bread and fish promised to be abundantly multiplied by our watching Saviour; whilst we continue joyfully to run amongst the hungry multitudes of many-coloured skins, and joyfully call and shout and sing to them: "The great Father of the universe loves you, though you are great wicked sinners; that He has given his own Son to be lifted up on a great cross and be nailed on it till He slowly died for you; and has sent his Holy Spirit to enter into each of your hearts and make you to love Him, and to love even your own enemies, and to be called no longer sons of your own fathers and mothers, but to be called the sons of God, sons of the great God, even of this Holy God; and as He has so loved, you and all his sons are to begin now at once to love your enemies—yes, to love every one of your enemies. How can you do this? By his Spirit, which He has promised to come into your hearts, who will teach you and enable you not only to love your own family and friends, but your enemies and those who have wronged you."

Now, for men and women and boys and girls to run with such a message as this, the Church needs to be in labour; and first in secret closets over the world to wrestle like Jacob, and secondly without loss of time to come together over the world in twos or threes, meeting in Christ's name, and then in larger, praying companies.

Beloved brothers, into our closets let us go, and then together let us come with united love and one-accord prayer, and in spirit, each looking for the lowest place and all getting on our faces in the dust.

We have not to cut our bodies, as the heathen did, but meeting in love with one accord over the world, open our mouths wide and, standing still, behold what the Lord, the Almighty God can do, for the sake of his only begotten Son Jesus Christ.

MISSIONARIES TO THE FRONT.

A correspondent, writing from Brindisi on November 4, says:—

"There are a number of missionaries on board the P. and O. s.s. Massilia, en route for China. Several C.M.S. (one for North China, another for Japan), C.I.M. (four men), and a number of English 'Brethren,' both men and women, English Presbyterian Mission (Miss Stuart for Formosa and Mr. and Mrs. Cook and their little daughter for Singapore). Bible readings are held daily by the younger people among themselves, and earnest Gospel addresses given as opportunity offers in the evenings. We have also Captain A. B. Hawes on board, who, along with the missionary party, conducts a Gospel service this afternoon in the large room of the hotel here. Rev. Mr. Abbott, bound for Sydney, an Evangelical Churchman, is also of our party."

The Model Church.

By REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

We must go back to the Bible, not only for the model preacher and the model Christian, but also for the model Church. What were the characteristics of that first Christian Church that was founded in Jerusalem under the immediate supervision and guidance of the Holy Spirit? We find them all described within the space of half a dozen verses. Here they are:—

(1) The first characteristic was that the Church was based on sound doctrine. We are told that they continued steadfastly in the "Apostles' teaching" (Revised Version); that is, in the fundamental truths which Peter and John had taught them. The Gospel was a fresh revelation from heaven, and its two cardinal principles were repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Those early converts were well rooted and grounded in vital truth; and no young convert ought to be admitted into any church unless he can "give a reason of the hope that is in him." One reason why so many church members are weak-backed is that they are not well vertebrated with Bible truth. They are not fed on solid food. Phillips Brooks never said a wiser thing than that "the preachers who have moved and held men have always preached doctrine. No exhortation to a good life that does not put behind it some truth as deep as eternity can seize and hold the conscience."

(2) The second trait of that model Church was their fraternal "fellowship." The demon of caste had not got in. They loved one another, became well acquainted with one another, and bore one another's burdens. I will warrant that no stranger ever came into one of their meetings without being spoken to and receiving a hearty welcome. It has been reserved for some of our stiff, stately, frigid, modern churches, to allow strangers to come to God's house and go away again without even a nod or a civil greeting. If Christians practised the hospitalities of God's house as they ought to do, empty pews would soon be filled and "outsiders" would become insiders. Nobody who wants to be warmed is ever drawn into an ice-house.

(3) Those early Christians made much of the ordinances which their Master had appointed. They continued steadfastly in "breaking of bread." Not only did they draw into close fellowship, but they had joint repasts and sacramental feasts together. Probably they celebrated the dying love of their Saviour by the eucharistic supper once in every week. We ought to make more of our communion seasons; they should be veritable love feasts, full of holy joy, and the spirit of thanksgiving and praise. The Master should find a guest-chamber in every heart. One of the most wonderful revivals ever known in Scotland began at a communion season on the banks of the Clyde.

(4) As the Pentecostal Church was born in a prayer-meeting, it follows as a matter of course that they continued to be men and women of prayer. It was their breath of life. No substitute can ever be found for prayer in the pulpit or in the social meeting. Preaching is good, singing is good, but God's people cannot live and grow on either of them; they will starve to death without prayer. I suspect that in that model Church at Jerusalem the "Week of Prayer" lasted through the whole year.

(5) Such a brotherly-minded band of Christians as they were did not allow their poor members to suffer. In order to supply the wants of the needy those who were well off sold as much of their possessions as was required to provide for those wants. There was no compulsory abandonment of property according to the reckless "Socialism" of these days; but as there was only "one heart and one soul" among them, the strong provided for the weak. Charity was the rule, not the exception. Money was given to Christ when the heart was given. That Church consecrated its purse. What splendid giving it was, too! Brother Barnabas was the noble leader and model for all time in the Christly practice of systematic beneficence. Suppose that somebody had come into one of those Jerusalem meetings and announced that the time would yet come when Christians would live in ceiled houses and ride in fine carriages, while "Boards of Missions" were smothered with debt, and missionaries were starved out by having their salaries "scaled down" to a pittance! Barnabas would cry out, "The Lord have mercy on their stingy souls!"

(6) The last stroke in the picture of that model Church was just what we might expect. A brotherhood of true believers, who studied the Word, and provided for the poor, and enjoyed their holy sacramental hours, and abounded in prayer, and copied after Christ, was bound to grow. They did not need to be revived; for they kept up to blood heat all the while. Conversions took place daily. In the family record of that Church the column of "Births" was better filled than the column of Desertions or of Deaths. We don't wonder that such wide-awake Christians praised God, and found favour with all the people. The Holy Spirit has not changed; the Bible has not changed; human nature has not changed; the promises have not changed; and now, in the name of common sense, we ask, why should there not be thousands of just such churches as that all over this country?

Your readers will be interested to hear of continued blessing in this work. Every afternoon and evening sailors of various nationalities are gathered in by workers drawn from all sections of the Church of Christ, whose services are entirely voluntary.

On Sunday night, at the close of the meeting, a young Belgian seaman (whose father is a high police official) accepted Christ as his Saviour. On Tuesday, at the close of the afternoon meeting, a fine-built sailor was brought into the office, and while on his knees with a worker he pleaded with God in tears to forgive his sins, and it was not long before he was rejoicing in the answer of his prayer. At the close of the evening meeting we believe there was another similar case of blessing. Again, on Wednesday night, after the meeting, four young men came out on the Lord's side. Notwithstanding many other attractions in the neighbourhood, the sailors have come into the "Rest" in good numbers.

On Christmas Day and Boxing Day we hope to invite about four hundred sailors to a tea and a Christmas tree, and a roast beef and plum pudding supper. We shall be thankful for contributions of knitted helmets, scarves, housewives, etc., for the tree, and meat and puddings for the supper.

A box for the Strangers' Rest at Zanzibar is being packed, and we shall be glad to enclose any gifts for the dear workers and sailors out there, for their Christmas gatherings. We are also needing fresh helpers for this foreign service, and shall be glad to hear from any friend willing to go.

We trust many will remember to help this work by prayer and practical sympathy, as the Lord shall lead them. J. Theo. Isaac, Hon. Sec.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

LAW AND GRACE.

It is not the facilities we have, so much as the use we make of them, that decides results. And this is supremely true in spiritual things. I knew a costermonger unable to read, converted late in life by means of John iii. 16, who made far more and better use of that one verse than many men make of the whole Bible.

Many of the Old Testament saints saw the promises and saluted them from afar, and lived experimentally under Grace, though dispensationally they were under Law; while, on the other hand, many are living under Law whose lot is cast dispensationally in the day of Grace.

So also many are living holy and consecrated lives whose views of truth are more after an Old Testament than a New Testament pattern; sometimes when the doctrine appears of the Old Testament type, and not always rightly interpreting Moses and the Prophets, yet, the heart being true, a life is attained far closer to God than where the doctrine is more accurate but the heart less true.

Nevertheless, it is of vital importance to hold fast the pattern of sound words, for, other things being equal, the better we are instructed in New Testament truth, the higher will be the type of life we live.

The difference between the Legal and the Gospel dispensations is the difference between the ostensible possibility of a purified child of Adam and a new creature in Christ Jesus.

Thus, it has been said that conversion is like cutting the tree down, and sanctification like pulling up the roots. Yet though the roots were removed, the old soil would remain. It would only be taking the roots of sin out of the old Adam nature. But the roots of sin are not the roots of a tree but of a cancer. It is not that sin grows like a tree in a pure soil, but that the soil itself is corrupted, and whether in the realm of the natural or the spiritual there is no means by which corruption can put on incorruption but by death and resurrection.

Circumcision, the initiatory rite under the Old Covenant, implied the possibility of putting away the filth of the flesh, but the Holy Spirit by Peter, the Apostle of the circumcision, says of baptism, the initiatory rite of the New Covenant, "Not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." There is no possibility of a good conscience toward God except as we reckon ourselves dead unto sin and alive unto God in Christ Jesus. St. Paul, the apostle of the uncircumcision, shows that circumcision is included in baptism, as the less is included in the greater, for "we are filled full in Him, who is the Head of all principality and power, in whom also ye were circumcised with a circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the flesh, not merely of the sins of the flesh, in the circumcision of Christ; buried with Him in baptism, wherein also ye were raised with Him, through your faith in the effectual working of God, who raised Him from the dead." That is, "ye were circumcised by being buried." The old idea of purification of the flesh expressed in circumcision has been proved impossible, and baptism declares that which Elihu had foreshown in the very days of Abraham, that only by virtue of the atonement effected by the Interpreter (Job xxxiii. 23), the Messenger (Mal. iii. 1), the Revealer of the Father (John i. 18), 'One among a Thousand (Eccl. vii. 28), could man's flesh be fresher than a child's and he return to the days of his unfallen youth (Job xxxiii. 14-30). Elihu in Old Testament times saw thus far, but the New Testament reveals a new creation, man a partaker of the Divine nature.

MISSION TO POOR BOYS AND GIRLS, GUILDFORD.—Founded in 1860, this agency provides instruction and recreation to very poor boys and girls, and, when it is possible, procures situations for them. In cases of distress it supplies them with food and clothing. The school in Commercial-road is open to all who wish to come, being unconnected with any denomination, the only condition being "quiet and orderly conduct." The work should commend itself to the support of all who wish to mould and influence for good the character of the very poor, who are often subjected to great temptation through negligence and adverse circumstances. Mr. Robert Macdonald is superintendent of the mission.

THE SCHOOL BOARD CONTROVERSY.

Sir,—I was sorry to see in your last issue the letter from Rev. T. J. Gaster on the subject of the famous "circular." Anything more utterly misleading it is impossible to imagine. The plain state of the case is, as Prebendary Webb-Peploe put it before his congregation on Sunday, that the broad issue now lies between the so-called Moderates and Progressives. All who vote for the Moderates will help to perpetuate the teaching of the Bible in our Board schools in the Christian sense (no catechism or formulary being admissible); and all who vote for the Progressives, including many of the nominees of the Bible Education Council, will support those who will use their power to reduce the Bible instruction in the schools to a mere teaching of history and biography, apart from the vital truths of Christianity. I should be sorry to believe that the readers of The Christian will support such a disastrous policy.—Yours faithfully,

F. A. Bevan.

59, Prince's Gate, South Kensington, S.W.

Several correspondents have written to us to this effect, while others call attention to the weight of Romish influence in the "Moderate" party. In the one case Secularism is feared, in the other Sacerdotalism. We heartily sympathise with those who feel themselves on the horns of a hideous dilemma. To many it seems a question whether they shall vote for Satan as an angel of light, or Satan as the prince of darkness. Some who admit that this conflict was improperly raised by the sacerdotalists say that, as it has come, it is better to have sacerdotalism than secularism, false religion than no religion. But let us remember that it is Romish idolatry and priestcraft which have produced infidelity in Italy and Spain and France. It was the sacerdotal Annas and Caiaphas who, in the name of God, urged Pilate, the secular governor, to crucify the Son of God.

We can give no support to a party co-operating with Mr. Riley, whose utterances on the subject of simple Bible instruction so completely accord with his Romanising associations and work. While, however, we thus express our own conviction, we do so with the utmost respect to those Evangelical Christians who differ from us, from an equally sincere conviction as to their duty in the circumstances as they view them. We note that the Sunday School Union, which should be able to estimate the work already done, has expressed itself distinctly in favour of the "Compromise," or Progressive party.

Archdeacon Farrar has written a long letter on the subject, in which he says: "I will give no vote to any candidate who stands for the School Board, while expressing avowed detestation for undenominational religion, and to no candidate who will disturb, by new circulars and definitions, the wise, honourable, Christian, and only possible agreement of 1870, which has for so many years secured to countless children a thoroughly moral and religious education, given to them by skilled and faithful masters and mistresses, of whom 75 per cent. have been prepared by Anglican training, and are members of the Church of England."

Referring to the religious instruction hitherto given under the Board, the Archdeacon says: "The syllabus issued by the first London School Board was the most effective which could have been devised under the circumstances. It included the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, the leading facts in the life of our Lord, many of the most striking passages of the Old Testament, large parts of the four Gospels, eleven chapters of the Acts of the Apostles, including the first sermons of St. Peter, St. Stephen, and St. Paul, and valuable selections from the various epistles. Mr. Acland has even decided that there is nothing which forbids the teaching in Board schools of the Apostles' Creed, the most ancient, the most venerable, and the most universal of all Christian symbols.

"This is the education which, with reckless ignorance or unscrupulous misrepresentation, has been denounced directly, or by constant implication, as Godless and 'un Christian.' This is the 'Compromise' which we believe to be the best which was or is attainable: and it has conferred inestimable benefits on the children of the nation. An attempt is being assiduously made to mislead the electorate into the utterly false view that the question between Mr. Riley's party and the minority of the School Board is one between 'religion' and 'no religion.' The great body of the public who have not entered into the details of this controversy, and are being persuaded to take a wholly erroneous view of it, may rest assured that if multitudes of religious Churchmen and Nonconformists are opposed to the policy of the narrow majority on the School Board, it is in no wise because they are 'hostile to religious education,' but because, with all their hearts, they desire for the children of our Board schools the best religious education which can nationally be secured for them, imparted by those who are best qualified to give it, and supplemented by the special teaching of each religious body in Sunday-schools and Bible-classes.

"It is precisely because we desire to maintain for the children of the nation in perpetuity, a Biblical, a Christian, a religious training; it is because we are certain that any form of denominational education which was already impossible in Board schools in 1870, is far more impossible in 1894; it is because we feel deeply convinced that the attempt to intrude definitions and additions into the Compromise by new circulars, can only end in precipitating the immeasurable disaster and catastrophe of a purely secular education—that we deplore the unwise action, and still more unwise tactics of Mr. Riley and his followers."

Dear Sir,—The reopening of the question of denominational teaching in the Board Schools of London is utterly unjustifiable. The Compromise effected twenty-four years since was not made in the interests of purely secular teaching, but in order that the children of the nation should not be denied constant intercourse with the Word of God. That Word is not the property of the Church nor of any of the denominational institutions which exist. It is national property, and the birthright of every man, woman, and child. It belongs to the wealth and welfare of the nation, and is as imperatively needed as pure air, sunshine, or light.

To attempt to make the light of the world into a Church proprietorship is simply ridiculous. What is needed is not restriction or ecclesiastical trammels, but world-wide diffusion. As well attempt to put light into the hands of an ecclesiastical hierarchy as to make the truths of the Word of God the property of a privileged class.

It should never be forgotten that the great midland centre, Birmingham, went in for the purely secular platform when the Board Schools were first established. It was feared that the presence of the Bible in the schools would be made a prolific cause of contention in Birmingham. What was the actual fact? Just this, that throughout the whole land there was harmony instead of friction. The conscience clause worked well, and the Bible proved to be what it always is, viz., a herald of peace on earth and goodwill amongst men. What is needed is that we should be guarded against the ecclesiastical and denominational jealousies which have always proved themselves competent to turn into a bear-garden either church, school, or world. The denominationalists are the troublers in this movement. A large party in the Church of England, aided by the Roman Catholics, who are moving heaven and earth in order to gain ascendancy in the land, are the disturbers of the peace. Their professed interest in what they call the Christian education of the children of the Board Schools, needs to be translated thus: "This is our struggle for ecclesiastical supremacy." Such a policy is destitute both of the spirit and mind of Christ.

Let it not be forgotten that so effective was the working of the decision which was come to—viz., that the Bible should be read and taught in the Board Schools, but not with any Church or sectarian bias—that within three years the purely secular platform of the Birmingham Board Schools came in line with the rest of the country, and the Bible had its place in the Board Schools of that busy city as in every other part of the land. The cloven foot of priestcraft is in this whole movement. The hatred of the Roman Catholic Church to the Scriptures is well known; where the Bible has free course, the death-knell of Romanism may be heard.

Let none of those who value the presence of the Word of God in the Board Schools be turned aside by this "red-herring trail" of interest in the Christian teaching of the children of the nation. Maintain the existing conditions at all costs. Instead of speaking of the past Compromise as something tentative, make it an established condition. The experience of twenty-five years shows that the position is sound. The Bible will do its own work, as it is its own defence against Church party or Roman Catholic party, against denominationalists, secularists, or that newly-fashioned monstrosity, the School Board teachers who, according to these disturbers of the peace, are going to make capital for every wickedness out of its blessed and wonderful teaching.

In conclusion, let me say that I am just leaving for the Colony of Victoria, where the Bible is shut out from the State Schools by law. This painful condition was brought about by the same denominational strife which has given birth to the present controversy in London. If it is not too late, let me give a word of warning to those who are stirring up this strife. Beware, lest you succeed for a brief season. The rebound from your false policy is certain, and may, and probably will, eventuate in the casting out from the Board Schools of the choicest gift ever given to the sons of men. Denominational strife, as promoted by Mr. Riley and his friends, is quite adequate to this great wickedness.

Henry Varley.

FRENCH HOME MISSIONS.

We have had lately in Brive the visit of M. Roux, an agent of the Mission Intérieure; and what a blessing it is for scattered and isolated workers as we are to have such visits!

He arrived on Saturday, October 13, with his magic lantern, and in the evening our little church was filled with a congregation who listened with great attention to the Gospel message. The next day we had a Gospel meeting with a very full church, and many were moved to tears when the love of God was set before them. On the Monday we had a good meeting in Tulle; our rooms were completely full. I then followed M. Roux to Aurillac (Cantal), where Gospel work had been recently begun, and where Pastor Borel-Brun and his young wife are labouring. An old large Roman Catholic chapel had been hired for the purpose of the meetings, which had been advertised gratuitously by the four local newspapers. Moreover, a thousand bills had been distributed, and we expected a good congregation. We were a little disappointed when only about eighty to one hundred gathered together the first evening. However, the Gospel seemed to gain the attention of the people of this entirely Romish town, for the next day we had a meeting at which about 300 were present, and on the two succeeding days other meetings were held with equal success.

It is still sowing, and not ingathering time; people are extremely ignorant on religious matters. But what a joy for us to be able to preach Christ freely, openly, as boldly as possible, to a very attentive audience, almost entirely composed of Romanists! The local worker, however earnest, cannot alone arrive at such results; it requires a visit of a qualified evangelist, whose visit is announced beforehand, and for whom suitable preparations are made. The Mission Intérieure (Committee of Marseilles) supplies such thoroughly evangelical workers. May I just mention that this work is a work of faith; that no collector is sent round by this Mission Intérieure. They use only what means the Lord sends them directly. The secretary is Pastor Emile Houter, 7, Rue Dragon, Marseilles, the well-known editor of Le Relèvement, and just now funds are sadly wanting to carry on this work.

READING THE BIBLE.—I will answer for it, the longer you read the Bible, the more you will like it. It will grow sweeter and sweeter; and the more you get into the spirit of it, the more you will get into the spirit of Christ.—Romaine.

THE MINISTRY OF THE SPIRIT.—An important conference was recently held in the city of Brooklyn, convened in the Hanson Place Baptist Church. The theme was the Ministry of the Holy Spirit, the object the deepening of spiritual life. It was remarkable for the spiritual power realised in all the meetings, and the universal testimony of those in attendance was that they had been greatly blessed by the meetings. Large numbers went away imbued with an earnest longing for the possession and manifestation of the Spirit's presence and power in their lives and service. One encouraging feature was the large number of ministers of various denominations in attendance. Among the speakers were Dr. Theo. L. Cuyler (of Brooklyn), Rev. J. K. Dixon (of Philadelphia), Mr. S. H. Hadley, Mrs. Whittemore, Dr. A. J. Gordon, Dr. A. T. Pierson, and others.

WAS MAN ORIGINALLY A BEAST?

By Rev. JAMES GALL.

(Concluded.)

The evolution theory as taught by Professor Drummond is founded on two impossibilities. The first is, that the sacs and their progeny were able to e-volve what was never in, which appears to me as near as possible a contradiction in terms. The second is that everything living when left to itself has the power to, as it were, tumble up instead of down. Sir David Brewster well said, that it is more rational to suppose that a man left to himself might become a brute, than that a brute left to itself might become a man.

According to the Bible the creation of the lower animals and the creation of man was separated by a gulf that was impassable. After the creation of the lower animals, and in view of the wondrous event that was about to take place, there was a council in heaven. It was no longer "Let the waters bring forth," or "Let the earth bring forth," but "Let Us make man in our image, after our likeness," and, it is added, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul"—an origin more worthy of the semi-Divine nature of man, and more worthy of the human ancestry of Christ. Man was thus created on a totally different plane from the lower animals, so that they could never meet. Even in his lowest degradation man is infinitely higher than the highest of the beasts, because both the image and the breath of God are in him.

I believe in atavism, but not an atavism that must go back, not hundreds nor thousands, but millions of years for its original; more especially if it offers us a fish for an ancestor, on the ground that we happen to have gills on both sides of our head in the shape of ears. These, we are told, are part of the "scaffolding" which the Builder was in the habit of leaving behind Him when He had finished his work, greatly to the inconvenience and danger of the tenant. One of them is said to be a "death trap." (p. 121).

Being a fish then, how did we get ashore? The Professor tells us that the fish developed into a kind of worm, which "probably took to the shore originally, by exchanging the water for the ooze at the bottom; then by wriggling among muddy flats when the tide was out, and finally, when the struggle for life grew keen, it pushed further and further inland," and "instead of living on the earth like other creatures, it lives in it, as if it were a thicker water." To such absurdities does evolution lead us.

We are told in Scripture that Christ made the world, for "without Him was not anything made that was made," and it is remarkable that in working miracles He on one occasion adopted the same method that He employed in Eden. Of all our Lord's miracles the giving of sight to the blind is perhaps the most remarkable, when we consider the wonderful structure of the eye, of which He only who made it could effect a cure. This He did when He either reorganised the tissues or spake into being the parts that were awanting, as when He reproduced the ear of Malchus. In one instance He repeated in part the miracle of Eden, when He restored the eyes of a man who had been born blind. He spat on the ground and made clay of the spittle. He anointed his eyes, and bade him go wash in the pool of Siloam, which when he had done he received his sight. If then from the dust of the ground our Lord could reconstruct the eye, with its cornea, its wonderfully constructed iris, its crystalline lens, its retina and optic nerve, and put them in healthy communication with the vascular and nervous systems, could He not with the same materials have created the whole man? In this one miracle He, as it were, wrote his autograph as Creator, to present to such men as Mr. Darwin and Professor Drummond.

In studying the Ascent of Man the Professor says that he must begin at the top, not the bottom; not with the Protoplasm, but with civilised man proceeding downwards; but he forgets that the civilised man is not the highest, that above him is the spiritual man, twice born, with the Spirit of God dwelling in him; and that above him again is the resurrection man, represented by Jesus Christ our elder Brother. No Christian student can even think of the Ascent of Man without including both of these. Beginning at the top he should have begun with Christ, "the beginning of the creation of God," "the first born of every creature," and the first question ought to have been "From what was Christ evolved?" or "What had He to do with natural selection?"

If I am asked how I can account for the resemblances observed between the human "embryo" in its various stages of development, and the structure of the lower animals as they rise in the scale of being, I answer that it is not necessary for me to do so. Having proved that the Evolution theory in so far as it applies to man is impossible, and that the narrative in Genesis coincides in every particular with the facts of the case as we find them (which evolution does not), I am quite satisfied. If physiologists are not satisfied, that is their business, not mine. I wonder if it has never occurred to them that as God made man after his likeness that he might be a servant of God, might He not have made the lower animals in the likeness of man that they might be the servants of man, and sent them on before to prepare for their master's coming? All scientists are agreed that a similar principle obtained in the vegetable kingdom; then why not in the animal? The thing is not impossible. The only explanation that is inadmissible is Evolution.

The cardinal error in "The Ascent of Man" is an inadequate sense of the brutalising effects of sin, and the utter impossibility of ascending without the help of God in Christ.

It is with much reluctance that I so criticise a book that contains much admirable matter, and is written by a man whom everybody must both love and admire, and whose loss to Christianity I deeply deplore; but as I regard it as one of the most dangerous books of the present day, I cannot refrain.

FRUIT AFTER MANY DAYS.

Pastor F. E. Marsh, Sunderland, writes:—

A few weeks ago I received the following letter from a missionary on the Upper Congo, to whom a book of mine had been sent. It may encourage some of my fellow workers to labour on, for though fruit is not seen at the time, bread cast upon the waters shall be seen after many days.

Lulonga, Upper Congo.

Dear Mr. Marsh,—A copy of your book, "Flashes from the Lighthouse of Truth," came to me here a few weeks ago. Very, very many thanks for it. I am a Midlander; hailing from a village you know well—Welford, near Stratford-on-Avon. About twenty years ago I left my home to take my place in the struggle of life. I was twelve years old then. I had been away a few months when I had a letter from my mother, telling me that a very strange man had come to hold a mission in our chapel. He went down the village singing, and inviting the folk to chapel. If I am not mistaken, Mr. Marsh, you were that man, and then it was, I believe, that dear mother began to seek Christ. She found Him, and prayed for ten years for her son. The dear Lord saved me, and I am out here for Him, where I received a book from the servant who has had something to do with my coming. God bless you!

I came out here a little more than five years ago. I have been home on furlough, returning a year ago. I am writing you from Lulonga, the first station of the Congo-Balolo Mission. It is about 850 miles from the coast, and at the confluence of the Lulanga and Congo. Here there is a little church. Could you be here in about two hours you would meet some twelve men and youths who have found and love Jesus. At the other stations there are more in numbers. We thank Him who has done this great work, and rejoice that He has permitted us to share the labour with Him. our Lord, our Captain. I am sure you will praise the Lord with us.

But there is much to be done, and badly needed, but there are so few to do it. How great the need for workers! Why do we not believe that this is the most glorious work under the sun? "Christ went into all the regions round about." When I was at home I heard so often "Begin at Jerusalem," and many must have made up their minds to finish there. The Master wants soldiers to leave Jerusalem and to go to combat evil in these regions.

God speed you in your work in Sunderland, and may many of the heathen be converted by God through you.—Yours in fellowship in the warfare,

John Howell.

[We trust that the foregoing may suggest to many other friends the sending of helpful books to isolated workers.—Ed.]

GLASGOW GOSPEL CAMPAIGN.

[From a Correspondent.]

When it was announced that Mr. Henry Varley was coming to Glasgow some weeks since, there was great expectation of blessing. Earnest prayer and energetic effort were combined in preparing for the work. The first meeting, held in the City Hall, was crowded to the doors. Mr. Varley preached, taking for his subject of address, "Exceeding abundant grace." The interest was remarkable, and opened the way for the series of gatherings, which may be spoken of as having taken a wonderful hold of all classes in the city. Whether the Bible readings held daily at 3, or the evening meeting at 8, the numbers grew until the large buildings were thronged with thousands to hear the Word of Life.

Mr. Varley's expositions and addresses found great acceptance among the people. Keeping closely to the truths which stud the pages of the sacred Scriptures, he found ground in Glasgow well prepared and suited to his hand. The intimate knowledge possessed by the Scotch people of the Word of God came out with telling effect. To hear the rustle of the leaves of the Bibles in answer to the suggestions and appeals of the preacher to see that these things were so, will never be forgotten by many who were present. Clearly Mr. Varley does not fail to see to it that the faith of his hearers should not "stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

The tide rose higher daily; increasing interest, power, and brightness marked the first fortnight. The evangelist found it at times difficult to restrain the enthusiasm which pervaded the great gatherings. Hundreds of believers met twice daily, and their testimony is of establishment in their most holy faith of abounding joy and definite increase of spiritual power and Christian life. As Mr. Varley expressed it, "In unison of heart and mind on the part of those who are one in Christ" we were indeed in touch with God's secrets of power. We know that confessedly large numbers have passed from death unto life, and an interest has been awakened in the Word of God and in evangelical teaching, which fairly possesses great numbers in this busy Scottish centre.

When the meetings came to an end, there was something akin to dismay expressed. Mr. Varley was engaged to go on the Saturday to Dublin. On the Sunday night preceding, the City Hall was packed, thousands it is said, being unable to get in

The entire audience rose to their feet, expressing strong desire for Mr. Varley's return. The interval caused by his absence in Dublin served to stimulate the interest in his second visit, which came all too quickly to a close on Sunday, November 4.

It is not easy to speak of the hold taken of the people of Glasgow by the meetings of the past eight days. The work (in itself very extraordinary), which attaches to the City Temple, and with which the name of Mr. John Robertson is prominently identified, has received marked increase and impulse, and Sunday, the 4th inst., will live in the memories of thousands as a red-letter day in Glasgow. The five meetings conducted by Messrs. Varley and Robertson in the buildings where they preached were scenes of great blessing and power.

The City Hall it was known would be quite inadequate to meet the need of the occasion. The large Britannia Theatre near by was therefore taken. Both buildings were packed to the utmost capacity, and outside the streets were dense with the disappointed crowds that could not get in.

That we praise God and are greatly encouraged by this hallowed series of meetings goes without saying. God's servant came amid hearty expectation, fervent prayer, and active effort. Well-nigh fifty meetings have been held, nor can we recall one that has not yielded welcome evidences of the presence and power of Our Exalted Lord.

Fully two thousand in the great after-meeting in the City Hall rose to testify of blessing received. Mr. and Mrs. Varley carry with them to Melbourne the grateful love and fervent prayers of thousands in the city.

There is great desire that he should return at no lengthened interval for further work in Glasgow. Mr. John Robertson and his coadjutor, James Anderson, gave invaluable help. Indeed, their sympathy and untiring devotion has been of the highest character throughout this remarkable work.

Some London Missions.

BLIND IN DEPTFORD.

The efforts made in recent years to cheer, evangelise, and instruct poor blind have from time to time found notice in these pages, notably in connection with such names as Dr. Moon, Dr. Armytage, Dr. Campbell, and, in Somerstown, Mrs. Starey. But every district of London has its poor blind, and on behalf of these sympathetic hearts have here and there been stirred to do something. In Deptford, for example, the Association for the Improvement of the Blind affords a good illustration of what is being done. A few friends, becoming interested in some blind persons, and discovering their lonely condition, organised a weekly meeting and classes. These meetings, held every Friday in Creek-street Mission Hall, Deptford, are varied in character, but definite in aim. The programme is informative and instructive, but the higher aim, the winning of souls to Christ, is never lost sight of. At each gathering the Scriptures are read and expounded, while the Gospel is plainly set forth. Ministers and others, such as Revs. I. Morley Wright, J. Lewis, and Dr. Pring, have again and again spoken to the blind people and their guides. These efforts have been used of God, and there is abundant evidence that hearts have been illumined and lives changed by the entrance of the Word.

In view of the isolated life led by these sightless poor, care is taken to make the meetings as bright and enjoyable as possible, while they are made to feel that they have found friends who really wish their welfare. Many of them, moreover, are found unable to read. For these classes are held in the "Braille" system, and both reading and writing are taught. It is noted that:—"The general progress with the majority of the men is considerably slower than that of the women, on account of the hardness of the finger-tips, which, through manual labour, lose much of that sensitiveness of touch which is required to feel the embossed type so as to decipher the letters. The women have not this difficulty to contend with, and so make better progress. Not only are the women taught to read and write, but also plain needlework, knitting and crochet. Garments are cut out by friends, and the women are taught to put them together, and by knitting and crochet many are able to earn a little, which helps their scanty means of existence."

Various other efforts, such as an excursion in the summer and an occasional tea, are made to brighten these dull lives. A penny bank and clothing club have also been appreciated. Altogether, the work has been of real service to many, and it is one which might well be done in every district of London, Mr. A. R. Forbes, who did so much to organise this association has reluctantly found it necessary to resign the secretaryship. His place has, however, been taken by Miss Cock, 17, Tressillian-road, Brockley, S.E., who has been associated with the work from the beginning. Pearl Fisher.

BIBLE WOMEN AND NURSES.

How Mrs. Ranyard discovered the "missing link," set Marion to work selling Bibles in St. Giles', and in so doing founded, unwittingly, the London Bible and Domestic Female Mission—this story has become classic in the history of home missions, and needs no retelling. The work so remarkably originated in 1857 has taken deep root, and goes on vigorously to-day, although the beloved founder has passed to her reward.

There are now 125 Bible-women visiting from house to house among the poor, while, in addition, there are eighty Bible-women nurses trained to minister to the sick and injured, and to teach poor women how to nurse. Moreover, there are eleven visiting superintendents and nurse pioneers giving their whole time to organising districts, seeking out fresh cases, conducting mothers' meetings, and lending effective aid to the whole work. Thus, with some central agents, there are 230 earnest Christian women devoted to carrying the Gospel into poor homes, and winning for it an entrance by those kindly and loving offices a true woman knows so well how to render. Moreover, each district has a lady superintendent, who takes the oversight, and seeks to make poor women feel that someone cares for them.

HOW THEY ARE RECEIVED.

How welcome these visitors are I have had opportunities of observing, having spent ere now a day in visitation with a Bible-woman, and another day with one of the nurses. In the darkest and dreariest rooms I have seen womanly wit overcome prejudice, and gain permission to read the Scripture and speak words of warning and entreaty. The nurse's loving offices for the sick and suffering were again and again rewarded with grateful smiles and a marked readiness to listen to earnest counsels. All this in homes where God seemed disregarded and the Gospel unknown. Besides the direct evangelistic work, these visitors find many choice saints hidden in attics and back kitchens, to whom they bring comfort and fellowship. Some of these secluded and oft-tried believers form the brightest memories in my own explorations in Christian ways of working. Not a few also there are who owe this hope for the future to the coming of the Bible-woman with the open Book. In all corners of their great city such trophies of grace are to be found.

The first duty of the Bible-woman is to induce the people to buy a Bible. This is usually done by weekly instalments, and in calling for the pence she finds repeated opportunities for testimony. She is expected to visit every house and family in her district. By sympathetic words and acts she seeks to teach womanly ways, how to keep the children clean, the room tidy, and full oft she has been the means of transforming the home from miserable wretchedness to humble comfort.

The nurse devotes herself to the sick, and, inasmuch as hospital appliances are not to be found in poor homes, has to contrive and adapt as best she can. The true nurse must reckon no needful service to be distasteful, must be above no kindly office. She needs to understand the application of poultices and fomentations and water dressings; the treatment of burns, and sores, and wounds; and generally to minister relief and comfort to the pain-stricken and weary. She is supplied with cereal food, and is allowed to expend weekly a small sum in milk, eggs, beef-tea, or meat, for the patients who require nourishment.

In connection with this Mission good work is also done among factory girls; but probably the Parker-street Dormitory and other branches may form the theme of some future paper. Much interesting detail might be added, and many remarkable incidents narrated; but the general facts given will be sufficient to show how valuable and fruitful is the work of the Bible-woman's Mission, a mission which has surely a strong claim on the generous thoughtfulness of the Lord's people. The hon. supt. is Mrs. Selfe Leonard, 2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, W.C.

A GLIMPSE OF MORMONISM.

In a recent letter Mr. Geo. R. Cairns, the well-known American evangelist, describes some experiences he gained while on a visit to Salt Lake City. He declares that what he saw entirely dispelled the belief he had charitably entertained that most of those professing Mormon tenets, and following the practices of that curious sect, were godly and sincere persons.

They teach (says Mr. Cairns) that we may be baptized by immersion for the dead. At the dedicating of the great Mormon Temple in 1893, one woman hunted up the number of her past dead, and was immersed 200 times. She was an Englishwoman by birth. Many of those who are led away by this delusion go from this country. The official Deseret News says they have missionaries in Leicestershire and Lancashire. If those who are in danger of falling a prey to the wiles of these emissaries could only know the fraud that is being practised upon them, Mormonland would never see them. It is said to be a fact that the leaders of the sect, while having ostensibly forsworn the practice of polygamy in accord with the American law, continue secretly to disobey the law. Our correspondent says that three-fourths of the public-house keepers in Salt Lake City are "saints," and that profanity and gross licentiousness abound.

Mr. Cairns adds that his Gospel Mission in the city was in a measure successful, but not much could be done for the Mormon population, as they are proscribed from attending "Gentile" places of meeting.

MESSRS. WEAVER IN LEITH.

The evangelistic mission just ended in Leith by Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver was conducted under the auspices of the Leith Christian Fellowship Union. There was a certain attraction in their name. Speaking for myself, I remember when I was a lad, between twenty and thirty years ago, their father's name was a household word in Scotland. From my native place, twenty miles distant from Glasgow, my father and others used to attend his meetings in the city, and tramp back the whole distance, arriving home about four in the morning. I used to make my father promise that he would awake me on his return, and tell me about the big meetings. Can you wonder that the name Weaver has a certain charm for me?

The mission in Leith lasted a fortnight. The Central Hall is seated for 500, but this building was too small. From seven to eight hundred people must have been present during the closing nights of the mission. But the important points were that many in attendance belonged to the non-church-going class, and that a large number of these professed conversion. Old men and old women, as well as young men and maidens, went into the adjoining rooms for the purpose of being personally dealt with about salvation. I am not favourable to the numbering of heads; still, I think it is very desirable to know the names and addresses of young converts. Much of the good resulting from such a mission may be lost through lack of proper oversight afterwards. In addition to those who have professed conversion in the second meetings, I believe not a few decided for Christ at the first meetings; and I know from the voluntary testimony of many that Christians have received a great quickening.

The Mission was closed by a Conference in the Wesleyan Methodist Church, which in numbers filled the church, and which in spiritual tone will long be remembered as one of the most inspiring Christian gatherings ever held in Leith.

In speaking of the evangelists themselves, I hardly know what to say. Perhaps some of your readers will find fault with me if I say anything. I hope I have a due sense of man's inability to do any good at all apart from the power of the Holy Ghost, and of the importance of giving God all the glory for any good done through preaching the Gospel. At the same time, God works through human instruments. When I say that the elder brother is the speaker and the younger the singer, I am not to be understood as meaning that the speaker is not a singer, or that the singer is not a speaker. Mr. Frank Weaver has the gift of effective speech, and I hope he will develop this gift, while continuing to use his distinctive gift as a singer of the grand old Gospel. From personal contact with these young men, as well as from hearing them preach and sing, I am not surprised at the good they have been the means of doing among us. They were willing to be used of God, and, putting aside all human artifices in the work of soul-saving, God has set his seal upon the mission here in a marvellous way. In words of burning, rugged earnestness, the Gospel was preached night by night. They faced their audience in the sure hope of winning souls. They complied with the conditions of blessing, and were owned of God accordingly. I hope that when the brothers Weaver return to Leith next April they will return in the fulness of the Divine blessing, and be a means of further spiritual quickening to our community.

Thomas Millar,
Minister of St. Paul's, Leith.

ST. LEONARDS.—Rev. F. B. Meyer will give an afternoon Bible reading at Wilton House, Grosvenor Gardens, St. Leonards, and an address at 7.30 at the Congregational Church, Robertson-street, on Tuesday, November 20. An offering will be taken on behalf of the (London) Evangelistic Mission and St. Leonards House of Rest.

REV. A. W. PRAUTCH, one of the anti-opium deputation from India, has returned to London from a series of speaking engagements in the north of England, where he attended public meetings at Darlington, Stockton-on-Tees, South Shields, and West Hartlepool; a conference at Sunderland, and a convention at Newcastle. Friends of the anti-opium cause wishing to secure Mr. Prautch's help at public meetings should write to Mr. Maurice Gregory, 31, Paternoster-square, London, E.C.

REV. W. H. AITKEN AT HOUNSLOW.

A mission at Hounslow by this well-known preacher has been brought to its close. St. Paul's Church is situated in the country, about a mile from the centre of the town of Hounslow. This, with the very unfavourable weather, told somewhat against the gatherings in respect of numbers. But the interest deepened from night to night, and the apparent spiritual results are of a very cheering character. The missioner certainly did not spare himself, as in addition to three other services on Sundays he addressed the soldiers of Hounslow Barracks at the parade service. There is reason to hope that his labours here have not been in vain; several of the soldiers applied for memorial cards on a profession of having received very definite spiritual blessing.

The last service on Monday week was a very impressive one. Mr. Aitken addressed himself mainly to the case of young Christians, choosing for his subject St. Paul's oft-misinterpreted words to the Philippians, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." At the close of his discourse he made a last touching appeal to those who had not yet yielded; there were many moist eyes all over the church as he closed with a most affecting incident of the last days of his venerated father's ministry.

Mr. Aitken was very efficiently assisted by Mrs. Crouch in the work amongst the women. Her winning, gentle pleadings reached many a heart. The earnest prayers of many new-found friends at Hounslow will accompany Mr. Aitken in his work at St. John's, Chelsea, which begins next Sunday, God willing. Although the congregation of St. Paul's is a poor one, a most liberal offering was made on behalf of the Church Parochial Mission Society, under whose auspices the mission was conducted.

WORK FOR YOUNG MEN.

Dear Sir,—There are many places in the suburbs of London where a branch of the Y.M.C.A. might do very useful work, but a chief difficulty in forming such an association is to find a young man of the necessary ability and leisure ready to accept the responsible office of secretary.

There is, indeed, a sad lack of intelligent and consecrated men of business habits who are willing to devote themselves to this special kind of Christian work—work which, alas! in some existent associations often languishes because the honorary secretaries, though otherwise well qualified for the position, are so full of engagements as to be unable to give the requisite time to the duties of their office.

Our object in writing this letter is to suggest a possible way of meeting this difficulty.

Many old members of the Association are now in the foreign Mission field, and there are now doubtless many other would-be foreign missionaries among its younger members, to whom that door of hope is at present closed.

What then (considering the missionary character of the Y.M.C.A.) can be a better preparation for more extended work than a joint secretaryship of some suburban branch?

It needs faith, courage, patience, tact, and overflowing love to win young men for Christ, and the exercise of these and other graces in Association work, would certainly prove an excellent training for mission service at home or abroad.

There are, probably, at the present time such men of missionary spirit in London, to whom it is of comparatively small importance where they reside, so long as they are within easy access of their daily occupation, who might be disposed to devote their evening leisure to this important sphere of Christian work.

We are of course pleading for honorary workers, but it is possible that in a few places a small pecuniary remuneration might be found to cover the cost of railway fares or such like extra expenses.

With a view to giving practical effect to the suggestion, we recommend any young man seeking Christian work to put himself in communication with the secretaries of the district unions, who would no doubt gladly supply information on the subject.—Your obedient servants,

George H. Lee, } Hon.
G. A. Barrett, } Secs.

THE NIGER MISSION.

We are privileged to give some extracts from a letter by Bishop Tugwell, dated, River Niger, West Africa, September 4:—

We are steaming down the river at a great pace. We left Lokoja this morning, and hope to reach Onitsha to-night. Mr. Dobinson is with me; we have spent ten days in Lokoja, and have had much blessing in our work. The scenery around Lokoja is very beautiful. We climbed one day to the top of the hill behind the mission house; I found it was 1100ft. above the level of the river. On reaching the summit we found we were on the top of an extensive tableland. The panoramic view at daylight and sunset surpasses description. The Niger suits me; I never stood the climate better, and these beautiful hills are a constant delight. I am really in perfect health and excellent spirits. I find life more and more delightful as I learn to know more and more of Christ. Whenever I preach Christ I am wonderfully helped in my own soul, and I see the people melt before the Word of God. I enjoy very happy fellowship, too, with Mr. Dobinson; "we take sweet counsel together, and walk in the house of God as friends."

We are so short-handed in the mission, that much must be left undone which should be done. Will you make known my great need of one who would be willing to come out and serve Christ by acting in part as my private secretary and correspondent? I should be able to attempt and do much more with such help. I dare not even think of all I have to do in the next few weeks, very delightful work, very encouraging work; but work requiring vigour of thought and mind and body, and therefore work requiring carefully-husbanded strength, and a mind closely in touch with the Spirit and mind of Christ. I have the work of ten men waiting to be done; I must only endeavour to do the work of one man. If I attempt more I shall do less.

THE LATE COL. PUGET.

An esteemed correspondent in Scotland writes as follows with reference to this deceased brother, whose death we recorded last week:—

It is now twenty-five years ago since I first met Col. Puget, at a Gospel meeting in Hamilton, N.B. During his stay there, in command of the troops stationed in Hamilton at that time, I had much Christian fellowship with him at his meetings in the barracks and at mission Gospel meetings in a poor locality in the town, where I often saw him both praying and preaching in the open air to crowds of neglected and poor people.

I got the story of his own conversion from his own lips. Some years before his sister met a doctor in society who at that time was a freethinker, but she said on parting, "When I am ill I'll send for you." Years passed, and she was on her deathbed. The family doctor gave up her case as hopeless, so she sent for this doctor. At the first summons he replied he could not come, being unwell; but, on getting a second call, he said, "This must be of the Lord," having been converted meantime. He went, and examined the case professionally, and then told her there was no hope, which announcement she received in sullen silence. "Ah," he said, "I did not come to speak to you of death, I came to speak to you of life." He then told the old story of God's grace. The lady, after remaining in silence, turned to her father and relations with a face "beaming with joy," and at once sent messages to all the absent members of her family. Her message to her brother the Colonel was, "Tell John to be sure to meet me in heaven."

The father sent to his son in India, saying, "I add my prayers." The Colonel retired to his own tent, and throwing himself on the ground, cried, "O Lord, help me to get to heaven." On getting home he found clearer light from Bonar's "Way of Peace," and was further helped by his own cousin, Lord ——. He related the circumstances to show it was wrong to say no one should pray for conversion.

In private conversation his remarks were full of grace and truth. He always came to my house for prayer before going to speak. He told me his fellow officers did not swear before him now, and said, "It is astonishing how much a man can confess Christ, and yet be ashamed of Him." I never met anyone who knew his Bible better.

MR. HENRY THORNE.

A series of Bible readings and evangelistic services, lasting ten days, was conducted by Mr. Thorne, under the auspices of the Galashiels Presbyterian Union. These were greatly appreciated by audiences which increased towards the close, and had it been possible to continue them for a further period of equal extent the interest would have still more grown from the attraction which Mr. Thorne gained over his audiences. So highly were they esteemed and enjoyed that regret was felt and expressed that his visit could not be prolonged. His services will be soon again sought after.

The addresses, afternoon and evening, Bible reading and evangelistic, were felt to be quite exceptional of their kind—fresh, genial, illustrative in the most fertile way, so richly Scriptural, beaming with the happy Christian personality of the speaker, and free from everything in the form of platitude and rant. The Lord Jesus Christ was exhibited and commended to the community in a manner which has endeared the servant to all who attended his ministrations. J. B. P.

A ten days' mission at the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, was brought to a close on Monday, November 12. The weather had much to do in keeping people away from the meetings, yet the attendance throughout the ten days was good, and on the last Sunday evening, when the attendance was small, owing to the severity of the storm, the blessing was greater than ever. Over thirty persons were seen as inquirers during the mission.

The largest attendance was on the Saturday evening, when Mr. Thorne told the story of his life—from the Stage to the Cross. It was most interesting to all, and was told with considerable power. The Bible readings in the afternoons have been an important feature of the mission. On the Sunday afternoons Mr. Thorne preached in the Shaftesbury Hall, in connection with the work carried on by Capt. Dawson.

THE WORK AT COSTERS' HALL.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, L.C.C., J.P., has been the hon. superintendent of this work since the year 1861, when the mission was founded in old Golden-lane. Within the radius of a mile from the present Mission premises there are about 180,000 persons, largely composed of the artisan and the poorest of the poor. At the present time poverty of the direst kind reigns in the district. "In many cases the husband has only casual employment as a labourer," it is said, "oftener out of work than in it, and when sickness comes in the family the position is often desperate." It is added that, "Hidden away in these dark rooms are poor little suffering cripples, with even less sunshine in their lives than their more active brothers and sisters." These have some attention given to them by visitors, who endeavour to impart some Christian instruction to them, buying them books, toys, etc.

In addition to the strictly Evangelical service, which always holds the first place, very much is done in the way of encouraging thrift; while in having the free use of well-warmed and well-lighted rooms, instead of having to go to the public-house to hold their club and benefit society meetings, the costers and street traders enjoy a great boon. About a thousand children are taught in the Sunday-school, and the Mission extends its influence more or less among the densely-populated streets, courts, and alleys in the immediate neighbourhood. "The Costers' Mission is thoroughly Evangelical, repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ being placed in the forefront of all our teaching." The cottage at Dalston for elderly convalescent women and poor young mothers has also been well filled.

The evangelistic services, both indoor and outdoor, as well as the prayer and praise meetings, were never more prosperous than now, while temperance is represented by four societies which have meetings in connection with Costers' Hall. The work of past years in giving free cocoa breakfasts three times a week, and providing halfpenny dinners to famishing Board-school children, will also be continued if funds are forthcoming. The address of Mr. W. J. Orsman is Milton House, Shacklewell-green, N.E. Parcels of clothing should go to Costers' Hall, Hoxton-street, London, N.E.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 18.—MATTHEW XIV.

The Feast in Herod's Palace (1-12).—Herod was by creed a Sadducee, but all his materialist reasoning cannot lay the ghost of an evil conscience. For ever that head of John the Baptist seemed to haunt him. The blood of murdered Abels will cry until met by the blood that speaks peace. How great the contrast between the licentious revels in the brilliant supper-room, and the lonely solitude of the prophet in his dungeon-cell! But the contrast was greater yet between the horror that hung over the castle when the murder was consummated and the welcome accorded to the faithful witness in heaven. How often the bereavement of the disciple and friend has driven him to tell the Lord!

The Feast on the Hill-side (13-21).—Jesus was the host. His plans for rest had been disarranged by the intrusion of the crowds, but He took this as indicating the Father's plan, and gladly met them. Perfect calm rested on his soul, because He knew that infinite resources were at his command; but He made use, as He always does, of human resources, so far as they would go. Bring your meagre supplies to Jesus; He will make them enough for all that look to you, and there will be sufficient for yourself.

The Storm of the Night (22-33).—The Master never constrains his disciples to go into the storm, except that He has some purposes of grace which could not otherwise be unfolded. Only so could they know Him as the Lord of waves and winds, or as able to penetrate the murky night for their deliverance. Jesus always says "Come" to every aspiration of the soul.

The Blessings of the Day (34-36).—The worst storms are followed by the calmest weather; the darkest nights by the brightest days; the wrestlers with trouble are the best benefactors of their fellows.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 19.—MATTHEW XV.

Rejected by Religious Leaders (1-20).—Ritualism is the grey ash of an extinct fire. Men who have lost the power are very careful of the form. The tendency is to raise Church tradition to the level of Scripture. Indeed, in this case obedience to the ordinance of man as to making over property to the cause of God had even superseded obedience to the Law of God, as contained in the Decalogue. (11) How striking this antithesis! Not what goes into the mouth, but what comes out of it, is the cause of defilement. Every unkind and untrue word leaves its stain. This sentence repealed ceremonialism.

Sought out by a Heathen Mother (21-28).—The worship of Moloch and Astarte might content till the child's life was in peril. Then the soul needed the Divine Man. There was a great capacity for faith in the woman's heart, which, beneath the culture of Christ, rapidly sprang up and matured. She had no claim on Him as Son of David, and must learn to come to Him as Lord. She had to give Christ his right place, and take her own right place at his feet. God's silence is intended to bring about a deeper heart-searching, and a truer appreciation of his nature and our own attitude towards Him. Faith can have all it will.

Ministering to the Crowds (29-39).—The works of Jesus were intended to promote the glory of the Father (John xvii. 1, 2). Thus we, too, should work (Matt. v. 16). How strange that the disciples should have mistrusted Christ's power to meet the needs of the crowds. We have short memories, and do not enough use the past as an argument for faith. Jesus uses the mediation of his Church. He gave to the disciples, and they to the crowds.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 20.—MATTHEW XVI.

Tempted (1-5).—The only tie between these two classes was common antipathy to Christ. The Materialist will join the Ritualist in putting out the Light. They needed not signs but sight to see the great sign of the life and glory of Christ, that were being unfolded before their gaze. He knew that He would be cast out of the ship of the Jewish commonwealth as a second Jonah, but in his resurrection He would come to them, as Jonah from the depths of the sea to Nineveh. Yet they would not repent.

Warning (6-12).—Materialism and Ritualism have one leaven; they originate in a common attitude of the will in its proud independence of God, one disregarding Him, the other giving Him an equivalent for his favours. How apt we are to forget the miracles of the past! Let us put away our care about bread, and give ourselves to the great spiritual lesson Christ would teach.

Questioning (13-20).—It is well when our beliefs are compelled to crystallise and take shape in answer to a question or challenge. Note that the meek and lowly Saviour did not rebuke Peter's ascription of Deity, but declared its Divine origin. This assertion of Peter's faith is the foundation of the Church. The gate, like the Sublime Porte of the Turk, was the seat of power. Hades (see R.V.) is the world of the Unseen. The power of binding and loosing is common to all believers (xviii. 18). Peter opened the Kingdom to Jews at Pentecost, to Gentiles in Acts x.

Revealing the Law of "Life through Death" (21-28).—Spare thyself (R.V. marg.), is always the cry the flesh; but the Master commends the cross, as the essence of discipleship (24); as the only law of soul-health (25); as the condition of winning the true life (26).

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21.—MATTHEW XVII.

Mountain Heights (1-13).—This was the climax of the human life of the Second Man. Had He so willed, He might have no doubt stepped into Paradise, and been translated that He should not see death. But He deliberately turned his back on all, and spake of his decease, and set his face to go to Jerusalem to die. This blessed rapture must have given Him solace and courage in the hours of darkness and anguish to which He was hastening. Moses and Elijah were present as the representatives of the Law and the Prophets. Much though they had done, they knew nothing of the death of a Substitute. This was the unique service of the Divine Man for men. Peter wanted to fix the transient rapture. Such moments are not meant to tarry but to prepare us for the service of the plain.

Valley Descents (14-23).—What long-continued anguish had these parents borne; but out of it faith was presently to emerge as gold tried in the fire. We stand powerless before the demons that possess men, till we learn that there is no power in us, apart from the faith that links us with Christ. Faith is all-important, because it is capacity for Christ. It matters little that faith is small, so long as it binds us to the great power of the great God.

Sea Depths (24-27).—There was no inspired warrant for this tax; but Christ submitted, whilst bearing his quiet witness against it. This example is full of instruction. The New Testament everywhere counsels submission to every ordinance of man, even when unjust, coupled with a clear witness against it. Such witness-bearing ultimately undermines the wrong in a bloodless revolution. How wonderful our Lord's power over fish! Can he not equally influence men, and obtain money for the maintenance of his own? It is very sweet when Jesus pays for us! What a combination—"for Me and thee."

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 22.—MATTHEW XVIII.

The Little Child (1-14).—Pride seeks the best places, but in the Kingdom of Heaven these are only given to those who do not think about them. Little children are quite indifferent to questions of precedence. We must put away childishness and cultivate childlikeness. The new heart is a child-heart. The flesh of Naaman came as that of a little child after he had dipped seven times in Jordan. (4, 5) The lowly heart enters the kingdom and receives its King. (5-9) Ambition hurts and offends, and it should be put away at all costs. (10-14) The privileges of child-like hearts—guarded by angels, followed by the Good Shepherd, the subjects of the Father's good-will.

The Erring Brother (15-20).—We are not only to seek our brother, when we have sinned against him (v. 23), but when he has done wrong to us. Very few of us do this. It is so much easier to talk about the wrong done to us than to talk it out with him. Men may be put under discipline and refused church privileges for persistent unbrotherliness. When we act in the power of God's Spirit, we register his decisions, and our action is ratified in heaven. (19) This agreement is of two notes, struck at the same moment, which symphonise. (20) This presence may grace a cottage prayer meeting and be wanting in a royal chapel.

The Unforgiving Servant (21-35).—If we do not forgive we are not forgiven. The heart that does not forgive its erring brother, shows that it has never really apprehended or appreciated the Divine mercy, which, when it really enters the soul, is full of gentle pity.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 23.—MATTHEW XIX.

Marriage Bonds (1-12).—The Rabbis permitted divorce on such trivial grounds as that of the wife spoiling her husband's dinner. Christ goes back to the primeval law, in which one woman was given to one man, and lays it down that the only thing which can dissolve the marriage tie is an act of infidelity. When that has taken place, in God's sight, the obligation of the marriage-tie is annulled. The unoffending party is then free to contract another marriage. When one party to the contract has broken it, the other is not bound by it. Moses promulgated a looser code, because God educates the human conscience by stages. For most marriage is natural and right, but for some the demand of high duty, or special reasons, make it undesirable.

Young Children (13-15).—Children are naturally simple, loving, humble, and believing. It is not difficult, therefore, to win them for Christ. The tendency of the child's heart is to go to Him unless forbidden.

Youth (16-22).—This man had wealth, position, an amiable disposition, an ingenuous mind; and yet not at ease. There was a secret void in his soul, which only Christ could satisfy. Our Lord first holds up the Law, and then shows how little he understood its true nature, in his boast that he had kept it. Obviously he preferred himself to his neighbour. How many refuse Christ for even less than this.

The Substitution of Heavenly for Natural Ties (23-29).—The regeneration must be the life of heaven or the millennium, when the losses and sufferings of this world will be repaired and compensated. The Gospel often breaks up natural ties, but constitutes us members of a celestial home-circle.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24.—MATTHEW XX.

Labourers for the Vineyard (1-16).—How eager God is for labourers. He is afoot at dawn. He comes to many in their young life. He came to the saints in the morning of human history. He keeps coming as each generation passes away, to replenish the dwindled ranks. There will be a reckoning day. We must give an account. But those who, for no fault of theirs ("No man hath hired us"), have not done or borne so much as others, will not be the ultimate losers. The main question must be, what was their disposition? If they would have done as much as others, in case they had the chance, they shall be rewarded for that willinghood.

The Bitter Cup (17-28).—Christ's death was part of the Divine programme. Others die because they have been born. He was born that He might die. He went forward, foreseeing all. When the iron asks to be made a sword, it prays for the fire; when the jewel asks to be set in a crown, it asks for the wheel. "We are able"! Alas, they know not themselves (xxvi. 56). The life of ministry is the only path that leads to the throne. Christ sits on the throne, because He has suffered and served most.

The Cry and Healing of the Blind (29-34).—Sorrow finds relief in companionship. The crowds always would silence the soul's appeal to Jesus: see to it that you make every opposition the reason for crying so much the more. The one appeal to which Christ is never deaf is that of pain. He stands still in his onward progress through the ages, when sin and sorrow plead with Him. Let us behold and follow Him, though it be to Calvary.

MR. C. INGLIS IN NEW JERSEY.

This honoured servant of Christ has concluded a three weeks' series of meetings in the People's Mission, New Brunswick, N.J. Each afternoon he held a Bible reading, and they proved veritable feasts to the believers who assembled to hear the Word expounded. The lessons brought forward day by day will not easily be forgotten.

The evening meetings for the unsaved were blessed seasons. The Gospel was made so plain and simple that the most illiterate could not fail to understand. From the very beginning signs of blessing were manifest, and the interest deepened as the meetings progressed; backsliders were restored, and sinners were saved. Our friend has left many friends behind him on his second visit to New Brunswick. From here he has gone to Sing Sing, N.Y., and from thence he goes to St. Louis, Mo., and other Western cities. T. J. # INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 25.

Opposition to Christ.—Mark iii. 22-35.

Golden Text.—John i. 11.

The foes and the friends of Jesus are the two themes with which this lesson deals. The reasons for the Scribes' enmity towards Jesus were—the contradiction between his teaching and theirs; his disregard for their foolish traditions; his continually increasing popularity; and his undoubted superiority to them as manifest in his miracles and his life.

Opposition, and How Jesus Met It (22-30).—In the complaint of verse 22 there is a double compliment to Jesus. It was made by "Scribes who came from Jerusalem." However contemptuously they might speak of this Galilean Prophet, it is evident that they were beginning to feel uneasy about Him. And, next, they could not deny the fact of his miracles. They had just witnessed one (see Matt. xii. 22, 23). His enemies bear witness to the fact that He did cast out demons. But they justified their opposition to Him by the horrible suggestion that He was in league with the devil!

It is evident that Beelzebub, the prince of the demons (22), and Satan (23), refer to the one person.

Jesus replied to this suggestion, not because it was spoken to Him, but because He "knew their thoughts" (Matt. xii. 25). This fact should have made his enemies pause in their opposition. What is the use of opposing One who knows our plans before they are spoken? His reply was made in a series of brief "parables," which, like other parables, have the double effect of teaching those who desire to learn, and of concealing the truth from those who are resolved not to know it. Three things are contained in his reply:—(1) The absurdity of the Scribes' suggestion. The pictures He gives are those of a kingdom and a household in which faction rises against faction, as though in that way the kingdom and the household may be established (24, 25)! Our great adversary has not failed to learn the lesson that division is weakness and that unity is strength. Satan is not so great a fool as the Scribes seem to suggest. (2) It was contrary to fact (27). This is much more completely presented in Luke xi. 21, 22. The "strong man" is Satan—the Stronger Man who dispossessed him is Jesus. The explanation of his victory over demon-possessed men lies in the fact that He is mightier than his greatest adversary. (3) It recoils upon those who make it (28-30). Let them persist in such a course of opposition, and they get beyond the possibility of forgiveness; their sin would be eternal (R.V.), and its consequences too. The words are full of warning. The unpardonable sin lay, not merely in saying certain words (30), but in doing this in order to stifle their impressions, and find further excuse for rejecting Jesus. They loved darkness rather than light (See 2 Thess. ii. 10-12). Augustine described this sin as wilfully-persisted-in impenitence or disbelief. It is possible now, to those who continually hear the Gospel, and harden themselves against it. Ralph the Rover justly perished upon the Inchcape Rock, from which years before he had cut away the warning bell that would have told him of danger. Conscience is such a bell, beware how you deal with it. Men who have committed this sin are "past feeling," have "consciences seared," are destitute of any desire to repent and turn to God.

The Friends of Jesus (31-35).—These are of two kinds—his relations according to the flesh (31), and those who may claim a nearer and dearer relationship with Him (33-35). See first his mistaken friends. They erred in their judgment of Him as did the Scribes. To them He was "beside Himself" (21), and they had set out from Nazareth for Capernaum in order to take Him home and keep Him under restraint. This was the meaning of their message, sent to Him from the fringe of the crowd (31, 32). Not unfrequently his followers have found most trying opposition from those who were naturally their friends (Matt. x. 21, 35-37). The example of Jesus teaches us to treat such with all affection and respect, but when their commands conflict with the will of God to obey Him at whatever cost. When Mahomet was pressed by his uncle to cease to anger the chief people by his utterances, he answered that "If the sun stood on his right hand and the moon on his left, ordering him to hold his peace, he could not obey." Let not the false prophet exceed in his devotion the followers of the True.

In replying to his natural relations, Jesus described who were his true friends. Have you coveted a nearness to Jesus equal to that of his own brethren, or even of Mary? Jesus says, not even his mother has precedence of others in this matter. Nearest and dearest relationship belongs to those who do the will of God! They are born of the same Father, members of the same family, objects of the same loving care, partners in the same service, heirs of the same eternal inheritance. To this He invites you.

THE THING YOU LEAVE UNDONE.

It isn't the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone,
That gives you a bit of a heartache
At the setting of the sun.
The tender word forgotten,
The letter you did not write,
The flower you did not send, dear,
Are your haunting ghosts at night.

The stone you might have lifted
Out of a brother's way;
The bit of heartsome counsel
You were hurried too much to say:
The loving touch of the hand, dear,
The gentle, winning tone
Which you had no time nor thought for,
With troubles enough of your own.

Those little acts of kindness
So easily out of mind;
Those chances to be angels
Which we poor mortals find.
They come in night and silence,
Each sad, reproachful wraith,
When hope is faint and flagging,
And a chill has fallen on faith.

For life is all too short, dear,
And sorrow is all too great,
To suffer our slow compassion
That tarries until too late;
And it isn't the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone,
Which gives you a bit of a heartache
At the setting of the sun.

A GOSPEL CROW.

Let me tell you about a dark village in County Galway, Ireland, and how a black crow was used by God to bring the light to it. A Scripture reader had often tried, and tried in vain, to obtain an opening. Nobody would admit him to the house.

One day, in passing through, he saw some boys, mischievously inclined (as even Irish boys, with all their good nature, sometimes are), throwing stones at a poor young crow which, only learning to fly, had fallen into the river. The Scripture reader went over and asked them what they were doing. The boys replied that they were trying to get the crow out of the water, and that they would then tie it to a fence and make a "cock-shot" of it; that is, shy stones at it until they had killed it.

"But," said the Scripture-reader, "is not that very cruel? How would you like if a great monster were to come and treat you in that fashion, killing you slowly before the eyes of your parents? For see," he added, pointing to two crows hovering over the river, evidently in a great state of excitement, "there are the poor little crows, father and mother, in great grief about their little one. Now will you not give these three poor creatures, made by God as you are, the great joy of being restored to one another, a united family, and that will make you far happier than if you had killed the little crow, for it is a far greater pleasure to impart pleasure than to inflict pain." The boys answered, "No, you are not going to spoil our sport."

At last a happy idea struck one of them, who had by this time obtained possession of the young bird. "We'll sell the crow to you if you like."

"Very good," said he, "I will buy it from you," and giving them a few coppers, and an additional little lecture into the bargain, the good man carried off the young crow to a safe distance, and, climbing a tree, deposited it safely among the branches, where he had the satisfaction of seeing it taken in charge by its now happy parents, who rewarded their little one's deliverer with a "Caw, caw" of thanks.

The Scripture-reader was passing on his way through the village, when a man who had been standing with his back leaning against the wall of his house, smoking his pipe, an unobserved witness of the whole proceeding, called out, "Come here, sir, I want to spake to ye. I didn't think ye were that sort of a man at all at all, to consider the poor dumb crayture, an' to pay down your money fur to save the life of a sinseless crow. I thought ye wur a bad man, tryin' to lard dacint people asthray; but it's not the kind of job a bad man would be afther doin', showin' pity to a disthressed fowl uv the air. And now ye come into my house here and rade your book, and I'll bring the naybours in to hear it, too, and ye'll nivver go past my door, I hope, widout givin' me a call. My name's not Jim Murphy if I don't acquent all in the village that yer a daycint man wid a koind Christian heart in the inside uv ye, and that they needn't be afraid of the loikes of ye, book or no book, but give ye a welcome to their cabins."

So it come to pass that the Scripture-reader had entrance to this Galway village, where none of his kind had ever been received before. A regular meeting for the reading of God's Word was established, and the day of Eternity alone will reveal what good has been accomplished as the result. And the humble instrument in bringing all this about was a young crow!

The dove brought the message of God's mercy to Noah; the ravens fed the prophet, and the sparrow falleth not to the ground without our Heavenly Father's notice, teaching us his love and care towards those who are of more value than many such. May we not also learn from this incident the great value of consistency of life and conduct as a testimony for Jesus and his Holy Gospel? Jim Murphy would never have listened to this man of God had he not aroused his conscience, and got to his heart by an act of practical kindness, even to one of God's humblest creatures. T.

HE LEADETH ME.

"I am the Lord....which leadeth thee."—Isa. xlviii. 17.

He leadeth me.
Who leads? The Christ who left his home above
Of joy and light,
To tread awhile for me (oh wondrous love!)
Earth's paths of night;
Who laid his sceptre and his glory down,
To bear instead
A mocking reed, a cruel thorny crown
Circling his head.

He leadeth me.
The Man of Sorrows and acquaint with grief,
Who trod alone
The winepress, nor had e'en the sweet relief
To talk to one
Who knew and understood his inmost heart,
And could bestow
Sweet human sympathy, of cheering art
The best we know.

He leadeth me.
And I would ever leave the choice to Him,
Nor choose my way.
He is so wise, my sight is poor and dim—
I should but stray.
I'd rather walk with Him in paths of gloom
Where dangers are,
Than in the paths of light where roses bloom
And He afar.

He leadeth me.
Why should I then have any fear to tread
The distant way?
Though clouds may gather, louring overhead,
My heart can say—
"Thou art with me"—I trust Thy written Word
And will not fear;
In sorrow's night, through death's dark vale, dear Lord,
Thou wilt be near.

He leadeth me.
A little child, I have no strength at all,
But trust his care.
He holds my hand, and so I shall not fall;
Through Him I dare
Face dangers dread, strong in his strength and might,
For well I know
When He is near not hell's dark force of night
Can me o'erthrow.

He leadeth me.
And so I ever shall be led aright,
For his great love
Shall lead me on thro' darkness and thro' light,
Till safe above
I shall look back o'er all my pilgrim way,
And see at last
The reason of each dark and dreary day
Which I have passed.

ON THE SILENT SPEECH OF CHRIST.*

To one who knew Herod's history, how loathsome must it have been to hear religious talk from his lips! There was no manliness or earnestness in the man. Religion was a mere diversion to him. To such, Christ will always be silent. Herod is the representative of those for whom there is no seriousness in life, but who live only for pleasure.

There are many such; not only has religion, in any high and serious sense, no attraction for them, but they dislike everything like deep thought or earnest work in any sphere. As soon as they are released from the claims of business, they rush off to be excited and amused, and the one thing they dread is solitude, in which they might have to face themselves. In certain classes of society, where work is not necessary to obtain a livelihood, this spirit is the predominant one. Life is all a scene of gaiety; one amusement follows another, and the utmost care is taken to avoid any intervals where reflection might come.

Religion itself may be dragged into this circle of dissipation. It is possible to go to church with substantially the same object with which one goes to a place of amusement—in the hope of being excited, and having the feelings stirred and the æsthetic sense gratified, or at the least, of consuming an hour which might otherwise be heavy on the hands. With shame, be it said, there are churches enough and preachers enough ready to meet this state of mind halfway. With the fireworks of rhetoric, or the witchery of music, or the pomp of ritual, the performance is seasoned up to the due pitch; and the audience depart with precisely the same kind of feeling with which they might leave a concert or a theatre. Very likely it is accounted a great success; but Christ has not spoken. He is resolutely mute to those who follow religion in this spirit.

Sometimes the same spirit takes another direction. It becomes speculative and sceptical, and, like Herod, "questions in many words." When I have heard some people propounding religious difficulties, the answer which has risen to my lips has been: Why should you be able to believe in Christ? What have you ever done to render yourselves worthy of such a privilege? You are thinking of faith as a compliment to be paid to Christ; in reality the power to believe in Him and His words that requires to be purchased with thought, humility, and self-denial.

We do not owe an answer to the religious objections of everyone. Religion is, indeed, a subject on which everyone takes the liberty of speaking; the most unholy and evil-living talk and write of it nothing doubting; but in reality it is a subject on which very few are entitled to be heard. We may know beforehand from their lives, what the opinions of many must be about it; and we know what their opinions are worth.

It may be thought that Jesus ought to have spoken to Herod—that He missed an opportunity. Ought He not to have appealed to his conscience, and attempted to rouse him to a sense of his sin? To that I answer that his silence was itself this appeal. Had there been a spark of conscience left in Herod, those eyes looking him through and through, and that Divine dignity measuring and weighing him, would have caused his sins to rise up out of the grave and overwhelm him. Jesus was silent that the voice of the dead Baptist might be heard.

If we understood it, the silence of Christ is the most eloquent of all appeals. Can you remember when you used to hear Him—when the words of the Book and the preacher used to move you in church; when the singing awoke aspiration; when the Sabbath was holy ground; when the Spirit of God strove with you? Is that all passed or passing away? Does Christ speak no more? If a man is lying ill, and perceives day by day everything about him becoming silent; his wife avoiding speech, visitors sinking their voices to a whisper, footsteps falling and doors shutting noiselessly, he knows that his illness is becoming critical. When the traveller, battling with the snowstorm, sinks down at last to rest, he feels cold and painful and miserable; but if there steals over him a soft sweet sense of slumber and silence, then is the time to rouse himself and fight off his peace, if he is ever to stir again. There is such a spiritual insensibility. It means that the Spirit is ceasing to strive, and Christ to call. If it is creeping over you it is time to be anxious, for it is for your life.

REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES

ON THE REAL CHRISTIAN.*

Nothing is more significant to those who carefully watch human society, than the calm unconsciousness with which a number of high-minded and honourable agnostics talk about the days when they were Christian, and imagine that they are in a position to speak authoritatively about the claims of Christianity because, as they fancy, they have seen both sides of the question. But, as a matter of fact, they do not know what Christianity is. They were brought up in an atmosphere of traditional ideas, and they passively accepted certain doctrines which were current in the Christian Church or in European society, but they have never loved the Lord Jesus Christ in the sense in which St. Paul loved Him. They have never been able to say, as he said, "The love of Christ constraineth me," and "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Consequently, they are under a complete, although unconscious delusion upon this subject. The Christianity which infidels and agnostics criticise and attack is not the Christianity of Christ or the Christianity of St. Paul. They are on the wrong track altogether; they are attacking a name, not a reality. Jesus Christ and his true disciples have no interest whatever in the mere theory or profession which they denounce, and their arguments are wholly wide of the mark.

Not one of them has ever come within sight or gun-shot of essential Christianity. The whole controversy between Christians and non-Christians is based upon a false or mistaken issue. Not one of them ever raises the main issue; not one of the opponents of Christianity gives any indication that he knows what Christianity is. If we could only induce men before they argue, and before they write, to define a Christian man, there would be an end of controversy. A Christian man is one who lives in affectionate daily intimacy with a risen and divine Christ. The mere fact that any human being professes and calls himself a Christian proves nothing. He may be under a complete delusion, as many are, with respect to the essence of Christianity. I make no reflection upon them, for the Christian Church has so perverted the meaning of Scriptural terms that there is ample excuse for gigantic mistakes on the part of outsiders. But in the light of the words, "If any man loveth not the Lord, let him be anathema" (1 Cor. xvi. 22), we at any rate cannot deny that the Apostle Paul peremptorily and indignantly declines to recognise as his "Christian" brother any man who does not love the Lord Jesus Christ; who has not an emotion of real personal affection to the living Saviour, whom he knows, not in theory or in imagination, but in fact.

ON DUTIES AS MEANS OF GRACE.*

All relative duties are means of grace. The mediæval monk who fled from the world to escape its toils and cares, in order to enjoy unbroken communion with God, lost far more than he gained. He cultivated only one side of his nature, and that but imperfectly; for two classes of duties—to God and to man—are so intertwined that neither can be performed while the other is neglected. We cannot love God and not love our fellow men; we cannot serve God and not serve one another.

Sometimes we think that if we could get away from business cares, and household burdens, and social obligations, we could be better Christians. It seems to us, perhaps, that these duties are not favourable to spiritual culture, and that we could be holier and live more as Christ lived if we were freed from their exacting and absorbing claims. But this is a mistake. It is in these very common duties that the powers of life are best developed. God puts the new life into our hearts, but we must work it out into strength and beauty.

And there is no way to do this but by exercise. If we would develop the love of our hearts, we must love actual people; the sentiment must take practical form; the seed germ must be cultivated; and for this no mere cloister culture will do. If we would learn patience, there is no school but in experiences that require us to exercise patience. Christ said that rank among disciples is won by serving; that he who serves most is chief. We can gain this spiritual eminence only by filling our place in the midst of human needs and sufferings. The serving must be real serving of actual living people. Good feelings and dispositions of whatever kind can become part of the fibre of life only when they are wrought out in actual experience. Spiritual graces cannot be cultivated in the abstract.

These simple illustrations show that instead of being hindrances to the development of our Christian life and character, our relative duties are in the largest measure helpful. To tear ourselves out of our place among men in order to get rid of these duties is to leave whole fields of our nature uncultivated, and many of the richest possibilities of our regenerated life undeveloped. We grow best Godward when we are serving best manward in Christ's name, and for his sake.

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH.—On Monday, November 5, the friends and workers celebrated the 17th anniversary of the pastor's work in London. Short addresses were given by Rev. P. A. Milne, Mr. Bowden, Mr. Sergeant, and Rev. D. M. Cameron. It was reported that during these years between 400 and 500 person had professed faith in Christ. Many of these had been scattered to various parts of the world, and others had been called home. The tabernacle is situated in a very densely populated and poor district of London. There is need for extension of the premises, additional class-rooms, etc.

REV. R. WRIGHT HAY.

MISSIONARY TO INDIA.

The subject of this brief sketch was born at Sandhurst, Australia, in 1861. His parents were natives of Scotland, and, although born so far from the land of the heather and the bluebell, Robert Wright Hay was destined to spend the most memorable part of childhood and youth in that country which has given the Church of Christ so many of her noblest missionaries. Coming to St. Andrews, he entered the Madras College, and closing his school career at the early age of thirteen, was apprenticed to a surgeon and chemist in that city.

His father died long before the boy gave any definite promise of the future lying before him, and the mother, too, closed her eyes upon this world ere her son had seen that vision which came to Paul centuries ago as he slept by the sea at Troas, and which in all ages since has been the missionary's impulse and inspiration to service. However, even in boyish days there had been some desire for this noblest type of the consecrated life, and, although it was fitful, it probably never quite died away.

Mr. Hay is one of a large number of young men and women who cannot point to any definite time when they passed from death unto life. The victory of the Spirit was won silently, and the heart was gently opened to receive the Saviour. Imperceptibly to himself he was born again, and slowly it dawned upon his consciousness that he had become a son of God.

At the age of eighteen, we find him a student in the arts classes of Edinburgh University, and also at the Theological Hall of the Scottish Congregational Union. But for him the student's life was no blissful seclusion from the din and rush of the world, where, in "studious cloisters pale," the mind is slowly ripened for the tasks of after years. The young man was poor; and so we see him, during his four years' curriculum, spending the best part of his day as a clerk in a warehouse, close by St. Giles' Cathedral, in the historic old High-street of Edinburgh. Thus he was enabled to earn the money to pay for his attendance at the university classes. The incident is alike creditable to him and stimulating to all who have to pursue knowledge under great difficulties.

At this time he experienced a great quickening in the Divine life from the meetings held in Edinburgh by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. So deep was the impression made upon his mind by the great evangelist, that, though a professed Christian and a student for the ministry, he entered the inquiry-room as a seeker after salvation. "I felt," he says, "that Mr. Moody possessed something that I had not." In this soul-crisis he received much kindly help from the late Principal Cairns. Probably, as the doctor suggested, there was no need to doubt the reality of his previous acceptance with God. Nevertheless, this experience was a kind of reconversion, and it marks the determination of the man to find a sure anchorage for his heart and life.

Towards the close of his student days he was brought to see the scripturalness of believers' baptism, and was immersed by Rev. Dr. Landels, thereafter being generously received as a student, for the concluding session of his course, into the college of the United Presbyterian Church, under Dr. Cairns. Obedience to this simple ordinance was followed by the revival of the missionary dream of his boyhood, and an appeal for additional missionaries for China, in the columns of The Freeman, by Rev. A. G. Jones, of Shantung, led Mr. Hay to offer himself to the Baptist Missionary Society for service in that vast empire. But he was destined for another field.

At this juncture tidings reached England of the death of Rev. Quintin Thomson, of Victoria, on the West African Coast, necessitating the sending out of a new missionary. The committee approached Mr. Hay, and, having signified his readiness to go, he sailed for the Cameroons coast in April, 1884. Here he laboured for two years, with many tokens of God's presence and power, but amidst manifold discouragements and sorrows. The same year that saw him united in marriage to Miss Comber, who had for some years laboured in the West African Mission, saw him also bereaved of his brave wife by the so-often fatal fever. In August, 1884, the Cameroons country was annexed to the German Empire. Henceforth all was perturbation and uncertainty in Victoria, and the excitement amongst the people proved very unfavourable to spiritual work. At length what had been long foreseen took place; Victoria itself fell under the German flag, and the Society had to relinquish its labours, transferring them to the hands of the Basle Evangelical Missionary Society. This period was a trying apprenticeship to missionary life; an admirable lesson, too, in the always difficult task of living one day at a time.

In 1887, Mr. Hay was transferred to India, and appointed to work in the educational city of Dacca, in Eastern Bengal; and more particularly to do the duty of an evangelist among the large student community attending the Government and private schools and colleges there. At this time, also, he married Miss Wood, a devoted worker in connection with Park-road Baptist Chapel, Peckham, and, in all his evangelistic labours his wife has proved herself a most efficient helpmate.

For this special work amongst young men, Mr. Hay has several natural qualifications: a cultured and refined mind, a gift of persuasive, poetic, and tuneful speech, and a heart full of warm, loving sympathy for young men, who are beset by the intellectual and moral perils of student life. Animating and ennobling all these gifts is an ardent and passionate devotion to Jesus Christ.

Of his work in Dacca, and his influence amongst the adherents of the Brahmo Somaj, it is needless to write. Whilst on furlough in this country, many have had the privilege of hearing what the Lord has done, through his servant, in bringing to Himself some of the brightest and most promising young men in India. On two separate occasions, Mr. Hay has attended and preached in the gatherings of the East Bengal "New Dispensation" Brahmo Somaj. Hundreds of the most thoughtful and earnest men in India have listened to Scripture teaching about sin, salvation, and the new birth. The fact that a field so "great and effectual" has been opened is cause for profound gratitude. And the harvest is as sure as God Himself! For the certainty of success lies not in the sower's skill, but in the Divinity of his message. Our brethren who preach know this, and feel they cannot believe too much in its power. Their hearers know it; the recent confession of one of them, "It is Christ we want," is but the unvoiced cry of multitudes. The simple record of some of Mr. Hay's experiences would furnish a new and striking chapter in Christian evidences.

Mr. and Mrs. Hay left London last week for Dacca per ss. Pekin, and all who read these lines will heartily pray that both our friends may be "vessels," ever increasingly "meet for the Master's use," through whom He may carry the water of life to the perishing millions of the Far East.

—Adapted from Baptist Magazine.

LORD MAYOR'S DAY AT MILE END.—On Friday last, on the occasion of Lord Mayor's Day, the usual meal was given to East London poor. About two thousand guests were entertained in the Great Assembly Hall. Admission was by tickets, which had been distributed by mission workers and visitors at the homes of the poor. After the feast brief addresses were delivered by Mr. F. N. Charrington L.C.C., Captain Andrew Hamilton, and others.

DR. BAEDEKER IN RUSSIA.

Since I last wrote from Bucharest, my way has been open to enter this vast empire once more. I visited Odessa, and thence crossed the Black Sea to Batoum, and spent some days at Tiflis, Elisabetpol, Baku. At Baku, an attack of Caucasian fever seized me, and caused me to return. The prisons in the Caucasus were open to me, and I found in them great opportunities for telling out the Gospel to them that are bound. Several families of Stundists on their way into exile were in the prison in Tiflis, twenty-seven souls including women and children.

On my return by the Black Sea, and passing Yalta, near Livadia, the serious illness of the Czar caused great anxiety; the reports day by day grew worse and worse. On my return to Odessa, he was still lingering, but during my journey to Kiev he passed away, and the news of his death reached us at Kiev.

We were enabled to visit the large prisons at Odessa, at Cherson, and also at Kiev, and everywhere we found a warm welcome, not only by the prisoners, but also by the officials, who in most cases are as much shut in them as the prisoners, and to whom the Gospel is a strange sound. Without exception our way has been made plain, and the entrance of the Word has brought light and good cheer to many heavy-laden souls. From Kiev we journeyed direct to Moscow, and here we have had four days of prison work, and some 3000 souls have been brought under the sound of the Gospel, and about 2000 have received New Testaments.

We hope to leave this evening for St. Petersburg. The funeral train is expected to arrive in Moscow on Saturday; the Imperial coffin will remain here a day, and then will be taken to St. Petersburg. The city is being dressed in black, and the funeral ceremonies are to be of a grand style. My route will probably be to Finland for the Baltic provinces, until the funeral celebrations in St. Petersburg will be past. I may probably spend a few weeks yet in Russia before I recross the frontier. To-day is the first cold day. I shall value greatly the prayers of the Lord's remembrancers. F. W. Baedeker.

REVIVAL AT CLACKMANNAN.

Mr. Samuel Mackenzie, evangelist, is now in the midst of a real work of grace in this town. He was invited by a few earnest Christians to carry on a mission for a fortnight. After the first week the meeting-place was outgrown by the crowds that gathered, so that the Free Church had to be secured. The original place of meeting is now small enough for prayer-meetings and Bible readings with the young Christians. Every night there are in the Free Church large congregations of old and young.

At the close of the address on Sunday week many anxious ones, old and young, were found seeking salvation with very tears. The teachers in the Sabbath school are informing the superintendent—the newly-ordained pastor—that many of their scholars have given their hearts to Jesus, although most conversions have been among young women. The boys and girls are not being overlooked by this visitation of the Holy Spirit. Symptoms of breaking down are also appearing among the stout-hearted men.

A special feature of the mission has been the good open-air meetings; as far as man can say some have even been born again standing at the street corner. During the day the evangelist's time is mainly taken up with visiting anxious ones in their own homes at their request.

Christians have been made glad by reaping from the beginning of the Mission, and have also been quickened into increased zeal in the Lord's work. The meetings are still going on, and much lasting good is expected from the labours of God's servant. The workers earnestly ask the prayers of Christian friends. H. M. Ure.

MADRAS TAMIL MISSION.—This work among the depressed pariahs of South India has now a quarterly paper, in which detailed accounts are given of its work. The story of the Orphan Home is given. Ten more orphans have lately been admitted. The inmates are making great progress in golden and silk embroidery. The Mission needs the help of friends in disposing of the articles turned out. Communications should be made to Mr. G. J. Israel, The Madras Tamil Mission Orphan Home, Madras, South India.

THE GOSPEL IN ITALY.

The friends of the Evangelical Church of Italy in this country will be glad to know that the Missionary Circle of Milan, a body of brave young men belonging to our church in the Lombard metropolis, have penetrated with the Gospel into another stronghold of the enemy. Varese, with her 9000 inhabitants, is about fifty-five kilometres north-west of Milan, and the name still evokes much enthusiasm in the hearts of Italian patriots. It was the scene of one of the engagements of Garibaldi and his volunteers against the Austrians, from whom it was taken in 1859. The Catholics of Italy remember Varese chiefly for the much-frequented pilgrimages to the shrine of their Madonna del Sacro Monte. This "sanctuary," like all others on the northern frontiers of Italy, was erected for the worship of the Virgin Mary, as a safeguard and protection against the "invasion" of the Reformation and "heresy" into the land of the Popes.

It appears that when the Circolo Missionario went to Varese in the early part of last summer for their "treat," the company was well received by a number of the citizens, and wishes were expressed that the Circolo should come again for the purpose of holding conferences and evangelistic meetings. The desire was too good to be let drop to the ground, and the Circolo went to work with a will. God has so far blessed the undertaking that means have been found for the hiring of the hall in the Via Mazzini, which holds over 200 people.

The inauguration took place on Sunday, October 21. Many of the inhabitants came into the services of the day; some, still rather timorous, contented themselves by stopping on the threshold, whilst others lurked about, not having quite made up their mind to encounter the anathemas of the priest by a bold attitude. But this is certain: the Italians have for some time had the opportunity to see that there is another religion besides that of the priests, and what was in other days a great obstacle, is now made comparatively easy by their own doings and co-operation. In the midst of our triumphs we are not without bitter and disloyal persecution. We may be unable to bring home to the actual perpetrators their misdeeds, but we know pretty well whence they emanate. Surely it was not a friendly blade which a few weeks since, shortly before the grapes were fully ripe for gathering, cut 380 vines in a vineyard at Sondrio, thus bringing ruin and misery upon a large Roman Catholic family, only because the eldest son, the same young man about whom I wrote to you some months ago, had been converted to Christ's Gospel. To think that people were heard exclaiming how gladly they would have taken part in that destructive work! But of a certainty God will turn these things to his glory and honour, and confusion of man!

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.

A quiet and unobtrusive work is carried on by this charity. During the past twenty-five years, a large number of aged persons of both sexes, and of various denominations, have been provided with the shelter of a room rent free in their declining years. At the present time eleven houses are used for this purpose. They contain 109 rooms, occupied by 134 inmates, the eldest of whom has attained the age of ninety; two are in their ninetieth year, twenty are octogenarians, and by far the largest portion of the remainder are well on in the seventies.

That these Homes are fully appreciated is shown by the fact that the applicants waiting for admission are never less than fifty or sixty in number, and their cases are so urgent, and pitiful, that the difficulty of the committee is to select the most needy candidate for the next vacancy. The aged inmates are supplied with coal during the winter months by a separate fund.

The work has hitherto been entirely voluntary; no paid official or rent of office absorbs the funds, and the amount of comfort bestowed, for the small sum expended is in itself the strongest argument for extending the work. A great effort is being made to pay off the last mortgage debt of £500, when seven houses will be the permanent property of the charity. The other Homes are at present rented. The last report of the "Homes for the Aged Poor," and further information may be had on application to the honorary secretaries, 5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.

An interesting and influential gathering took place at Kent House, Knightsbridge, on Friday last, on behalf of Miss Child's work among the sailors in Ratcliff Highway and elsewhere. General Sir Robert Phayre, who presided, said he had known the work for a long period, and could earnestly recommend it to support.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, who said he had known Miss Child for many years, gave some interesting recollections of the heroism of Miss Child in visiting public-houses and rescuing many from their influences. Colonel MacGregor urged all present to pay the Mission a visit. He had been there many times and each time felt refreshed and strengthened in his own soul. Lady Ashburton followed with similar testimony as to the work carried on.

Miss Child then gave touching accounts of sailors who had been won for God and were now actively at work themselves. One, a Russian, after being converted, went home to tell his parents and friends the joyful news. They would not listen, but he got his younger brother to come to London with him; he too was brought into the light at the Home, and is now working for the Port Society at New York. Now the elder is determined to go to Russia and preach the Gospel there. He has been warned that he would be sent to Siberia, and he answered, "They want the Gospel in Siberia, and I will preach it to them if they send me there." Miss Child also referred to the Country Home for sick and other sailors in Epping Forest.

Captain Pitman, R.N. (Board of Trade), spoke of how the crimps years ago used to meet the ships, and get on board and rob the sailors, which is now prevented through the "Midge system."

Mr. Bloomer, one of Miss Child's helpers, spoke about the formation and work of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew," one of the results of the work. He invited the Friends to remember the "Christmas Boat," which is expected to be laden with gifts of various kinds, such as Uhlan caps, steering gloves, socks, needle cases, books, bags, and other light cargo useful for sailors, their wives or widows, and children.

Miss Macpherson drew several thrilling pictures of visits paid to Miss Child at different times. Concluding remarks were made by Rev. W. Frith, who corroborated previous testimonies by personal knowledge.

MADAGASCAR.

Dear Sir,—Madagascar has a spiritual history of Gospel faith, persecution endured to death, and again rapid, and, we suppose, solid, extension of the faith of Christ according to the Word of God, and by the grace of the Holy Spirit. This work has chiefly been through the efforts of British missionaries. Now, apparently, the French are about to take measures to bring the island under their control. As to their procedure in this being right or not, I do not enter, but it can scarcely be anticipated that their rule there will be favourable to the faith of the Gospel as we understand it, or that British missionaries will be regarded with favour by them.

Is it not a call to prayer? Could not, too, a central meeting for prayer, conducted by esteemed servants of God from various churches, be arranged for united prayer for the people of Madagascar? "The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting," and if we are now supine as to this, after so much labour and suffering, will this proverb not fit us, and shall we not be verily guilty?—Yours faithfully,

F. M.

THE MISSION TO LEPERS.

During the past week a series of meetings has been addressed in London by Mr. and Mrs. Bailey, of the Mission to Lepers in India and the East, and very deep interest has been awakened in the welfare of these poor sufferers. A large meeting was held at Clapham Hall, presided over by Rev. F. E. Middleton (principal of C.M.S. Training Institute), at which a local auxiliary was formed. The pitiable condition of the lepers, depicted by Mr. Bailey, as an eye witness, must have touched all hearts. Financially, no work could well be more economical, as £4 will maintain a child for a year, and £6 an adult leper, while for £20 a Christian teacher for an asylum can be provided. Spiritually, work among these poor outcasts is one of the most fruitful forms of missionary effort. During 1893 150 converted lepers were received by baptism into the Christian Church, while in the current year it is hoped that number will be exceeded. In the Asylum at Purulia may be witnessed the touching and beautiful sight of upwards of 150 Christian lepers partaking of the Lord's Supper.

Pressing requests to commence work in new centres are before the committee, but their answer to these must necessarily depend upon the supply of means. With a view to furthering this truly Christ-like work, the committee, whose chief centres are Dublin and Edinburgh, have taken a London office at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., to which communications and contributions may be addressed. John Jackson, Honorary Secretary for London and District.

"DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES."

A crowded meeting was held in the large Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, on Tuesday November 6, when a lecture entitled, "The 'Exceeding Bitter Cry' of Outcast Children" was given by Mr. James B. Wookey, deputation secretary of the Homes. The story Mr. Wookey told was deeply interesting and full of pathos. The musical boys, numbering over fifty, played several selections very well indeed.

This being our first opportunity of hearing one of the lectures which this able advocate of work on behalf of the outcasts is giving, we were greatly interested therein, feeling that lectures of this kind, illustrated as they are by splendid dissolving views, cannot fail to awaken general interest, and call forth many fresh friends for Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

A tour in the West of England has been arranged for Mr. Wookey, and it is hoped that he will be able to visit Penzance, St. Ives, Camborne, Redruth, Helston, Falmouth, Truro, St. Austell, Wadebridge, Bodmin, Saltash, Liskeard, Tavistock, Launceston, Wellington, Tiverton, and Bridgwater during November and December.

DEEPENING OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE meetings were held in connection with the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association, Christian Police Association, and Railway Mission, in the Montgomery Hall, and the Police Institute, Sheffield, from Nov. 2 to 6, and were the means of great blessing to many. Mr. and Mrs. Head, Captain Tottenham (of London), and Mrs. Small (sec. Police Institute, London) conducted the meetings, and the truth was set forth with great power.

BRITISH HOME FOR INCURABLES.—This Home is now completed with the exception of the chapel, which will probably be ready for opening at the end of the present month. In the new Home are forty-three in-patients, and that number will be increased by the election of candidates about to take place. There are sufficient rooms to accommodate fifty patients, and if funds are forthcoming to furnish the other rooms, there will be accommodation for seventy in-patients.

MISSIONARIES' CHILDREN.—Mrs. Harry Guinness, in the November issue of Regions Beyond, intimates the resolve to open, in connection with the East London Institute, a home for "wee bairns whose folks are far away." Again and again, request has been made for some such provision for the children of workers among the heathen; and at length the way seems open for compliance. Parents will make a payment in respect of each child, but there will be initial expenses, and while the home is small it will not be self-supporting. A very urgent need will doubtless be met by this little enterprise, which Mrs. Guinness commends to the kind interest of mothers who have the joy of caring for their own little ones.

A MISSION IN PENRITH.

A ten days' mission has been conducted by Mr. George Clarke, in Penrith, in connection with the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. Much prayer preceded the effort, and a gracious answer has been vouchsafed. Before the Mission the clergy announced that they would not take public part in it, and this provoked controversy which threatened to hinder the work. Happily, however every difficulty was overcome; the clergy entertained the missioner, and, on the sixth day, decided to actually help him.

Meanwhile the Holy Spirit had spoken to many, and a real work of grace went on. The attendance became unprecedentedly large, and while apparent results are above all that was asked, it is believed much more fruit will follow. Every Church has been quickened, and, in very blessed contrast to the lack of unity at first, the closing day was marked by a Communion service in Christ Church, in which the clergy and Nonconformist ministers united, with many of their respective congregations. About 200 persons have expressed, in writing, their gratitude to God for blessing and help received. W. H. H.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.

The full statement made in the annual report and in the last issue of Our Little Lads respecting the finances, showed that the Homes are in a critical position. The efforts to curtail expenditure have been incessant for a long time past, and continue with all vigilance. But food bills must be met, and the boys must be clothed, and unless these accounts are paid off, the good work—the result of so much loving thought, care, and labour—will be overtaken by a great disaster. Surely the subscribers, who have for thirty years carried on such a work, will not allow this dire calamity to come upon it.

A gentleman has given £3000 to a member of the committee, which sum is held in trust, and is only available for the purposes of the Homes on condition that a like sum be raised by the end of the present year, 1894. Towards this nearly £1000 has already been promised. It is earnestly hoped that the friends of the Homes will, by an equally splendid effort, place the committee in the position to claim this gift within the time specified. The secretaries are Messrs. A. E. Charles and W. Robson, 25, Holborn-viaduct, E.C.

AN IOWA ORPHANAGE.

Since 1882 an admirable institution has been in operation at Council Bluffs, Iowa, known as the Christian Home. The circumstances attending its formation and its continued progress and prosperity show that the seal of the Divine favour is upon it. One of the leading officials in a recent communication says:—

"The Orphanage is for orphan homeless and destitute children; we also have a department for the aged and afflicted. The Home is in no sense a denominational or local institution. We have already received children from twenty-five different States, and stand with open doors to receive any homeless child from any part of the earth, free of charge. We have received five English children direct from England, besides many of English descent."

ANGLO-INDIAN EVANGELISATION.—Rev. I. F. Row, of Poona, writes to The Bombay Guardian:—"The Anglo-Indian Evangelical Society has arranged with Rev. J. R. Hewison, of Allahabad, to give some days of each month to evangelistic work at small and needy stations on the railway. Mr. Hewison has already made two tours and sends most encouraging reports of the welcome he has received by many who are as 'sheep without a shepherd,' and who have been feeling that 'no man cared for their souls.'"

"UNITED EVANGELICAL PRAYER MEETING."—Delegates from over thirty Evangelical and Protestant societies invite Christians to meet together for humiliation and prayer to Almighty God. The terrible spread of many kinds and degrees of infidelity, of Romanism, Ritualism, and of indifference to fundamental truth, earnestly calls for united confession and prayer. It has been arranged that Friday, December 14, be set apart as a day of prayer. Meetings will be held at St. Martin's Hall at 11 in the morning, and 3 and 7.30 in the afternoon. The hon. secs. may be addressed, 14, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

LIGHT IN DARKNESS.

I do not dread the lonely hour,
The dull depressing winter day,
The voiceless woods, the dripping shower,
The dying year, the short'ning day,

The weariness of sleepless nights,
The restlessness of recent pain,
The long delay of dawning light,
To rouse the sleeping world again.

For in my loneliness I see,
Through the dull clouds, an azure sky,
A sunlight on that canopy,
So dark below, so light on high.

And far away in distant lands,
The brilliant day, the perfumed air,
The rippling waves on silvery strands,
Life light and summer joys are there.

All is not darkness on this earth,
All are not pressed with pain and care;
The song of praise, the voice of mirth,
The healthful life, are everywhere.

Then lift my soul my God to Thee,
Put songs of joy within my heart;
Let love and human sympathy
Their soothing, cheering, light impart.

And these dull hours shall blessings prove,
And faith, and hope, shall stronger grow.
My strength, thine arm; my joy, thy love;
Thy glory, all my light below.

HOME OF PEACE FOR THE DYING.

Last week the annual meeting in connection with this Home took place at the Portman Rooms. The report states that during the year 112 patients have been admitted. Of this number sixty-eight have died; twenty-one have been discharged, generally by their own wish, some because their condition was very much improved; and twenty-three remained in the Home at the end of 1893. The expenses for the year amounted to nearly £4000. It is hoped that in the future about 160 persons will pass through the Home each year, and that the expense of carrying on the work will be under £2500.

The chair was taken by Prebendary Webb-Peploe, and there was a large attendance. Mr. J. Langton, F.R.C.S., consulting-surgeon to Friedenheim, said that the Home had not been established to take away the proper work of the Poor-law Boards, or to take the place of general hospitals. It was supplemental to them. A great deal was due to the unremitting care of the medical officer, Dr. Lush, and to the nursing staff. Dr. Schofield said that £700 was needed to pay off the deficit of last year. Patients were received simply on their merits. Twelve patients during the past year had been sufficiently improved by their stay in the Home as to be able to leave. Dr. Russell Reynolds, F.R.S., President of the Royal College of Physicians, remarked that even when there was not extreme of misery in the houses of the poor there was too often overcrowding, noise and unrest, from which this Home was able to rescue the dying. He heartily sympathised with the work.

FAVERSHAM.—A special service was held in connection with the Home Missionary and Colportage Association. Statements were made relative to the association's work by the evangelist, Mr. Joseph Beck. With respect to the hop-garden work, the evangelist said that the wet season had been greatly against the services, and although they had not been able to do all they could have wished, much had been accomplished. At some length the evangelist described the nature of his work. During the year he held ninety-nine Gospel and other services (apart from hop-garden work), held ten open-air services, thirty-seven Bible classes, paid 1336 visits, and had given away 5735 publications.

ITALY AND THE BIBLE.—Finding in England and Scotland an impression that the attitude of the Roman Church has changed of late on the question of giving the Scriptures to the people, Rev. Aug. Meille, of Florence, has made careful inquiries throughout the kingdom. He writes: "I have ascertained that no ordinary bookseller in Italy would care to keep the Scriptures in stock, even in the Roman Catholic version, for fear of losing his customers. The Roman Church does nothing to provide the Word of God to the Italians, and the fierce, systematic opposition which colporteurs meet with at the hands of the clergy everywhere is a sure proof that the old prohibitions are strictly maintained."

OXFORD.

The Church Pastoral Aid Anniversary was held on Sunday and Monday, when Canon Knox (of Aston) and Rev. G. E. Ford (of Bristol) proved a most able deputation, and spoke from their own practical experience of the value of the Society's work. The proposed developments of the operations of the Society were specially brought forward at the meetings. Canon Knox is always welcomed in Oxford, his home for so many years, and where a host of friends are thankful for his appointment to the Bishopric of Coventry.

The anniversary meetings of the Band of Hope and Temperance Union are being held this week. The first took place on Sunday, at New-road Baptist Chapel, when the Hon. Talbot Rice, Rector of St. Peter-le-Bailey, gave an admirable address. The appearance of Mr. Rice at the chapel was warmly welcomed as a most enjoyable event amid the usual and regrettable separateness of "church and chapel" in the city.

With very deep sorrow and heartfelt regret did the news of Rev. W. A. C. Fremantle's death come to his friends in Oxford. Those who were privileged to know him will long cherish his memory as one of the most devoted of men, one to whom conversion meant immediate and full consecration, and whose life, though short, was nevertheless filled with work for God. At Barrow, Dorking, Aston, and Oxford, to say nothing of his stations in India, he will be mourned sincerely, but at the same time by hearts full of praise for the grace of God that was in him.

Mansfield House Settlement held its annual meeting on Sunday at Mansfield, when reports of work in Canning Town were presented by the Warden (Mr. P. Alden) and Mr. Tillyard. Mr. Percy Bunting also spoke.

Mr. Lang, the new vicar of St. Mary's, has recommenced the Sunday evening services for undergraduates, which were discontinued some four years ago. Large audiences have assembled each night, though it is a matter of regret that the preachers have all been drawn from one particular school of thought. Mr. Ottley, of Pusey House, spoke last Sunday on "The Fear of God" as an incentive to real life.

Mons. Fermand, of Geneva, spoke at the Y.M.C.A. last Sunday on work on the Continent. The P.S.A. continues to be exceedingly well attended, the hall being quite full every Sunday.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University sermon in Great St. Mary's on Sunday last was preached by the Rev. G. Austen, Canon of York. Sermons in the morning throughout Cambridge were preached on behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Principal Moule was unable to continue his course of Sunday Bible readings owing to indisposition. His place was taken by Mr. Montague Beauchamp, who drew many striking comparisons between Paul the Apostle and Saul the King of Israel. Mr. Beauchamp also spoke at the Alexandra Hall in the evening.

At the meeting of the C.M.U. on Friday last, Bishop Moule, of Mid-China, gave an interesting address on the work of the British and Foreign Bible Society in China. He expressed his regret that so few Cambridge men had taken part in the work of editing, and concluded by making a touching appeal to those who had literary talent. He asked the prayers of his hearers on behalf of China in its time of present danger.

A meeting of the Nonconformists' Union was held on Sunday night. Mr. Purvis, of St. John's, gave a much appreciated address on "The Seat of Authority in Religion." A lengthy discussion followed.

The supporters of the British and Foreign Bible Society (Cambridge Auxiliary) held their annual meeting in the Guildhall on Monday evening last. Mr. C. Finch-Foster, J.P., presided, the chief speakers being the Lord Lieutenant of the county, Bishop Moule, and Rev. W. Wright, D.D.

Meetings lasting half-an-hour have been held this week in several of the colleges in support of the China Inland Mission, the speakers being several missionaries

OPEN-AIR MISSION. — Notwithstanding the heavy storm which prevailed on Monday evening, a goodly company assembled in Exeter Hall at a reunion of members and friends of this Mission. Lord Kinnaird and Mr. H. W. Maynard having made some helpful remarks, an address followed from Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor on "Our Need and God's Resources." It was an inspiring deliverance, uttered with deep earnestness and illustrated by many striking anecdotes relating to the speaker's own experiences in open-air preaching.

IRISH NOTES.

A series of Pleasant Saturday Evenings for the people has been organised by Rev. Herbert Deale in Cork-street Methodist Church, Dublin, and a similar series has been arranged for by Rev. F. Simms in Bethany Presbyterian Church, Belfast.

A meeting to recall memories of the Great Revival of 1859 was held on Wednesday evening week in Percy-street Hall, Belfast, under the presidency of Rev. Henry Montgomery, and was largely attended. Several testimonials were given as to the work of grace which took place that year.

The first annual report of the Dublin Methodist Central Mission has been issued, and shows that the staff consists of eighteen workers, and that seventeen weekly meetings of various kinds are held in connection with the Mission. The cost of the year's working has been about £2000, but this amount has been met, and a balance of £165 remains in hand.

The Belfast branch of the International Bible Reading Association, whose annual meeting was held last week in Belfast under the presidency of Rev. Wm. Park, M.A., is prospering, as is evident from the fact that it has now in Belfast 5757 members and sixty-three branches, and outside Belfast 3707 in sixty-five branches, an increase for the year in Ireland of 3103 members.

A remarkable religious awakening is in progress in several districts of Belfast and the neighbourhood, including Ligoneil, where the work began with the young men in the Presbyterian Church, in the crowded district of the Shankill-road and Albert-street, where Rev. Henry Montgomery is the well-known pastor. Under these circumstances the Belfast Presbytery is about to meet this week to receive statements as to the awakening, to organise special services in suitable centres, and to try to give the movement a wider and deeper development.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Miss Catherine Miller, a nurse in Dundee Royal Infirmary, has been accepted by the Foreign Mission Board of the U.P. Church as a missionary. It is intended that she should go to Old Calabar early next spring.

The first annual report of the Methodist Mission in Glasgow has been issued. The Windsor Halls, in Great Western-road, are the home of many active agencies, such as a sisterhood, young men's and young women's guilds, Bible classes, lantern services, children's missions, temperance work, &c. Two hundred have been added to the membership during the past year.

The brief visit to Scotland of M. Charles Fermaud, of Geneva, Y.M.C.A. international secretary, has done much to create interest among Christian friends in the noble bands of young men testifying for Christ in many countries of the Continent of Europe, amid opposition and discouragement. Too little sympathy is given to those faithful witnesses, and the warm and loving words of M. Fermaud have stirred many hearts to new interest and prayer.

Rev. C. Merle-D'Aubigné has been in Scotland attending the annual meetings of the McAll Mission Auxiliaries in Edinburgh and Glasgow. His narrative of the new efforts of the Mission in open-air work, and with the "Gospel Barge" on the rivers, show the wonderful possibilities opening up in France for the workers there. Now they are anxious to add a tent and Gospel van to their other agencies. It is evident that the need of help—both workers and money—from this country is still urgent.

A hall of residence for woman students was formally opened in Glasgow on November 3 by the Lord Provost of the city. It is to be called Queen Margaret Hall, and is admirably situated between the University and Queen Margaret College. Eighteen students are already in residence, and twenty-two can be accommodated. Miss Galloway, Professor Young, and Professor Robertson commended the scheme in cordial terms to the large company assembled, who afterwards had an opportunity of going through the house.

The Scottish Temperance League celebrated its jubilee by a series of meetings and conferences in Glasgow at the beginning of this month. The Lord Provost of the city and Mrs. Bell gave a conversazione in the City Chambers to about 1500 people, when some veterans in the service were present, including Sir William Collins, Dr. Joseph Brown, Miss White, and others. Band of Hope meetings were held, and on Sunday week Principal Rainy preached the special sermon. The series concluded with an enthusiastic and large meeting in the City Hall on Monday week, presided over by Lord Overtoun. A great change for the better has passed over public opinion in Scotland since the formation of the League.

Letters to the Editor.

"BEHOLD, THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH."

Dear Sir,—I have recently been much impressed with the desirability, I may even say the necessity, of sounding forth more freely the solemn cry, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." It is a matter of great regret that the blessed doctrine and fact of our Lord's premillennial advent is so inadequately taught. Indeed, in many quarters it is, I fear, dismissed, or scouted as false, erroneous, and hurtful—the idle figment of modern apocalyptic dreamers.

The prominent position given to it in the New Testament should of itself be sufficient to warrant us in assigning it a foremost place in faith and teaching; but there are other considerations which should be allowed to have their due weight.

From personal observation, and converse with various Christians, I find a lamentable ignorance of, or indifference to, this great truth. Not one in ten of ordinary church members is, I should judge, intelligently informed upon this subject. It is well that this condition of things be reversed, for this knowledge is essential to a right understanding of the prophetical Scriptures. It is the key to unlock many a dark passage, a clue to the most intricate prophetic maze. Without it much is seen as though confused and inexplicable; but with its light most, if not all, the difficulty is swept away.

It would prove a powerful antidote to the insipid, mawkish, delusive, and soul-destroying teaching rife in many quarters to-day. The belief is held and taught publicly that the world will be converted to Christ in the present dispensation; that many forces are engaged concurrently to bring us to the destined goal; that the millennium is to be ushered in by such agencies as a purified press, etc., etc.—not by the coming of the Lord Himself. Such views encourage, rather than otherwise, looseness in doctrine, which has its evident corresponding influence upon the hearers. Many are ashamed to preach redemption by the blood of Christ, and are offended at that in which Paul gloried—the cross; and if they do not positively deny the Atonement, it is a dead letter to them. I feel almost as though I could weep rivers of tears at the dishonour done to the sacrifice of Calvary. Men nowadays do not need regeneration—there has been such a general moral uplifting of the race—only a little reformation to make them very good Christians. And so the devil laughs to see the professed servants of Christ, who are paid for better work, furthering his cause, and aiding him in accomplishing his ends. But with our eyes opened to the fact that the days immediately preceding the coming of the Son of Man will be as those before the Flood—corrupt, degenerate; as the days of Lot—gross, sensual, "perilous times"; that the leaven of error, with its vitiating influence, will spread everywhere—what watchfulness it would engender, what trying of the spirits, whereas with present-day habits of thought and teaching nothing of the sort need now be looked for. The dark ages are passed; and, even if occasional acknowledged divergences from truth are made, we must be broad-minded, charitable, and believe that error contains truth, even though we do not see it.

Look at the worldliness which flourishes in so many churches. The old wall which once separated the church from the world has been broken down, and there is no desire to rebuild it; the rather, an apology is made that it was ever erected, or allowed to stand so long. Look at the spirit of amusement which is fostered so complacently, the pandering to the tastes of a corrupt age, the thousand objectionable, or at best questionable, expedients resorted to for raising money to carry on the work of God. Look at the unholy ambition for stately and costly buildings in which to worship God, expensive organs, elaborate musical arrangements, the race for genius, or the man who can draw the crowd. Is there not in all this much of the form of godliness and a denial of its power? Let the Lord's people know that the Lord is at hand, and they will feel the hollowness, uselessness, yes, sinfulness, of much of this. Then may we reasonably hope to see them freeing themselves from complicity in these things, and seeking to prepare themselves for his coming. Then may their affections be weaned from the things of earth, and their conversation be in heaven, from whence they shall look for the Lord Jesus.

Besides, the fact that, "now is our salvation nearer than when we believed," is an urgent reason why the virgins should be awakened. The "very little while" (R.V.) may almost be expired, and, what if the Church be not aroused by the thrilling cry? Sensitive souls here and there are believing the crisis to be imminent, and who shall say that these forebodings are not of God? It is hardly to be expected that the desired watchfulness will be displayed without the faithful interpretation and application of such Scriptures as Matt. xxiv. 42-44 and Luke xii. 35, 36. What a delight, too, to our Lord to come and find us ready—waiting, watching, looking for, loving his appearing.

Many may fear that the effect of this teaching will be to lead to lives of inactivity and idle speculation. To surmise thus is to be wise above what is written. It should rather stir us up to diligence, and move us to occupy every "pound" till He come. Calvin, when urged to take his ease in his old days, replied: "My Master will soon be here, and I should like Him to find me at work." Some may say that such a dark prospect as regards the world this side of the millennium will weaken the hands of the men of war, as Jeremiah's reiterated prediction of the success of the Chaldeans was said to do in the last days of Jerusalem; but I venture to think that no true soldier of Jesus Christ will be less valiant against the common foe. Yet, even if he were, the truth of God must stand. What we should aim at chiefly is, not success, but fidelity. The worldly, temporising section of the Church are prophesying, like Jeremiah's contemporaries, the overthrow of all of the Church's enemies, and the return of the sacred vessels of blessing, without Christ's personal coming. God's faithful messengers are mocked, their words despised; they are esteemed "fossils," as I heard a Christian lady term an eminent and respected minister of Christ some time ago. Their preaching might have done for the days of our grandfathers, but not for these enlightened times.

Surely, as we foresee the judgments impending—even now ready to burst upon the world—we ought, as Enoch in the dark and evil days preceding the judgment of the flood, to declare, "Behold, the Lord cometh," not only for his saints, but with them, to execute judgment upon all the ungodly.

Some of us hardly dare open our mouths in some places on this tremendous subject; but there are those who have perfect liberty so to do. Let them, without wearying, raise and sustain the cry, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh."—Yours faithfully,

Bristol. J. M.

"BELIEVERS IN A DILEMMA."

Dear Sir,—May I say a few words to your correspondent "Out in the Cold"? And, first, that the Lord never leaves his own "out in the cold," but they sometimes fail to see and to avail themselves of the ample provision He has made for all their wants. The two or three gathered in simplicity and independence "unto his Name" have the promise of his presence; and, having that, what else can be lacking?

There is no need, under the described circumstances, for believers who are joined to the Lord to join themselves to any denomination. Not forsaking the assembling of themselves together, outside the camp they can read, and pray, and praise, and remember Him in the breaking of bread, and He will prove Himself one of their little company. They may be without gifts for ministry, but these also the Holy Spirit can give, if we stir up the gift or recognise it when given.—Yours, J. G. Halliday.

TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.

Dear Sir,—Among the various phases of the temperance question appropriate for topics for temperance sermons, may we ask your numerous ministerial readers to give the Sunday closing of public-houses their consideration, and a prominent place in their discourses on November 25? There are few legislative proposals which bear more directly upon the work of the Christian minister in relation to the unhappy victims of drink than that for stopping the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday.

We shall be glad to send papers upon any special aspect of the subject about which preachers may desire information.

On behalf of the committee of the Central Association for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicants on Sunday.—Yours faithfully, J. Woodford Causer, Sec.

14, Brown-street, Manchester.

OUR BOYS.

Sir,—Having for ten years or more given much time and thought to boys, youths, and young men, I can heartily endorse all that "A Worker" says. Many a youth has said to me, "Oh, sir, if my parents had only told me the wrong there was in this, I should have desisted at once." But out of hundreds of cases that I have had to deal with, I have only met with two whose parents had spoken to them on the subject of impurity. Surely if anyone is fitted for a task so delicate and important it is the fathers, or, better still, the mothers.

I wish also that doctors and ministers would deal more honestly with our boys and youths. I know from experience how hard the duty is, but surely a true soldier of the Master will not shrink from doing his duty; and I also know how great the joy is when a lad is saved at the starting in life from impurity, or a young man is helped out of the mire into which he had sunk.

I trust that the fathers and mothers who read these lines will speak the words that many a lad is longing to hear—so that he can tell them all that is in his heart. Another Worker.

REVIEWS.

From the "Irish Congregational Magazine."

"'The Bells of Is'" is in one sense an autobiography. Yet it is not. It is like reading some of the most interesting chapters in the Acts of the Apostles. You forget the man, because the Master is so conspicuous. Hitherto we have known Mr. Meyer only as a sweet loving expounder of the word of God; more especially as it relates to the higher Christian life. In this volume we see him as the social reformer, philanthropist, a clear-headed man of business, and over and above all a brother and friend to the most degraded. The book is not only fascinating, but also an inspiration and an encouragement to every earnest Christian worker. It contains not only interesting stories charmingly told—we have here also Mr. Meyer's opinions regarding prisons, the temperance movement, the army, and many other questions of great public interest."

From "The Quiver."

"'The Bells of Is' are the subject of Breton legend, but it is of subjects nearer home and of greater moment that the Rev. F. B. Meyer writes under this title. He uses the legendary music of the lost bells, only to be heard in the swirl and surge of the great storm-waves, as an illustration of the 'voices of human need and sorrow' crying for better things from the depths of the 'submerged tenth' in sin and poverty. And in this pleasing volume, Mr. Meyer shows how he has endeavoured to point to the one and only sufficient answer to these voices."

From "The Independent."

"A perusal of the story of Mr. Meyer's work among tramps, gaol-birds, drunkards, and gamblers, as well as among the unemployed, the unfortunate, and the lower classes, will strike a chord of humanity in every reader's heart. 'The Bells of Is' is a chronicle, and an exceptionally delightful chronicle, of the methods adopted and the results achieved."

PREFACE.

JEREMIAH has always a fascination to Christian hearts, because of the close similarity that exists between his life and that of Jesus Christ. Each of them was "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief"; each came to his own, and his own received him not; each passed through hours of rejection, desolation, and forsakenness. And in Jeremiah we may see beaten out into detail, experiences which, in our Lord, are but lightly touched on by the evangelists.

It is by no means an easy task to discern the true order of Jeremiah's prophecies. The clue to their present arrangement seems lost. Probably the chapters are grouped more according to subject than to chronology, those touching on the same topic being grouped together. In this book I have endeavoured, as far as possible, to follow the chronological sequence.

There is an especial message in the ministry of Jeremiah for those who are compelled to stand alone, who fall into the ground to die, who fill up what is behind of the sufferings of Christ, and through death arise to bear fruit in the great world of men, which they passionately love.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Miss Lilian Smith has left for Tangier for work amongst Jews and Mohammedans, and Miss C. Josephine Smith is on her way to China.

Hon. Emily Kinnaird, last week, addressed Y.W.C.A. meetings in Arbroath and Frockheim, dealing specially with work for women in India.

A two days' conference of workers in Kent and the adjoining counties was held at Tunbridge Wells, when the Hon. E. Kinnaird, Miss Macleod, Miss Morley, and others gave addresses.

Meetings specially to pray for funds for Y.W.C.A. work, were held at the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, when Mrs. F. A. Bevan and Miss Denny presided. There was a fair attendance.

The annual conference of the Scottish Division was held last Friday and Saturday at the Y.W.C.A. Hall, 33, Tay-street, Dundee. Mrs. Ogilvy Dalgleish, Miss Hay, and Hon. G. Kinnaird were among those who presided.

Lectures on "Fire-side Sight-seeing," "Pictorial London," and "Lessons we do not Learn at School," are being given at several London centres by Miss Graham. The lectures are made simple and interesting, and are well attended.

The Bristol Association has opened a new City branch. The building, which is to be called Victoria House, was dedicated to the service of God, for work among the young women of Bristol. At the first social evening over 150 were present. The hon. sec. is Miss J. Butlin.

Under the auspices of the Blackburn Y.W.C.A., a missionary lecture, illustrated by limelight views, was delivered by Dr. Harry Guinness, in the Town Hall, on October 29. The lecture was listened to with interest by about 1200 persons, and much increased sympathy and prayer for the heathen will be the result. On the following evening Dr. Guinness addressed members of the Regions Beyond Helpers' Union, and friends on the practical working of the Union.

The rooms of the Campbeltown Institute were filled to overflowing at a meeting to take leave of two of their members, the Misses Colville, who have decided to devote their lives and means to Zenana work in India. Mrs. Peter Mackinnon occupied the chair, and an address was given by the Hon. E. Kinnaird. The sixteenth annual social meeting was held in the new hall, Lochend. Miss N. Muir, secretary, gave a cheering report, and addresses were given by Mrs. Mackinnon, Miss Kinnaird, and Miss Love.

The Sunday afternoon Bible Class at the Central Institute has an average attendance of 130. After the class over 100 usually stay to tea, and a happy social hour is closed with bright singing. The total number of members is 923, viz., associates 620, Prayer Union members 240, and hon. associates 63. From October, 1893, to 1894, 379 new members joined. Total abstainers 360, active working members 70. The attendance at the Thursday Bible Class averages 80 to 100, and at the mission services 150 to 200. The resident superintendent, Miss Wilmot, will extend a warm welcome to any strangers.

The Brixton branch held, on the 7th inst., their thirteenth anniversary. Rev. N. A. Garland presided, and gave a bright opening speech. The report told of steady work and definite blessing, and of fresh efforts put forth during the year to win outsiders, undertaken by the Christian members. Miss Morley spoke especially of the association in general, that it embraces almost every country, and is working among all classes of young women, that it was started with prayer, and in the power of prayer is still carried on. Rev. J. Carnegie Brown spoke of his interest in the work, his mother for many years having worked in a branch of the association. Rev. Fuller Gooch gave a few words to Christian workers on the initials Y.W.C.A. There was a large attendance and a good collection at the close. The hon. sec. is M. E. Garrett, 6, Tunstall-road, S.W.

BERMONDSEY.—The desirability of having a monthly convention address on the deepening of spiritual life in this large and populous district of South London has been much felt, and the vicar of St. Crispin's, Rev. J. Wallace, has succeeded in making the necessary arrangements. Rev. Evan H. Hopkins will give the introductory address on Tuesday, November 20, at eight o'clock, in the St. Crispin's Mission Hall, Cherry Garden-street.

SHEFFIELD.—Mr. W. Forbes has concluded a series of meetings at the Workmen's Mission, which is the result of the P.S.A., commenced fourteen years ago. The earlier meetings were devoted to Christians, Mr. Forbes giving addresses on the duties and privileges of those who had given themselves to Christ. The Gospel Temperance meetings which followed were very successful. Men and women were converted to Christ both Sabbaths he was with us. A. S. O. Birch.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Y.M.C.A. Bulletin, issued by the Finsbury Park Association, is a model Y.M.C.A. local, indeed already some secretaries have observed this and have localised it their own district.

The Leeds Association having taken great pains to stir the clergy and ministers announces some sixty special sermons to be delivered to young men in various churches and chapels in Leeds.

The Wolverhampton Association reports 300 members, and great interest and vigour in the spiritual, educational, and other operations. The appointment of Mr. J. A. Roxburgh as secretary has already justified itself.

God is greatly blessing the earnest work of members of the Sheffield Association in the lodging houses. At the recent monthly reunion a Bible reading on "Christ's Indwelling," was followed by testimony to the power of the Gospel in the common kitchens.

Steine House Magazine, Brighton, says: "The evangelistic meetings continue to be most encouraging. The Bible class, the Sunday night meeting, the Wednesday song service, and the Friday preparation class have each increased as to numbers and deepened interest."

Mr. E. L. Bennett, secretary at Northampton, has been appointed to the general secretaryship at Plymouth in succession to Mr. S. Y. Ormerod, who has gone to Southport. Mr. Bennett is an old member of the Plymouth Association, in which he will find a good and growing work ready to his hands.

The general committee of the Bristol Association have secured the People's Palace in Baldwin-street, for four Sunday evenings, commencing on the 18th, to hold bright Gospel meetings, hoping thereby to attract many of those who throng the streets during the hours of service on Sunday evenings. Mr. Ned Wright will conduct the first meeting.

This week is being observed all over the world as a time of special prayer for young men and on behalf of Y.M.C.A. work. Special meetings have been arranged, amongst these many united meetings designed to bring different associations together, and great things are expected. Our readers will many of them unite in this wave of prayer for our young men.

The large hall of the Manchester Y.M.C.A. was quite crowded last week by members and friends for the annual distribution of religious, athletic, and educational prizes. Mr. Herbert Philips, president for twenty-two years (who still remains a member of the committee), introduced Mr. W. J. Crossley as his successor to the presidential chair, and they both delivered earnest addresses.

Mr. Waynman Dixon, an old friend of the Y.M.C.A., has just taken the chairmanship of the Middlesbrough Association. The work here has been in low water for several years; but new life has recently been infused into it by the efforts of the National Council officers, and under Mr. Dixon's pilotage the committee feel confident of being able to do substantial work. The need of a good Association in Middlesbrough is very great.

The secretary of the Jaffa Association writes:—"The work is progressing. We have sixteen members at present, and two more are expected to join us soon. We have started a night school for teaching the young men English, Arabic, French, and Turkish twice a week at present, Tuesday and Thursday. I hope a good many will attend. We begin our meetings with prayer, and close with reading a portion of the Word of God and prayer."

Mr. S. C. Hatch, of Blackheath, speaking at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. on Sunday afternoon, made feeling allusion to the recent death of his daughter, Dr. Jessie Hatch, whose premature home-call has excited such widespread regret. Her heart, he said, had long been set upon the work of a medical missionary, and when she became the recipient of the highest honours of the University of London, the determination to spend and be spent in the Master's service was rather stimulated than weakened.

The half-yearly conference of the Manchester Y.M.C.A. district was held in the new building of the Radcliffe Y.M.C.A., on the 7th inst., when a large number of delegates attended from the various Y.M.C.A.'s in the district. The district secretary (Mr. W. H. Newett) called the roll, reported the recent Jubilee Conference in London, and referred to the visit in the district of Mons. Fermaud, of Geneva, International secretary. The subject of "Association Finance" was opened by Mr. F. Crowder, followed by discussion.

An interesting series of four lectures on Biblical criticism are announced to commence at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Thursday, November 22, at 8 p.m., by Rev. Henry E. James Bevan, B.D., Gresham Lecturer on Divinity. The first of the series is on "The History of the Canon." The lectures will be continued weekly on Thursday evenings at the same hour. They comprise: "The History of the Text of the Holy Scriptures," "History of the English Bible," and "The Authenticity and Genuineness of the Fourth Gospel." An opportunity for questions will be given at the close of each lecture.

The work of the West Metropolitan branch, in Savile-row, Regent-street, was for many years a most active one, and was manifestly much honoured of God. But from the time of the opening of Exeter Hall, the scope of its operations has been much limited, and it is now contemplated to relinquish the old premises. Burlington Hall, at the end of the year, to take smaller ones and to confine the work to such departments as are not adequately supplied for that locality by the comprehensive provision at Exeter Hall. Mr. James Pearce, who has been connected with the branch for forty years, and was secretary of it for thirty, has for the time being resumed oversight of the work.

At the close of a mission held two years ago by Messrs. Crawford and Boyle, Irish Evangelisation Society, in Omagh, co. Tyrone, a Young Men's Christian Union was formed. The objects of the Union were similar to that of the Young Men's Christian Association, to conserve and foster the spiritual life of the young men who had been converted during the mission, and to band them together for Christian work. Since February, 1892, a weekly meeting has been sustained, and cottage meetings for the preaching of the Gospel, conducted on Sunday evenings in various parts of the town. Now that another society bearing the name of the Young Men's Christian Association has dissolved, it is proposed to alter the name of the Society from Young Men's Christian Union to Y.M.C.A., and Wm. Robert McCann, travelling secretary of Y.M.C.A.'s in Ireland, attended as a deputation from the National Council, and explained the advantages of united action, when it was resolved to affiliate the society with the Irish Union. It is hoped that very soon other developments may be undertaken, and Omagh provided with a safe resort for the young men of this thriving northern town.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The C.E. Society at Stansted have held a united and profitable meeting.

Effective temperance work is carried on by the union at Wichita, Kan.

The High Wycombe Endeavourers celebrated their anniversary with some good services.

The annual State meeting at Lincoln, Neb., was attended by about 500 or 600 young people, while the principal addresses and the closing consecration meeting were crowded.

As a means of securing a more careful reading of the message, an Australian society makes written copies of the tracts that it distributes, giving them the form of a letter to those that receive them.

A "united rally" of the Northampton C.E. Union was held in the Congregational Church, Rushden. Rev. W. Fidler presided, and the speakers included Revs. W. J. Tomkins, M. M. Thomson, and M. E. Parkin.

At the Vermont Convention every union in the State was represented, and the reports showed that they were doing excellent missionary work. One of them supports two young ladies from Mr. Moody's school, who are engaged in evangelistic work in the country.

The third annual Convention of the Chester and District Union was held in the Queen-street Chapel, Chester. Mr. J. T. Partington gave an address on "Christian Endeavour in Theory and in Practice." "Junior Society Methods," and "Faithfulness in Committee Work," were also considered. The secretary's report showed that there were now in the Union twenty-four Young People's Societies and five Junior Societies.

THE SECULARISATION OF THE CHURCH is a matter of notoriety (says Mr. W. J. Orsman in his Occasional Notes). On examining the 245 applications to the London County Council for stage plays, music and dancing licences, we find side by side with variety theatres, music-halls, and public-houses, applications from the Rev. — So-and-So for similar licences for St. Anne's, St. John's, St. Lawrence, St. Luke's, St. Peter's, St. Mary's, &c., parish, parochial, and mission rooms.

PAPERS FOR INDIA.—If Christian friends in England or elsewhere will kindly send their unused papers to Mrs. J. C. Lawson, American Methodist Mission, Aligarh, India, they will be conferring a great boon on the English-speaking community, and especially on the British soldiers. A number of friends in India give much time to distributing religious papers where needed. The papers or magazines received will be given out all over India to those directly engaged in this work. Only really Christian papers are desired. These can be sent in large rolls, thereby saving postage. If the senders' name and address be given, an acknowledgement of the receipt of papers will be sent.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Our Boys and Girls, the annual volume of a bright little monthly, will delight little folks, the pictures and letterpress being both very good. (1s. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Union.)

Sunshine, the excellent monthly "for the home, the school, and the world," edited so long by the late Dr. Whittemore, has a brilliant pictorial cover. Its contents are as varied and helpful as ever. May they diffuse sunshine into many a humble home. (George Stoneman.)

The Illustrated Temperance Monthly (1s. 6d.); The Young Crusader (1s.).—These volumes of the two temperance serials of the Church of England Temperance Society (4, The Sanctuary, Westminster), ought to provide "powder and shot" for the warfare with the drink through many months to come.

The Quiver, Vol. 1894. (Cassell & Co. 7s. 6d.) The wide acceptance so deservedly gained by this monthly magazine makes it scarcely necessary to do more than mention the issue of the annual volume. Its beautiful illustrations, readable and varied contents, at once entertaining, bright and informative, render it a handsome and pleasing gift. There are few family circles which will not find in these 950 pages something for every member.

NOVEMBER MAGAZINES.

All the World (6d. 101, Queen Victoria-street) is conducted by its lady editors with great ability. Its stirring stories of the Salvation war and fiery exhortations are calculated to awaken inspiration. Graphic illustration is a strong feature. The current number has portraits of Commissioner Lucy Booth and her husband, with an account of the recent wedding.

The Century Magazine (1s. 4d.) and St. Nicholas (1s.) are the opening parts of a new volume. In the former is begun a new life of the Great Napoleon. The magazine generally maintains its high standard in art and literature. An article of special interest is "Chinese Work and Life" in Canton. St. Nicholas has some lovely drawings of the Queen's favourite dogs, articles on William Cullen Bryant, "seals," "golf," etc., besides an ample store of pictorial humour. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

That old-established favourite, The Sunday at Home, begins a new series, with a bold fresh cover, and a strong bill of contents. Among the contributors are Rev. P. B. Power, Dr. S. G. Green, Miss E. B. Bayley, Mr. Scott Moncrieff, and others. The Leisure Hour also begins a new volume, and retains all the features which have made its reputation as a repertoire of improving literature. The Girl's Own Paper continues to cater admirably, and with fresh enterprise, for its important constituency. The Boy's Own is an excellent counterpart, some "old boys" still being charmed and instructed by its pages. (Religious Tract Society.)

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

Rosy Mite; or, The Witch's Spell, by V. P. Jelihovsky (Truslove & Hanson, 143, Oxford-street), is a quaintly-told and ingenious fairy tale, which will find favour with the small people, and will also implant some helpful lessons in their minds. The illustrations by T. Pym are clever. Little Chummies, edited by Mr. F. Sherlock ("Church Monthly" Office), is a splendid collection of "pictures and rhymes for happy times." It will need all the long winter evenings to exhaust its cheery contents. Leading Strings (1s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.) is an attractive collection of short pieces for nursery perusal, with plenty of pictures sandwiched between the poems and stories. Parables and Sketches, by A. E. Knight. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) In parabolic form the clever artist-author of this well-printed and well-illustrated little book conveys to young readers a great mass of information on different aspects of natural life, as well as on higher branches of knowledge and human responsibility.

---

A Practical Guide to the Parish Councils Act, 1894, is a well-arranged handbook, compiled by A. H. Graham and Spencer Brodhurst, barristers-at-law. (1s. Ward, Lock, & Bowden.)

A new and cheaper edition has been issued of Poems by Wm. Leighton (Elliot Stock). He was a sweet singer, taking a hopeful view of life's mysteries, and pointing to Him who is the fount and inspiration of all true song.

Bond of Brotherhood is a new monthly, edited by Dr. Evans Darby. It is devoted to the cause of peace, and serves as the organ of the Society for Recognition of the Brotherhood of Man. (1d. Office, 47, New Broad-street, E.C.)

Engineers and their Triumphs, by F. M. Holmes, tells the story of the locomotive and the steamship, and describes some of the wonders of bridge and tunnel-making. The language is untechnical, and there are excellent illustrations. (1s. 6d. Partridge.)

Mona, the Fisher Girl, by Henrietta S. Streatfeild, is a Cornish story from the pen of one who always aims at showing young people the beauty of true religion, and the necessity of following Christ at all costs. We trust the pages will have many readers. (1s. Nisbet & Co.)

Cottage Gardening (Cassell & Co.) has reached its fourth half-yearly volume. We can but marvel at the fulness, variety, and excellence of its information on points relating not only to the garden but to the house. The industrious housewife will find it a domestic companion beyond price.

The Wild-Catters, a tale of the Pennsylvanian Oilfields, by C. J. Cutcliffe Hyne, is a book which boys will read with special zest. A wild-catter is a prospector who goes to a new region and sinks a well on the "off-chance" of striking oil; and this story shows, first, how some such bold adventurers fared, and, then, what success they achieved. (2s. 6d. Sunday School Union.)

Miss Annie Swan, in the midst of her many absorbing editorial and other duties, has found time to write a little story called Airlie's Mission (1s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier), which deserves the attention of young Christians, especially any who are not gifted with the graces of self-denial and self-sacrifice. The missionary element is the dominant one in the narrative.

The Comprehensive Scripture Lesson Scheme, edited by Rev. Charles Neil, M.A., is being gradually developed. The latest additions to the "Teacher's Classified Lesson-Material" department are: The Books of Joshua and Judges, by Rev. F. Meyrick, M.A., and the First Book of Samuel, by Rev. M. E. W. Johnson, A.K.C. (2s. each.) The former volume includes the Book of Ruth, edited by Rev. T. P. Stevens. (Nisbet & Co.)

Dissolving Views of Spanish Affairs, by Rev. Wm. Moore, D.D., Principal of the Training College, Puerto S. Maria, is a pamphlet giving a large amount of information on commercial, political, social, and religious aspects of life in Spain. In a prefatory note by Rev. Dr. Mathews, of the Presbyterian Alliance, kind reference is made to Dr. Moore's work in furtherance of Spanish evangelisation. (Tract & Book Society, 95, George-street, Edinburgh.)

The Fall of Athens: A Story of the Peloponnesian War. By Rev. A. J. Church, M.A. (5s Seeley & Co.) Another work from the pen of a ready writer in the line of historical fiction. Artistic illustrations embellish the book, and foot-notes assist the reader to understand the significance of some of the situations introduced. Intelligent young people will enjoy the work, and their elders may rely upon being interested and instructed by its perusal.

A New Year's Eve is the title of a little book, translated by C. P. Kuntz from the French (Un Réveillon) of Ad. Schaeffer, Pastor at Colmar, Alsace. Several students, separated from one another during many years, occasionally entered their changing views and experiences in a diary. At length all were read and compared, and although the facts and opinions expressed are very mixed, they convey important lessons, and suggest profitable reflections. (Elliot Stock.)

Forts of Darkness and Soldiers of Light, a Missionary Book for Boys and Girls, is the fourth Christmas volume issued by the Church Missionary Society. In twelve chapters, for the most part written by missionaries, distant lands are described, and an account is given of efforts to evangelise their benighted millions. Mr. Eugene Stock, in a brief preface, invites young readers to have a share in sustaining the hands of the "soldiers of light." This is a very interesting book, fully illustrated. (1s. 6d. C.M.S. House, Salisbury-square.)

Songs in Prison. By Alfred S. Dyer. (Dyer Brothers.) These heartfelt breathings of a trustful consecrated spirit are enhanced in value by reason of the circumstances in which many of them were written. The circumstances are explained by the author in a prefatory statement, which will help the sympathetic reader the better to appreciate the truth, so patent in every stanza, that Jesus Christ is a blessed bright reality in times of soul stress to those who walk by faith. The portraits given will be welcome to all interested in the anti-opium struggle.

Kensington Palace, in the days of Queen Mary II., is a capital story, by Emma Marshall. Giving due weight to letters and memoirs that have only recently been collected and edited, the talented author has represented the Queen of William of Orange in a more favourable light than she has usually been depicted, bringing out her ability, courage, and patience as they were displayed in peculiarly trying times. The imaginary characters that fill up the canvas are entertaining, and help considerably in the illustration of Court and society life in England two centuries ago. (5s. Seeley & Co.)

First Things First: Addresses to Young Men. By Rev. George Jackson. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) These vigorous practical discourses are an index to the thoroughly live ministry which Mr. Jackson exercises in the Edinburgh community. While sound in the faith, he is quite abreast of the many problems that demand solution in these days of universal questioning and testing. Christ and Christianity have in him an able, courteous, and fearless advocate. To young men who crave for certainty in belief and for backbone in action we heartily commend these weighty and convincing counsels.

Indian and Singhalese Missionary Pictures is the title of a very attractive quarto volume (2s. 6d.) issued from the Baptist Mission House. It contains upwards of a hundred pictures, mostly reproduced from photographs, and accompanied by descriptive articles. The pictures illustrate—first, India, the country and the people; secondly, the various phases of mission work, preaching and Bible translation, school and medical effort; thirdly, life and work in Ceylon. Edited by Rev. Dr. Rouse, of Calcutta, this is a model of what such a book should be, the paper and print being also excellent. Young people whose hearts have been drawn out on the subject will be delighted with such a handsome presentation volume, while those who would learn something of India's needs and Christian endeavours to supply them may well begin their study with this publication.

Dr. J. R. Miller's books on the Christian life are among the choicest productions of their kind in the present day. British publishers vie with each other in their dissemination—much to the advantage of the reading community. It is a hopeful index of current taste that such uplifting and richly spiritual writings are so popular. The Sunday School Union sends one that should be in every Christian household—The Perfect Home. The parts to be played by husband and wife, parent and child, are treated with great plainness and sanctified skill. We commend the book as an invaluable wedding gift. Another charming emanation from the same heart and pen is In His Steps—a book for young Christians setting out to follow Christ. (1s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) We give an extract on page 16, which affords a taste of its quality. Evangelists and pastors ought to circulate it freely among young believers.

His Star and Vesper Bells, by Henry Putman, is a booklet of verses, sublime in topic, and choice in expression (Allenson).

The "Home Words" Publishing Office is about to issue a series of tales at a popular price, under the title of "Home Words Tales for All Readers."

Cards and Wall Texts. A choice selection of Christmas cards, calendars, and wall texts are issued by J. E. Hawkins & Co. The former are artistically attractive, and have appropriate Scripture mottoes. A series of six text cards, 22in. by 9in., are beautiful specimens of the illuminator's art. The price is 3s. per packet.

Our Praise is a thoughtful booklet by J. Forbes Monecrieff, discussing the question of Musical Performances as True Praise, and protesting against praise by proxy. In view of prevalent degeneration from the Scriptural ideal these pages should perform a useful ministry. (1d. Andrew Stevenson, 9, North Bank-street, Edinburgh.)

A fourth packet of the "Weston Series" of booklets by Rev. Arthur Finlayson, has been issued from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, asking the following straight questions: "Are You Weary?" "Are You Wandering?" "Are You Wealthy?" "Are You a Worshipper?" The last of these deals with some of the assumptions of agnosticism. (Packets of twelve assorted, 6d.)

Mr. Worthy Punter, Wesleyan Naval Scripture reader, 27, Pembroke-road, Portsmouth, has written An Open Letter to our Soldiers and Sailors. It contains some startling facts on immorality in the Services, and presents moral appeals and Scripture counsels relating to social purity. We trust the leaflet will have a large circulation. (From the Author. 10d. per 100, post free.)

PAMPHLETS.

"The Life of God," by the late Bishop Phillips Brooks (6d. H. R. Allenson), is an address to business men, full of strong and simple teaching, earnestly expressed. Two pamphlets by Rev. Dr. D. V. Lucas (6d. each. C. H. Kelly) are worthy of high commendation: "Wine, Bad and Good, is a clear and well-considered utterance on an ever-pressing problem; "Others" is a weighty exposition of Christian altruism. "The Land and the Employed," by Harold E. Moore (6d. Nisbet & Co.), is a timely and practical contribution to the discussion of a great subject.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Joseph Olphert, well known for his work at St. John's Wood, has been compelled to take a long rest. He sails to-day for New Zealand.

Dr. Talmage, it is reported, has resigned his pastorate of the Brooklyn Tabernacle. He is said to be anxious to enter a new field of evangelical work.

Rev. W. Meille, of the Waldensian Church in Italy, has retired from the active ministry. He will hold himself ready to serve the Church in future as far as health may permit.

Rev. Marshall C. Vincent has resigned the living of Bracewell, Yorkshire, in order to reside upon his estate, South Hill, near Nenagh, co. Tipperary. The Bishop of Killaloe is giving Mr. Vincent a general licence for the diocese.

Miss Recketts, when she sailed for China a few days ago, had her arm in a sling. This, it was understood, was caused a short time previously by an accident in Clapham Church Hall. While Miss Recketts was speaking she lost her balance and fell.

Pastor Charles Spurgeon has announced, in response to an urgent appeal that he should withdraw his resignation of the pastorate of South-street Chapel, Greenwich, that, owing to the orders of his medical man, he is unable to do so. He intends leaving for Cape Town on December 1.

Professor Geymonat, of the Florence College of the Waldensian Church in Italy, President of the Synod for the current year, has been nominated a Knight of the Order of S. Maurizio e Lazzaro. This is another evidence of the benevolent interest of King Humbert in the Evangelical movement in Italy.

Miss Abbie P. Ferguson, for twenty years Principal of the Huguenot Ladies' Seminary at Wellington, who has been enabled to do a remarkable work in training the daughters of South Africa to devote their lives to God's service, is on her way to America for a year's visit, to give an account of work in South Africa.

Rev. A. and Mrs. Ben-Oliel arrived in Jerusalem on October 15. Christian workers and other friends welcomed them back with great cordiality. The Jews among whom Mr. and Mrs. Ben-Oliel labour have also shown a kindly interest in their journeyings in the Old and New World, undertaken on behalf of evangelistic work in the Holy City.

Mr. J. M. Goodchild, travelling secretary of the North-East Metropolitan District Union of the Y.M.C.A., has been ill for the last month, we regret to learn. The doctor enjoins a period of absolute rest, and even hints at the possibility of a permanent inability to take public meetings. Our brother may be assured of the sympathy of all who know him.

Mr. Levi P. Morton, who has been elected Governor of New York State, is in every way a representative American. The son of a Congregational preacher of Puritan descent, he was born in a small town of Vermont, beginning life in a home where comforts were few and luxuries unknown. He was never ashamed of his early poverty; indeed, when he built a magnificent structure in Washington, he called it "Shoreham," after the little frame house in Vermont where he was born. When he reaches the Senate, the once poor child of a Congregational parson in New England will have received from the people every office in their gift save that of President.

SHREWSBURY PRISON.—The Commissioners of the Shrewsbury Prison have granted the chaplain several copies of "Betting and Gambling" and also of "Forbidden Fruit for Young Men," by Major Seton Churchill, for the prison library. A copy of the former is to be placed in the cell of every prisoner committed for racecourse offences, and the latter book to be utilised for young men committed for indecent assault. A copy also of a good temperance book is to be placed in the cell of those admitted for crimes connected with drink.

THE GIRLS' MISSION, WINDMILL-LANE, STRATFORD, E., seeks to benefit, spiritually and morally, young girls employed in the factories of East London. The work provides a place to which girls can resort, partaking more of the nature of home than a club. There is a working party, a singing class, also Gospel services, Bible classes, library, etc., all conducted by voluntary workers. The twenty-first annual report says:—"There are many evidences that real and lasting good has been achieved. The Bible class has been well attended, the attendance at religious services increased, and testimony received again and again from 'old girls,' now mothers, of the benefits they received from the work." One great drawback has been the difficulty in securing suitable and sufficient help. Through the continued illness of Mrs. Dowding Sansom, some efforts have been relaxed and meetings temporarily given up. Mr. Dowding Sansom will gladly supply further information, and welcome any who may feel disposed to render personal help. His address is, Hazelmere, Atherton-road, Forest Gate, E.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Moody has been holding a mission at Birmingham, Ala., with enormous crowds in attendance, and much blessing on the preaching of the Gospel.

Wandsworth.—Rev. Arthur and Mrs. Williams, of Earlsfield-road Church, have been holding a special mission at Bethshan, Leeds, and great blessing has been granted.

Guernsey.—Mr. James Sprunt, of Dauntless Hall, Lisson-grove, London, has been giving addresses in Bordage Meeting Rooms, on the Lord's coming, as well as declaring the Gospel of God's grace. Many Christians from various places were much helped, and rejoiced in the truth.

Broxburn, N.B.—Mr. J. A. Smith has conducted a three weeks' mission in the Free Church here, with many tokens of blessing. On the Saturday evening testimony meetings were held, when many of the older Christians testified as to the blessing received, and young converts confessed Christ.

Dr. L. W. Munhall recently closed a three weeks' mission in Danbury, Conn., a city of 20,000 inhabitants. God greatly honoured the faith of the Christians and the testimony of the evangelist. The closing meetings were full of jubilation, and a large company of those who had professed decision listened to the final exhortations of God's servant. Mr. Birch led the service of song.

Mr. W. Monro Collings, of Gosport, has concluded a month's mission at the Tolbooth Hall, Glasgow. The services were well attended from the first. Many have professed faith in Christ, and the workers have been strengthened to go forward in aggressive work for their Lord in this needy part of the City. On Sunday last Mr. Collings began a mission at Leigh, Tonbridge, Kent, for which prayer is asked.

Field Lane.—Last week a successful Gospel Temperance Mission was held in connection with the Gospel Temperance Society at the Field-lane Institution, Clerkenwell-road, conducted by Mr. E. Stanley Tape. The main effort was devoted to the Gospel; many souls were won for Christ, and those already his were strengthened. The mission closed on Saturday with a most enthusiastic meeting, when many pledges were taken.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman has closed a successful two-weeks united mission in Terre Haute, Indiana. This city has about forty thousand inhabitants. Dr. Chapman started about the first of October in a large tent, with meetings in various churches and in the Opera House. At night the crowds would gather in the tent and fill it to overflowing. The middle classes were reached to a most wonderful degree. Since the meetings have closed the churches have opened their doors, and have been holding special meetings. On Tuesday, October 16, the business houses were requested to close, and it was made a day of prayer. Closing was universal. Prayer-meetings were held in all parts of the city, and the churches and the Opera House and the great tent were all filled.

Highbury.—On Sunday evening last at the Highbury Wesleyan Church, a fortnight's special mission was concluded. The Mission preachers were Revs. G. Vipond Byles and E. A. Bennett; whilst Revs. Josiah Mee and John Jameson assisted. The mission was preceded by a week of prayer, and a house-to-house visitation to some two thousand families in the neighbourhood. A large band of workers paraded the streets night by night, inviting the people to the services. A "Joyful News" van, lighted by a couple of flaring lamps, headed the outdoor procession, and thus greatly helped to attract attention. By these means, large congregations were secured with most blessed results. The inquirers' room was packed after each service. This after-meeting was often continued till nearly eleven o'clock, and even then many seemed most unwilling to leave. Amongst the converts is a band of young men and women, members of the Bible classes of the Sunday schools, who have for a long time been a source of annoyance and anxiety to teachers and others; but no sooner had they found Christ than, they themselves sought to lead their friends to Him.

THE CHILDREN'S AND INVALIDS' DINNER TABLE, and Soup Kitchen, 60, Paddington-street, High-street, Marylebone.—The new report states that during the last year 3790 dinners, 586 pints of beef tea, 1358 pints of rice milk, and 3658 gallons of soup were served; and 1992 tickets for free admission to the benefits of the dinner and soup kitchen were sent to the dispensaries and schools in the neighbourhood, to be distributed amongst the sickly and destitute. The benefits of these dinners have been again extended to the parishes of Christ Church, Lisson-grove, and St. Paul's, Marylebone. Applicants come from the surrounding parishes for the hot and nourishing meals provided by the charity. Visitors at the dinner-hour may see for themselves the way in which the work is carried on. The treasurer and secretary is Lady Thompson, 35, Wimpole-street, W.

OBITUARY.

REV. VALENTINE WARD, MATLOCK.

The honoured pastor of the Congregational Church, of Matlock died suddenly on Wednesday, 6th. He had been out for a walk in the forenoon preparatory to going for his usual drive, and on reaching the Manse dropped dead from heart disease. Mr. Ward was one of the oldest ministers of the Congregational connexion, and Dr. Parker was his pupil many years ago. He had just celebrated his eleventh anniversary as pastor at Matlock. He entered the ministry in 1854, and had done valuable service.

MR. P. MATTHEW, DUNDEE.

In the Saturday's issue of The Dundee Advertiser there is a lengthy and very appreciative obituary notice of this well-known citizen, who died on Friday, after twenty-four hours' illness. To none will Mr. Matthew's death be a greater loss than to the temperance party in this district. He was an enthusiastic temperance reformer, and long before the Good Templar movement was organised he, by writing and speaking, had advocated the principles of temperance. He evinced very great interest in the fishermen, visiting their houses, urging them to improvement, and reading the Bible to them. He was a most enthusiastic Churchman, entering keenly and heartily into its various schemes. During his entire life he belonged to the Congregationalist body. For many years past he had taken a prominent and leading part in the management of the affairs of the Congregational Church in Broughty Ferry. Mr. Matthew, who was about sixty-seven years of age, is survived by a widow, two sons, and two daughters.

EX-PRINCIPAL CHALMERS, D.D.

This aged and honoured servant of Christ passed to his rest on Monday, 5th, at his residence, Lansdowne-road, Notting-hill, W. He had reached the great age of eighty-two. One circumstance specially invests his death just now with Nebo-like significance. At the end of this month the jubilee of the college which he had served so well and so long is to be celebrated, and special courtesies had been arranged to do him honour. Few men had such opportunities for serving God's people through a lengthened career as Dr. Chalmers had. His whole heart was thrown into the Disruption Movement, and many a stirring story could be told, if time permitted, of how his tall, handsome, athletic form had to serve him in good stead in the tumults of those times. He came to London in 1845, and his pastorate of Marylebone Church lasted till he was appointed professor in 1868. He resigned active duty in 1888. The funeral on Thursday in Brookwood Cemetery was attended by many warmly attached friends.

MR. CRUICKSHANK AND MISS ROBERTSON.

Two cablegrams have reached the Christian Alliance within one week of each other announcing the death of two devoted missionaries, both in Palestine. The first was Mr. James Cruickshank, of Hebron; and the second, Miss E. J. Robertson, of Jerusalem. Miss Robertson was a woman of deep piety, consecration, and faith. Mr. Cruickshank was no less consecrated, and was thoroughly devoted to the great work of Jewish evangelisation. His devoted labours among the Hebrews of New York will be remembered by hundreds of sorrowing hearts. He was converted when quite a young man, and very soon engaged in Christian work. He was providentially led to carry the Gospel to the Jews, and God opened one door after the other to minister unto them the Word of Life. He soon had a large class of young Jews, and many were led to Christ. In 1891 he went to the Training College in New York to spend the winter in Bible study and other preparation for his life work. Miss Robertson had been wonderfully sustained for many years in the trying climate of Jerusalem, and with her extraordinary faith and her long record of victory in Christ, we cannot question that her lifework was at length complete.

A CONVENTION FOR PRACTICAL HOLINESS was held last week in Lausanne, after a similar one conducted the week before at Clarens-Montreux. The convener and president, Rev. F. Paynter, of Stoke next-Guildford, was unavoidably detained in Clarens by indisposition. The speakers were Revs. W. Houghton, C. G. Moore, A. G. Whaley, and M. George. The meetings here were not so well attended as one could have wished, but they seem to have been a true help and enlightenment to many. We joyfully believe that the truths proclaimed will bear fruit in altered lives. Christ our all in all, our sanctification as well as our justification, the work of the Holy Spirit in our hearts, and the practical changes that this effects in our lives, were some of the principal themes. There is a very general and earnest wish that a similar convention may be held here next year. J. M. M.

Notes and Comments.

REV. F. B. MEYER has made an interesting addition to his library of Scripture biography in the publication of JEREMIAH, PRIEST AND PROPHET (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). The life of the old Hebrew prophet, in its Biblical setting, gives full scope for the exercise of Mr. Meyer's peculiar gifts of practical exposition, and those who have appreciated his previous studies from sacred history will find in this book much stimulus and profit in the Christian life and warfare.

"Such an one as Paul the aged." We marvelled, as we spoke to a minister, aged sixty, how it might have fared with Paul had he been a minister in England in these days. Our friend, like many more of whom we have heard, was thought to be too old for a certain church which had made up its mind, or at least the deacons had made up their minds, that the new pastor must be a young and vigorous man. Now, spiritual fitness is not decided by the length of a man's years—the young may be rich in the knowledge of the truth, the aged may be poor in it; but ordinarily it would be, and ought to be, the other way; and it is by spiritual fitness, not by animal vigour or mental eagerness, that the work of God is wrought. A young man may be chosen; his preaching may be after the wisdom of this world; a crowd may be gathered, because it finds something suitable to its low standard; but such results have little, if anything, to do with the great ends for which Christ died and rose again.

Yet another aspect of this question of choosing a pastor should be well considered by churches which want the minister of God's sending. Is any church, or are the officers of any church, justified in saying that the new minister shall be either old or young, or that a certain length of time shall elapse before a decision is made, or in fixing upon any other human standard? If God has a youth like David, the church should not pass him by; if He has a minister ripe in experience, though advanced in years and without the physical force of a youth, it should take him and give God thanks. We ought to allow the Head of the Church to decide for us, and not go by maxims of worldly wisdom. Were this always done, there would be a good deal less trouble in churches than we now hear of. It is deciding upon our plan of action, or acting before we have taken counsel at the mouth of the Lord, that so often brings us into trouble. We are misled by appearances, just as was Joshua by the Gibeonites.

Nothing but shame and sorrow can fill any Christian heart on learning that among the spoils recently captured from an African chief were 7000 cases of Rotterdam gin. We may have a touch of satisfaction in knowing that the gin was not of British manufacture, and also in remembering that the worst offenders against poor heathen tribes are not English traders; nevertheless our hands are not clean. The capture exposes something of the folly with which, for temporary gain, the white man kills the black man, and deprives himself of a permanent customer, who would bring him untold gain. The selfishness of commerce is sometimes very blind.

The misrule of the Turk continues to be a disgrace to this age of freedom and civilisation, as well as a menace to the peace of Europe. One of the latest reports from Armenia is to the effect that the district of Sasun has been raided by Turkish troops, devastated, and some 2000 of the people massacred; all because the inhabitants had resisted the levying of taxes that had already been twice extracted from them. We trust, for the sake of humanity, that the report, on closer investigation, may prove to be exaggerated. But there appears to be ground at any rate for a searching inquiry, and this we hope the European signatories of the Berlin treaty will demand without delay. Our own Government is deeply pledged to secure protection for the helpless dwellers in that Eastern land.

Another tale of Turkish official tyranny comes to us from Tarsus. In proceeding to that place from Marash to begin mission work, Rev. K. Behesnilian, with his wife, child, and four helpers, were attacked by police and their papers seized, while the pastor and his male companions were thrown into prison, from which, according to the latest news, they had not been released. We hope to give details next week; meantime, our readers are asked to show practical sympathy with the persecuted pastor and his family in this time of trouble at the hands of evil men.

The closeness of the ties which bind England and America to each other, is strikingly seen in the effect which English condemnation of lynching has had upon American thought and practice. Mr. W. Lloyd Garrison, son of the famous abolitionist, writes to The Times in defence of Miss Wells, saying that, whilst her words had at first no hearing in America, her faintest whisper from London "goes like an arrow to its mark."

A year ago the South derided and resented Northern protests. To-day it listens, explains, and apologises for its uncovered cruelties. The dormant and intimidated moral sense of the South is asserting itself, strengthened and encouraged by English friendly speech, now effectively repeated by the North.

A marvellous unifying process is going on. London and New York fell into step, as by common consent, on the subject of municipal purity. We must speak of and for each other as if in each other's hearing.

That sin should punish itself is one of the ordinances of heaven. "They shall eat of the fruit of their own ways, and be filled with their own devices." Tammany Hall has even brought the wrath of the liquor sellers upon itself. At a meeting of their Association in New York one of the speakers said:—

We have been hounded and hounded, but they have gone too far; Tammany Hall has lost its grip on us for ever. During the year we are subject to constant assessments. We have to join the Tammany Hall General Committee and pay five dollars for the honour; we have to join the Tammany Club of the district, and pay ten dollars initiation and one dollar a month dues; buy five chowder tickets a year at five dollars apiece, and contribute fifty or 100 dollars to the campaign fund. Besides that, many of us have to take the captaincy of election districts and spend our money to carry them.

Truly the hand of Tammany has been an iron one. Now both good men and bad are against it. So it will be with the drink traffic at home; oppressed publicans will ultimately help abstainers against the brewers.

The Paris correspondent of The Daily News takes a very hopeful view of the prospects of European peace; he refers to several newspaper articles which have attracted great attention, all of them on the side of peace, and quotes specially from the Liberté, which has gone farther than any leading French paper has ventured since 1870. It says:—

The situation made for us by the war does not allow us to accept with eagerness the advances of Germany, but we must not receive them with disdain. Dignity does not exclude the acceptance of accomplished facts. We have had in the course of time quarrels with every nation in Europe. We have beaten them all on different occasions, and we think it quite natural that they should bear us no spite. Let us take advantage of their examples. Besides, good relations do not prevent claims being set up at any favourable opportunity.

This article represents the opinions of an increasing class of Frenchmen; even last year it could not have appeared in any French paper. We are thankful for this change, and sincerely trust that it may be permanent, On the same side was the speech in the Austrian Parliament by the First Minister, when he deplored the enormous expenditure on armaments. If only men like him will begin to speak the load may be lightened.

The outlook for Madagascar seems dark to Protestant eyes. The French have decided to invade the island, and establish a Protectorate. Nothing but natural difficulties appear to be in their way. Should they subdue the Hovas, we understand that religious liberty will have to be afforded to everyone, and that Roman Catholicism will not be able to interfere with Protestant missionary work; at least, if any interference does take place, it can be opposed on the authority of the document signed by England and France. But even should the worst come to the worst, we do not despair. We remember the history of religion in our own island in the earliest times, the persecutions, the violent invasions of ferocious Danes and Saxons, the corruptions introduced by Rome, and how the Gospel survived all; and, therefore, we dare not think that Madagascar will have a less happy history. Indeed, the story of the Gospel in Madagascar itself is full of encouragement. The issue will be decided by the Lord, not by the French Republic.

Opening a bazaar at Dublin a few days ago, Archbishop Plunket apologised for bazaar raffles. Not allowing that these encourage the gambling spirit, he saw in them nothing objectionable. Surely other considerations should have suggested themselves to his lordship, especially in view of the fact that his heart is set upon the kindling of missionary zeal and the deepening of spiritual life. The question is not so much "are these things hurtful?" as "are they good and in the highest sense profitable?" Let it be granted that the objection is the result of weakness on the part of some; even then the duty of "the strong" is to consider this, and not to place a stumbling block in the way of others. Raffles in the interest of religion are unworthy of the Christian name; they are of the world worldly; and from such things, as well as grosser defilements, Christian men ought to keep themselves unspotted.

---

The Plymouth betting-house case, which was decided on Saturday last, reveals a curious condition of the law relating to betting. The Act of 1853 forbade the use of a house "for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto." Can persons who communicate with the owner of the house by means of letter or telegram be said to "resort thereto"? The Recorder of Plymouth decided last June in the affirmative; but on appeal it has been decided that the Recorder's judgment was erroneous. In the most literal meaning of the word "resort," no doubt the later decision is correct. But it is manifest that by such a decision the intention of the law is frustrated. It makes that which is criminal if done in person to be legal if done by means of post or telegraph. The betting fraternity will welcome this decision; and since it allows gambling when carried on without personally resorting to the gambling-house, it will inevitably increase the very vice which the law was intended to suppress.

---

The deputation to the Home Secretary on the subject of gambling did not get much from him except generalities. He thinks the County Council or town authority should have the power to permit or prohibit racing, and where they granted a licence, to impose conditions in the interests of decency and order. He thought that a great many local authorities would abolish "the ring." So much for opinion. Again; he was prepared "within the limits of his powers, to enforce the law equally" for the removal of the "parasitic growth" or "excrescence" which had attached itself to English sport, by which, we suppose, he means gambling. But what is the law? He did not know; no authoritative decision had been given that the Act of Parliament applies to race-courses and such places. He declined, at that time, to use the police to obtain the necessary information for trying cases and getting decisions. He would give the matter his consideration. Let us hope he will see it right to use a national force for which the nation pays a heavy sum, to put to the test whether "rings" are lawful. So great a burden should be lifted from the shoulders of private individuals.

---

Nor is the work the only difficulty; it brings danger. We know that workers for the purifying of our municipal life run serious risks when they are seeking for information on which charges may be made. At first, before they are suspected, they may go about their self-imposed task with impunity, but once they are scented, their lives would not be safe. We have allowed—the police force, with the Home Secretary at its head, has allowed—a gigantic ruffianism to grow up among us, and how private citizens are to crush it we do not quite see. We shall not be surprised if cases of abuse and violence are heard of in theatres and music halls and on race-courses, now that the Empire case has gone against the swell-mobsmen.

[3256]

"Having eyes full of adultery and that cannot cease from sin," are inspired words which aptly characterise some of the vulgar and profane periodicals which have latterly sprung into existence and circulation. It is greatly to be deplored that so many booksellers' shops and railway bookstalls should become a means of national demoralisation. It is surely nothing more than we ought—not to introduce to other people's sons and daughters literature which we should be ashamed to see in the hands of our own. If Christian heads of families were to buy a few of such periodicals, and consider the moral or immoral effect which they are calculated to produce on the children and young people who read them, there would be another burning question added to those which now agitate society.

---

The Pioneer has an article as timely as it is wise on "The Moral Responsibility of a Hostess," based on the true saying, "Such are men, whom women should not receive." It deals with the subject of receiving impure men into society and our homes. Its scope and purpose are well defined in this anecdote:—

> Said a hostess to a young lady guest, who was preparing to depart: "I wish you could stay longer; Col. So-and-so, whom we knew in India, is expected to dinner this evening—such a fascinating man, a regular old soldier, with charming adventures; but," she added, with a shrug of the shoulders and almost a smile, "rather naughty, I'm afraid. Do you know, I can't keep a pretty housemaid when he is in the neighbourhood." The girl had the courage to reply: "I would not stay, if I could, to meet such an evil man. You should not invite this colonel to your house, nor whitewash his dark deeds, and perhaps bring despair on some woman-heart."

Here we have the root of perhaps the saddest side of English immorality, viz., that more domestic servants are ruined than any other class. No wonder, when their mistresses invite notorious scoundrels into their homes.

Widespread sympathy was called forth by the recent disastrous accident at the Albion Colliery, in the Aberdare Valley, and about £39,000 were subscribed for the help of the widows and orphans. Great indignation has now been aroused in South Wales by the proposal to hand over the funds to the "Miners' Permanent Society." The South Wales Daily News, which is raising a very strong protest, thus puts the case:—

> The whole of the money outside the first class (that given specifically for the Permanent Society) belongs to the widows and orphans, and the Permanent Society is obtaining possession of it—legally, no doubt, but we are desirous of making it clear to those who subscribed the money that the persons they intended to help will be in no degree benefited. The dead miners' wives and children get nothing from the public subscriptions. They are no better than if nothing had been subscribed.

We cannot here enter at length into this matter—which can only be fully understood by those on the spot—but we feel it right to call the attention of all who subscribed to the danger, in order that they may insist on their donations being used directly for the benefit of the sufferers for whom they were intended.

A melancholy story comes to us from Birmingham. Lydia Cox was described by her mother as a strong, healthy girl until two years and a-half ago, when she went to work as a brusher at the Imperial Works for enamelling iron. Twelve months ago she began to complain of illness, and was taken to the hospital several times. She returned to her work, and struggled on until three weeks ago. "On Monday, October 28, the mother took her daughter once more to the hospital, where a physician reported that she was suffering from blood poisoning." A sick father and a large family at home kept her at work until Thursday, when she returned after an hour, and in the afternoon became unconscious, and the next day died. The Daily News, commenting on this mournful incident, says: "The law provides that managers of enamel works shall engage a medical man to examine and inquire into the health of each person employed from month to month; but it was admitted by the manager and foreman that this had not been done." In returning a verdict of "Death from lead poisoning," the jury added that there was "no doubt that both the foreman and proprietors had neglected to carry out the Factory Act." Neglect in such a case was criminal and cruel, yet the coroner observed that "if there had been, by any means, any lapse in carrying out the regulation as to medical inspection, no one would regret it more than those responsible for the omission." This "hypothetical censure," as our contemporary calls it, was wholly inadequate. Of what use are our Factory laws if the breach of them receives no severer punishment than this?

The Women's Branch of the Baltimore Yearly Meeting of Friends has a standing committee on the Purification of the Press, which The Philanthropist says is doing good work. They have appealed to other women Friends for their sympathy and co-operation in making "an earnest effort to educate public sentiment, or to labour with us in any way which may seem best, to convince our editors and journalists that these publications of vice and wrong can only detract from the morality and higher development of this, our beloved Nation." There is another nation, beloved of all right-minded English men and women, which is in the same danger and needs the same assistance.

According to The Daily News, Miss Mary Anderson (Mrs. de Navarro), in an interview recently published in Cassell's Saturday Journal, "confided to her interviewer the fact that she now looks upon the stage with positive aversion. For six or seven years she loved her work, but after that the unnaturalness of the life, its unwholesome excitement, its glitter and glare, became apparent to her eyes. First, she grew weary of the constant publicity of such a life, and then her feeling became one of positive distaste. . . . . Since her retirement she has never for one instant wished to return to her old work. Mrs. de Navarro never advises girls to go on the stage. She is glad to say that twenty or thirty stage-struck girls whom she has known have wisely given up their dreams after having the whole story of a dramatic artist's life laid bare by her before them." Such witness is valuable and timely.

In one of the suburbs of London, the minister and members of a church sought to gain a hold upon the poorer folk by building for them a mission hall, and giving them entertainments—getting at them on the social side. To this kind of effort they gave, as far as it went, a warm response. They came in large numbers to be entertained, but that was all; on Sunday they were not seen. A change was decided upon. Preaching Christ was substituted for entertainment, and an earnest effort made to win souls, with this result: that the place is crowded, and many have been converted. The most cheering and encouraging part of all their church work seems to be that at the mission hall. But why should the ordinary church or chapel not always be the same? Have we unconsciously allowed a different standard to be set up?

The Glorious Reign of Christ.

Five years ago a series of papers on this subject by Mr. George F. Trench (a name well known in connection with revival work in Ireland, and with the Dublin Believers' Meetings) appeared in our contemporary, Word and Work. These have formed the nucleus of a book now in the press and shortly to be published, entitled "After the Thousand Years: The Glorious Reign of Christ as Son of Man in the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times." (Morgan & Scott. 2s. 6d.) In this volume the subject is exhaustively discussed in the sober, self-restrained, and reverent spirit characteristic of the writer. In succeeding columns will be found extracts from the opening chapter.

No book has ever appeared in print giving so magnificent a conception of the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God in its relation to the Sovereignty of the Son of Man over things in heaven, and earth, and under the earth. Numerous passages of Scripture become luminous which were otherwise obscure, the plan of the ages becomes intelligible, and the path of the devout student of prophecy shines more and more unto the perfect day, as the light of the Age of Ages is reflected upon it—the Age in which in the name of Jesus every knee shall bow.

It is not to be expected that in every detail of interpretation the author will carry with him all other lovers of the Word of God. But these are quite secondary to the main thesis, which is developed with such thoroughness that we believe both as to the theme and its treatment the book will mark a distinct epoch in prophetic study, a definite advance toward a true conception of the many crowns which shall reward the Man whom the King delighteth to honour—the glory with which the God of heaven will glorify the Son of his love.

THE BIBLE INSTITUTE, CHICAGO.

There are numbers of young women in this country who desire to devote their lives to Christian work, but have not the means to pay for training. The Women's Department of the Bible Institute, Chicago, gives the training they want. But the charge of three and a-half dollars per week for board puts its privileges beyond their reach.

We are now organising a Students' Aid Society, which I want to bring under the notice of my friends. Its object is to help promising women who lack the means to pay for their board and training. By doing so, we hope that the talents of many will be developed so that they shall become useful workers in the Lord's service. The funds of the Society are obtained by donations and membership fees. Twenty-five thousand members at 2 dols. a year each would keep hundreds in training.

Will you not become a member? And will you not do what you can to get others interested in this form of Christian ministry? There may be some in your church and family circles who would also become interested, if they knew of the existence and aims of the Society. Ladies and gentlemen are equally eligible for membership, but the benefits of the Society are intended solely for students of the Women's Department of the Bible Institute. Subscriptions may be sent to me, or to my daughter, Mrs. A. P. Fitt (treasurer), 250, La Salle-avenue, Chicago.—Yours in the work,

D. L. Moody.

AMONG JEWS IN WHITECHAPEL.—Mr. Herman Ehrlich, of the London City Mission, has issued in booklet form a report of the recent meeting in celebration of his thirty-third anniversary. The addresses were full of hearty appreciation of good work, Mr. Ehrlich's own story being specially interesting. Copies of the booklet may be had from Mr. Ehrlich, 95, King Edward-road, South Hackney, N.E.

After the Thousand Years.

I.—THE VISTA OPENED.

Not so very long ago Christian people generally saw nothing ahead but the Judgment Day, the Last Day, the general dissolution of all things, and Eternity beyond. But students of prophecy, telescope in hand, began to discern intermediate events—ranges of hills, so to speak, and mountains beyond them—and have proclaimed their discoveries with such a fervent "Eureka! Eureka!" that nowadays the old, crude, ignorant belief is well-nigh broken down.

Instead of talking about the Last Day, like Martha in John xi., the saints are expecting, as she was then taught (vv. 25, 26, R.V.), the transformation of the living, and the resurrection of the sleeping, at the coming of the Lord: an event which, instead of closing the world's history, will—after the brief but most eventful epoch that it has ever passed through, for widespread suffering, cruelty, and war—introduce the Reign of Christ on earth, and be in fact a morning star to tell of the coming sunrise.

From the mountain height which revelation affords, it has been already discovered that the stretch of waters that our forefathers had taken for the ocean is but an inland sea, circumscribed by most definite borders. But what is there beyond it? Is that shining field of light, whose calm face looks up to the ethereal blue, reflecting its tints beyond the broken edge of cliff and foam—is that Eternity? Or may the prophetic telescope discover limits even there, and even in some small degree descry its features and ascertain its bourne? In plain words, Is the Millennium the final age or limited period before Eternity; or is there a further dispensation of fixed length, exceeding in glory all that came before it?

Now, what is the Millennium? For if this be the Kingdom of the Son of Man in its final form, if it exhaust the prophecies and promises of his human glory as Redeemer-King, there is no more to be said. Then, indeed, when its failure has been shown by its terrible end, He will sadly deliver up the wreck and ruin of it to his Father, and God will be all in all. But is this true? To answer the question let us recal its locality, its moral character, and its end.

(1) As to locality, the scene of the millennial reign is this planet—Earth (Psa. lxxii. 8-11; Isa. xi. 10-16); its centre, or metropolis of government, is Jerusalem (Isa. lii. 1, 2, 7-10; Zech. xiv. 16-21).

(2) The moral character of the Millennium is given in several passages (Dan. ix. 24, R.V., margin "to restrain transgression and seal up sins"; Zech. xiv. 18, 19), as one of sin suppressed and life prolonged, while Satan remains imprisoned; and of sin revived in the most open and undisguised rebellion upon his release at the close of the thousand years, and the most frightful destruction of human life ever recorded since the days of Noah.

(3) The end is a scene of war. Jerusalem, besieged already seventeen or eighteen times, is besieged again, this time by an innumerable host of all nations; who throughout that period of enforced truce have never forgotten their ancient hostility to the Jews and their Messiah. And, but for the Divine interposition, the scenes of carnage so often enacted in the streets of the beloved city might be, and probably would be, repeated in a form many times more aggravated than ever before.

It should also be remembered that the great revolt, of which this siege is the terminus, will necessarily, from the account given, occupy a considerable time. To deceive the nations in the four quarters of the earth; to gather them together to battle in numbers "as the sand of the sea"; to mobilise such vast armies; to conduct them across "the breadth of the earth"; and finally to lay siege to Jerusalem, for what length of time we know not—all this proves that the "little season" of Rev. xx. 3 must be understood in the light of similar Scriptural language.

Where, and over what domain and populations, will the Man Christ Jesus reign? For the answer turn to Phil. ii. 9-11, "Wherefore also God highly exalted Him, and gave unto Him the name which is above every name: that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

Observe here how vastly the millennial sphere of rule is to be enlarged. Then it was an earthly domain with Israel supreme in it, and Messiah, Son of David, for King of all, reigning, whether personally or by deputy (Ezek. xliv. 3), in Jerusalem. Here, things terrestrial, celestial, infernal are brought to own the sceptre of the Son of Man reigning at the right hand of God in heaven.

Now turn to Rev. v., and compare the scene with that of Phil. ii. Here also we find (v. 13) that every created thing which is in the heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and on the sea, give honour to the Lamb; and contrast with this v. 9, 10, in which the first or millennial stage of the Reign is presented, including within it men of every tribe, tongue, people, and nation (earthly distinctions), and reigning "upon the earth."

For, in truth, the splendid vision presents the growing glory of the "little Lamb," beginning with his claiming the roll or title-deed of sovereignty, and expanding—expanding, first, to include the Church's homage, then that of the celestial myriads, then the millennial earth's, and, lastly, of the whole creation.

How poor and deficient, then, is the thought and teaching that the earthly Kingdom, followed by one bright gleam of universal subjection, is all that our Lord is heir to! It is but a faint and brief light cast before of the perfect glory beyond, as the dawn precedes the day.

Refer now to Ephesians i. 20-23. He "set Him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this age, but also in that which is to come; and put all things in subjection under his feet, and gave Him to be Head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (see also 1 Cor. vi. 3).

Set this passage side by side with those I have referred to from the Psalms, Isaiah, and Zechariah, and it will be seen at a glance that the domain or sphere of the Kingdom in its fulness cannot be that of the Millennium, any more than its centre can be at Jerusalem. For not only will this glorious Reign include the whole of the now inhabited regions, terrestrial, celestial, infernal, but there is reason to believe that the "heavenly places" will include the multitude of those starry worlds—that Christ will reign as Man, unrivalled and supreme in all those innumerable spheres.

THE NETHERLANDS BIBLE SOCIETY, founded in 1814, has disseminated over 2,300,000 Bibles or portions of the Holy Scriptures. It has had the Bible translated, in whole or in part, into eleven of the languages spoken in the Dutch colonies.

The L.M.S. Centenary.

On November 4, 1794, there met in a coffee house in the heart of London eight ministers, who, after much thought and prayer, had reached the conviction that something on a large scale ought to be attempted for the evangelising of the heathen world. Two of them were Episcopalians, two Presbyterians, and four Independents or Congregationalists. It was there that the L.M.S. had its birth, although it was not until the following September that it was formally inaugurated.

The delay was inevitable; there was much to be thought out, and a great deal to be done; for the heathen world was but little known. The difficulties in the way of forming a great Society were immense. There was but little in the form of precedent to guide them, for only two missionary societies then existed in England, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, formed in 1701, and the Baptist Missionary Society, in 1792. The principles and aims of the Society had to be settled, its constitution defined, its officers at home and its agents abroad selected, and its first spheres of labour chosen.

But the eight men who thus met in Baker's Coffee House in Change Alley were men of earnest purpose and large ideas. They were well known. They had already given good evidence of zeal and wisdom. They represented a large amount of ardent desire for the extension of the kingdom of Christ in the denominations to which they belonged, and among Calvinistic Methodists and the members of the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion. They met frequently with wise and willing sympathisers to mature their plans. From the beginning they were of one mind and heart that the Society should be on an undenominational but Evangelical basis, and that "its sole object should be to spread the knowledge of Christ among the heathen and other unenlightened nations." And in September, 1795, the Society was formally inaugurated by a series of meetings, which for fixedness of purpose, enthusiasm, fervour, and wise deliberativeness, have seldom been equalled.

Various spheres of labour had been thought of, but Tahiti and the adjoining islands were fixed on as the first field to be occupied, and after a solemn dedicatory service, in which "ten ministers of different denominations shared," to express the catholic basis of the Society, thirty missionaries, twenty-four of them laymen and six ministers, were commended to God, and sailed from London in August, 1796, and reached their destination on March 6 the following year.

That was the first Mission ever undertaken to any of the islands of Polynesia. How it fared, and how, in rapid succession, missionaries were sent to Bengal, South Africa, China, South India, and other spheres, and more recently to Madagascar, the great island of New Guinea, and Central Africa, can only thus briefly be referred to. But some features of the Society's history and present state are worthy of much more than a passing notice.

It has been true, for instance, to its unsectarian basis, for though through amicable withdrawals on the part of those who desired denominational societies, it has been left chiefly in the hands of Congregationalists they have never desired to alter its constitution or to form a Society exclusively their own.

And it has been true to this principle by sending its missionaries to fields totally unoccupied. Thus it was the first Protestant Society to send missionaries to Polynesia' China, Mongolia, Madagascar, New Guinea' and Lake Tanganyika; and in South Africa, China, and India the extension of its missions has almost always been in regions occupied by no other Society. It has thus set a fine example to other agencies alike at home and abroad.

It has been fortunate in the missionaries it has sent out. Vanderkemp, Morrison, Williams, Moffatt Livingstone, Ellis, Kn,ll, all rank as eminent missionaries. A yet larger number might be named who did noble service, and whose names are reverenced and honoured by all who knew them well. And there is another aspect of missionary character not sufficiently considered, but worthy of much notice, affecting this Society and others also: there have been for many years from 3,000 to 6,000 missionaries labouring in heathen lands, where the inducements to sin, and to seek after gain, are strong and plausible. It is a convincing proof that the world's estimate of missionaries is a false one, and of the restraining power of the grace of God, that so few are found to be faithless or untrue, or bring reproach on the cause they serve.

The London Missionary Society enters on the hundreth year of its history with an honourable record of progress and success, with abundant cause for praise to God, and with some reasons for solicitude.

Its one Mission at the close of last century, with no native preachers and no converts, has grown into many hundreds of stations and sub-stations, in many parts of Polynesia, New Guinea, Madagascar, South and Central Africa, the West Indies, China, and India. Connected with these are 190 European male and sixty-two female missionaries, 1476 ordained native missionaries, 6758 native preachers, 94,912 church members and communicants, 400,000 persons who have been won from heathenism to the profession of Christianity, whilst in its 1791 schools are 125,894 scholars.

These are but the outward and visible signs of a great work of evangelisation known only to God, but of which there is abundant proof. Its work is largely sustained by its own converts, for in addition to a large amount of unpaid service, £27,000, one-fifth of the Society's income, was raised at its mission stations last year.

The centenary of the Society is now being celebrated. The most important aim should be to plant the missionary spirit where it does not exist, and deepen and elevate it where it does; and if this could be done the two material aims of the celebration would easily be accomplished—to raise the home income permanently from about £110,000 to £140,000, so as to increase the number of missionaries and native agents; and to raise a thanksgiving fund of £100,000 for immediate use at home and abroad.

GUILDFORD.—A week's mission has been held here in connection with the United Temperance Committee. The missioner was Mr. George Blaiklock, whose vigorous treatment of the various phases of the temperance question made a deep impression, and has given a much needed stimulus to local zeal in fighting the evils of the drink traffic.

"INTERVIEWS WITH CHINESE STATESMEN."—This is the title of a pamphlet issued by the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade (Blomfield-street, E.C.), in the form of a letter addressed to Lord Brassey, Chairman of the Royal Commission on Opium, by Mr. J. G. Alexander, hon. secretary of the Society, with several appendices. It contains a narrative of three interviews with Chinese statesmen, who assured their interviewer that China is just as much opposed to the opium traffic to-day as when, in 1839, the celebrated Commissioner Lin destroyed opium valued at two millions sterling, and thereby brought on the Opium War.

MRS. BOOTH-CLIBBORN AT WORK.

"In the name of the Holy Virgin let me in!" This appeal uttered at the door of the depicts faithfully both the crowded state of the meetings which the Maréchale held there, and the Roman Catholic character of the audiences.

We are glad to say that that blessed work of the Spirit, described already in The Christian, has been going on ever since, growing, deepening, broadening; and when my dear wife again visited Havre recently it was to find a splendid band of militant converts; many of them won for God since she left the town, and with such a force she had a delightful support in her densely crowded evening meeting. What a contrast with the exhaustingly solitary efforts of the beginning of the work!

The suppers for fallen women, so kindly facilitated by Lady Beauchamp, who threw open the largest rooms of her Sailors' Home for the purpose, have resulted in some peculiarly touching cases of rescue, especially that of one poor creature decoyed as a mere child on board one of the vessels in the harbour—which are the scene of some of the worst forms of this vice.

Now that we have our new rescue home in Neuilly this work will be extended in Normandy. This home was opened recently by an afternoon meeting. Among the cordially sympathetic friends present was Madame Hyacinthe Loyson, who kindly volunteered to head the subscription list, and said some warm appreciative words.

Our field of action has been extended within the last few weeks to where the British burned Jeanne d'Arc. We secured the Théâtre Français for the Maréchale's opening conférences. She obtained a splendid hearing from the greater part of the audience. But there was a hostile element also. They seemed to think that it was a sort of desecration of their place of amusement, for never had prayer or spiritual songs been heard there before; they were angry that their citadel had, so to speak, been taken by surprise. Part of the press opened fire upon us! Another section defended us.

The mayor was induced to forbid the second meeting in the theatre. But a powerful impression had been made. The casino, holding 1000, was at once secured, and there my dear wife has been holding meetings almost nightly ever since.

Never has she had finer audiences, nor better attention anywhere in France. But the spiritual darkness is awful. How many answers such as the following are heard every night:—"I am not a sinner!" or, "There is no God," or "I expect I shall have time to get absolution before I die!" A woman, known to be living in immorality, "Oh, but I am not a sinner; I have a very kind heart; and, besides, I cannot be lost, for there are two nuns in my family."

The audiences are so far almost entirely of the better class. There were a considerable number of lawyers one evening and two magistrates. With a large crowd, half infidel, half Catholic, which does not join in the hymn singing, and with only a handful of voices to help, it taxes the strength to the utmost to carry a meeting on, all the more so as nearly everyone remains to the after-meeting, which does not close often till near midnight. But, nevertheless, one or two or three come forward nearly every night as seekers. My dear wife carries on these services alone, as I am generally at Paris or some other part of these two countries. The chief helper at present is Major Roussel, son of the well-known French pastor, Napoleon Roussel, and also Mrs. Major Jeanmonod, who has much power in solo singing. There is a great and growing interest in the city, and the words of one gentleman, hitherto a stranger to all religion, describe well the convicted state of many: "I dare not go to hear that lady any more." One of the Rouen pastors and his wife have been extremely friendly.

The people give gladly in the collections, but the cost, naturally heavy, is far from covered, and, on account of the strong prejudices among infidels, arising from what they have seen of mercenary religion, we do not press for money. The Maréchale will receive most gratefully any help posted to 49, Rue Molière, Rouen.

Will your readers pray that a powerful and permanent wave of grace may arise here, as at Havre, among those to whom spiritual religion has been a world unknown.

OUR BLUEJACKETS.

"What will they say in England?" with the response, "They'll say 'twas nobly done," forms the title of a most attractive booklet just issued by Miss Weston. The sentence and its answer carries us back, in the opening chapter of the book, to June 22, 1893, when the brave men who met death in the battleship Victoria showed that calmness, courage, and fidelity are still an attribute of the British bluejacket. The chapter on the loss of this noble ship, and the deep sorrow and distress at Portsmouth and elsewhere, is written in a strain of deep pathos, by one who was the friend, at the same time, of the lost men and of the bereaved widows. Some £2,773 were sent to Miss Weston for immediate relief, and aided by Miss Wintz and a staff of ladies, the "wolf was kept from the door," until Government and national help came.

One bright young fellow, named George Edgcumbe, went down on his eighteenth birthday. He told his parents on leaving that the Sailors' Rest, Devonport, was his second home, that there he had learned to love the Saviour, and as his father truly said to Miss Weston, "His mother and I owe everything to you; we know now that we are only parted for a little while; but it is a bitter trial: he is our only son, but we give him to his Saviour; he died doing his duty."

Another touching incident relating to H.M.S. Victoria must be chronicled. As Miss Weston was visiting the widows, a letter was placed in her hand, from a sergeant of Marines, by his sorrowing and heart-broken wife; it was indeed a "voice from the dead." After telling her of his cruise, he said, "Please tell Miss Weston that the temperance work is getting on bravely. The secretary, Harry Roberts, took twenty pledges yesterday. I know that you will be glad to hear, dear wife, that, for Christ's sake, I have joined the Temperance Army. I feel that it is what He would have me do, for does it not say of Him that 'He pleased not Himself.' Several of my shipmates have promised to join if I would lead the way." However, all honour to brave and Christ-like men, whose funeral anthem the blue waters of the Mediterranean are murmuring still.

Eminently practical in work, Miss Weston not only did all that she could for the Victoria widows, but every widow whose sailor-husband has been called home finds a friend in her; she has a mourning depot, and gladly receives crape, or any mourning, at the Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth. She has an employment office, and gets situations and work for hundreds; she has also a needlework depot, and some hundreds of pounds worth of clothing are made by the sailors' wives, who can earn their living in this way, and sold to poor people in various parts of the country. The sentence,

"HOMELESS NEAR A THOUSAND HOUSES," is true of numbers of blue-jackets in our own ports. The great Sailors' Rests at Portsmouth and Devonport, to whom Her Majesty has graciously given the title of "Royal," are very beehives of Christian work. In reply to the question to Miss Weston, "How do you account for the great success that has attended your work?" the answer, with a quick glance of her eye, comes clear and decided, "To God's overruling power and guidance alone, not to ourselves in any way, except as following where He leads us."

We are glad that this is the testimony given; thus success can only be attributed to one source, the guidance of Him to whom "all power is given in heaven and in earth."

From one single letter written to a bluejacket nearly thirty years ago has evolved friendship and correspondence with thousands of men in Her Majesty's Fleet. Temperance work, that extends throughout the Navy, spiritual work that grows day by day; care of the wives and children of bluejackets abroad; an immense work amongst the boys of the Training Service; relief of widows, orphans, and invalid men, and two very large Sailors' Rests, doing an incessant work by providing homes for the men, who show their appreciation by thronging them.

The number of men sleeping in cabins and beds during the year exceeded any previous one, 135,350 being the total, besides 4,244 lying on the floors, that they might be under the roof. The receipts of the Sailors' Rest have been £13,100 4s. 9d. The surplus, after all expenses, including wear and tear and depreciation, have been written off, amounted last year to the sum of £2,050 15s. 5d. "This is due," remarks Miss Weston, "to the unwearied exertions of Miss Wintz," and but for this surplus the Gospel and temperance work would have suffered terribly last year. The monthly paper, Ashore and Afloat, under Miss Wintz's editorship, goes forward. "We read every bit of it," wrote an enthusiastic seaman from a foreign station, "even the advertisements, and we could go on reading it for ever and ever." 407,895 were issued during the year, and 532,050 of Miss Weston's Monthly Letters, called by the men "Old Chummies." She says, anent these letters: "They speak simple words from my heart as to their present and eternal interests, and I hope, by the power of the Holy Spirit, that they touch their hearts and win them for Christ."

Miss Weston wants £5000 for Devonport, and £3000 for Portsmouth, to enlarge so as to meet the needs of the Navy. A philanthropic gentleman has promised her £1000 for the Devonport fund. A lady of title has just sent her £100 for her Gospel and temperance work. She needs all this and a thousand more annual subscribers to develop and carry on the work. Write for a copy of "What Will they Say in England?" to the Royal Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth, enclosing six stamps, and do what you can to help this national work.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

Dear Sir,—Last September a friend and I were visiting in the province of Quebec at a lovely spot on the shores of Lake Champlain. We found we were surrounded with farmhouses, many of which had as inmates children emigrated from Liverpool by Mrs. Birt, of the Sheltering Homes, Liverpool. All who read this know something of the wretched surroundings of these children in Liverpool before rescue; but they can have little idea of the transformation scene enacted after being settled in the new country.

One house we visited was the home of Alice C——. She had lived in the one family since she had gone out twelve years ago; first with the mother of the homestead, and after her death with the married daughter. Alice is greatly loved and valued, and she is devoted to the children. The mistress said: "Alice is a treasure; I can leave her with entire confidence. She knows as well as I do how to manage."

The next farmhouse had two children, a boy and a girl. The report on the boy was all that could be desired; the girl has given trouble, through her temper, but is a good worker, and is becoming more amiable. The widow lady who has now these two children has brought up several children from the Home before, and has been most successful with them. She showed us their photographs in her album. One boy is now studying to be a lawyer at one of the American colleges, and evidently the good soul has visions of a second O'Connell appearing some day on the scene. At another house we saw a girl who was described as "almost as good as Mrs. ——'s Alice."

A mile or two further along the road was a small farm where a Liverpool boy, now married, is settled. His employer was so pleased with his conduct that he set him up in this farm, and took great trouble in furnishing the rooms so that the young couple might start in happiness and comfort.

At the last house we visited on that day an open-faced boy came from his work, and was introduced as "Percy." I asked him if he would like to go back to Liverpool. "Never again," he answered, with emphasis. After he left his mistress said she had never seen a more willing lad, and that he never had to be told a thing twice. Of course all are not so perfect as this, but most of the children seem to have an honest desire to do well, and certainly our experience was that they are carefully trained and treated with affectionate kindness as belonging to the family. COASTGUARDS IN IRELAND.—Since the Letter Mission to Irish Coastguard was started more than ten years ago, we have had much to praise God for. From time to time the men write, acknowledging with gratitude blessing received through the letters and books sent them. In the very isolated stations round our Irish coast such messages are highly prized. We ask the help of earnest Christian friends. Addresses and further information will be gladly supplied. Wm. Arthur Garratt.

BRADFORD CONVENTION.

This Convention for the deepening of spiritual life, which met five years ago, has again been held. It was started by the agency of Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, who was a pastor at the time in Bradford. This is the first year he has been absent. Mr. R. Wilson, who was to preside, was prevented by illness. Nevertheless, he found an able substitute in Dr. White, of Winchester.

The Convention has been searching, solemn, powerful, instructive. The various meetings have been well attended, notwithstanding that some had fears on this score owing to local church troubles, and some measure of disinclination to the teaching. Apparently these troubles turned to the glory of God in making some to be curious to hear what these things were.

The word of the Lord has been opened up in a helpful manner, becoming to many hearers as wine making glad the heart, oil causing the face to shine, and bread to strengthen the heart. Many rejoiced in a fresh revelation of the Lord Himself, by the Spirit through the Word.

The speakers were Dr. White, Revs. T. F. Butlin, J. J. Luce, Darlow Sargeant, Mr. W. Govan, and Mr. Arthur Mercer, of the South African General Mission. The Friday evening's meeting was of a missionary character, at which a letter was read from Mr. Gregson, who is in South Africa, telling of much blessing in Conventions there.

The following are gleanings gathered up from the addresses:—

There can be no fellowship if there is aught that must be hid from God. What we want is life more abundant; which shall throw off all disease and make service a real joy. If God's law is placed in your hearts it is placed in your affections, and you will say, "I love God's law better than I love life. I am responsible to take God's full salvation; it is not only a privilege, it is a positive duty."

Whence comes the sorest trouble to the Church of Christ to-day? From those who turn their back on God's will, retaining and cherishing in their lives the sinful things that God wants them to give up. There is the professed worship of God on the Sunday, and the worldliness of every sort on the week days. Have you come to know yet the awful mischief that is done by the tongues of professing Christians?

Humility is the root of holiness. It is not merely the grace of beauty, but it is the key to Divine knowledge. A proud man cannot get to know the deep things of God.

I think the highest prerogative in the Christian life is to stand in the presence of God and make intercession. In proportion as you drink into the Spirit of Jesus you will become an intercessor, an advocate, and you will come between God and a ruined world.

God's Holy Spirit does not ask any man's permission to convict him of sin.

When Christ has become a living reality to you, I think from my own experience the devil will become a living reality.

Satisfaction is given to the soul of Jesus exactly in proportion as his people become like Himself. And satisfaction is brought into the soul of the Christian exactly in proportion as he becomes like Jesus.

Monod has said that the truly sanctified man is the man who has walked to his own funeral.

There are many Christians who rest in God, but how few in whom God rests! He rests only in those who have begun to grow like Him.

We never get a real blessing until we come to an extremity.

It is a good thing to bury our heads in our hearts; it is not speculation that will help us much.

The Holy Ghost came to take possession of that which the blood had bought.

So much of our prayer is trying to alter God's plans toward us. We are trying to get God to come down to our poor weak plans instead of our getting up into God's plans.

The emissaries of the devil are busiest among God's children.

Jesus reconciled the world, but has left the evangelisation of the world to us. H. A. H.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—A home and reading room for sailors has been opened at Dunkirk, France, in connection with this society.

Some London Missions.

THE GROVE MISSION.

"Without exception the 'Grove' is the most unique, peculiar, romantic, successful mission we have ever met with." So the editor of The Methodist Recorder epitomises his impressions of a visit to the Grove Mission, Southwark. The secret of the success may be traced to the fact that there are no drones—all are set to work; and that every member of the Midday Prayer Union is pledged to pray daily, about noon, for certain definite matters. Moreover, the workers, from the ministerial superintendent, Rev. John Fletcher, down to the humblest visitor, are voluntary.

The Mission is situated in Great Guildford-street, Southwark, in the heart of a dense and poor population. The work, commenced fifty-six years ago in a hay-loft, has developed into a hive of spiritual industry. Mr. John W. Weston, the hon. superintendent, who has, under God, made the Mission what it is to-day, is a man of remarkable energy and "go," which prove contagious, so that all who come in contact seem to catch his spirit.

So far as I have been able to discover, the backbone of the whole work lies in the "Sisterhood" and in the "Brotherhood"—neither of which, be it observed, involves any form of vows—indeed most of the members are married men and women. The terms are simply used to indicate unity in service.

The "Sisterhood" numbers seven, who have devoted themselves—that is in their spare time, for they are voluntary—to service among the sick, the dying, and the poor generally. The district is mapped out, and each has her allotted sphere, visiting from house to house as far as possible; finding out who have special need of them, and seeking to speak earnest words of warning. The mothers' meeting (300 members) is in their care; also the relief work, which in the winter, in such a district, becomes peculiarly pressing.

arose out of the observation that amongst the men there was much raw material—men uncultivated and rough, but capable of doing useful service if only shown how to do it. In joining this band each is pledged to undertake something for which he becomes responsible. The members now hold services in common lodging-houses and casual wards, conduct open-air and cottage meetings, visit the hospitals and workhouses, and distribute tracts among Sunday excursionists at the railway-stations. These efforts have been used of God in many instances, while they have also brought out latent and unsuspected gifts. One pleasing outcome has been the capture of some twenty-three lads, who are now meeting willingly for prayer and Bible-reading, but who were lately in a far different condition. The P.S.A. for men and women, held in a neighbouring coffee palace, from sheer lack of room at home, is full of encouragement.

These bands being somewhat novel, I have lingered to describe them. Otherwise the operations are those of a thoroughgoing mission. The Gospel services are crowded by the artisan classes—the large hall being filled Sunday by Sunday, so much so that a scheme is on foot to secure the Raglan Music Hall were only funds forthcoming. The week-night services, held in a smaller hall, are also well attended. The Sunday-school reports 412 scholars and many conversions—eighty-two are now members of the church. The Band of Hope is flourishing. The gymnasium is open twice a week—one night to girls and young women, another night to boys and young men. The Tract Society has been the means of blessing to not a few. The Mission has also a Holiday Home at Southend, and this year sent 183 children and seventeen poor women for a fortnight's change.

But one cannot stay to detail all that is going on, suffice that here I find a live vigorous Mission, touching and helping the poor at all points, attracting them to its services, helping them in time of need, and growing its own workers in a remarkable way. Moreover, it is nearly self-supporting—every member, about 300, being expected to contribute something, however small, regularly. This, to a large extent, defrays the cost of the Mission itself; but it does not and cannot meet the need of the relief-work, so imperative in such a district, where the winter is a time of much distress. The present needs are very definite—at least £70 for Relief and similar work, and a number of new annual subscribers to maintain the Mission operations. Information may be had of the Hon. Supt., Mr. J. W. Weston, 31, Park-street, Southwark, S.E.

CITY MOTHERS.

Some twenty-three years ago the wife of a Christian physician, practising in the City, was led to interest herself in poor women, and to start in Coleman Ward Schools a Mothers' Meeting. This grew so large that in course of years the schools became too small, and at the invitation of the committee of the Leysian Mission the meeting was transferred to their hall, where it has greatly prospered.

On Monday week I had the pleasure of visiting this mission hall, behind historic Bunhill Fields, and finding it well filled with poor mothers, who, as they stitched, listened to Mrs. Griffith's reading. Afterwards I had the privilege of speaking to them, and it was delightful to see their genuine interest in the words of life. One marked how the weary faces lit up as the message of the Saviour's love was set forth. To many it was a story loved and known; to others it is fresh and new.

There seems to be very real work doing here. Many have been converted, while to all the meeting is a cheer and welcome help. Mrs. Griffith's Bible-woman finds, as she visits the sick and dying, a spirit of earnest inquiry among members yet unsaved; many have become abstainers, and are learning habits of thrift. The various agencies of quiet helpfulness auxiliary to this Mothers' Meeting are well devised to meet the needs which press most closely.

THE MEDICAL MISSION.

In connection with this meeting a valuable Medical Mission is carried on. It is easy to see how, at first, the wife, taking home the stories of her sick and suffering members, would stir the heart of her husband. Consequently Dr. Griffith began to see freely some in special need of his skilled aid, and this ere long grew into a regular Medical Mission. After the founding of the Leysian Mission, this medical work was transferred to its charge; but, later on, the committee sought Dr. Griffith's help, and by and by he undertook once more the Medical Mission work—he giving the attendance, and they finding the room, drugs, and nurse. So this admirable Medical Mission, on the border of the City and for City workers, is now in full and beneficent operation.

On Friday I found the room crowded with poor mothers and children, and young women, who, after a brief hearty Gospel service, were seen by Dr. Griffith and his assistant. Altogether eighty-seven were treated, while on the preceding Tuesday 111 were seen, and on the Monday, after the Mothers' Meeting, there were thirty more. Thus over two hundred were seen in the week, and all, in addition to medical treatment, had the Gospel clearly put before them. The patients, while waiting for the doctor, are addressed by different ladies, sinners are led to know Christ as their Saviour, and are induced to attend the Leysian Mission services, or to join different sections of the Church; thus the healing of the body becomes instrumental to the salvation of the soul.

The whole of this medical attendance and care is given voluntarily by Dr. Griffith, while he and his wife are personally responsible for the payment of the assistant physician, as well as the cost of the large Mothers' Meeting and pension fund. Hence they will be thankful if any are led to aid them. Their address is, 25, Torrington-square, W.C.

POPLAR FREE BREAKFASTS FOR POOR CHILDREN.—Rev. James Chadburn (Cheam-road, Sutton, Surrey) writes:—"Last year we gave 21,625 hot breakfasts. The need is as great as ever this winter, and we are already feeding 200 children every morning. Work is still scarce throughout the East End, and many thousands will be burdened with idleness this winter. Perhaps the very best way to help these is to feed their children. We very earnestly try to relieve only deserving cases."

WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION.—A Protestant Convalescent Home fund is being raised, for providing convalescent women and girls with free home and nursing, under the ministry of women labouring in the Gospel, thus shielding them from false doctrine and practice. To aid in this, a sale of work will take place in Exeter Hall, Strand, on Friday, Nov. 30, from 11 to 9. Contributions are earnestly solicited. "Perishable" articles for Market Garden Stall should not arrive until the morning of the sale, and be addressed to Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot, care of Y.M.C.A. Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

The Evangelist.

THE RETURNING SINNER.

Hosea xiv.

PART I.

"Return." Oh word of Love, surpassing sweet,
Wherewith the Father draws us to His feet
When we would flee!
All spent with pain, and bruised by many falls,
He sees us through the dark, and gently calls,
"Return to Me."

At noonday, as in night, we stumbled, Lord;
The crooked paths we made no peace afford
From day to day.
Oh, now receive, forgive. We need Thy care;
We cannot safely tread this desert bare.
Teach us Thy way.

We stand afar—we cannot venture near—
Dark seems it, though Thy gracious Voice we hear
From our low place.
Lord, we are fatherless apart from Thee.
Our sins are as a wall—we cannot see
Thy glorious face.

PART II.

"Return," and I will heal—I gave for thee
My Well-Beloved—to make a way to Me,
Be not afraid!
His work is finished, "and the middle wall"
Divides no more from Me—The sin of all
On Him was laid.

"My love is free"—I loved thee when I gave
My only Son—that He might seek and save—
He seeks thee now!
He bore the stripes for thee, once and for aye—
From Him Mine anger all is turned away—
In Him hide thou.

With Him thou shalt return unto My side,
If thou beneath His shadow wilt abide,
And thus draw near.
His beauty thou shalt see, and in His strength
Bear fruit, and grow in grace, until at length
He shall appear!

PART III.

FATHER, we fear no more, brought near Thy Throne,
Children by faith in Christ, through Him alone,
We come to Thee!
Captivity is captive, and in Love
The Saviour reigns; oh, let us daily prove
He sets us free!

JESUS, Thou art our Peace, and all is bright;
Thy Voice we hear, Thy law is our delight.
Praised be Thy Name!
Oh, make us wise, that we may understand
When in the dark we cannot see Thy Hand,
Thou art the Same.

SPIRIT of Life and Power, when we believe,
Thy grace, like dew, our thirsting hearts receive,
As we draw nigh.
From hearts once desert let the streams o'erflow
To tainting souls, until they, too, shall know
Joy from on High!

Grace Creed.

GREAT STAUGHTON (Hunts).—Mr. Noah Taylor of the Evangelisation Society, has held a special mission at the Perry Baptist Chapel, where a good work is being done under the care of Pastor W. D. Guy. This chapel is situated in an out-of-the-way place, where the roads are very wet and rough. It has a brick floor, which is very damp indeed. The result is that no person of delicate constitution dare attend in bad weather. An effort is being made to raise the amount needed (£26) to remove the brick floor and lay a boarded one. The people are poor farm labourers, and can do nothing more. Help would be gladly received by the secretary, Mr. W. Newman, Perry, Hunts.

GENEROUS GIVING.—At a recent meeting held in Aberdeen on behalf of the British Jews' Society, when Rev. Aaron Sternberg was appealing for funds, the following letter was placed in his hands by an elderly lady entirely unknown to him:—"With pleasure I enclose £30 to the Jubilee Fund. May God bless you in the future as in the past, and give you joy in seeing his work prosper." Shortly afterwards, Mr. Sternberg was surprised to receive a second letter from the same person enclosing £40, with a request that it might be acknowledged as coming from "An old woman in Scotland, as a love offering to Him from whom we have received all." Such an instance of self-sacrifice and generous giving may prove an incentive to others to help our missionary societies.

THE BIBLE IN BELGIUM.

Among the very interesting and fruitful operations of the Belgian Evangelical Society, or Christian Missionary Church, an important place is given to colportage and tract distribution. The latest report of the work shows that the Romish priests dread the tracts as well as Holy Scripture, and not only forbid the reading of them, but do their best to seize and destroy them. The people do not all share the same spirit, as is illustrated by the remark of a man who, holding up a tract, said to the priest, "If you will explain to me the contents of this little book, you shall have it; if you refuse, then you shall not have it!"

A man of low tastes and foul speech received a booklet from a fellow-workman, and having read and re-read it, said, "It is a good book; but—is it not Protestant? To be sure, the priests cannot say such beautiful things." Interest being awakened, the benighted soul bought a New Testament, taking a certain pleasure in thus defying the priests. At first he did not take in many of the great truths unfolded, but he persevered, and God's light shone upon the printed Word, and the Saviour graciously crossed the path of the sinner, who, no longer given to impurity of speech, is now "a new man in Christ."

M. Fauviaux, one of the Bible colporteurs, has laboured under difficulties; money has been so short that the people have had nothing to spare for books. At Jumet he knocked at two hundred doors, and only sold two small books. At one house a man exclaimed

"NO, NONE OF THOSE;

we are all freethinkers." "I also am one," replied the colporteur, "a believing freethinker." In the course of conversation the difference was explained, and under the impulse of new light the man bought a New Testament. In another place a man made a great racket, saying, "I do not want that book." "On the contrary," said the colporteur, setting the man's highest need off against his unspiritual wish, "it is just what you do want." "Why do I want it?" "Because, from what I see, you are not altogether happy or easy-minded, and for that lack this book is the very remedy." After conversation, a New Testament was bought, and husband and wife were thankful to the colporteur for his kind words. In the neighbourhood of Ostend, many would have bought the Word, but through poverty were not able. A girl borrowed twenty centimes, the price of the book; three sisters did the same, promising to repay the money in ten days, in the course of which they would save the amount.

A woman bought a New Testament, and her husband read it with exclamations of "GOOD! BEAUTIFUL!"

His sister-in-law, who had heard some pages read, said, "Is it not a shame that such books should be forbidden?" "Is this a forbidden book?" inquired the man. "Certainly," was the reply. The book was at once thrown into the fire! This is the fate of numbers of Scriptures, but there is promise in the fact that many persons read them before the fatal moment arrives.

Old and young are charmed by the old, old story, as was made evident in the conduct of two aged people, who had formerly possessed a New Testament. Taking a copy into their hands, they now read some verses, and cried, "That's the book—found again! How fortunate!" Of course they bought "the book." That woman, too, had a like joy, who, on buying, pressed the book to her heart, and said, "Now I know as much about it as the priest!"

The general secretary of the Society which promotes this excellent work is M. Kennedy Anet, Pasteur, 129, Chaussée d'Ixelles, Brussels.

FINSBURY PARK.—The committee of the Finsbury Park Working Lads' Institute have issued their seventh annual report. The marked increase in the number of members and the general success in the various departments are in no small measure due to the more adequate accommodation which the new premises afford. During the last session 307 members were enrolled, and the aggregate number of attendances amounted to 11,450, being an average attendance of fifty-one each evening of the week. Of these 307 members forty-nine have no fathers living, twenty-seven no mothers, and nine are orphans. A sum of £1200 is required to pay off the building and free the institute of debt. With the exception of the housekeeper, the work is entirely carried on by voluntary helpers. The Institute is established at Clifton Hall, Seven Sisters-road, N.

A CHICAGO MISSION.

Among the fruitful endeavours to cope with the sins and sorrows of the great city of Chicago, the Pacific Garden Mission deserves an honourable place. From its last annual report we take the following particulars:—

For seventeen years the Gospel message has been sounding forth at the Pacific Garden Mission. The wonderful testimonies given from night to night convey the depth from which so many have been reclaimed. The gambler has found power over the destroying passion of his life, the drunkard, after resorting to every remedy that skill or science could devise, has found the grace of God sufficient to conquer the raging thirst; the self-righteous man has realised his utter helplessness, and the would-be sceptic been convinced of the mighty power of the Gospel to save.

The attendances during the past year have surpassed in numbers any preceding year, averaging from three to four hundred week-day nights, and often five hundred beside the standing room on Sunday nights. The number of seekers nightly varies from five to twenty-five, no meeting ever having been held without some professing to be saved. On Sundays the Gospel is sounding from early in the morning until nearly the midnight hour. Converts' meetings are held at half-past nine a.m., when the most wonderful experiences are heard from those who for years have been kept by the power of God and those entering on the Christian life. The Bible study in the afternoon has been a source of great help to the converts in enabling them to obtain a knowledge of the Word. About one hundred usually attend this service.

For many years it has been our custom to preach the Gospel to the masses in the open air; thus we have been able to reach a large number who otherwise would never hear the plan of salvation. About five o'clock every Sunday the Gospel wagon starts out with a band of consecrated workers and redeemed men, whose hearts are on fire with the love of God. The wagon usually makes a regular round, stopping at each corner within a radius of a few blocks of the mission, where its approach is gladly welcomed. The audience consists of a cosmopolitan gathering, who listen with profound interest and respect, and are often moved to tears in hearing the rescued men tell their experiences. While the services are in progress the converts are busy circulating cards of invitation for the evening meeting.

The jail visitation, which has always been a branch of the mission work, has been faithfully continued with encouraging results. The largest number ever incarcerated in the jail has been during the past year. About 7,300 names have been estimated as being enrolled on the books, 6700 men, 360 women, and 250 boys, showing an increase of crime and the great need of rescuing work. Perhaps a more miscellaneous gathering was never seen than can be looked upon in this place, where the genteel "confidence" man, or respectable-looking clerk, is placed side by side with the pickpocket and thief, and in the women's department the shop-lifter and refined appearing lady, who once may have graced better society. The Gospel, with religious reading and tracts left in every cell, is seed sowing that we trust will bring forth a large harvest.

The Mission is situated at 100, East Van Buren-street, Chicago.

A BIBLE CONFERENCE.—A conference in connection with the Bible League will be held on Monday next at Queen's Hall, Langham-place; meetings at 11.30 and 7.30. Among the speakers are Rev. Percival Smith, Principal Waller, Dr. Pentecost, and Rev. John Urquhart.

"A REST BY THE WAY."—Mr. Geo. W. Tebbs, writes from "Shiloh," Ceylon and Indian General Mission, Kollupitiya, Colombo, Ceylon:—"It would probably interest friends of missionaries who pass through Colombo on their way to spheres of service in the 'Far East,' to know of the existence of this 'Rest by the Way.' We gladly invite to our mission house all fellow workers in preaching the Gospel to all creatures, during the few hours that their vessels may be in port, for a little rest, fellowship, and change, after the monotonous voyage between Aden and Colombo. A fortnight ago we had a party of twelve who were on their way to China. Last week a large party of twenty-one, who were almost all of them members of the China Inland Mission, were able to make a break in their journey here. The Lord is blessing us in our work for Him on all sides."

WORK IN NORTH ITALY.

Dear Sir,—Let me direct the attention of your readers to an aggressive evangelistic work amongst the Italians of North Italy. In Italy where the Waldensian Church, and Count Campello's Church, and the Italian Reformed Church are working amongst Protestants, there is still a work to be done in an evangelistic way amongst the remote villages and towns. I was very much interested last winter in this work.

An enterprising Christian with very small means at his command was trying to carry the Gospel to some of these places. Much blessing followed the effort, but wherever an aggressive evangelistic work begins to succeed the priests immediately try to stop it, and in many cases it is stopped, for a time at any rate. No room can be procured for meetings. The people are afraid to let one. As long as the work is quiet and produces little stir, it is allowed to go on, but directly souls are saved and men and women come boldly out, an effort is at once made to crush it. The only thing then is to go on to another place. Sometimes a room is almost secured, when the owner is frightened by the priest, and she dare not let it at any price.

The men are most open to the truth. The women cannot read, as a rule, and are very much under the priests. The men very often laugh about religion, but will come and listen. One interesting fact I may mention regarding the work in one village miles away amongst the mountains. A man belonging to the place had gone to sea, and was taken ill and left on shore in a hospital. When there he got hold of a New Testament, and he vowed that, if ever God let him get back to his home, he would let the Protestants have his house for preaching. In due time he got well, returned home. He went to one of the meetings held by our evangelists in one of the villages, and invited him to P——. The evangelist went, and a great work was soon commenced in that village. Not long ago an evangelist went there to hold a meeting, but finding that the Bishop was coming he thought it would be impossible to get the people for a meeting. However, the men said, "Leave the women to go after the Bishop, we will come to your meeting"; and they did. The room was full, and there was not a woman there.

I will not write more now, but only ask your readers for their prayers and their help. I am going out soon to act as chaplain at a lovely place near San Remo, where I should welcome any English Christians. Living is cheap, and there is excellent accommodation at Ospedaletti. Let me recommend it as a quiet resting-place, amidst beautiful scenery and a delightful winter climate. We have a nice little church and pleasant Bible-readings, and from there we are able to make excursions to these dark villages and sow the seed of Eternal Life.

Any contributions, and gifts of tracts and portions of Scripture in Italian, I will gratefully acknowledge, and render account of their use. Three or four evangelists will be at work. Money may be sent straight to me for "Dr. Morgan's Italian Fund." There must be many who have benefited by winter residence abroad who will help.—Yours faithfully,

S. C. Morgan, D.D.

PUYALLUP INDIANS.—Nine months ago we organised the Puyallup Indian Y.P.S.C.E., with fifteen members; we now have forty-two names enrolled. Being near Tacoma, where there are several flourishing societies, I have taken our young Indian Endeavourers to the weekly meetings of several of the churches, greatly to the profit of our young people. Since my last communication I have had added to my field three other Indian reservations for working with the Puyallup—viz., Chehalis, Nesqually, and Mud Bay. J. M. Pamment.

EVANGELICAL CONTINENTAL SOCIETY.—The office of this excellent society has been removed from Blomfield-street to 13, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C. In informing friends of this fact, the secretary, Rev. G. H. Giddens, appeals for means to enable the Society to continue with undiminished vigour its work upon the continent of Europe. The Society helps mission effort in various lands, and its assistance is highly appreciated. Mr. Giddens intimates that he has prepared a new lecture, illustrative of the history, aims, and methods of the Society, entitled "Midnight and Morning." Invitations to lecture or address meetings should be sent to Mr. Giddens at the address given above.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 25.—MATTHEW XXI.

Jerusalem (1-22).—The Lord had no care about the morrow, yet He lacked nothing: palfrey, tomb, anointing for the burying, all were provided. An ass on which none had sat, a tomb wherein none had lain. Evidently He had many lovers and sympathisers, more than were publicly identified with his cause. But how lowly the pomp of this procession! His majesty was his meekness. And the aristocracy of his kingdom must wear the same court-dress. When the kingship of Jesus is acknowledged in the heart there is always an outburst of Hosannas. (12) But wherever He comes He cleanses the temple. The service of God had been turned into a source of profit to the priests, who changed the foreign coins into the half-shekels of the Temple. This could not be tolerated. Christ is like the refiner's fire; ask Him to go through your heart. (14) But whilst He brings judgment to sin, the needy and child-like are attracted to his side. (17) What a relief was Bethany, with its brave and loving hearts! (18) In the fig, leaves follow fruit, and the many leaves probably indicated much fruit. But there was none, emblem of Judaism, and therefore, like Judaism, the fig-tree was destined to the curse of the hypocrite.

The Parables of the Two Sons, and the Husbandmen (23-46).—The question about John was really an answer to their challenge for Christ's authority. Each had been appointed from heaven. As they had refused the forerunner, so they would the Messiah; and there would be, as He showed in the following parable, more hope of the outwardly profane than for them. (33) Whatever vineyard is entrusted to us is not for ourselves alone, but that we may cultivate it for God, yielding Him his share of the produce. God lovingly pleads with us for this; and if we still refuse, the power to do so is presently removed. (44) You cannot touch the Gospel and not be affected in some degree for blessing or injury.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 26.—MATTHEW XXII.

The Marriage Feast (1-14).—This sets forth the other side of the guilt of the Jews. As husbandmen they had neglected their duty, as guests their privilege. God has invited all mankind to share in the festal glory of his kingdom and the Bridal of his Son with the Church. The first invited guests were the chosen people. Nothing needs to be done, but to accept the free invitation and come. Not to accept is crime enough. The highways of the world are the great Gentile cities and thoroughfares. Good are the outwardly virtuous and moral. Bad the profane. To each guest a wedding-dress is offered; to refuse it was an insult to the royal host.

The Test of the Penny (15-22).—Theoretically God was the King of Israel. Had they any right then to own the sovereignty of Cæsar? If Christ said "pay tribute," they would accuse Him of treachery to the theocracy. If Christ forbade them to pay tribute, they would accuse Him of treachery to Cæsar. Christ gave a marvellous reply. He tore aside the veil and revealed their hypocrisy. The penny with its Imperial die represented that Cæsar was responsible for the maintenance of government and order; it was right, therefore, that his taxes should be paid. But, with equal fidelity, we should give our soul to God, for He has redeemed it.

The Silencing of his Opponents (23-46).—What marvellous depths Christ saw in the simplest and most familiar Scriptures. He knew the Scriptures and the power of God. He saw that the I AM could not speak of Himself as God of the patriarchs, centuries after their career on earth had closed, unless they were living somewhere still. But the conditions of that life differ from this. (41) Here is another example of Christ's insight into Scripture. His own dual nature is the only explanation of the strange contrasts of the Old Testament.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 27.—MATTHEW XXIII.

Hypocrisy Seeks Outward Acclamation and Notoriety (1-12).—As the Divine Judge distinguishes between what we teach and what we are, He uses the sword which pierces to divide soul and spirit. No more awful words were ever spoken. If we despise the character of the teacher, we must yet respect the law. (4) The hypocrite spares himself, but is merciless in his demands on others. (7) There is a great difference between the exaction of these three names, and their voluntary ascription of love and respect. (8) How evidently is all clerical and priestly assumption condemned here!

Hypocrisy is very Injurious (13-22).—It hinders men from entering the Kingdom, because nothing is so offensive as the pretence of religion without its reality. (15) Their converts rested in the outward rites, and lived in licence. (16) The question of truth and righteousness was lost sight of in questions as to which imprecations were binding.

Hypocrisy is Punctilious (23, 24).—It strains out gnats and swallows camels. Christ does not forbid attention to trifles, when combined with observance of the weightier matters of truth and mercy.

Hypocrisy is Intent on Ritual (25, 26).—It will not enter Pilate's Hall on the Preparation Day, but it will murder the Saviour.

Hypocrisy Canonises only Dead Saints (29-36).—True goodness recognises good in the living; the hypocrite cannot believe in the good of others, having none in himself. You may pride yourself in what you would have done in the past, whilst you are failing to do that very thing in the present. It is so much easier to see for others than for ourselves.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28.—MATTHEW XXIV.

Tribulation (1-14).—These words deal immediately with the Fall of Jerusalem, but generally they refer to those conditions of human society, and the progress of the Gospel, which are common to all the ages. The devil makes a hard fight for his supremacy, from which he is being slowly driven. As he tore the persons of those whom the Lord was about to heal, so he corrupts human society. Beneath the breath of his passion, kingdoms and nations surge like the troubled billows of the sea. And all is done that can be done to stay the progress of the Divine Kingdom. (13) One of the greatest virtues of the Gospel is to endure. There is grace enough in Christ for this for each of us, if we will but claim it day by day. (14) All the world is to be evangelised, not converted.

Signs of the Fall of Jerusalem (15-28).—The Lord came at the fall of Jerusalem, and He is always coming in each great national crisis. The abomination of desolation is explained by Luke xxi. 20. This warning led many of the Christians of Jerusalem to escape before its capture to Pella. (21) Josephus says that more than one and a-quarter million Jews perished, and 100,000 were sold into slavery.

The End of the Age (29-51).—It is probable that the scenes of the fall of Jerusalem will have some counterpart at the end of the present age; and immediately after the Son of Man shall come to establish the Millennial Reign. These wonderful predictions, like so many Scripture prophecies, are capable of repeated fulfilments. (36) The Advent of the Lord will be sudden. (38) And will find the world ungodly and unprepared. (42) Those who hold sacred office in the Church of God must specially be on the alert, ruling aright, and giving meat. (48) The judgment on the unfaithful will be commensurate to the opportunities with which they have trifled.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 29.—MATTHEW XXV.

The Bridal Feast (1-13).—How marvellous the power that from the noisy night procession of an Oriental wedding could bring a parable, which for purity and beauty stands in the front rank. A short, warm, Eastern night; the ten girls waiting with their lamps; the cry; the peace of the prepared; the anguish of the unready; the inside and outside of the feast. The oil represents the Holy Ghost; the vessel, outward profession. Let us see to it that within the lantern of a religious exterior, there burns the undying fire, heaven-nourished.

The Talents (14-30).—This has to do with service. Each bond-slave is entrusted with at least one talent. The number of talents varies with the ability to manage them. The Master never overtasks. It is only by use that the power of usefulness is developed. By careful and devout culture our opportunities of service may be greatly widened, and as life goes on, we may be able to do double as much as at the outset. Christ is always coming to reckon. Every communion season, birthday, etc., might be a standing at his bar, but there will be a final reckoning at his judgment-seat, which will be closely identified with the Marriage Supper, and must be distinguished from the Great White Throne. Christ condemns us, not only for doing wrong, but for not doing our best. The sin of omission casts into outer darkness and despair.

The Separation of the Sheep and Goats (31-46).—Primarily, this too belongs to the pre-millennial advent, when the Shepherd of men shall test the nations of the world by their attitude towards the Jews, who shall be the emissaries of his Gospel. But it has a wider significance, teaching us to see the King Himself in all who are hungry, thirsty, naked, homeless, and sick.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 30.—MATTHEW XXVI.

The Anointing (1-16).—How great the contrast between the scene in the Court of Caiaphas and the love of Bethany; yet even there there was not unanimity. Within the Church there are differences of temper and disposition; the disciples think of the poor, of work for Christ; the Marys think of Christ. Probably Mary alone realised what was about to happen. She alone believed in his death at the hands of strangers. She did beforehand what she knew would be impossible afterwards; anticipating his resurrection, she did not come to his grave on the Easter morning.

The Lord's Supper (17-30).—Another secret disciple provides the upper room. The Lord's Supper prepares for the approaching hours of trial. It is a time of testing as well as of fellowship. They who eat of his Flesh and drink of his Blood spiritually are fortified to follow even to death.

Gethsemane (31-46).—So closely in life are hymns and olive-presses linked. We pass from the Supper to the garden, from the emblems to the reality. Not all can enter into the heart of his unknown sufferings. The human nature of Christ trembled at the approaching anguish, but his will never swerved. It was his own experience that enabled Him to say that the spirit was willing though the flesh was weak.

The Arrest and First Trial (47-75).—Christ's surrender to death was voluntary. One word, and the angels would have encircled Him. In that hour the Scriptures were still his guide. Silence is the best answer to false witness. When challenged as to the truth, we must never withhold it. The difficulty to convict Christ of sin is a marvellous proof of the unparalleled glory of his character. With Peter we must all learn that the strength of vows and resolutions is powerless in the hour of trial unless reinforced by the Holy Ghost. Contrast Acts iv.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1.—MATTHEW XXVII.

The End of the Traitor (1-10).—He who knew Christ in the inner circle of his life is a valuable witness to his innocence. Not particular as to the crimes of the traitor, the Sanhedrim were very punctilious as the disposition of the bribe which he had flung back on the Temple floor. The same inconsistency appears still in professing Christians, who make money from the misery and damnation of their fellows, but profess to be very particular as to its expenditure.

The Trial before Pilate (11-31).—Pilate desired to do the better without offending the prejudices of the people. He sought to obey his conscience by taking devious courses. Refusing to take a bold and manly attitude, he drifted before the storm, and ended by doing the one thing which he intended to avoid. Still Barabbas and Jesus stand side by side. Still the voices of the crowd call for the Cross. Still men try to wash their hands in the basin of excuses. The King of men must wear the crown of thorns before the many crowns of empire can encircle his brow. A bruised reed is dear to Him, and is appropriately placed in his hand, for it was by love to such that his Kingdom was founded. The faded robe of mockery must precede the Ascension vesture of the God-Man.

The Crucifixion (32-56).—He will not drink what would dull his keen sense of the momentous issues of the cross. The ring of scorn and hate is man's welcome to his Redeemer. The taunts are true. None who would save others can save themselves. The cry of forsakenness, the midday midnight, the yielded spirit, the rent veil, the open tombs, the earthquake, the sympathy of nature showed that this was no common death, and were in keeping with all that Scripure had foretold of the supreme act of substitution.

The Sepulchre (57-66).—Fear not to entrust yourself in death to God. He will receive your spirit; He will provide loving hands for the body which was the casket of the precious jewel. What needless tears we shed because we do not understand or believe the words of Jesus! The kings and princes of this world set themselves to guard the body of the Son of God by sealing-wax and sentries. They might as well try to keep back the bursting life of nature in spring.

CHRIST'S TESTIMONY TO JOHN.—Luke vii. 24-35.

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 27.

THE Bible is remarkable for the fidelity with which it tells of the infirmities of its most illustrious persons. See the doubt that is related of John the Baptist (18-20).

Several things may have combined to suggest his doubt. (1) The reaction following after his earnest and successful labour. A prison to such a man must have been very depressing. For four months he had been confined "in the lonely castle of Macherus, in the land of Moab, nine miles east of the northern end of the Dead Sea, on the brink of a great precipice, above the steaming hot fountains of Calirrhoe, in the midst of a scene of most remarkable desolation." (2) Jesus, from all he heard concerning Him, was not yet doing such work as he had foretold. So far as the works of Jesus went, He was fulfilling Old Testament prophecy, but why He should go so far, and not proceed at once to fulfil the whole Messianic programme, perplexed him. (3) And it may be that the apparent neglect of him by Jesus added to his despondency. Why should so many miracles be performed for others, while his own kinsman remained in captivity?

In correcting John's doubts Jesus only appealed to his works (21, 22), in which the prophecy of Isa. lxi. 1, 2, was being fulfilled. The best cure for doubt is a fresh look at what Jesus is and does. His works bear witness of Him (John. v. 36). The warning (23) is intended not only to enforce his message to John, but to give emphasis to what follows. He is confronted by many who are in danger of stumbling over Him as they did over John the Baptist. As John had borne witness to Jesus, so Jesus now bears witness to John. Three things are in these verses:—

I. What John Was (24-28).—The reference to the people going out into the wilderness recalls his great popularity. Yet while they followed Him in crowds, they had no proper conception of his greatness. His greatness consisted of his character, the very opposite of the reed (28); his mode of life, in contrast with the self-indulgent who live in luxury (29); his office (26), and his having been the subject of Old Testament prophecy (27). If the message just sent from John had suggested that he was fickle, undecided, vacillating, this testimony of Jesus corrects the impression. The priority of John over all that had preceded him, and of the least in the kingdom over John himself, is not one of character, or of fidelity, but of privilege (28). "The least of the greatest is greater than the greatest of the least."—Malamatus.

II. How He was Received (29, 30).—This retrospect is made in order to reprove the attitude of those to whom our Lord spake. The ministry of John had produced a twofold result. Those who received Him were from the lower classes of society; those who rejected Him were the people from whom a cordial welcome might have been expected. Like John, the true preacher declares "the counsel of God"; this counsel is of necessity "against" men; the true hearers obtain blessing through the message because they "justify God"; others, in rejecting the message, are rejecting God's counsel.

III. The Conduct of the People (31-35).—Our Lord speaks now not of the ministry of John only, but of Himself also, and of the manner in which the people treated both Him and his forerunner. He compares them to children playing a game in which the players divided themselves into two companies, one of which starts the game by representing some scene in ordinary life, and the other responds by joining the scene and completing the representation. But, in common language, one of the two parties is in the sulks, and will be pleased with nothing. Mourning represents John's call to repentance, enforced by his severe life; dancing represents the rich joy Jesus imparts, enforced by his natural way of living. But the Pharisees were equally opposed to both. Those who are resolved not to receive the Gospel will find fault with it, no matter how it may be presented. But again there is a contrast (35). Wisdom recalls the word counsel (30), and the term, is justified, is explained by justified God (29).

LESSONS.

1. The agreement between John's witness and that of Jesus.—Though they were different, yet John's was needful to introduce Jesus, and that of Jesus was needful to complete John's. 2. The privilege of living in the Gospel dispensation.—The Christian is "the heir of all the ages." Increased privilege means increased responsibility. 3. The twofold result of all witness-bearing.—Even the preaching of John and Jesus was rejected by many. The fault is not with the preacher, nor his message, but with the hearer.

SUSAN'S STORY.*

I MUST tell you the story of Susan. When she was a little girl she lived in the north of India, where there was no school for girls; but Susan borrowed her brother's books, and taught herself as well as she could. She learned to write by using her finger for a pen, and the mud-floor, covered with sand, for paper.

When Susan was still a child she was married. She was busy, and had little time to think, but when she did, she knew something which made her miserable. She had a load of sin on her heart, and did not know how to get rid of the heavy burden. She went and told her trouble to the heathen priest. He said, "Climb up that high hill, and go to the temple there, and then you will be good and holy."

Susan did as she was told, but she was still wretched; she came down the hill as she went up, with the same sad heart. Susan now determined to go on pilgrimage. She had heard about the sacred river Ganges, and that people washed there to be made clean. Susan was of Brahmin caste, so dressed herself in yellow clothing, and went off one dark night on her long, dusty, tiring walk to the Ganges. She dipped in the sacred water, but to her surprise and disappointment was not one bit better than before.

As the poor, sad woman wandered about, she saw a crowd standing round a preacher; she came near, and heard the words, "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Susan felt sure these good words were for her, and determined not to go home till she could learn more about Him who so loved the world. On her way back to the Punjab, her husband met her, and wished her to go home: but she could not bear the misery of her sins, and said she must learn more before she did so. Her husband was angry, and had her shut up in prison for some months. Whilst she was there, the master of the jail found that her great desire was to learn to read; so he let her have a teacher, and ever since that time women who go to that prison are taught to read.

When Susan was let out of prison, she went to Amritsar, and asked for the house of the lady who taught about Jesus Christ. Some of the heathen whom she asked did not know where the missionaries lived, and there were others who did know but would not tell, so poor Susan could not get on one bit. At last one day she heard some children reading in a school. She peeped in. "What is it you want?" said the pundit, or master of the school. When she told him, he said, "Oh, my wife wants a servant; if you will come and cook for her, she will teach you."

Now Susan found out, perhaps by the marks on the man's forehead, that he was a heathen; she knew his wife could not teach her more about God who so loved the world. She was going out again with her sad heart, when she saw a boy making a sign to her. She was sure the boy was going to help her, so she waited outside in the street until school was over, wondering what the boy had to tell. Soon out came the little boy, and he looked at her and walked on. She followed him, and then far away in another part of the city, he left her at the house of some Christian people, who took care of her for the night.

The next day Susan was taken to Mrs. Fitzpatrick, the wife of one of the first missionaries who went to Amritsar. Mrs. Fitzpatrick was very kind; she talked to Susan, and gave her food; and having eaten an egg and other food with the Christians, Susan was no longer counted of the holy Brahmin caste. When she had learned a little more she was baptized, and had the name Susan given to her.

After a time Susan opened a school for little girls, and then went to see the poor women in their Zenanas. . . . She goes about in a little doolie—a small carriage without wheels, carried by two men—and everyone is pleased to see the happy old woman, and listen to her words. She is not strong now, but is always cheerful, and able to cheer everyone else out of the Bible, which she loves to read and talk about. I am sure, when we go to heaven, we shall see dear old Susan, and there she will look brighter and happier than ever.

NEWS FROM PERU.

IN a circular letter Messrs. Peters, Stark, and Jarrett, of Callao, say they have named their work "The Peruvian Mission." These friends were formerly students in the East London Institute under Dr. Grattan Guinness. They left for South America in April, 1893, without any assured means of support, and though a few friends have shown sympathy with them, yet they have at times been in straitened circumstances. The circular says:—

"Though we have had our evenings fully occupied with teaching, we have not neglected the opportunities of our situation. A Gospel meeting has been conducted every Sunday, by means of which numbers of sailors and English-speaking people have been reached. We have the oversight of a Sunday-school, with an average attendance of 130, and also have assisted in existing work.

"Although our work up to the present has been of such varied description, intermixed with study of the language, etc., it has been our constantly growing desire to have a meeting in Spanish. We could not effectually conduct it alone, so that when Mr. and Mrs. Bright, of Mexico, offered to assist us, if we had a hall, we gladly availed ourselves of their offer. After much thought and prayer, we decided that Lima was the best place to begin, and more needy than Callao. Lima is the centre of Romanism in Peru, and therefore the centre on this western coast of South America; a veritable stronghold of Catholicism, where that deadly Upas-tree has given forth its baneful influence unhindered for three centuries.

"After much seeking and many refusals, we secured some rooms from a Peruvian gentleman, the owner knowing distinctly for what we wanted them. This was a gain to us, as it is a wonder for a Roman Catholic to let property for Protestant work, especially in Peru. Two weeks after this we had the place fitted up and ready for meetings, which necessitated the outlay of a considerable sum of money. Then Mr. Bright, with his press, printed the required invitation cards, as the meetings here have to be treated like private parties, public worship other than the Romanised forms being prohibited. We were delighted to see twelve at the first meeting, beside ourselves. Up to this date we have held six meetings, the numbers increasing to over forty: this, of course, cheers us greatly. We hold two meetings a week, but a woman's meeting, led by Mrs. Bright, and a Bible-class for men, have been arranged."

EMIGRANTS TO CANADA.

LAST Thursday morning a mixed party, consisting of fifty-eight boys and eighty-five girls, left Euston for Liverpool en route to Canada, under the auspices of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. Including these 143 young people, the fourth and last emigrant party for the current year, the homes have emigrated in all 7,297 boys and girls to Canada and the Colonies, of whom over 98 per cent. have acquitted themselves satisfactorily, and done credit to the homes which sent them out.

The children have been carefully selected as of good physique and approved character. They will be placed in various homesteads throughout Ontario. Applications have already reached the homes very largely in excess of the number of the party.

ON ANTICIPATING TROUBLES.

When Ralph came into the parlour after shutting up the shop, there was an evening hour, the pleasantest of the day, during which they could speak freely to each other. Agnes knew that he and William Ettys had held a whispered conversation in the passage, and she thought that Ralph looked graver than his wont. It was not her custom to keep silent concerning possible future troubles; she preferred to take the bull by the horns, and know the worst at once. So after Ralph had sat for a few minutes by the fireside without telling her anything, Agnes plunged at once into the question which was occupying the minds of both.

"Ralph, hast thou heard aught of the inwards of this new Act whereof Mistress Rose is so feared?"

"Somewhat, Annis," said Ralph gently but curtly.

"It hath nought that should touch thee and me, I trow?"

"If thou and I be faithful to God's truth, Annis, it shall not leave us scatheless."

"O, Ralph, how say so?"

"All who deny the body of God to be in the sacrament in flesh and blood, really and essentially, are to be accounted traitors and heretics, and to be punished as such."

"All who deny! Why, Ralph, they must needs hang and burn half the kingdom!"

"Sayest thou so, good wife? I reckon the charge for halters shall come easily out of the parish chest."

"Nay surely! Do but think how many have learned the truth these years past, not to speak of such as knew it aforetime."

"How many thus learned shall keep it, reckonest thou, when the cost is loss of life and liberty?"

"Oh, I may well conceive a few of the careless should fall away. There be hypocrites at all times, and thoughtless professors to boot. But thou lookest not, surely, to see any great number thus use themselves?"

"I look to see one stand fast here, and another there; no more, Annis. Ay, and they that do so forsooth shall not be those that thou should pick out as most like to endure."

"O Ralph, Ralph, I cannot believe it."

"Thou shalt see how it shall be."

"Now do but tell me who thou shouldst choose."

"It were a vain thing to judge, and I would liefer speak of none. Only this will I say: they whom the Lord upholdeth shall stand firm, and they whom He leaveth to their own strength shall speedily fall away."

"Ay so, doubtless," said Agnes slowly, with an intonation that implied that she was not quite free from doubt on some point.

"But truly, wife, the one question that concerneth thee and me is, How shall Ralph and Annis Clervaux stand?"

"Ralph, indeed I would not love to be burned or hanged, and yet lesser to see thee thus served."

"Truly, dear heart, and I the like. But there is one thing I should dread yet worser, and that were to grieve the heart of the Lord that died for me. It were a thousandfold the lighter to bear the bodily disease of the one, than the endless remorse of the other."

"Yet, Ralph, the Lord knoweth our hearts. We mean not to dishonour Him, but only to save ourselves. If it were a less matter—but surely for very life——"

"Bid him that is whispering to thee get him behind thee, Annis. Life is less than nothing, and vanity, if it come to be weighed with the Lord's honour. Who be we poor worms that we should consider ourselves before Him?"

"May God forgive me if I so did!" said Agnes humbly. "In very deed my words were iller than my thought; but, Ralph, dost think thou could'st bear it—here, to-night?"

"To-night? No. I am not called to it to-night. When I am, the Lord will see that I have grace therefor, if I beseech it of Him. We must live very near Him, Annis, in the time coming, and see to it that we walk very close with Him. They that be in danger are they that walk so far off that temptation clutcheth hold of them afore they can reach Him."

THE LATE C. H. SPURGEON*

ON THE LORD'S TABLE.

Men at the table often reveal their minds more fully than elsewhere. If you want to understand a man, you do not go to see him at the Stock Exchange or follow him into the market, for there he keeps himself to himself; but you go to his table, and there he unbosoms himself. Now, the Lord Jesus Christ sat at the table with his disciples. 'Twas a meal; 'twas a meal of a homely kind; intimate intercourse ruled the hour. Oh, brethren and sisters, I am afraid we have come to this table sometimes, and gone away again without having had intercourse with Christ; and then it has been an empty formality and nothing more. I thank God that, coming to this table every Sabbath day, as some of us do, and have done for many years, we have yet for the most part enjoyed the nearest communion with Christ here that we have ever known, and have a thousand times blessed his name for this ordinance.

Still, there is such a thing as only eating the bread and drinking the wine, and losing all the sacred meaning thereof. Do pray the Lord to reveal Himself to you. Ask that it may not be a dead form to you, but that now in very deed you may give to Christ your heart, while He shall show to you his hands and his side, and make known to you his agonies and death, whereby He redeemed you from the wrath to come. All this, and vastly more, is the teaching of the table at which Jesus sat with the twelve.

I have often wondered why the Church of Rome does not buy up all those pictures by one of its most renowned painters, Leonardo da Vinci, in which our Lord is represented as sitting at the table with his disciples, for these are a contradiction of the Popish doctrine on this subject. As long as that picture remains on the wall, and as long as copies of it are spread everywhere, the Church of Rome stands convicted of going against the teaching of the earlier Church, by setting up an altar when she confesses herself that aforetime it was not considered to be an altar of sacrifice but a table of fellowship, at which the Lord did not kneel or stand as an officiating priest, but at which He and his disciples sat. We, at least, have no rebukes to fear from antiquity, for we follow, and mean to follow, the primitive method. Our Lord has given us commandment to do this until He comes, not to alter it, but just to "do this," and nothing else, in the same manner until He shall come.

There was no command for a change when the first Apostles were all gone from the Church. No, it was to be the same still—bread and wine, and the surrounding of the table, until the Lord came. I gather, then, the equality of all saints. There is a difference in office, there was a difference in miraculous gift, and there are great differences in growth of grace; but still, in the household of God, all saints, whether apostles, pastors, teachers, deacons, elders, or private members, being all equal, eat at one table. There is but one bread, there is but one juice of the vine here.

It is only in the Church of God that those words, so wild politically, can ever be any more than a dream, "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity." There you have them, where Jesus is; not in a Republic, but in the Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, where all rule and all dominion are vested in Him, and all of us willingly acknowledge Him as our glorious Head, and all we are brethren. Never fall into the idea that older believers were of a superior nature to ourselves. Do not talk of Saint Paul, and Saint Matthew, and Saint Mark, unless you are prepared to speak of Saint William and Saint Jane sitting over yonder; for if they be in Christ, they are as truly saints as those first saints were, and I ween there may be some who have attained even to higher saintship than many whom tradition has canonised. The heights of saintship are by grace open to us all, and the Lord invites us to ascend.

SOLDIERS AT GIBRALTAR.

Dear Sir,—The work among soldiers and sailors on the Rock and in the Bay of Gibraltar has been greatly blessed of God. Since I last wrote many have been saved, and have gone forth to work among their comrades. Many gave glad testimony to the keeping power of the Saviour.

Two weeks ago seven of the brightest of our band were ordered to India. Our brothers go to different parts of that country to live and witness for their Lord. Within the last two years Christians have gone from the Rock to Egypt, the Cape, the Mauritius, Hong Kong, Ceylon, and different parts of India. Not a few have come to England, and are living for the Lord in their own homes. We are very grateful to our loving Father that He gives us the joy of seeing men saved, sanctified, and sent forth to bear witness among our own countrymen and among the heathen.

Our temperance coffee-room, once a notorious public-house, is a great comfort to the men. Instead of drunken revelry, blasphemy, and cursing, sounds of joy and thanksgiving are now heard. Many weary souls are drawn in, who find themselves in our Gospel meeting soon after, and are there led to Christ.—Yours very faithfully, [Mrs.] Alice Todd Osborne.

BRIGHTON TOWN MISSION.—It is to be regretted, as announced at the annual meeting held last week at the Pavilion, that Brighton has now only nine town missionaries, whereas a few years since there were thirteen. Rags and poverty, misery and vice, as in all large towns, are to be found in the back streets, whither the town missionaries carry the good news of salvation. As shown by testimony given at the meeting, the Gospel message has proved to be the power of God unto salvation. It is desired to have at least another missionary in the field if funds would allow.

MEDICAL AID SOCIETY.—For those who are accustomed to hardships, our hospitals offer generous and efficient aid, and the poor may always obtain the assistance of physicians and surgeons of the highest reputation without expense. In the case of gentlewomen, however, who have been delicately nurtured, and who cannot bear the publicity which necessarily belongs to the arrangements of a large hospital, such opportunities are quite useless. The ladies who are assisted by the Medical Aid Society are seen by the medical officers in their own consulting rooms, under exactly the same circumstances as if they were able to defray the cost of such advice themselves. To carry on and extend the work of the Society funds are much needed. All information can be obtained of the secretary, Captain Hamilton, 2, East India-avenue, E.C.

THE HON. JAMES BALFOUR,

MEMBER OF LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF VICTORIA.

This gentleman, whose services as a Christian layman in forms almost numberless have been of incalculable benefit to the young colony of Victoria, was born at Edinburgh in 1830, and educated chiefly at the Edinburgh Academy. He was a member of a Christian household, much interested in all that concerned the Kingdom of God, and especially in the struggle in the Scottish Church, which ended in the Disruption of 1843. His mother in particular was a Christian lady of warm and generous nature, overflowing with the milk of human kindness. From his earliest years he was a remarkably loveable boy, gentle, kindly, and most unselfish.

Immediately after the Disruption several members of the Balfour family and other friends interested in the spiritual and social welfare of the district of Pilrig joined in building a Free Church there, of which Rev. W. G. Blaikie was the first minister. Young Balfour threw his heart into this enterprise, and his connection with it and the influence of his cousin, the late Mr. Robert Balfour, C.A., one of the chief active workers, served to lead him to decision for Christ, and brought him very early into Christian service. In 1849 he went to London to learn business, where he had the privilege of attending the ministry of the late Dr. Hamilton, of Regent-square. His experience in the metropolis, the example of his Christian companions, his resolute resistance to temptation, and firm stand for all that was right and good, tended to develop a manly style of piety, and made him from the first an enthusiastic Christian worker.

In 1849, on the recommendation of Mr. Hugh M. Matheson, he went to Melbourne, in connection with the business of James Henty and Co., of which important house he ultimately became a partner. From 1854 to 1863, his home was at Geelong; the rest of his life, with the exception of three visits to this country, has been spent at Melbourne. In 1859 he married Miss F. Henty, daughter of his senior partner, and became the father of eleven children, all of whom are walking in their father's steps.

From the very first Mr. Balfour threw his energies into all suitable forms of Christian service, at first in connection chiefly with the Presbyterian Church, but thereafter on a wide scale. As an elder he took an active part in church courts. He was a zealous promoter of the Y.M.C.A., assisted at the formation of a mission to the Chinese at Ballarat, helped to establish the Lord's Day Society, was one of the founders of the "Bible in State Schools League," now the "Scripture Education League," helped to promote the union of the three Presbyterian bodies, now happily forming a united Church in Victoria; was treasurer of the jubilee fund of that church, which realised £50,000 for debt extinction and home mission purposes; assisted in the establishment of Ormond College, and has all along been a member of the council; and was one of the originators of the Evangelistic Society of Victoria, after the visit of Dr. Somerville.

One of Mr. Balfour's great objects was to make use of the Press for Christian purposes. In the early days of the gold fields he was on the editorial committee of The Banner, which was of great use in the miscellaneous community that rushed to the mines. Afterwards he was associated with The Weekly Review, which was edited by Mr. David Blair, and supported by the Presbyterian church. About 1875 he contributed to start The Southern Cross, a paper which has done excellent service to the cause of truth in Victoria, which at one time had for its editor the late Dr. Andrew Cameron, and still continues to uphold and promote a Christian tone in the colony. But the largest and most important venture of this kind in which he took part was the purchase of The Melbourne Daily Telegraph. For several years this paper represented the body of Christian opinion in secular matters with great efficiency, though at large cost to the proprietors. Unfortunately it perished in the late financial crash.

We have yet to notice Mr. Balfour's labours in a more conspicuous field. In 1866 he entered Parliament as a member of the Lower House, and took the Liberal side. It is now almost forgotten that a collision took place about that time between the home and the colonial authorities. The Governor, Sir Charles Darling, had acted on the advice of the Colonial Ministry in opposition to the home authorities, and was recalled. The matter involved was regarded as a very important constitutional question, and the colonial patriotism of Mr. Balfour was roused. He took a very active part in the struggle, which ended in the recognition of colonial liberty. Being an excellent speaker, Mr. Balfour has been able to command the attention both of the lower House while he was a member of it, and of the Legislative Council, to which he was by-and-by promoted.

On every question in which a moral or religious element was involved his voice was raised clearly and fearlessly in favour of truth and righteousness. The Bible in the school and the right observance of the Sabbath found in him on every occasion an able and unfaltering advocate. In recent years he gave powerful support to the Bill for Local Option, while the disastrous Divorce Bill, which has recently passed, and which the Chief Justice of the colony has more than once deplored, was opposed by him to the very utmost of his ability. Notwithstanding his decided religious stand and strenuous maintenance of his views, his high integrity, most amiable and genial nature have secured for him universal respect and something very near to universal affection.

We have sketched Mr. Balfour's public career; but behind all that lies his quieter, but honourable and generous career as a leading merchant, and an ever-active Christian man. There are men in mature life in Victoria who have declared that their knowledge of him was what kept them steady to Christ when their steps had well-nigh slipped.

(From a Photograph by Mr. W. Crooke, 103, Princes Street, Edinburgh.)

From a communication from a leading member of the colony we extract the following:—

"I should feel inclined to place among his most remarkable achievements his quiet personal work among young men, whom he treated as his friends, and won over to goodness. For many years he always had about him a circle of those in whose sports he joined, whose career he watched, and whom he helped at every turn where help was possible. Most of them owe their own selves to him, and where any broke down, it was one of the most pathetic things I have ever seen to see how he yearned after them. I have known him to be almost sleeplessly praying and watching for weeks when one of them was going wrong, and have witnessed his joy when he succeeded in stopping a downward career. In no man have I seen the Christ-like spirit so manifested as in him. His religion was never gloomy; he was and still is full of sympathy for all innocent gaiety, and carries sunshine with him.

"During all his public life he has been careless of personal ambition, witness his repeated refusals to accept office, so utterly in contrast to the eagerness for it which marks even our better politicians. He has, moreover, never hesitated to sacrifice influence for the sake of any cause that tended to raise the moral and social state of the people. He is a very fine speaker; at his best I have heard few to surpass him, and in the Upper House he exerts very great and salutary influence. He is also thoroughly in sympathy with the democracy, and has that fairness of mind which can see the justice underlying some even intemperate demands of the working classes. Had he been less whole-hearted as an advocate of righteousness, and temperance, and religion, he would have been officially more effective as a politician; but as it is, there are few men who have been so influential in keeping our State from becoming de-Christianised."

Mr. Balfour has suffered so deeply from the financial troubles of the colony as to affect his worldly position greatly, but he has borne his trials with splendid faith and magnanimity. It is the earnest desire and prayer of his friends that he may be spared for many a year to continue his invaluable public services, and shed over the large circle of his family and friends the sunshine of his genial and loving heart.

MR. E. P. TELFORD IN BRISTOL.

This evangelist has closed a remarkable Mission in Brookland Church, Bristol, lasting twelve days. Resting on the belief that the Lord had directed them to a suitable instrument, the members of the church entered into the work with unity and zeal. Now they greatly rejoice in that the Lord has blessed the Mission far beyond the most sanguine expectations.

The first manifestations of God's blessing upon the effort was seen in some thirty inquirers seeking salvation at the close of the first evening service on Sunday, Nov. 4. During the week increasingly large congregations assembled night after night, each service resulting in busy times for the workers in dealing with anxious souls. The second Sunday of the Mission will be remembered as a day on which the Spirit of the Lord moved mightily amongst the people; a large company of persons sought salvation at the close of the afternoon and evening services.

During the second week's services the people continued to come in increasing numbers until the building was quite crowded, whilst the enquirers each evening were double those of the previous week. In the course of the Mission whole Sunday-school classes and families have been brought into the Kingdom of God, and some very affecting scenes were witnessed in the inquiry rooms on members of families meeting each other there, bent on the same purpose.

Many striking incidents occurred. One was that of a man who stated that in the course of his business he had received an invoice, in which was an error of ten shillings in his favour; he also received a statement of account still showing this amount to his credit. This account he intended to pay as rendered and pocket the ten shillings, but happening to come to one of the meetings with his wife they both yielded themselves to Christ. The next morning when paying the account he pointed out the error, and there and then testified to the power of the New Birth over his conduct.

The services closed on Friday evening, Nov. 16, with an address to converts, who occupied the area of the church. Many have publicly testified their decision for Christ.

W. J. Randall, Mission Secretary.

Bristol, Nov. 17.

On Sunday last Mr. Telford commenced a twelve days' special mission in the Penge Tabernacle. At the evening service a remarkable manifestation of decision for Christ was witnessed. Nearly 100 persons entered the inquiry rooms. The church is full of expectancy that a great ingathering will be the result of this movement during the next twelve days.

ROYAL MARINES AT DEAL.

A home has been opened at Deal for the benefit and use of the Royal Marines stationed at Walmer. The Home has started in a small unpretending way. Walmer being a depôt where the Marines number 1600 recruits, it is important to reach and influence these young lads before they have been led away by unwise companionship. Two ladies whose hearts are in the work, and whose sympathies are enlisted in the cause, have been enabled to start this Home. Funds are needed to make the Home complete, and to maintain it. Miss Tylor and Miss Lowdell, the two ladies who are now living at the Royal Marines' Home, 62, High-street, Deal, will be glad to hear from those who will promise to become subscribers, and so help the work. Ellen N. P. Hulke.

A SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.

One of the most earnest and unwearied preachers of the truths that relate to our Lord's Second Advent is Pastor Fuller Gooch, of West Norwood. He convened a two days' conference on the subject at Lansdowne Hall last week; and the public response to his invitation was very gratifying. Though the weather on the first day was most unfavourable the attendances afternoon and evening were very large. The addresses, given by well-known expounders of this line of teaching, were fresh, vigorous, suggestive, and practical. At the closing meeting Mr. Gooch said they had prayed beforehand that speakers might be delivered from advancing fancies or theories of their own, and he felt that the prayer had been abundantly answered.

We are not able to give space to a detailed report of the addresses. For our readers it is not needful, as they have been made familiar with the subjects treated, so far as the main lines of interpretation are concerned. The great endeavour of the different speakers was to emphasise the fact of the promised return of the Lord, and to point out what indications are apparently supplied by current history as to the imminence of that return.

In the opening address of the Conference, on Wednesday afternoon, Dr. T. Neatby dealt ably with the fundamental topic, "The Holy Ghost the Author of the Prophetic Word." He was followed by Pastor Fuller Gooch, who was strong and impressive in his elucidation of "The Power and Presence of the Lord Jesus Christ." At the same session Mr. J. J. Sims expounded "The Typical Character of the Days of Noah."

On Wednesday evening (after some stirring words from the chairman, Sir R. Phayre) Mr. Sims took for his text, "A light that shineth in a dark place." He spoke with great vigour, and while maintaining the importance of prophetic truth, urged that we should never forget that the central point in all these studies is the person of the Lord Himself. The closing address was by Rev. W. R. Mowll, on "What the Lord's Coming Means to the Unsaved." He dwelt on the terrible results to those "shut out" from the marriage supper of the Lamb; briefly showing also, by way of contrast, the glories in which those "shut in" would participate.

Rev. John Urquhart was the first speaker on Thursday afternoon, his allotted subject being "Movements in the World and the Church which tell of the Lord's Coming." As to the first point he essayed to show that modern political upheavals in Europe and Asia are a fulfilment of Daniel's vision of the great image, with its ten toes, representing ten kingdoms that are to hold sway over the regions once possessed by the Roman Empire. Coming to the indications in the Church, Mr. Urquhart entered into an exposition of the epistles to the Seven Churches, given in Rev. i.-iii., as setting forth, to his view, progressive periods in the history of the New Testament Church. On this scheme of interpretation the speaker regarded the character of the two last-named churches—Philadelphia and Laodicea—as being applicable to the present age; both would continue till the Lord's appearing.

Rev. J. G. Train then earnestly pressed home the duty of "Waiting, Watching, and Working," while the Master tarries. As a third and closing speaker for the afternoon, Rev. J. Wilkinson was expected to give an address on "The Hope of Israel." A sore throat detained him at home, but a very capable substitute was found in his son, Mr. Samuel Wilkinson, who unfolded some of the national blessings that would come to the Jews with the re-appearing of the Lord, who in that re-appearing would be revealed to Israel as their once crucified and now glorified Messiah.

The closing meeting on Thursday evening was given up to addresses by Dr. Robert Anderson and Dr. McKilliam. The former spoke weightily on "The Certainty and Reasonableness of the Hope." He showed that in this Gospel age there seems to be a free permission on God's part of sin, suffering, and wrong-doing, without interposition. When this period of grace is fully completed then the mystery of God will be finished; the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever. The final words of the conference by Dr. McKilliam on "What manner of persons ought ye to be?" were very suitable and solemnising. He invited his hearers to an obedience of God's call to unreserved sanctification, and separation from an evil world.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

The twenty-third annual meeting in connection with the Orphan Homes of Scotland was held last week in the Christian Institute, Glasgow. There was a good attendance. The chair was occupied by Mr. A. Cameron Corbett, M.P.

The report for the past year stated that the work had been extensive in rescuing and caring for the needy little ones, and enlarging their borders. After much correspondence and negotiation they were at last successful in gaining the ground needed for the new farm, although at a cost far exceeding what was anticipated. The ground gave a very suitable location for the Consumptive Homes, as well as space to cope with the increasing work. Alongside the trials of this new department of work they had much to encourage them in the gifts received for building of the new Homes. There had been admitted 503 children, from the little orphan infant to the young man and woman, from all over the country, which, added to 1015 they began the year with, made a total of 1518 who had passed through the Homes during the past year. In addition to the children dealt with in the Homes, 636 homeless, friendless wanderers had been provided with a night's shelter in the model lodging-houses, and in many cases with food; besides thousands of other needy ones temporarily helped with means, provisions, and advice. The annual cost for a child's keep was £10, and that inclusive of all expenses for food, clothing, firing, washing, education, and management.

The Chairman spoke highly of Mr. Quarrier's new departure in connection with his receiving consumptive patients for treatment, and, if possible, cure. He thought it was a very good thing that they should have a special home for that purpose, and it was a pity they had not had one before.

Preceptor Dickson said he did not know that the people of Scotland could do a greater work than the work they were doing in connection with Mr. Quarrier's Homes. It appealed to every father, every mother, and every Christian. Not only did Mr. Quarrier feed, clothe, and educate the children, but he tried to make the children Christian boys and girls.

Principal Douglas said that anyone who had followed Mr. Quarrier's work knew it was a work well worth supporting. Although he had good men co-operating with him, Mr. Quarrier had taken care to do a very large share of the work himself.

Mr. Quarrier said at the end of every month, if there was a deficiency, they looked to the Banker, and expected that He would make good that deficiency before the month closed. Since last November he had watched the hand of the Lord in the daily gifts that had met the needs beyond what they expected or ever looked for. Their income amounted to £26,718, or over £2000 a month. There had been such regularity in the coming that one marvelled at the gifts. The year past had been very large in needs, but the year to come would have larger needs. He wanted £15,000 for the bread and butter of next year, because he was calculating that they would have from 1300 to 1400 children to deal with. He also calculated that he would need another £15,000 for stone and lime. He thought it would come. If it did not come from the wealthy, it would come from the pennies of the poor washer-women throughout the country. For the Consumptive Homes he had got about £12,000 sent in. In the Homes—which would be six in number—every patient would be treated in a separate room. All the leading physicians were in sympathy with this movement. The six houses would accommodate over 200 patients, and he calculated that if a cure were possible it would be accomplished in three months, making a total of 1000 patients treated in one year. With regard to the ordinary work, he mentioned that at the Bridge of Weir every one of the forty-six houses was fully occupied, each of them containing ten more children than they ought to have. Some friends asked him—When are you going to stop? His answer was—I am not going to stop until God stops sending the orphans. They built a church eighteen years ago to hold 400. That was the length of his faith eighteen years ago. Eight years later he built another church to hold 1000, and that was the length of his faith then. Alas! it was too small again: they needed another church to hold 1500, and no doubt they would yet need a church to hold 2000. None of their officials were officially paid, they liked to be fellow-workers. He was glad to see that the magistrates of Glasgow had at last taken a step to do something with street children. After thirty years' agitation they had wakened to the necessity of the case, and were going to promote a bill with a clause in it to help the poor orphan children of the street, and if ever he lived to see the result, he knew the magistrates would marvel at themselves for being so long in taking that step. He was thankful that the Government had intentions of taking a step in the direction of granting local veto, and he hoped the day was not far distant when the churches of the country would also bestir themselves to temperance reforms.

MR. NOBLE AT CANNING TOWN.

Some five or six years ago we gave an account of a wonderfully successful marquee mission, held under the auspices of the West Ham and District Temperance Union, and conducted by Mr. William Noble. The work has grown and deepened in interest. The committee are now holding their first mission in the New Public Hall, and the inaugural meeting was held on Saturday last, when Mr. J. H. Raper and other friends addressed the meeting.

On Sunday Mr. Noble was again welcomed to the district by a large audience, and he delivered an address remarkable for its return to his old power, and as a direct appeal to the conscience of Christians to abstain for others. As a result of the meeting many pledges were taken, and a spirit of deep thoughtfulness and conviction was manifest. The mission will continue nightly until Temperance Sunday, November 25.

THE RAGGED-SCHOOL UNION.

On Thursday week at the Camberwell Mission the weekly temperance meeting was of a special character. Rev. J. W. Horsley gave an address on "Housing the Poor," and forcibly described from his long prison experience some of the deplorable results of overcrowding and intemperance.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the Tobago Mission, a vigorous old Ragged School, was held on Monday week in the Seamen's Bethel, Isle of Dogs. The chair was taken by Mr. F. E. Duckham, of the Docks. The report read by Mr. White spoke of steady work and much blessing. Addresses were given by a representative of Dr. Barnardo's Evangelistic Band, another from Mr. Charrington's Mission Band, and other friends.

On Tuesday week the Town Hall, Folkestone, was well filled, in spite of the violent storm raging on the South Coast, with friends of the Ragged School Union. Much disappointment was felt at the absence of Lord Compton, through illness. In his place Mr. John Kirk gave a descriptive account of the fifty years' work of the R.S.U., detailing the various branches, and illustrating the whole with limelight views. Rev. Claude Bosanquet presided, and Revs. W. L. Lewin, A. J. Palmer, and R. Foster Jeffrey took part.

In the Ashley Mission Hall, Bethnal Green, a tea was given on Monday, October 12, to 150 home cripples under the care of Mr. H. Varney. Major-General Crefy presided, and spoke heartily. Mr. T. Miller, hon. superintendent of the Mission, also addressed the little ones.

"MAKE ME CHRIST-LIKE in all things," should be my constant prayer. Fill me with the Holy Spirit. —M'Cheyne.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIAN MADNESS CONCERNING MONEY.

Dear Sir,—Though I am three months nearer fifty than thirty, I fear I am going mad (as the world and some Christians count it) on the subject of Christians and money. The first thing that started this insanity with me was the reading of "The Lord's dealings with George Müller." That sent me to an examination of the New Testament, which—except the book of Revelation—I have read through three or four times, to learn about this subject, and especially as to whether Christians should save money (or other things) for old age or for uncertain distant but possible needs.

I endeavour rightly to divide the word of truth, and conclude in so dividing it that:

(1) The Epistles generally teach most fully how the Christian life is to be lived.

(2) The "Acts" teach mostly about evangelising.

(3) The Gospels contain proof of the Messiahship of Jesus the Son of God.

(4) The teachings and commands of Jesus were probably:

(a) Some for special individuals who were under the law of Moses.

(b) Some for the remainder of the Jewish dispensation.

(c) Some for Christians during the Christian dispensation.

Under which class are we to put the words, "Treasure not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, but treasure up for yourselves treasures in heaven"? (Matt. vi. 19, 20.) Though a few of the illustrative maxims would perhaps be limited to the political and social conditions prevalent when they were uttered, yet the principles underlying seem to me for the obedience of all Christians.

Suppose Jesus speaking to poor people had used these words, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth," and had at the time in his possession money laid by for future possible needs, what influence would He have had with them? Were I to go to the poorest districts of London, or any of our large towns, and repeat these words, what would they be worth if it were known I had in the bank enough money to keep me for a few years, or a pension? Jesus called upon his apostles, and upon at least one individual not an apostle, to leave all and follow Him. They evidently understood his words very literally, for the apostles forsook all (Mark x. 28), but the command was too hard for the young ruler (Mark x. 22). Jesus had no house of his own, for "The Son of Man hath not where to lay his head" (Matt. viii. 20), nor any store of money, for "certain women ministered unto him of their substance" (Luke viii. 2, 3).

Following the "Lay not up," there is, "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." Can I learn how the second command is to be obeyed? (1) Matt. xix. 21: "Go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven" (Luke xviii. 22).

(2) Luke xii. 33: "Sell that ye (little flock) have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not."

(3) Luke xii. 21: "The rich fool did not propose to give to those in need, but laid up treasure for himself and was not rich toward God."

(4) Luke xviii. 9: "Make to yourselves friends of [by the use of (Alford, Bengel, and others)] the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail [or it fails] they may receive you into everlasting habitations."

(5) 1 Tim. vi. 17-19: "Charge them that are rich in this world that they...do good...be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life."

I trust I shall not be misunderstood on a side issue by quoting these verses. Faith in Jesus as the Christ the Son of the Living God is presupposed in those addressed, as in those to whom Peter said, "Add to your faith virtue," etc. (2 Pet. i. 5-11).

Probably others of your readers have given attention to this subject. It might be profitable if some of them would state the conclusions at which they have arrived. I wish rather to be An Inquirer.

"BELIEVERS IN A DILEMMA."

Sir,—The letter of "Out in the Cold" in your issue of Nov. 8 voices the dilemma in which thousands of Evangelical Churchmen find themselves placed at the present moment. To point out the malady is one thing, to prescribe the remedy is another, and here comes in the crux of the whole question.

If I lived in a city or town, surely there would be one church in which I could worship where Gospel teaching prevailed, but being in the country, where there is only "Hobson's choice" so far as choice is concerned, what can I do? If I went out of my own parish to the next one, which is within a short distance of where I live, again similar Ritualistic teaching prevails, and should I incline to visit another parish church close to me the same tale must be told. In another, and even yet another, and all within a radius of two miles or a little over, the way of salvation is proclaimed, not by "Ye must be born again," but by baptism, confirmation, and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Your correspondent quotes the pious opinion of a devoted minister who counsels attendance, although the doctrine is destructive to truth, and hence to souls; and that good Nonconformist commentator, the late Rev. Albert Barnes, does the same, instancing the case of our Saviour attending the Synagogue, where there would be, to his knowledge, much contrary to sound doctrine, but, for example's sake, going Himself. I long tried to do this for the same assumed reason, but failed to keep "a conscience void of offence," and could not for example's sake go, where sinners who were asking the way Zionward were pointed just in the opposite direction, so I have long been "out in the cold."

By conviction, as well as choice, I am a Churchman. To leave the Church to the Romanisers is making the thing no better, but playing into the hands of Rome, which would be a grievous thing to do. We shall, in some way or other, have to be up and doing, as our Church, with all her traditions of usefulness, learning, and purity of doctrine in days gone by, will soon be a byword among the masses to whom she has ever been their truest and best friend.—Yours, etc.,

Another "Out in the Cold."

"BEHOLD, THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH."

Dear Sir,—It is with much interest that I have read the letter of your correspondent, "J. M.," in last week's Christian. For some time past I have been impressed with the importance of speaking of the Lord's near return, and I increasingly believe that such testimony will be blessed by God.

On more than one occasion I have seen worldly people start as if electrified when the subject has been quietly introduced into drawing-room conversation. May it not be that many who have hitherto rejected a crucified Saviour may be aroused to seek Him when testimony is borne to Him as the Coming One?

One young girl, who recently heard a friend speak with joyful expectation of the Lord's coming, was led, simply by this means, to see her own unpreparedness, and to seek and find the Saviour.

I could also mention cases known to me of Christians who have been blessed through this testimony. One Swiss lady especially, who said that the thought of the Lord's near return had "opened a new horizon" to her.

If the Lord Jesus Christ is to us dearer than all else beside, and if we really believe that He is coming again very soon, "we cannot but speak" of these "things."—Yours faithfully,

One Who Loves His Appearing.

PUBLIC-HOUSES AND THE GOSPEL.

Dear Sir,—It is nearly twelve years ago since I was told to go to a large public-house (the first I had ever entered), and give away some tracts and papers. God had a few days previously given me "such a blessing," and this command, I felt, came suddenly as a test. After prayer I pushed one of the spring doors open, and found the bar empty. The barman came forward, inquiring politely, "What for you, ma'am?" Some of God's children know what moment by moment leading of the Spirit is. I knew it in those few minutes. I requested to speak to the landlord. Yes, he thought I could see him; he was down in the cellar attending to some vats; he would call him up. He came in shirtsleeves and short white apron. No, he had no objection, in reply to my inquiry, not the least in the world, to my offering tracts or papers to his customers. And barely were the words out of his mouth when half-a-dozen men pushed their way in, noisily bantering one another, and asking for the particular drink they wished.

I started work, when one asked, "Do you belong to the Salvation Army?" "No," I said, "but I'm in the same boat with them." "How do you make that out?" "Well, I've got the same Saviour that they have, that's how I make it out." He said no more. Another said, "Here, I'll have a War Cry, I want to be saved." Handing him one, I asked, "Do you?" The man was afraid of his mates, and replied evasively, "Well, sometimes I think I do, sometimes I don't." My rejoinder was, "God won't save you until you are honest with Him." I handed one each to the rest. Meanwhile, this man, after folding up his paper, put it quietly in his pocket, muttering, "Thank yer, I'll tell the missus;" and turning round went out without his drink. I cannot help thinking he had a praying wife, and that someday I shall meet him in Heaven. One of the men after this spoke rudely, but was immediately stopped by the landlord, and each being supplied, including the barman, shortly afterwards I left.

In telling a gentle and beloved friend about it afterwards, and asking her advice, she said, "I think I should have looked that poor man (the last-named) in the face, and laid my hand on his arm, and said, 'I'm sorry that you are sunk so low as not to know how to talk; I shall pray for you.'" Intense, almost broken-hearted love for the sinner, at the same time as hatred for the sin, is what helps. Could you not recommend that the red-hot ones in every congregation form a committee, and map out their district, and then, not employ an agent, but do it themselves? The London City Mission employs some of their men for this special work of public-house visitation, I believe. They might give us valuable hints. I wish to encourage my sisters to begin. They can take with them, "The people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits" (Daniel xi. 32), and "Nothing shall by any means hurt you" (Luke x. 19).

I enclose my card, and remain, yours in Christ,

C. H. B.

Sir,—I have read letters on the above subject with deep interest. The invasion of public-houses is I believe, a most blessed field for Christian labour. I have pursued the work at intervals for several years, asking the master of the public-house kindly to accept three or four Gospel tracts, and craving permission to give them to the men in the bar. Out of some eighty or ninety cases I can only recall perhaps two refusals. The landlords have not only cheerfully acquiesced, but shown me the way to other rooms.

In one case the master took my part, saying that a public-house was quite a suitable place in which to give tracts. More than once I have been led to have conversation with the master and mistress in their private rooms, and when the bar is quiet have constant opportunities of speaking on the glorious Gospel with the men. I never speak on temperance, nor give temperance tracts, never allowing the people to know I am a teetotaller. In one case when I did so most violent language was the consequence. Women who undertake this work ought, in my belief, to be middle-aged or elderly.—Faithfully yours,

Near Windermere. Jane Dixon.

WINTER MISSIONS TO INDIA.

Dear Sir,—In a recent letter to The Christian on the subject of Rev. E. N. Thwaites' (of Salisbury) "Winter Mission to India," I referred to Dr. Somerville's visit to Delhi in 1874. I omitted to state that Dr. Somerville went out in connection with the "Winter Mission" of the "Anglo-Indian Christian Union," now the "Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society." I take the greatest interest in this excellent society, the secretary of which is Rev. J. Fordyce (late of Simla), and have subscribed to it for many years.

It is needless to say there is ample room in India for many more "messengers of the Churches."—Faithfully yours, J. F. Morton (Colonel).

Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

LADY BATTERSEA presided on Tuesday week at a united and largely attended meeting of Hampstead temperance societies held in West Hampstead Town Hall. Dr. Norman Kerr and others addressed the meeting.

TOUR TO ROME.—The governing body of the Polytechnic have, in response to numerous applications from teachers and others, arranged for a remarkably cheap tour to Rome and Italy at Christmas. There will be two parties, one leaving on the 20th and one on the 22nd of December. The inclusive fee for second-class return ticket will be thirteen guineas, including ten days' hotel accommodation. At Rome arrangements have been made for a series of lectures on the "Scene of Ancient Rome," and the "Footprints of St. Paul." Teachers and others could scarcely find a more delightful and profitable holiday than this tour affords. Particulars will be forwarded on application to the Secretary of the Regent-street Polytechnic.

THE CENTRAL SOUDAN MISSION.

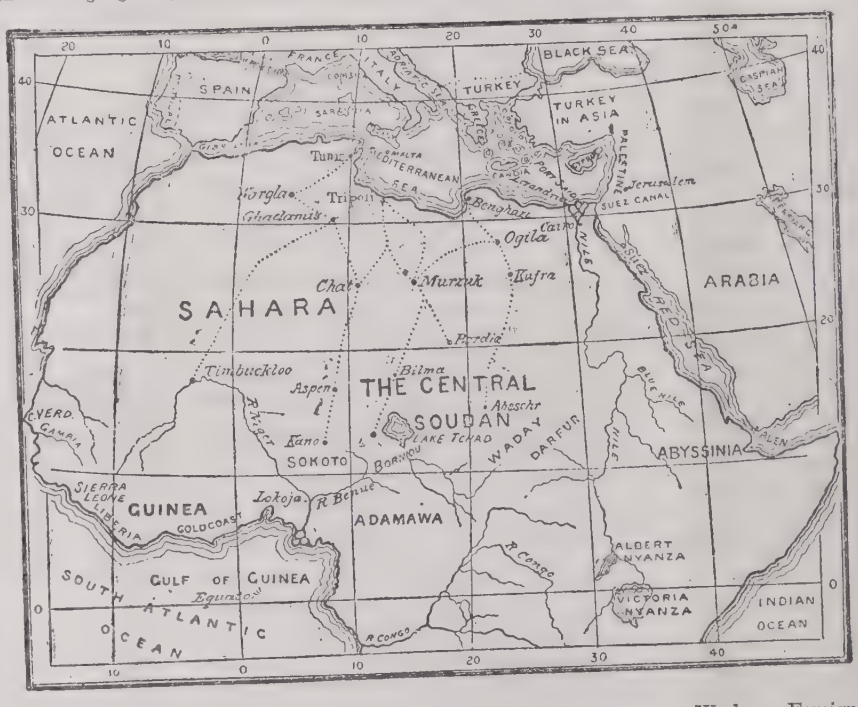
Mr. Hermann Harris, who has been at home seeking additional helpers for the Central Soudan, leaves this week on his return to that land, which has been so strongly laid on his heart. This wide region—the Central Soudan—is yet unreached by any Christian missionary. From the map it will be seen that the Soudan is the name given to the broadest portion of Africa, stretching from the Atlantic Ocean to the Red Sea, from Cape Verd to Suakim. It may roughly be divided into three parts—the Western Soudan, watered by the Niger; the Eastern or Egyptian Soudan, watered by the Nile; and the Central Soudan, comprising the five Mohammedan States that lie around Lake Tchad. These five States, with a population of over sixty millions, form the special field of this Mission.

Speaking a few days ago, at a farewell meeting held at Mildmay, Mr. Harris dwelt on the extent of this region, and added:—"For five months you may walk across this great country, and not meet one worker for Christ, not meet a single native Christian, and not meet one who has heard of the way of salvation. These people are living and passing away in darkness."

As to the spiritual condition of the people, he said:—"If a special correspondent was sent out by some Christian newspaper, and if he had an opportunity of getting behind the scenes, he could not describe it more accurately than in the language of this first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans. The darkness, the sin, the superstition they live in is in every way as dark as that of the heathen of St. Paul's day. The great difficulty we have in reaching them is that they have as a rule no sense of sin, because they think forgiveness is so easily obtained by some ceremonial act."



The present position of the Mission was thus indicated by Mr. Harris:—"I do not say this little Mission is the only one trying to reach these people; there have been others; Wilmot Brooke, Robinson, Edward White, and others have laid down their lives there at Lokoja and other places on the Niger, one of the gates of the Soudan; they were hoping to get into it, but God called them ere they succeeded. There are two American brethren seeking also to get into the country across the Niger. Our own Mission has two training homes, one at Tripoli and one at Gabes, with the object of enabling men to get well acquainted with the language, and to some extent with the characteristics of the Mohammedan religion, the obstacles they have to meet, and the prejudices that exist against them, so that after eighteen months or two years a man will be well equipped to enter the country. Three of our workers left England in May last, and after some stay at Lagos, left on July 20, and have got inland as far as the town of Illorin, a week's journey from the Upper Niger. The last letter I had was dated August 20 from that town, and the country seems quite open at present. We believe by this time they have crossed the river, and are now well on their way to Sokoto. We want all God's people to pray for this little band of three. At our training home we have four men at Tripoli and two at Gabes; two more workers are sailing to-night. I hope to go, towards the end of this month, with another. That will bring our number up to thirteen. I am here in England to ask if there are no more Christian young men who will hear the voice of God saying, 'Go ye into all the world.'"

"OUR FIRST CONVERT

Was a negro, a slave from Kano. He had been brought up to the northern shore, and after many years had his liberty given him. He lives to-day in a little circular hut like a bee-hive, built of plaited palm branches. I often used to visit this man to read the Word of God to him in his own tongue, the Hausa; and after about fifteen weeks his prejudice broke down, and like a little child he came to the Lord Jesus Christ. It made a wonderful change in him. Before this, I very seldom saw him looking happy. He was a weaver by trade, and I used to talk to him as he sat working at his loom; but after his conversion he had always such a bright face, and was often to be heard singing a little hymn I had taught him. He became kind to his family, and ceased to take part in the quarrels of the village. He learned to return blessing for cursing, good for evil. One day he said to me, 'I have altered that hymn you have taught me; I hope you won't object.' 'Not at all,' I said; 'let us hear what you have made of it.' 'Well,' he said, I want to get my wife and children to join in it, so instead of saying I have found a friend, . . . we say, we have found a friend . . .' I believe that man's wife since then has truly found the Lord Jesus Christ. He has been in constant danger of imprisonment. Under Turkish rule, a convert to Christianity is in great danger of his life. It has frequently been found that those who take an interest in the Gospel mysteriously disappear. We have had some sad cases in our own experience, and missionaries in other parts tell the same story. The converts are arrested on false charges, and probably either poisoned or sent away to some remote part.

"We have formed a little Union called the Soudan Helpers' Union. We want some Soudan helpers to hold the ropes while we go down the dark mine after precious souls. We have issued cards for any friends who think they might help us. It is not a collecting card, but there are four things members undertake to do:—(1) To pray regularly; (2) to give something regularly, however small; (3) to interest their friends in the foreign field; and (4) to ask God if there is anything more they can do to extend his kingdom abroad." The address of the Central Soudan Mission is St. Martin's House, 1, Gresham-street, E.C.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

The anniversary of the Oxford Diocesan Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society has just been held. Sermons were preached in nearly all the churches on Sunday, and on Monday a large meeting was held in the Examination Schools, at which Bishop Barry was the principal speaker.

A meeting was held last Thursday in aid of Zenana Missions in Exeter College, when Sir C. U. Aitchison presided, and Miss Swainson, of Palamcottah, gave an account of her work.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe is at present conducting a short series of special services for undergraduates at St. Peter-le-Bailey Church. The attendances have been very good, the Sunday evening number being very large. The preacher's keen powers of spiritual analysis have been greatly manifest, while the clearness and force of presentation of the old, old story has been a great delight to hear.

The annual meeting of the Oxfordshire Band of Hope and Temperance Union last Tuesday proved a gratifying success, and Rev. P. Watson, of Earlsfield, and Mr. J. Y. Henderson, of London, were most acceptable speakers.

The Home and Foreign Missions of the Methodist Free Church were pleaded for last week by the Rev. W. Yates, formerly of East Africa, who gave an interesting account of the work near Mombasa.

CAMBRIDGE.

Bishop Barry, the Hulsean Lecturer, preached the University Sermon in Great St. Mary's, on Sunday last, his subject being "The Expansion of Christ's Church." The preacher pointed out what a wonderful impulse the Evangelical Revival had given to foreign missions.

The address to University men, in the Alexandra Hall, on Sunday evening, was given by Col. Macgregor. Many, we believe, were convicted of sin.

Rev. W. W. Cassels, of the China Inland Mission, addressed the C.M.U. on Friday last. He impressed upon his hearers the thought that although Christianity has existed for nineteen hundred years, yet it is probable that scarcely one-half of the world has ever heard of the name of Christ. He gave a vivid picture of a remote district in China, and some account of the work done there for the Master.

An united ten days' Evangelistic Mission among the Nonconformist churches of Cambridge was begun on Sunday last. Prayer-meetings are held every day, and Gospel services every evening at 7.30. The missioners include Revs. J. F. T. Hallowes, C. B. Sawday, Marshall, Limon, and others.

For sixteen years a quiet, persistent work has been carried on in the Barnwell Theatre under the superintendence of Mr. W. K. Vawser. The annual meeting was held last Thursday, when the progress reported was very satisfactory. Blessing had resulted from a mission held by Mr. Richard Weaver, the fruits of which were still found. It is hoped that his sons may be able to visit the work ere long. During the past year considerable help has been given on Sundays during term time by Mr. A. Hart, of Corpus, and other Christian undergraduates, for whom it affords a useful sphere for acquiring experience in such work. The mission is fortunate in having won the cordial support of many local ministers, and of Rev. J. G. Dixon, vicar of the parish, who, in the middle of an evening filled with three other engagements, found time to give an excellent quarter of an hour's talk at the anniversary. The chair was taken by Rev. W. R. Mowll, vicar of Christ Church, N. Brixton, who, with Mr. George Morgan, travelled from London to attend the meeting, in view of the active part they both took in the work during their college days in the early years of its existence.

A capital missionary meeting, in connection with the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society, was held on Monday week in Hobson-street Schoolroom. Rev. W. H. Rigby, who has done good work in Ceylon, maintained his belief that Singalese Christianity will yet stand high as a power for God. Revs. T. H. Banks and A. Barrett took part in the meeting.

The annual Cambridge meeting of the B. and F. Bible Society was held in the Guildhall on Monday week. The local subscriptions for the year had amounted to £109 17s. 9d. Mr. Peckover (Lord-Lieutenant for the county) and others spoke. The speech of the evening was, however, that of Bishop Moule, who dwelt on the critical state of affairs in China, and urged that much prayer should be made on behalf of the missionaries and the native Christians.

Gospel meetings, conducted by Ridley men, are held at Shelford every Sunday afternoon and evening. These meetings have been much blessed, and many professed conversions have taken place.

MR. ALFRED S. DYER has not regained his strength with the rapidity he expected, and has been compelled to go to the Isle of Wight for complete rest.

MR. S. C. KANAGA RATNAM, from India, who has been addressing anti-opium and missionary meetings in and near London, leaves with Rev. A. W. Prautch on Dec. 6 for the North of England to address similar meetings. It is hoped that anti-opium friends will rally round him. He may be addressed care of Committee of Urgency, 31, Paternoster-square, E.C.

"MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT ARE TO BE CONGRATULATED ON HAVING GIVEN US, IN 'THE BELLS OF IS,' ONE OF THE BEST BOOKS OF THE SEASON."—The Sunday School.

From The Freeman.

"Mr. Meyer's new volume is packed with thrilling incidents, which lose nothing by the grace and vigour of the style in which they are told. Some of the stories read aloud will provoke to mirth even the most stolid: while others can scarcely be read without tears. Preachers, Sunday-school teachers, and temperance speakers will find here many a suggestion and illustration, and philanthropists of many sorts will find shrewd advice."

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

JEREMIAH has always a fascination to Christian hearts, because of the close similarity that exists between his life and that of Jesus Christ. Each of them was "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief"; each came to his own, and his own received him not; each passed through hours of rejection, desolation and forsakenness. And in Jeremiah we may see beaten out into detail, experiences which, in our Lord, are but lightly touched on by the evangelists.

It is by no means an easy task to discern the true order of Jeremiah's prophecies. The clue to their present arrangement seems lost. Probably the chapters are grouped more according to subject than to chronology, those touching on the same topic being grouped together. In this book I have endeavoured, as far as possible, to follow the chronological sequence.

There is an especial message in the ministry of Jeremiah for those who are compelled to stand alone, who fall into the ground to die, who fill up what is behind of the sufferings of Christ, and through death arise to bear fruit in the great world of men, which they passionately love.

"A delightful book; full of experimental religion, and a most suitable present for any pure-hearted young man or woman whose desire to devote life to the service of the Great Master is sincere and fervent. 'The Father of the Faithful' and 'The Friend of God' is presented to us in many lights—generally as an example to follow, occasionally as a beacon to warn. The volume is a very decided help in climbing the steep and rugged path that leads to the land of delight."

Cloth Boards 2/6 | PRESENTATION EDITION: Cloth Bev. Bds., gilt edges 3/6

"We can heartily recommend this book as full of helpful teaching happily and forcibly conveyed. Mr. Meyer speaks of the special charm which Joseph's life has had for him, not only for its intrinsic beauty, but because of its vivid anticipation of the Life that lights all lives. This thought is exemplified in a great variety of ways, and forms a prominent feature of the book."

From The Rock.

"We cannot speak too highly of this masterly exposition. The author shows profound insight into the mind of one who drank more deeply of his Master's spirit than the other Evangelists and Disciples, in that he remained nearest to his Lord. The reader will find in this handsome volume, which is so full of choice thoughts and helpful counsels, an unaffected simplicity, a deep spiritual tone, and a treatment of Scripture calculated to stimulate holiness. It will be most helpful to ministers, as well as their flocks."

Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter.

Cloth Boards 2/6 | PRESENTATION EDITION: Cloth Bev. Bds., Gilt Edges 3/6

From The Methodist Times.

"This volume is marked by vigorous language, by spiritual thought, and by a high and holy purpose—to deduce such spiritual exhortations and consolations from the words of the Apostle as will readily help Christian people in the varied circumstances of daily life. The work is practical rather than critical, and will help to promote the Christian life."

Practical Counsels concerning the Christian Life.

Cloth Boards, 1/- Cloth, Bev. Bds, gilt edges, 1/6

From The Baptist Magazine.

"Full of clear and weighty thoughts, laden with the results of rich and varied experience. Mr. Meyer's insistence on appropriation of Christ is better than manifestations that would arrest attention; and everything that follows on harmonious with . . . A more helpful book, especially to young Christians, we have rarely met with."

The Present Tenses of the Blessed Life.

Cloth Boards, 1/- Cloth, Bev. Bds., gilt edges, 1/6

"By a presentation of some of the choicest Scripture promises the author leads the minds of his readers to look forward to the revelation of the glory of God in them and to them."

From The Christian Leader.

"A book of good cheer for Christ's workers. Far more valuable than ordinary daily text-books, a chapter from 'The Future Tenses' might fitly close each working day, as a chapter from 'The Present Tenses' might open it."

Key Words of the Inner Life.

Cloth Boards, 1/- Cloth, Bev. Bds., gilt edges, 1/6

From Word and Work.

"One of those sweet, spiritual, soothing little books for this fretful age that Mr. Meyer knows so well how to write. ## THE Y.M.C.A.

A UNITED Y.M.C.A. is being formed at Hawick.

New Associations have been formed at Sittingbourne and Stowmarket.

The Carluke united Y.M.C.A. reports very marked progress and interest in all the branches.

The Grangemouth Association shows a total of ninety members, and earnest evangelistic effort.

Archdeacon Sinclair delivered an address at the annual meeting of the Wimbledon Association on Monday evening, 12th inst.

The Omagh Young Men's Union has changed its name in favour of the Y.M.C.A., and has become affiliated with the Irish Union of Young Men's Christian Associations.

On Saturday, the memorial stones were laid for a new Association building at North End, Croydon. Lord Kinnaird, Mr. J. Compton Rickett, and other well-known men took part.

The Bedford Y.M.C.A. reports steady work, with very successful open-air meetings. Five members of the Association are either already in the mission field or are preparing to go forth.

The Bristol Y.M.C.A have secured the People's Palace for Gospel services. Ned Wright gave the opening address last Sunday to an audience of upwards of 2000. He also spoke at a meeting of men in the afternoon at the Y.M.C.A. Hall.

Mr. R. D. Pringle, general secretary at Walsall, has been selected by the English National Council for the position of secretary of the Y.M.C.A. in Bombay. The formal appointment will be made on December 7, and it is expected that Mr. Pringle will arrive in India and commence his work early in January.

The Solicitor General for Scotland spoke the other day warmly and eloquently at Hawick at a meeting held in connection with a movement to start a fresh Y.M.C.A. work in the town. After addresses by Messrs. W. Oatts, Forbes, McPhail, and several ministers, it was resolved to press forward with the formation of an institute.

The report of Shaftesbury House, Margate, states that 1286 visitors enjoyed the benefit of the Home during the year June 1893-94. Much encouragement is reported in every branch of the Gospel work. At the "Hall by the Sea" the attendance has been even larger than in any former season, and night after night the Lord has owned and blessed the preaching of his Word.

In order to afford an opportunity of welcoming the new general secretary, Mr. S. Yates Ormerod, the president of the Southport Y.M.C.A., Mr. E. P. Parry, and Mrs. Parry gave a soirée in the rooms of the Association, Eastbank-street. There was a large assemblage of members and their friends. Archdeacon Clarke and many clergy and ministers were present, and addresses of welcome were delivered.

The annual meeting of the Derby Association, in connection with which Mr. A. K. Yapp is doing an excellent work as general secretary, was held in the Temperance Hall on Monday, November 12. Addresses were delivered to a large gathering by the chairman, Mr. H. H. Bemrose, Revs. J. Mursell and J. Howell, Major Seton-Churchill, and Mr. W. Hind Smith. The Association has now a membership of nearly 500.

An aggressive social purity work has been undertaken at the Y.M.C.A., Birmingham, under the name of the Y.M.C.A. Purity Society, with an influential committee. The principle of the movement is that the law of purity is of universal obligation; the object is to spread a purifying influence among young men. The hon. sec. of the society, Needless Alley, Birmingham, would be very pleased to communicate with any young man seeking advice in this matter.

The telling address delivered at a Y.M.C.A. conference in Tralee, by Mr. S. R. Martin, of Devonport, has been issued in booklet form (Y.M.C.A. Marlborough-street, Cork) under the title "Sunken Rocks in Association Waters." It is the utterance of one who knows the work, who has marked keenly the things which have spoiled the usefulness of some associations, and who is bold enough to speak what he feels. All Y.M.C.A. men would do well to "read, mark, learn."

At the State Convention of the Associations of Wisconsin at Janesville; the leading speakers were Professor W. W. White, of Chicago Bible Institute, Revs. A. A. Kiehle, and C. K. Ober. The work of the Y.M.C.A. in Wisconsin has been a powerful factor in the religious life of the last twenty years. In all of the larger cities there are associations who co-operate with the churches in every good work and are doing grand things for the homeless youth and the boys in factories, stores, and on the railroads. The total membership in the state is 3882.

Throughout last week special meetings were arranged at Stafford Rooms, W., in connection with the week of universal prayer for young men. Addresses were given by Revs. Gilbert Karney, H. L. C. de Candole, and Darlow Sergeant, and Messrs. John Balfour, Russell Hurditch, and Lewis Davies, which did much to help the workers and stimulate all to greater devotion in service. Mr. Herbert Arbuthnot thirdly entertained the members and friends at a reception on Wednesday, and in the course of the evening handed cards of membership to young men recently admitted. The week has been one of much blessing.

Association work in India is making steady progress. Madras is engaged in a scheme for the erection of a magnificent suite of buildings, and several of the non-Christian members have already taken sides and openly declared for Christianity. In Bombay the English Council intend shortly to place a new worker. Hydrabad, the capital of the Nizam's dominions, has just had a gift from the Nizam of land for new buildings. Jubbalpur, the last Association organised by Mr. Robert McCann before leaving India, is making very rapid and satisfactory progress. The need of such a work in this large and growing railway centre was long felt, and earnest workers are showing how the social needs and the religious wants of young men can be met. The outlook over the whole land is bright and cheery, and ere long the Y.M.C.A. will number in its ranks thousands of the educated natives of that remarkable land.

The Y.M.C.A. Week of Prayer has been observed from the 11th to the 18th inst. in all parts of the world. In this country, as usual, it has been made the occasion of many interesting meetings, and hundreds of special sermons to young men have been preached by clergy and ministers under the auspices of the Association. At Birmingham, for example, no fewer than ninety were delivered, at Sunderland seventy, at Leeds fifty-six, at Sheffield fifty, and in a number of other towns the proportion has been as high. On Thursday evening there was an united gathering of metropolitan members at Exeter Hall, presided over by Sir George Williams. The first portion of the meeting was devoted to prayer, and the remainder to open conference upon practical departments of Association work. The previous day Mr. Chas. Fermaud, secretary of the Central International Committee (whose headquarters are at Geneva), addressed the mid-day prayer meeting at Exeter Hall, speaking upon the difficulties of Association work in Roman Catholic countries.

THE Y.W.C.A.

LORD KINNAIRD presided on Friday at a crowded meeting to inaugurate a new branch in connection with the Rotherhithe Free Church, when Lady Ernestine Bruce and others gave addresses.

God has again been setting his seal of blessing to the Wednesday mission services at the Central Institute, and owning the faithful messages of his servants. A missionary sale of work will take place afternoon and evening in the 27th inst.

Some missionary workers at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, interested in the Y.W.C.A., are desirous of starting a branch there if the way is made clear. Prayer is asked on behalf of Brazil, where great ignorance, indifference, and bigotry prevail. Spiritualism and atheism are making rapid strides.

Classes in cookery and sick nursing, taught by London County Council teachers, are being held at the Cloudesley Institute, 34, Barnsbury-street, Islington. Admission is free to the six nursing lectures, which embrace such practical subjects as the nurse, patients' food, medicine, poulticing, disinfecting, etc. All who are likely to be brought into contact with the sick will find the lectures of the greatest service.

The report of the Exeter Branch states that of all the classes, those for Bible study are the best attended, and the steady increase in numbers is very encouraging. There is a deepening interest in foreign missions. A sewing class, singing class, ten days' mission, and sale of work have been held. The premises at 9, Dix's Field are attractive, and ladies passing through Exeter will find good accommodation at the Home.

The usual monthly conference of secretaries and workers was held at the Morley Halls on Thursday last. Mrs. Hatt Noble presided. Miss Wingfield Digby, of Bournemouth, spoke on "Preparation," from the words, "Prepare to meet thy God." Mrs. Hatt Noble then gave an address on the "Grace of Giving." God so loved that He gave, is the model of all giving. From the moment when we have given ourselves to the Lord nothing that we possess is our own. Giving is the proof of our love and sincerity. In the course of conversation it was urged that Christian giving should be proportionate, systematic, and done unto the Lord. The conference closed with prayer.

THE WESLEYANS OF COLNE have placed their premises at the disposal of the local coroner for the purpose of holding inquests, in order to obviate the necessity of holding them in public-houses.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

FOR some time past Endeavourers in Australia have been working among the aborigines, amongst whom a society has now been formed.

Forty societies were registered in the British Section of Christian Endeavour during the week ending November 10. This is the largest number ever registered in one week.

At the annual meeting of the C.E. Society of Edgebaston, Birmingham, Rev. W. S. Houghton presided. The membership was given as 229, having more than doubled during the year.

The Karen Society at a college in Rangoon, Burmah, has grown so large that it has become necessary to divide it into sections, and to limit the time allowed for each member to take part.

At its recent convention New Jersey made trial of denominational rallies, and with marked success. The new State hymn and its composer were presented to the convention, and one of the addresses dealt with the subject of spirituality in our music.

After the Illinois Convention the members of one delegation held for two hours an informal meeting in the car as they waited on a siding for the train that was to take them home. Many testimonials were given as to light gained at the Convention on personal calls for service in the mission fields and elsewhere. Requests for prayer were made, songs were sung, Scripture repeated, and prayer offered for the railroad men and others who stood by the side of the car listening.

A remarkable feature of the recent Pennsylvania Convention was the half-hour evangelistic services at noon, of which more than fifty were held in twenty-six different places—factories, almshouse, hospital and children's Home. From twenty-five hundred to three thousand attended every day. In one factory there were present at the meeting as many as were employed there. On the trains going to the Convention, bands of twenty or thirty workers each were formed to conduct these meetings. On the last evening a great evangelistic service was held, after which eighty-five inquirers remained.

IRISH NOTES.

BISHOP W. TAYLOR, D.D., of West Africa, has held a four days' series of Gospel services in the Methodist Church, Armagh.

The Dublin University Church Workers' Union, lately established, has now fifty-one members, and promises to be a very useful organisation.

A remarkable religious awakening has been going on in Limavady, co. Derry, where Miss Wakefield, of Portadown, has been conducting Gospel services.

In connection with the Belfast Presbytery, a series of weekly prayer meetings is being held in Belfast for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the city and neighbourhood.

A series of meetings has been held by Rev. David Mullan in Cork, Tralee, Limerick, and other centres in the South of Ireland, under the auspices of the Dublin branch of the Evangelical Alliance.

The Belfast Y.M.C.A. is prospering. Its Sunday morning Bible class for men is the largest of the kind in Ireland, and the movement inaugurated a few months ago on behalf of the Postal Telegraph messengers has resulted in the professed conversion of between twenty and thirty of these lads.

The seventh annual junior Methodist Ministers' Convention was held in Athy last week under the presidency of Rev. W. H. Smyth, B.A., Dublin, and was marked by a large measure of the outpouring of the Holy Ghost on those who were present. There was a large attendance, representing all parts of the country.

A Dublin priest having stated in a recent sermon that out of 150 boys in Glencree Reformatory 120 had graduated in Mrs. Smyly's Bird's Nest, the manager of the institution referred to writes to the Freeman's Journal, saying that of the 188 boys in the reformatory, only two, possibly three, are known to have been in Mrs. Smyly's school.

AN INTERESTING GATHERING of the Chelsea Working Men's Teetotal Society was held in Union-street Hall last week on the occasion of the teetotal birthday of Mrs. Durrant and Mrs. Walter Garlick, the former having signed the pledge fifty-four years ago and the latter twenty-seven years since.

THE RECENT COMMUNION SABBATH in the First Free Church, Blairgowrie, was followed by a week of special mission services. The minister of the congation, Rev. William Muir, conducted the meetings. A special visitation of the town had been made, and the audiences grew as the week advanced. Towards the end the large church was crowded, and it was evident that a deep impression had been produced on the people.

The Book World.

DR. STALKER ON THE PASSION.

The Trial and Death of Jesus Christ. By James Stalker, D.D. (1s. Hodder & Stoughton.) This "devotional history of our Lord's passion" is a worthy complement to Dr. Stalker's famous "Life of Christ" and his "Imago Christi." It is full of quiet and restrained power. The sublime story is simply pourtrayed without any of the high and unnatural colouring to which the transcendent theme would tempt the mere emotional impressionist. With the simplicity, however, are mingled strength and penetrating vision; so that none of the collateral lessons of the narrative seem to be overlooked. The extract given in our last issue touching on Christ before Herod was a good sample of this. The historical method of treatment does not give much scope for doctrinal disquisition, but on the central theme of atonement Dr. Stalker is clear, while at the same time he formulates no "theory" as to its philosophy. The idea of the book is that of a devotional help, and this is constantly kept in view. The book distinctly enriches Passionistic literature.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Hand and Heart is one of the excellent magazines edited by Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D. There are popularly-written papers of sterling value on temperance and business, as well as several short stories and plain sermons. (2s. Office, 7, Paternoster-Square.)

Our Darlings is a good children's serial, and the annual volume is as bright as ever. The stories include: "Pat, the Lighthouse Boy," by Evelyn Everett-Green; "Boarded by Cannibals," by W. Charles Metcalfe; and "A Hard Struggle," by Catharine Shaw. The coloured pictures and engravings are numerous and good, and "our darlings" will find pleasure and instruction in the pages. (Coloured boards, 3s.; presentation edition, 5s. Shaw & Co.)

Good Words, edited by Dr. Donald Macleod, is a very attractive volume. In addition to the serial story, "Kitty Alone," by S. Baring Gould, there are several short stories, many biographical and hiscal papers, and sketches of travel, all admirably illustrated. There are also Sunday readings from various pens, and of different types of thought. The Sunday Magazine, edited by Rev. Benjamin Waugh, has similar characteristics. The serial is "A Lost Ideal," by Annie S. Swan. There are Biblical papers, Sunday addresses to children, and sketches on missionary and philanthropic effort at home and abroad. The illustrations are numerous and of a high order. (7s. 6d. each. Isbister & Co.)

---

The Morning Star for November contains several very instructive papers on prophetic subjects. This monthly should prove of great service to careful students of the Bible. (1d. Holness.)

Short Prayers for the Tried and Sorrowful (G. Stoneman), a booklet prepared as a help to those in great need and, it may be, little accustomed to express themselves in petition. The prayers are accompanied by suitable passages of Scripture.

Madeline: A Tale of a Haunted House. By Jennie Chappell. (2s. Partridge & Co.) A well-written story for girls. Weird a bit to begin with; but all is simply enough explained, without any "supernatural" agency. Apart from this there are capital sketches of girl-life and character.

Sermonettes from Tennyson. By Achilles Taylor. (Simpkin.) The author has drunk deeply into the spirit of the strong sweet singer who has passed away from us, and these brief studies will be much enjoyed by all who love and appreciate the worth of the writings of the deceased Laureate.

Sunday Sunshine, an annual for children, edited by Catharine Shaw, is gay inside and out. There is a serial story, "Dora's Mistake," by A. L. O. E.; and the entire contents, fully illustrated, are such as Christian parents will be glad to induce their little ones to read. (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. Shaw & Co.)

Mr. G. W. McKane, of Keswick, has published a short memoir of the late George Silwood, whose patient endurance and bright Christian testimony are known to many convention goers. Mr. Silwood's letters, of which a number are given, show him to have been deeply taught in the truths of our holy religion.

How to Live Christ. By C. J. Westlake. (C. Caswell, Birmingham.) A little book intended to help the believer in daily living, alike in communion and service. Various stages are simply and Scripturally presented, all gathering round Christ, in the hope of leading the reader into fuller and deeper spiritual life.

Talks with Young People on the Psalms, by C. H. Perry. (Elliot Stock.) This is an effort to bring the experimental teaching, which has endeared the Psalms to the saints of all ages, within the capacity of children. To many these "talks" may be helpful as a beginning, but they cannot fully satisfy. If, however, they are the means of leading to fuller study, they will serve their purpose.

The Inns of Court and Chancery. By W. J. Loftie. (Seeley & Co.) Those who love to dip into antiquarian lore will revel in these descriptions and memories of London's legal shrines. Glimpses are afforded not only of the historic haunts of wig and gown, but of famous judges and advocates. Mr. Railton's numerous illustrations are exquisite.

The reader of Electricians and their Marvels, Walter Jerrold (1s. 6d. Partridge & Co.), takes a trip into wonderland, and a pretty long journey it is, embracing two millenniums of time. Edison and his numerous inventions have a chapter to themselves, and the marvellous history of electrical science and discovery are altogether admirably sketched.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has laid his stone on the cairn of devotional literature in Prayers for Heart and Home (2s. 6d. Jas. Nisbet & Co.), and a worthy addition it is. Even those who prefer extemporised and spontaneous prayer for the family will find in these comprehensive and Spirit-taught petitions much inspiring guidance in the service of daily worship.

Purpose, Power, Pleasure, Divinely Manifested in Christ and in His Church. By John Gritton, D.D. (1s. C. J. Thynne, 6, Great Queen-street, W.C.) This booklet contains the substance of sermons preached last spring in Trinity Chapel, Hackney. Dr. Gritton's orthodoxy is above suspicion, and the margins of these instructive pages show that he endeavours ever to conform his utterances to Scripture teaching.

The Daily Course of the Christian Life, compiled by Rev. John Bate. (3s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.) A devotional work for self-examination, reflection, prayer, and praise. A practical and personal question is set for each day of the year, and the meditation is made to turn on this interrogation. Blank pages are provided for memoranda. Many, we doubt not, will find these portions helpful and stimulating in the life and walk.

Ten-Minute Sermons. By Dr. Robertson Nicoll. (3s. 6d. Isbister & Co.). These sermon-leaders are gems of full-orbed thinking, set in a framework of golden words. Though produced in the rush of journalistic work, we doubt if the author has ever written anything finer or more serviceable to the average man. They will amply bear the severe test of re-repeated reading. Other and more prolix preachers will find them richly suggestive.

Musicians and their Compositions. By J. R. Griffiths. (1s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co.) This book is intended to give a general idea of some of the more prominent of the world's great composers. The author supplies just the information necessary to enable anyone to gain a comprehensive idea of the works and lives of six gifted musicians—Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn. A portrait of each composer adorns the pages.

Five Stars in a Little Pool. By Edith Carrington. (6s. Cassell & Co.) The publishers, in sending out this children's pretty blue book, express the opinion that "it may be read by old and young alike with a good deal of pleasure and profit"; and we cordially endorse the statement. The author possesses in a very special measure the gift of describing with perfect naturalness youthful experiences and dialogues. "Pleasure and profit" certainly march hand in hand through these delightful chapters; and the former is enlarged by the pictorial morceaux from skilled pencils.

Essential Christianity: A Series of Explanatory Sermons, by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A. (3s. 6d. Isbister & Co.) This addition to the "Gospel and the Age" series has the general characteristics of Mr. Price Hughes' writings—breadth of view and glowing enthusiasm. Twenty in number, the discourses bear on present-day questions. The teaching is not deep, but practical; though we do not always follow the method or form, we yet admire the earnestness and vigour which pervade the volume. Preachers will find in the book many useful thoughts and applications of truth.

The Religious Tract Society send a number of stories, nicely bound, and excellent gift books. Amongst these are Norman's Inheritance (2s.), by E. C. Kenyon and Rev. R. G. Soans, whose joint authorship has resulted in a book the boys will welcome; Jim and Napoleon (1s. 6d.), by Lydia Phillips, is another and pleasing boys' tale; The Old House by the Water (2s.), by Bessie Marchant, will interest the girls; while A Strange Christmas Angel, by Rev. W. Senior, Eric's Good News, and Benedicta's Stranger are well-written shilling reward books.

The Daisies of Nazareth. By Hugh Macmillan, D.D. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Into this prettily got up volume are gathered twenty-two addresses, by Dr. Macmillan, of Greenock, given to the young people of his congregation. They are marked by the author's distinguishing familiarity with the broad fields of nature, and by his happy gift of educing moral and spiritual teaching from analogies in natural life. Intelligent children will find in these pages many a delightful excursion, from which they may return well laden with treasure trove that will enrich them all through the journey of life.

The Gospel according to Satan. By Heywood Smith, M.A., M.D. (Marshall Brothers. 1s.) This is the second edition of a pamphlet published at first anonymously. Dr. Heywood Smith has now declared himself the author. Satan is set forth as the preacher of various errors, all of which are calculated with infernal skill to lead souls astray—each one is opposed to the Gospel of God. Very plain words are spoken of poets, scientists, and others, who are used by Satan to preach his gospel of procrastination, universal salvation, annihilation, mere morality, etc. Scripture is largely quoted. It is a book that may be widely circulated with good effect.

Little Orphans. By M. H. Cornwall Legh. (Nelson & Sons. 2s. 6d.) Here we have the story of two orphan girls in an Orphanage. To some extent, the author seems to write with a purpose, for the dull monotonous mechanical life is brought out clearly. No charges are made against such institutions. The matron and committee are, in fact, depicted as really solicitous for the welfare of the children—only the routine life, not easily avoided in such places, is shown to be deadening in effect. All ends brightly and well. An "orphan's" father turns up from foreign climes, and his child carries off as "adopted sister" another inmate who has been a real friend to her in the Home. The story is well written, and full of touching interest.

Elizabeth Jane Whately. By her Sister. (Seeley & Co.) Miss E. J. Whately, the eldest daughter of the honoured Archbishop Whately, of Dublin, is a name familiar to our readers as that of one whose contributions oft enriched our pages. Hence we welcome most cordially this memoir of her useful and earnest life. We could well wish it were fuller and more comprehensive, but its brevity and simplicity will make it all the more easily read, and win for its beautiful lessons of whole-hearted consecration a wider hearing. What the two Misses Whately were enabled to do—Mary in Cairo, to which she devoted herself, and Jane, by means of her gifted pen, for Egypt, Spain, and missions in general—has made them famous as worthy daughters of a worthy sire. Mrs. Charles contributes to this memoir an introduction, which she calls "a tribute of honour and affection to a dear and most faithful friend."

How Robin Did It; and How other Birds may do it, too. This penny booklet, giving an account of the Robin dinners, may be had from "Home Words" Office, 7, Paternoster-square, E.C.

How to Get On; or, Principles to Start with in Life. By Clement Clemance, D.D. (Elliot Stock.) These are pages of sound instruction and useful counsel on a subject of special importance to young people and to those who have the training of them.

Messrs. Pears & Co.'s Christmas Annual is accompanied by thirty original drawings by Mr. Charles Green, which form the illustrations to a reprint of Dickens's "Chimes." There are also three presentation plates printed in colours—"The Fisherman's Wooing," "A Christmas Offering," and "Sea Horses."

The Real Reformation Catechism of 1553, By Bishop Poynet; or, Plain Instruction, containing the Sum of Christian Learning, set forth by the King's Majesty's Authority for all Schoolmasters to Teach. Mr. C. J. Thynne, 6, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn-fields, W.C., has published a new edition of this interesting work, with a recommendatory preface by Rev. Edward Nangle, M.A. (3d.)

Lady Beaujolois Dent has written a very helpful booklet suggesting thoughts for the New Year. It is entitled "Nearer," and deals with salvation in its present and eternal aspects. (1s. per dozen.) We trust it will have many readers. Another booklet, full of evangelistic purpose, is, From Darkness to Light; or, Thoughts on a Fog. (6d. per dozen. Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

Christmas and New Year Cards.—Mr. E. Kaufmann, 30, Paternoster-square, has issued a choice selection of cards, specially suited for distribution by Christian workers. They are in packets, costing 6d., 9d., and 1s., according to size and finish. Landscape and floral designs are alike beautiful, and among the most attractive are the series called "Eastern Views," "Voices of Truth," and "Echoes from Heaven" (1s. packets). Other bright cards, also with choice selections from Holy Scripture, are "Little Friends of Jesus," "Golden Treasures," and "The Way of Peace" (6d. packets). C. W. Faulkner & Co., 41, Jewin-street, E.C., have issued some bright cards for the season. The toy series, representing animals and children, will amuse the young. The calendars, small and large, are very varied, and some of them have spaces on which names and addresses may be printed. Pictures of cats and dogs, entitled "Got him!" and "What is it?" are reproduced from drawings by H. H. Couldery. (1s. each.) The new table game, Malletino (1s.) will also please the little folks.

THE JEWELS IN THE BREASTPLATE,
AN EMBLEM OF CHRIST'S HEART.
BY F. J. WILLIAMS.
Demy 16mo., 133pp., paper covers 6d.; cloth gilt, 1s.

God spake to his people of old in different ways, sometimes in appearances by the second Person of the Trinity—the Angel of the Covenant—sometimes by Urim and Thummim, sometimes from the Divine Shechinah of the Mercy Seat, and sometimes by the mouth of the Prophets; but now God communicates with his people in another manner, as the author of this book has endeavoured to show.

The very object of the Angel's song, "GOOD TIDINGS OF GREAT JOY," was that the presence of God might be realised and felt in the hearts of His people now; for as there is to be a fitness for that presence hereafter, it must be had now, and the object the author had in writing this book was that God's people might test themselves in this manner.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. J. Albinson has been holding services at the Sailors' Rest, Fleetwood, with much blessing. Prayer is desired for the mission, which is being continued this week.

Mr. Richard Weaver is preaching during the present month at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E. The Word on Sunday was with power, and not a few, being pricked to the heart, were compelled to flee to Christ.

Alton, Hants.—A mission for the deepening of spiritual life and for evangelistic effort has been concluded here. Christians have been blessed and sinners won to the Lord. The preacher was Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes.

Belfast.—A seven weeks' mission has been concluded in Wylie-street Hall, and the results have been cheering. A number have been led to give their hearts to the Lord, and believers have shared abundantly in the blessing.

Hamilton, N.B.—A series of Gospel meetings, in the Kensington Hall, conducted by Messrs. Brown and Murray, has been instrumental in leading a number to spiritual decision. The evangelists are now at work in Motherwell.

Wood Green, N.—Rev. A. T. Jones, of Maindee, Mon., conducted a three days' mission at the Gospel Hall, commencing on Sunday last. The results were remarkably encouraging, so far as human judgment can decide, in the gathering in of a good number of inquirers.

Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a four days' mission at Ryde, I.W., in connection with the local Y.M.C.A. Much practical sympathy was shown by many Christian workers, and the attendances throughout were very encouraging. The Bible-readings given in the afternoons were of a very helpful and instructive character, and were much enjoyed.

Mr. Chas. Inglis is seeing great blessing in his evangelistic work in America. In the various cities he has visited in the Eastern States the Lord has blessed the Word among all classes. The evangelist is now in the West, holding meetings in Dr. Brookes' church, St. Louis. After this he goes to Kansas City, and hopes to return to England at the end of December.

Messrs. McNeill and Burke appear to have taken by storm the hearts of the good people of Sydney, judging from the newspaper reports of the mission there. As at other places, the crowds were immense. The straight and soulful preaching of the one, and the skilful, heart-moving song of the other evangelist were by God's blessing leading many to the feet of the Saviour.

Mr. William Nobbs held some time ago a five weeks' Tent Mission in Bath, and later on a week's services in a hall at Tiverton, near Bath. The Lord gave blessing, and several were saved. Subsequently Mr. Nobbs visited Salisbury for a twelve days' mission, and a good time was granted. A three weeks' mission at Staines followed, and at the closing meeting many confessed Christ.

Mr. W. D. Dunn has been conducting a series of meetings in Leith during the past fortnight, following up the work commenced by Messrs. Weaver. The power of God has been shown in a marked manner. At the closing meeting held in St. Paul's Church on Sabbath evening, many professed to surrender themselves to Christ. The prayers of Christians are requested on behalf of the young converts, and for a continuance of blessing.

Mr. Charles Cook is holding this week a special mission for men at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, 172, Queen's-road, Bayswater. The opening services on Sunday were with much power, God giving not a little blessing. The prayers of God's people are asked for the remaining meetings of this mission. In connection a united prayer and praise meeting has been arranged for Saturday evening (24th), at 8 p.m., at the Hyde Park Mission Hall, a hall in which quite a cheering revival is now in progress.

Pastor H. E. Stone is holding a ten days' mission at Great Victoria-street Church, Belfast. Night by night the numbers have increased, and the seal of God's blessing has rested in the conversion of men and women. The church had spent much time in the best of all preparation—earnest prayer—and in spite of the tempestuous weather, the people gathered. But the best joy was that of meeting some who, ten years before, were blessed during a former visit. The church at Victoria-street is enjoying much blessing, and pastor and people may rejoice. Indeed, there are signs of "reviving" throughout Belfast.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Special services, conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, in Finnieston Free Church, Glasgow, were brought to a close on the 18th inst. A quiet but earnest work began at the outset of the mission, and went on steadily until the concluding days, when a very deep impression prevailed. Night after night, during the entire fortnight, the power of the Lord was present to heal, and there is, we believe, fruit still to be gathered. Christians were blessed, backsliders were restored, and many have confessed Christ as their Saviour. Mr. Lane's labours elsewhere will be followed with affectionate and prayerful interest by those who have worked with him in this mission. David M. M'Intyre.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. W. Gray, late of the C.M.S., is now at Wiesbaden, under treatment by a specialist for his eyes.

Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt, of St. Paul's, Stratford, has accepted the charge of Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, in succession to the late Canon Hoare.

Rev. Peter Mackenzie, who for more than forty years has done a unique work in Methodism, celebrated last week his seventieth birthday. For years past he has travelled 10,000 miles a year, and averaged ten addresses a week.

Earl Compton, whose active and earnest service in Christian and philanthropic work must have been marked by many with thankfulness, is, we regret to hear, laid aside by illness, while the Countess is also in delicate health. Consequently they have been ordered to Egypt, where they intend spending the winter on the Nile. Many workers in London will miss them sorely.

Rev. P. Ireland Jones has been appointed as secretary of the C.M.S. in succession to Rev. W. Grays. He was for two years Vice-Principal of Ridley Hall. He joined the C.M.S. in 1885, and has for some years acted as secretary to the Calcutta Correspondence Committee. Himself deeply anxious to continue at work in the field, he was restrained by the definite verdict of the doctors that he could not return to India.

The Bishop of Bedford is once more seriously ill, and it is generally feared that his retirement must be shortly announced. Dr. Billing wanted to resign twelve months ago, but the Bishop of London advised him to take a further rest in the hope that he might be restored to health. For a time he improved, and his return to work was hailed with satisfaction throughout East London. But unhappily even that moderate strain has proved too much for him.

Bishop Evington, with his wife, has had a narrow escape from being shipwrecked on the coast of Japan. Messrs. Dickeson and Stewart have received from Rev. A. B. Hutchinson a short account of the accident. The steamer in which the Bishop and Mrs. Evington had taken passage ran into a pile of rocks, eight miles from the land, on the night of September 27. For four hours they were in great peril, but were rescued by fishing-boats and landed at Fukuoka, "much exhausted but thankful to be safe."

GATHERED GOLD.

The old man is not sent to the hospital to be healed, but to the Cross to be crucified.—C. H. Spurgeon.

KNOWING GOD.

Knowing and loving—how they are coupled in the Scripture! Abraham knows God, and therefore loves Him. David, Isaiah, and Daniel, the beloved seer, are intimates with God; they behold Him by faith and in visions which He gave. They behold! and they ADORE. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is Love."

THE TIDE.

I watch the tide come in from sea:
Dear Lord, is there a tide for me?
So long, so long the sands were dry
So long upon life's shore I lay,
Like seaweed that is left to die,
Feeling the waters ebb away,
The tide comes in; it floods the sand;
Lord, is Thy coming near at hand!

Danske Dandridge.

THE POWER OF GODLINESS.

The power of godliness consists in a real and effectual conversion of the whole heart to God, in opposition to a merely external reformation. It will appear in a cordial reception of Christ Jesus in his whole salvation, "as the wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption" of sinners, in opposition to a nominal faith in Him. It will produce a simple and unaffected dependence on the mighty operations of the Holy Spirit for every good thought, desire, and action, in opposition to a merely general reference to his aid. It will be seen in a spiritual and heavenly state of the mind and affections, which delights in prayer and communion with God, and honours the holy Sabbath, in opposition to a cold performance of some of the duties of religion.—Dr. Wilson.

OBITUARY.

MR. ISAAC WYLIE, NEWBRIDGE.

We learn, with sorrow, of the falling asleep in Jesus of Mr. Isaac Wylie, at Newbridge. For many years he served as Scripture-reader on the Curragh Camp; for the past eight years he has been an invalid. In weakness he bore strong testimony to the sustaining grace of God.

CANON PROTHERO.

The death is announced of Canon Prothero, Subdean of Westminster, and rector of Whippingham, Isle of Wight. He was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, taking his degree in 1843. In 1857 he was appointed to the rectory of Whippingham, and retained throughout his life the esteem and confidence of the Royal Family and of the Court and the Royal household. He was a clergyman of wide social sympathies.

MR. WOODCOCK, CONGO-BALOLO MISSION.

Our readers will be grieved to learn that of the four missionaries who left Harley House for Lololand in August last, in connection with the Congo-Balolo Mission, one never reached his destination. Mr. Woodcock fell asleep in Jesus at Matadi, on September 26, after only four days illness, and was buried at Underhill, where so many are laid to rest, awaiting their Lord's coming. Mr. Woodcock, with Mr. James, had been detained at Matadi, as only enough carriers had arrived to take half the party up the cataract region. While waiting here a fever attacked the former, which proved fatal, in spite of the kind nursing of his companions, Messrs. Domenjoz and James, and the skill of Messrs. Harvey and Hill, of the A.B.M.U. Mr. James says of him that he gave every evidence of being a God-sent man, firm in purpose, and earnest in devotion. He was always ready to witness for his Master, and never failed to speak a word to the poor natives whenever there was an opportunity. The friends at Harley House ask prayer for his widowed mother, who so willingly gave up her only son to go to dark Africa, and for his surviving sister.

DR. JAMES M'COSH.

With the death of Dr. James McCosh, which took place at Princeton, New Jersey, U.S.A., on Friday last, passes from sight a writer whose philosophical works are well and favourably known on both sides of the Atlantic, and who, during his thirty-nine years' connection with college work, exercised a strong and beneficial influence on the rising generation of the two English-speaking nations. Born in Ayrshire, Scotland, April 1, 1811, he was educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. He was for some time a minister in the Church of Scotland, but he afterwards left the Established Church and took a prominent part in the organisation of the Free Church of Scotland in 1848. In 1851 he was appointed Professor of Logic at Queen's College, Belfast. He accepted the presidency of the Princeton College in 1868, and on going to America to take up this post quickly acquired a great reputation as a divine, and as an authority on the theory of education. Dr. McCosh resigned the Presidency of Princeton College in 1887, but retained the post of Professor of Philosophy, and continued to lecture until about four years ago. He received the LL.D. from Aberdeen in 1850, and from Harvard College in 1868, and the D.Lit. from Queen's University, Belfast. Amongst his many philosophical works were "The Method of the Divine Government," "The Emotion," and "Psychology the Motive Power." In our issue of May 18, 1888, we gave a portrait and sketch of Dr. McCosh.

IRISH EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.

THE IRISH EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY is meeting the deepest needs of Ireland in the only way in which truly permanent results, peace, and happiness follow.

Holding Gospel Missions, through the length and breadth of the land, in tents, movable wooden halls, schoolhouses, barns, town halls, &c., working under a Committee of Clergymen and Laymen of all the leading Evangelical Churches, it carries the Old Story of Christ Crucified for Sinners, by means of earnest able Evangelists, and God is using its agency week by week, for spiritual blessing to very large numbers.

Its establishment expense is kept down to a minimum, and the contributions of its friends go to the direct work of the Gospel, and yet it is sad to say its funds have been so much behind that the Committee have been obliged to decrease the number of its Evangelists, and IF £700 SPECIALLY NEEDED JUST NOW TO COMPLETE THIS YEAR'S WORK BE NOT PROVIDED a further diminution of our work must follow.

Will not the friends of the Truth help Ireland's need, and enable us to carry on this work in the name of the Lord?

The Report of last year's Missions, also names of Committee, and other particulars, will be gladly sent, on application to DUNDALK, OCTOBER, 1894. JAMES BARTON, Hon. Secretary.

ROYAL ALFRED AGED MERCHANT SEAMEN'S INSTITUTION.—FOUNDED 1866.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

The Committee of this Charity EARNESTLY SOLICIT the SUPPORT of the general public in their endeavour to alleviate the sufferings of our aged, infirm, and destitute seamen.

It supports 100 of them in "The Home" at Belvedere, and gives a small pension to about 250 others.

But unless funds are more liberally supplied the Institution cannot maintain even the present inadequate number, which forms only a small proportion of those who need relief, and whose appeals are most distressing.

The dependable income hardly exceeds £4,000, whilst the maintenance of those already in receipt of relief exceeds £7,000 annually.

Sailors from their arduous life, are accounted old at sixty; yet, so insufficient are the means at the Committee's disposal that the average age of the successful candidates for relief is seventy-one.

The charitable public seem not to have fully considered the urgent claims of these—the most necessary class of workers in our community—a large number of whom have been disabled by accidents and disease incident to their perilous calling.

The claims of our sailors upon their countrymen are universally acknowledged; their spiritual welfare is looked after by "The Missions to Seamen;" when their lives are in peril on our dangerous coasts, the National Lifeboat is ever at hand; but strangely enough, when the sailor is no longer able to serve at sea, nor to maintain himself ashore, the one Institution which endeavours to preserve him from absolute destitution is far less liberally supported.

Yet the sailors' claims should touch every heart: to their life of dangerous toil we are indebted for nearly all our supplies.

To these veteran public servants, this Institution seeks to extend the necessaries of life, and the means of spending their few remaining years in peace; free from distressing anxieties, and the better able to raise their thoughts heavenward.

SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS will be GRATEFULLY received by the Institution's Bankers, Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Manchester and Salford Bank, Birchin-lane, E.C., or by the Secretary, Chairman, or members of the Committee.

(Signed) Admiral Sir LEOPOLD MCCLINTOCK, K.C.B., &c.
8, Atherstone-terrace, London, S.W., Chairman.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS,

Farningham and Swanley.

Treasurer—W. H. WILLANS, Esq., 3, Copthall-buildings, E.C.

A MUNIFICENT OFFER.

A gentleman has given £3,000 to a member of the Committee, which sum is held in trust, and is only available for the purposes of the Homes on condition that a like sum—viz., £3,000—be raised by the end of the present year, 1894. This sum is to be exclusively used to pay tradesmen's bills, which amount to over £6,000.

It is earnestly hoped that the friends of the Homes will, by an equally splendid effort, place the Committee in the position not only to claim this gift, but also to be able to clear off other outstanding liabilities.

CONTRIBUTIONS are earnestly solicited, and will be gratefully received by either of the Secretaries, A. E. CHARLES or W. ROBSON, at the offices of the Homes, 25, Holborn-viaduct, E.C.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. G. A. Sowter, vicar of St. Silas', Bristol, has just issued an encouraging report for the past year.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn has been conducting a mission at St. Matthew's, Croydon. The attendances have been very large.

The report of Christ Church, Blacklands, Hastings, tells of good, earnest, resultful work by Rev. A. Hodges and his helpers.

Some fishermen attending the mission church at Brixham sent up recently two large cases of fish to the University and Guy's Hospitals as a harvest thanksgiving.

The vicar of Croydon, Rev. George Carnac Fisher, has resigned his charge. He has been compelled to adopt this course in consequence of the illness of his wife.

Rev. Richard H. Taylor, who had charge of St. Andrew's, Southport, for some time, and was Association Secretary for the C.M.S. in the North of Ireland, has been appointed to the vicarage of Shelley.

Rev. Sydney Savage has displayed much vigour and energy since his advent to Jesmond. He secured the help of his father-in-law, Archdeacon Farrar, as preacher on Sunday in Jesmond Church.

Rev. J. B. M'Govern, an ex-Roman Catholic priest, the new rector of St. Stephen's, Chorlton-cum-Medlock, has already justified his appointment as the late Canon West's successor. The church is crowded, and the work of the parish is going forward successfully.

During the floods which have caused so much damage and alarm in the West, the Church of St. Breoke, Wadebridge, has been much damaged, the water reaching the tops of the pews. The cushions were completely spoiled, and seats were pulled out of the walls by the rain.

Rev. George Read, who has been appointed to the large colliery parish of Killingworth, was a leading spirit in the Church Missionary Union at Cambridge when an undergraduate at Christ's, and was a personal friend of the late Bishop Parker, Jani Alli, and Amherst Hayne.

Under the title of "Spitalfields, Past and Present," Rev. J. H. Scott has written a short but comprehensive history of the ancient parish of Spitalfields, from the time of its inception in 1197 up to the present day. A full description is given of the Parish Church, and many interesting details are supplied of the various parochial organisations and institutions which have been established during the period.

The Record remarks that St. Paul's, Onslow-square, has been, during the incumbency of Prebendary Webb-Peploe, a training-ground of singular value. He has enjoyed the help of eighteen curates and sixty-three young laymen. Some twelve or thirteen have gone out to the mission-field, and of these two (Mr. Roberson, of China, and Mr. Matthias, of West Africa), have died in the service. On Wednesday, November 28, Prebendary Webb-Peploe is holding a "Quiet Day" for as many of these workers and their wives as may be able to be present.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Riddings Church reports 387 scholars in the Sunday-school.

A week's mission services have been held at Chapel-street Church, Southport.

Rev. D. W. Vaughan has commenced his ministry at Kentish Town Church.

Rev. J. W. Burn has been recognised as pastor of Surbiton Church, Kingston.

Rev. Morley Wright has conducted a nine days' mission at Union Chapel, Plymouth.

Dev. Dr. Horton commenced on Monday week a seven days' mission at Hawkshead-street Church, Southport.

The Stockwell Institute, where Sunday-schools have been carried on since 1848, has been reopened, after extensive alterations.

The next National Council of Congregational Churches will be held at Syracuse, New York, U.S.A., in the second week in October, 1895.

Rev. W. D. McLaren, of Creaton, has had to undergo another operation upon the eyes, and is forbidden to preach until after the New Year.

Hessle-road, Hull, reports that during the four years' pastorate of Rev. R. C. Scurrah nearly fifty members have been added to the fellowship.

The present iron church at Belvedere is in such a dilapidated condition, that it has been decided to erect a new church on a site secured on an elevated spot.

At the annual meeting of the Manx Nonconformist Council, Rev. David Inglis, Congregationalist, was elected president for the year, in succession to Rev. H. Jutsam, Wesleyan.

Rev. Charles New's semi-jubilee at Robertson-street Church, Hastings, has been celebrated by special services, in which Revs. Dr. Brown, Dr. Barrett, Dr. Clement Clemance, J. B. Figgis, Cowper Smith, A. Hall, and Mr. Halley Stewart, M.P., took part.

The North Bucks Union, at Banbury, was addressed by Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson on the past work of the London Missionary Society. Addresses by Mr. Wigley Winslow, on "Some Features of Modern Congregationalism"; Rev. W. F. Clarkson, on "Congregational Principles"; and Rev. E. Austen, on "Home Mission Work as seen by the Village Pastor."

The anniversary of the church at Camberwell New-road was held last week. On Tuesday Rev. F. B. Meyer preached, and a public meeting was held, presided over by Major Dalbiac. During the past year's work of the pastor, Rev. A. J. Waldron, much good has been done. The congregations have more than doubled. One of the features of Mr. Waldron's work has been the interest he has taken in working-men and their intellectual doubts. On many Sundays he has taken six services, outdoor and indoor. The poor have been cared for; in the winter hundreds of loaves, etc., were given away.

Calls.—Mr. John Benson, of Chorley, to Leigh; Mr. A. S. Campbell (as assistant), Trinity, Glasgow; Rev. D. Ll. Williams, of Newport, to Oswestry.

Rev. F. C. Player, of Pill, near Bristol, has commenced his ministry at Waterloo-road Church, Wolverhampton.

Spring Hill Church, Birmingham, reports a net increase of eighty members during the two years of the present pastorate.

Rushden Church reports a net increase of over thirty members, twenty-seven of whom had been received by baptism.

Romney-street Church, Westminster, reports 144 members. The various organisations of the church are being vigorously worked.

Rev. Philip A. Hudgell, of Waterford, has concluded a five weeks' tour through Wales on behalf of the Irish Baptist Home Mission.

A two days' convention of the Baptist Ministers' Prayer Union was held at Nottingham on Tuesday and Wednesday. Revs. Dr. Paton, of Nottingham, F. B. Meyer, and James Mursell took part.

The Ministerial Union in Rhondda Valley have decided to call the special attention of the "Police Standing Committee" of the County Council to the obscene language used in the streets.

Werter-road Church, Putney, reports that at the commencement of the pastorate of Rev. S. H. Wilkinson there were 103 names on the roll of membership, and since that time 103 have been added.

The Baptist Tabernacle, Aldershot, has held its Sunday-school anniversary. The school has made rapid progress all the more since the new buildings were erected. Not a few have been led to confess Christ.

The first united anniversary of the Leigh Baptist Chapel was held on Sunday, Nov. 11, when Arthur C. Sidey (the pastor) preached to large congregations. On Monday a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. John Hems. Very reluctantly Mr. Sidey is retiring from his ministerial duties until the end of the year; in the meanwhile he will take a sea trip with the hope of recuperating his health.

Mr. A. H. Baynes, of the Baptist Missionary Society, had an audience of His Majesty the King of the Belgians on Saturday week. The object of his visit to Brussels was to lay before the King, who is the sovereign of the Congo Free State, a representation relative to the new transit regulations and other matters. The missionary secretary was received at the Palace with great cordiality, and His Majesty was most gracious in his assurance that the matters in question should receive careful consideration.

The success which has attended the Forward Movement of the United Baptist Churches of Leicester has surpassed expectation. Two years ago services were commenced in a small room at Clarendon-park, and at the present time a large building known as Clarendon Hall is rapidly approaching completion. Less than two months ago a new work was commenced in a populous part of the town under the direction of Mr. A. H. Tolhurst. Pending the erection of a hall and schools, to be called "Carey Hall," for which a site has been given, the services are being held in the Catherine-street Board Schools. Over 500 persons, young and old, already attend on Sunday evenings. The Sunday-school has 400 scholars.

Calls.—Rev. G. H. Carr, of Bow, to Bromley, Kent (accepted); Rev. F. Russell to Liverpool; Rev. H. G. Jones to Tirril; Rev. W. R. Jones to Penrhiwceiber; Rev. T. Evans, of Tenby, to Riverside, Cardiff.

Resignations.—Rev. Frank Russell, of Hull; Rev. B. Davies, of Bolton-road, Darwen.

METHODIST.

New chapels have been opened at Harlow Hill, Hexham' and Paugbourne.

New chapels are being built at Eylestone-park (Leicester), and New Basford.

Admirable evangelistic work is now being done at the Jubilee Mission, East-road, N.

The Sydney Central Mission has a sisterhood established on lines similar to those of Dr. Stephenson's Deaconess Institute.

A conference of delegates, from forty-one adult male Bible-classes, was held on Saturday in Queen-street Chapel, Huddersfield.

Rev. Thomas Cook began what was expected to prove a very successful mission in Hobart Town, Tasmania, at the beginning of October.

Victoria Lecture Hall, Portsmouth, was crowded by young people invited by the Portsmouth Council to hear an address from Rev. Dr. Moulton.

The Wesleyan Home Mission report speaks of decided revival in many directions. There are now four Connexional evangelists and two district missionaries.

"Village Methodism: Its Difficulties and Prospects," was considered at the seventh annual convention of the Grantham Circuit. The poverty of village Methodism, the difficulty of retaining the young people, and above all, the narrow, intolerant, selfish spirit of so many professedly converted men and women, were instanced as the chief obstacles to progress.

The fifth anniversary of the Lady-lane Central Mission Leeds, was held last week with enthusiastic meetings. The report stated that continuous steady progress had been made in the mission since the commencement five years ago, but more particularly during the past year. The new members admitted during the five years numbered 169. The average attendance at the P.S.A. for the year had been 578, and 675 prizes had been awarded. The old auxiliaries had continued to flourish; and new ones, including a men's club and reading-room, a branch of the Yorkshire Penny Bank, and workshop meetings conducted by the evangelists had been established.

On Wednesday last anniversary meetings were held at Hinde-street, Manchester-square, W., to celebrate the completion of the first year's work of Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant in that circuit. The report showed that the membership and income for the preceding year had been doubled. Rev. F. B. Meyer preached in the afternoon. Rev. Dr. Rigg, who was the principal speaker at the evening meeting, expressed great satisfaction at the prosperous condition, and sympathised with Mr. Sarjeant in the work of the proposed Young Men's Settlement. Mr. Sarjeant asked the meeting for £250 for future aggressive work. Of this £205 were subscribed before the meeting closed.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. Lundie, of Liverpool, who has been ill, is now at Hastings, where he is gradually recovering strength.

The semi-jubilee of the church at Hebburn-on-Tyne, has been celebrated, Dr. McGaw being the preacher. The church and hall cost £16,000, of which sum £12,000 was given by Mr. A. Leslie, a well-known shipbuilder.

Encouraging anniversary services have been held at Market Place, Whitehaven, when Rev. Robert Taylor, of London, preached morning, afternoon, and evening. The attendances were all good, and the sermons were greatly enjoyed.

Rev. J. B. Meharry, who has very warmly taken up the question of leakage, recommends that every congregation should have a strangers' committee or union to look after and receive into fellowship all strangers. Such an organisation is being started in connection with his own church.

The first annual report of the Committee on Church Aid and Evangelistic Effort (London North), states that the sum of £3000 has been raised to aid ten working-class congregations in London. This was expended in putting the buildings into a state of efficiency and providing workers, such as evangelists and Biblewomen.

At last week's meeting of the London Presbytery (North), Professor Skinner was appointed to preach at Bow-road Church on the 29th inst., when a call will be given to Rev. J. Grierson, who has occupied the pulpit for some time. Mr. R. Wales reported that the Sustenation Fund threatened to close the year with a deficiency of £230. A little increased all-round effort would, however, wipe out the threatened deficiency. It was reported that a site was being purchased for the proposed church at Fulham.

Calls.—Rev. R. Greenshields, of Hanley, to St. George's, Liverpool; Rev. T. Pearce, to Llanidloes; Rev. E. Edwards, to Warrington; Rev. S. G. McLennan, of Stonehaven, to St. Enoch's, Glasgow; Rev. G. A. Johnston-Ross, of Bridge of Allan, to Lansdowne, Glasgow.

During the recent Self Denial week twenty people applied for officership.

Captain Flavell, of the Salvation Army in New Zealand, was lost in the wreck of the Wairarapa.

In reference to the restrictions placed on the Salvation Army in Stuttgart, the leaders are writing the King of Wurtemburg.

Mr. Bramwell Booth, assisted by Commissioner Howard, has been speaking on "Fiery Salvation" in Oldham. He is this week speaking on the same subject in Newcastle.

A Salvation Army officer in a town in Germany has been fined for allowing a girl of thirteen years of age to remain in the meeting, although accompanied by her mother. He refused to pay the fine, and has gone to prison.

The first opening of the Salvation Army in Rouen was held in the theatre a few days ago. On account of the outcry raised in the newspapers at the theatre being so "desecrated," a second meeting in the same place was forbidden by the mayor. The Casino has since been engaged and filled nightly by all classes.

On the 8th inst. Mrs. Bramwell Booth addressed a large gathering in the Lyndhurst-road Congregational Church. Dr. Horton, in introducing Mrs. Booth, spoke most highly of the successful work of the Salvation Army. A collection of about £20 was taken up, and an interesting account given of a few of the cases taken in hand by the enquiry department of the rescue section of the S.A.

General Booth is visiting Chicago this week. At the close of his meeting in the Carnegie Music Hall, New York, Mr. Ballington Booth made an appeal for 10,000 dols. for the furtherance of the social work, the audience, including a promise of 4000 dols., subscribed 8000 towards it before leaving the building. While in New York the General addressed a large assemblage in the Association Hall, Twenty-third-street.

With the New Year Rev. F. B. Meyer will commence in our columns a series of articles on the life of David. His expositions of the second half of John's Gospel will appear at a later period of the year.

The death of Dr. M'Cosh and the resignation of Dr. Reynolds leave two vacant college chairs of great importance. The influence of a college professor, especially of a theological professor, runs through all the years and services of every student under his care, and thus touches hundreds of churches and thousands of souls. But little seen, perhaps, themselves, professors are everywhere felt. It will not be easy to fill the two vacant chairs, in which some of the ablest and most devout men have sat, but we remember that the Head of the Church is always preparing men in his college, and at the moment they are wanted He sends them forth.

November 29 is a day generally observed as a Day of Intercession by devout members of the Church of England for the cause of God in the earth. There seem to be special reasons this year for waiting upon God. Three African bishoprics are vacant. The state of things in the East requires constant remembrance in prayer, the unfriendly feeling of a large number of English people, especially of the commercial classes, towards missions, and the attitude of Englishmen abroad towards the Gospel, in their own lives and influence, are things to be laid before the mercy-seat. Great blessing has been obtained in former years, and we hope that this year may only prove an exception in the sense of Christians having received more abundantly of grace and gifts.

The solemnities of the late Czar's funeral have been so amply described by the English Press, that we have obtained a long look into the interior of the Russian or Greek Church. It has not been comforting or edifying. There is a strange mixture of sheer superstition and ornate ritual. The worship of the Virgin, the kissing of pictures and images, praying for the dead, and granting absolution of the sins of the dead, form a wide departure from the simplicity of the faith as it was "once for all delivered to the saints." Yet we remember that Russia allows the free circulation of the Scriptures; indeed, conveys the boxes of the Bible Society carriage free. We look for a harvest some time from the indestructible seed of the kingdom which has been so widely sown.

The war between China and Japan draws out its miserable length, the conquering nation, flushed with victories, declining the services of America to bring about a peace. This touch of relentless pride may cost Japan very dear. Germany has been, in the long run, a loser by the pitiless way in which she pushed her conquest of France to its severest limits. Japan may have to rue the day that she did not seize the opportunity of securing all she has at present gained, and beginning the work of recovering from her exhaustion. However events may go, we trust that the great Powers will lose no opportunity of bringing hostilities to an end. Winter also may make for peace.

We have come, in the history of the modern churches, to a time when jubilees and centenaries of institutions and societies are beginning to abound. We shall be in the midst of them for the next three or four years. They carry us back to the day of small things. We cannot help comparing, and sometimes contrasting, former and present methods. There used to be apparently more praying and less dining, more humiliation before God and less jubilation. Now we are in danger of dwelling on results and depending on them. We shall, therefore, do well to keep in mind what are the permanent elements of missionary power and success. When our fathers had no results, on what did they depend, and by what were they inspired? (1) They had a deep sense of their personal indebtedness to Jesus as their own Saviour. (2) They had an overwhelming sense of the misery, sin, and danger of the heathen world. (3) They had a passionate desire for Jesus to see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied. (4) They believed that God, who had given the command for the Gospel to be preached to every creature, would make his Gospel effectual; they trusted Him for all things. We cannot do better.

Dean Vaughan's last volume—the last of about thirty-five volumes—contains thoughts which are characteristic of the soberness and balance of mind which have all along distinguished his ministry. He has something to say of the present condition of thought and conduct among young men as compared with that of fifty years ago, which cannot but give pause to thoughtful persons. We presume that he is speaking of the better classes when he says:—

> When I was young men were as wicked (no doubt) as they are now, equally sensual, equally vicious, equally profane; I could even fancy more so. But there was this difference. The great fundamental truths of religion were then taken for granted. It was not proper, it was not decent to call oneself an atheist—no, nor to drag in at a social table sacred things for ridicule. If nothing else, it was bad manners. I have been young, and now am old, and I find several things gone from the unquestioning belief of my countrymen.

Religious revival and improvement, it should be remembered, always begins from below; and from below we must work upward to this higher section. Whilst according the highest value to the testimony of Dean Vaughan, we also feel bound to say that we should like to see the testimony of some other person of a similar age and in a similar station in society. But whether it agreed with his or not, the duty remains—preach the Gospel to every creature; go to the poor and outcast.

Dean Vaughan has some earnest and timely words on the drift Romewards of so many members of his own Church. He says that it is "sometimes assumed, as a self-evident proposition, that the departing Lord could not have designed to leave his Church without a visible head, a living authority, to define its doctrine, resolve its doubts, and prescribe its ritual. He must be here, men say, at least by representation." Thus thousands have been driven back to Rome, and others remain in "a trembling and panic-stricken Anglicanism," trying to frame something to simulate this authority. To such a state of mind Dean Vaughan cries:—

> O for the courageous voice which shall say to them "He is not here—He is risen!" The only Presence which He has left us is the Holy Ghost, whose voices, like his gifts, are manifold, guiding the individual man (while he uses all his opportunities of counsel and instruction) into all truth, even though his truth may not utter itself in the very words of his neighbour's.

How can persons who want an infallible guide in the Church believe in the presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit for each believer?

One-fifth of the Dutch nation are Romanists, and are said to possess, on account of the definiteness of their belief, an amount of influence far beyond their numbers. Since the Roman Church is there in a foreign and hostile land, it is careful to impress the imagination with the appropriate modesty and beauty of its large churches, which are built with lavish generosity, and with the restraint of its ritual in worship. An enormous church has been built at Zwolle in memory of Thomas à Kempis, and a Dutch friend informed a correspondent of The Church Times that the greater part of the money had come in small sums ranging from a penny to a shilling. The divisions of Protestantism are said to be one main cause of the increased powor of Rome. "The aristocratic classes are distinctly opposed to Catholicism, though visits to London in the season and worship at our London churches have left their mark on more than one young member of Dutch families of the highest class." Then we are to understand from this High Church journal that a section of the English Church is helping to inoculate Dutchmen with Romanist ideas.

There is a cry of distress in the correspondence columns of The Church Times from some who have suffered by the perversion of members of their families to the Church of Rome. A mother of a divided family complains of her girl being entrapped and surreptitiously Romanised. A clergyman names several instances of this "soul-snatching," one of which may be taken as a sample of the rest. A lady of rank, aged seventeen, was received and rebaptized unknown to her parents, and allowed, or "dispensed," to attend her parish church with a Romish book of devotion, instead of her prayer-book, for several months, because the time was not convenient to make known the step she had taken. The opportunity of doing so was taken by a relative whilst the parent was from home. It seems that teachers, young ladies from home, patients in hospitals, and such-like helpless or exposed persons, form the victims of scheming priests and proselytisers. But the thing which surprises us is, that The Church Times should expect anything else but constant and numerous perversions to Rome. To what can the "Catholic movement" tend but to this? And why should there be annoyance over the loss of English people to Protestantism, and satisfaction over the loss of Dutchmen? There is some inconsistency.

The following points in a letter recently published in The Leeds Mercury let more light upon the action of the Sacerdotal party. Either the English people have given away their Protestantism, or they are ignorant of what is being done in their midst. In certain public elementary schools, the scholars are taught (1) that "Protestant dissenters are in schism"; (2) that "Christ has given power to his priests to forgive sins in his name"; (3) that "sins are forgiven chiefly by the sacraments of Holy Baptism and penance"; (4) that "the special office of a priest is to offer the Holy Sacrifice and to absolve"; (5) that, when one has fallen, "he should at once make an act of contrition, pray for pardon, and go to confession as soon as possible"; and (6) that a daily prayer should be "Mary, Holy Mary, the blessed Apostles, and all the saints, pray for us." It is time for the people to protest again. Much of the success of the Romish propaganda results from the dissemination of such teaching in our day schools.

The ire of the Hon. Auberon Herbert has been excited by a circular sent to him by the Anti-Gambling League. He writes in The Westminster Gazette a vulgar letter, headed "Should Hell Organise?" in which he prognosticates that the action of the League will prompt the formation of another society to "fight until the constitutional doctrine is established, once and for all, that men shall bet and gamble where they like and when they like." Such a society he desires, and says that when "Hell"—in which term he includes "betters, gamblers, publicans, sinners, and harlots"—does organise and cry "hands off" to the "saints," he is prepared to hand over to it "his subscription and his political blessing." It is no sinecure to combat sin, but "the Lord is on our side, therefore will we not fear."

The restrictions put by the law upon the sale of drink are intended not only to save the drunkard from himself, but to protect his family also. That the drunkenness of parents has something to do with explaining excessive infant mortality cannot be denied. Two cases which were tried in the Birmingham Police Court are adduced by The Daily News in evidence. In one case the miserably neglected child was found up to its waist in water, while the mother lay in an outhouse in a drunken stupor. In the other case a family of six, living together in a room only nine feet by seven, the children were filthy and unfed, although the father was earning thirty-five shillings a week, the greater part of which the mother spent in drink. For over twenty-one hours she had lain in bed, leaving her young children without food and attention. The cry of the children, who are the innocent victims of the vice of drunkenness, is too eloquent to be ignored. Either the present legal restrictions are not enough, or they are not properly applied. Probably both.

A letter from an official Turkish source, which has appeared in the Politische Correspondenz, shows that the attack upon the Armenians was a Government outrage with results as fatal as were originally reported. The Kurds had been guilty of constant depredations upon the Armenians; the Turkish Government promised protection which it never granted; the Armenians then made an excursion against their oppressors; then the Government stepped in to suppress "revolution," and the Armenians refusing to lay down their arms, nearly all of them fell in open combat with the troops. Next, a Turkish field-marshal cleared the disturbing elements—the Armenian Christians—out of the district, and burnt down some twenty-five villages. To counsel our Armenian brethren to suffer in patience seems almost like mocking them, and yet what have they gained by resorting to arms? Two thousand dead persons and several villages burnt down. When the Huguenots took to arms they were "minished and brought low"; when they took to prayer they grew and prevailed.

The terrible story which comes from the South Seas of a general uprising of the Kanakas and of the murder of scores of white men, should do something to arouse Englishmen to the guilt and danger of their trade in intoxicating drinks with native races. The reports at present to hand appear to show that the attack was general, and was the result of pre-arrangement, though the first outburst was through the influence of drink. "It is thought," say the advices from Australia, "that the natives stole liquor at one of the trading posts, and that that had the effect of maddening them." We shall be only too thankful if the next mails do not bring us news of terrible reprisals at the hands of the white men. That, of course, would be only justice! We may go and kidnap and steal and commit outrages and sell the maddening "fire-water," but if the natives, men in their own island homes, attack us, they are murderers; when we retaliate we are ministers of justice. There is plainly some mental and moral confusion in our own minds, however it may be with the natives.

The Inter-Denominational Conference on the Overlapping of Denominations, while showing on the part of some a due sense of the evils of the system, or want of system, showed also that some think there is little to complain of; and, further, that "even where competition was very keen it was not an unmitigated evil, for it quickened the zeal of the competing Churches." Possibly; but what sort of zeal? And surely there is something unseemly in a place of 16,000 inhabitants having as many as twenty-two places of worship; and another of 18,000 inhabitants having as many as thirty-one places of worship; while of another town it is said that every other building is a place of worship. It would be the blindest folly to pretend that a good deal of what is called "church extension" is the same as the extension of the Kingdom of God. The waste of money on buildings, on organs, on organists, and choirs calls loudly for reform. The Conference will do a great service if it stops one great cause of waste in overlapping, which includes nearly every other evil.

In the New York Independent, K. Madeline Barry has written a trenchant criticism of a recent novel. She is earnest in insisting that the present degraded condition of a good deal of our literature was foreseen by thoughtful men:—

> Every scholar and moralist who fought the scepticism of the last hundred years warned us that a lapse into the deification of the flesh would be the upshot of it. And here we are now, on the threshold of a new century, applauding to the echo the reiterated pleas for the natural man and his doctrine of natural rights...We complained when the poet supplanted the priest; now the physiologist has ousted the poet. There is to be no more talk about sin or self-denial; everything is in Nature's hands.

One of the saddest signs of our times is the acquiescent or warmly commendatory way in which numbers of those who profess to call themselves Christians receive books which they ought to reject and condemn.

If any part of the Pentateuch comes before us as Divinely authenticated it is "the Law of Holiness" as set forth in Leviticus xvii.—xxvi. Just here, however, those critics who would, on speculative grounds, reconstruct Israelitish history, have found ample room for a priesthood but little room for Jehovah Himself. How flimsy are the grounds for the critical theory, and how serious are the issues it involves, is forcibly shown in Rev. J. M. Denniston's thoughtful volume Exodus: An Autobiography of Moses, with the Four Following Books (8s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). He sums up one of his many arguments:—

> "Jehovah spake unto Moses"; there is the rock to moor our vessel to. Everything speaks for it, nothing against it. And thus, instead of very nicely inquiring whether the same expressions do not occur elsewhere, it seems more reasonable to rest here—that "Jehovah spake unto Moses."

There is as good ground for confidence in the miraculous in Israelitish history as there is for the same element in the planting of the Christian Church. If the critics had a modicum of spiritual imagination they would have less temptation to employ the faculty of conjecture. Mr. Denniston's common-sense criticism has the benefit of this useful resource, and he subjects the statements of the perverse school to a searching examination.

REV. EGERTON YOUNG in SCOTLAND.

During the past year the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society has conducted missionary meetings in many parts of the country, both north and south of the Tweed. Within the past month a series of particularly successful missionary meetings have been conducted in most of the leading towns in Scotland. The directors of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society having invited the co-operation of Rev. Egerton Young, the well-known missionary traveller among the Red Indians, that gentleman, accompanied by Mr. G. A. Barclay, organising secretary of this department of the work, held meetings which have crowded the largest halls and churches in Edinburgh, Perth, Inverness, Aberdeen, Dundee, Glasgow, Paisley, Rutherglen, Berwick-on-Tweed, Hamilton, Motherwell, and other places.

At the week-night meetings held in the large hall, limelight illustrations have been utilised. Generally Mr. Barclay occupied a brief time in calling attention to the important work of the Society, which was supplying fully equipped medical missionaries to all the great missionary societies throughout the world, and whose missionaries were at work in all parts of the world. By a few beautiful pictures, illustrating the training work in Edinburgh, and practical medical mission work in Palestine and India, a vivid idea was conveyed of this important branch of Christian work.

Mr. Young usually spoke for some time without the aid of the limelight, and his graphic word-pictures of the horrors of heathenism, of the blessings of Christianity, and of the trials and successes of mission work in the wild North land, will long live in the memories of the crowds who heard him. His illustrated lectures were no less interesting, but never did a public speaker less need such accessories than Mr. Young. The singing of Indian hymns by Mrs. Young, and the sacred solos with beautiful pictorial illustrations rendered by Mrs. Barclay, were greatly appreciated.

Mr. Young everywhere emphasised the importance of medical mission work, and did not hesitate to say again and again that no mission work in heathen lands could be properly effective without the aid of the healing art which opened the hearts and minds of the heathen to the Gospel as no other agency could do.

Look for the Sunny Side.

He suffered in the darkness
That we might see the sun.

We have noticed these November days that some people seemed to choose the dark, dingy side of the street, while others were walking in the beautiful sunshine. Perhaps they had but a little way to go—they thought it did not matter much; perhaps they did not observe the sunny side. A little bit of sunshine makes such a difference, especially when the summer heat is over, and the chilling frosts of winter come creeping on. All the more need have we to Gather up the sunbeams

Lying all around our path.

But are they really there in our lives? Yes; we will find that to most things there is a "sunny side," if we take pains to look for it. Many people, Christians even, have a wonderful knack of looking at the dark side of things. They seldom have anything bright to tell you, and there is very little brightness in their faces. Indeed, they do not look as if Jesus had "made them glad." They may have light, but it is not the shining attractive kind (Matt. v. 16).

Perhaps they might bring brightness into their own lives by making life a little sunnier for others. Solomon, with all his wealth, was not a happy man (Eccles ii. 1-11) because there was only a big "I" in his life. No wonder he found it "vanity and vexation of spirit":—

Is thy cruse of comfort failing?
Rise and share it with another!
And through all the years of famine,
It shall serve thee and thy brother.

"Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might" (Eccles. ix. 10). That one you mean to cheer and comfort to-day may be gone beyond your reach to-morrow, and God's own hand may have wiped those tears away. Have we not sometimes found it so? What a privilege it is to minister to anyone, "specially to those who are of the household of faith." Shall we be slow, or shall we grudge, to do what the angels delight in? (Heb. i. 14). Our service may seem small and insignificant, but if done in the name of Jesus it cannot be mean or commonplace, and even a cup of cold water only, given in the name of a disciple, shall in no wise lose its reward (Matt. x. 42). This poor "hurt" world has no sorrow which heaven cannot heal, and if we are to bring true sunshine to weary hearts we must commend Jesus wherever we go!

A very sad letter is before us while we write; here is one sentence:—

I long for the dark gloomy days, now they are most in keeping with my feelings. I do not enjoy the warm bright sunshine, it seems to mock my grief.

Ah, poor stricken heart! no one has skill or tenderness to deal with your case save the Good Physician! Submit yourself to Him, and you will marvel at the peace and rest that He will bring even to you—"He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds" (Ps. cxlvii. 3). "The dove found no rest, and she returned unto him into the ark, and he put forth his hand, and caused her to come in to him" (Gen. viii. 9, mar.)

But some of God's believing children are in deep sorrow, and where is the sunny side for them? These are they who "do business in the great waters," who see "the works of God and his wonders in the deep" (Ps. cvii. 23, 24). These are they who one day will "comfort others with the comfort wherewith they themselves have been comforted of God" (2 Cor. i. 4). Noah had only one window, and it was "above"! It is well to keep the mists off this window! When all was death and desolation around, "God remembered Noah," and was not that enough?

Never a heart-ache, and never a groan,
Never a tear-drop, and never a moan;
Never a danger, but there on the throne,
Moment by moment, He thinks on his own.

We drew near the other day to a home whence an aged saint had just escaped away into "the liberty of the glory" (Rom. viii. 21, R.V.). A few trees were casting their shadows over it, but beyond, the hills were flooded with the glorious sunshine! Even so is it in the earthly life of most of God's children. A good deal of the shadow, but a shadow cannot harm! "Nobody is afraid of a shadow, for a shadow cannot stop a man's pathway, even for a moment. The shadow of a dog cannot bite; the shadow of a sword cannot kill" (Spurgeon). "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me" (Ps. xxiii. 4). And the sunny land is not far away!

No shadows yonder,
All light and song.

"The city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof" (Rev. xxi. 23).

MANCHESTER WESLEYAN MISSION.

The Manchester Wesleyan Mission celebrated its eighth anniversary on Tuesday last week. After a sermon by Rev. F. L. Wiseman, of Birmingham, Mrs. J. F. Haworth presided over "the Sisters' meeting," at which some details were given of the devoted work that is going on in the homes of the people. The old story was told of the ravages of the drink scourge. Sister Ada told of a child ten months old being stupefied with gin in order that its wretched mother might have a night's sleep: and Sister Myra described the drink as a terrible stream, filling prisons, lunatic asylums, and graves. Mrs. Ormiston Chant and Sister Margaret also spoke.

Mr. J. Beckett presided over a large public meeting in the evening of the same day. Addresses were delivered by Revs. H. J. Pope and Walford Green. Some hearty words were spoken by Dr. Maclaren. He held that it was a fact to glory in that ten thousand persons listened weekly to the Gospel in connection with the Mission. He was afraid the chapels were not the success they ought to be, though there was a great work to be done in them, which might be done in them even better than in connection with missions. Thousands would not attend their chapels; let them multiply missions. The simple Gospel was increasingly wanted, nothing else could draw and hold a crowd. He agreed with their endeavour to blend the social aspects of Christian work with the spiritual; the times demanded it, and it was well to show the world what true socialism was. They had to begin with the service of God before they could help in the service of men. That was too often forgotten.

THE IRISH CHURCH COLPORTAGE MISSION has been transferred to the Committee of the Irish Church Missions. The work will henceforth be conducted as a branch of the I.C.M., but its administration and finances will be kept wholly distinct and separate. There is at present a serious deficiency in the income. The superintendence of the colporteurs will in future be in the hands of Rev. P. B. Johnson, the present superintendent of the itinerating work of the Irish Church Missions.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.—The sixteenth annual report of this work is embodied in a tasteful booklet, entitled "Ye are My Witnesses," of which copies may be had from the hon. sec., Mr. A. Walters, 6, The Corridor, Billingsgate Market, E.C. It states that the usual agencies continue in active operation, and, in addition, work is in contemplation among the lads who sell wax vestas in the streets. Special noon-day services are held for the men engaged in the market, and there are free dinners with a Gospel address for the unemployed. Sunday-school, Band of Hope, and other gatherings fill a good weekly programme. We note that there is still a heavy debt on the building, in the erection of which a large sum had of necessity to be expended.

ITALIANS AND GOD.

In the November issue of "A Voice from Italy," the English organ of the Waldensian Church Missions in Italy, Rev. Aug. Meille, of Florence, asks the question, "Is Italy returning to God?" He says: Not many years ago a commission entrusted by the Government with the task of choosing text-books for our elementary schools, before opening a single volume, decided that they would exclude from the schools of Italy any book in which even the name of God could be found. That name—for to them it was only a name—seemed a blot sufficiently black to exclude any book, however excellent and useful.

Things, I am happy to say, are much changed since then, and we have had of late not a few signs that our leading men are beginning to think again that God not only exists, but that He reigns and rules over the destinies of nations. At the beginning of the year the Finance Minister, Signor Sonnino, after stating, in a long financial exposition, how sad the economical conditions of the country had become, and intimating the heroic remedies he was to propose in the way of economics and taxation, feeling that all the efforts of legislators and statesmen are vain without the Divine blessing, exclaimed:

"MAY GOD PROTECT ITALY!"

He was laughed at by many at the time; but his words do not seem to have been lost on others.

The Prime Minister, Sig. Crispi, who not so long ago exalted the goddess Reason, and proclaimed that science alone could do anything for suffering humanity, seems to have recognised, in the outbreak of Socialism and Anarchism in Italy and in Carrara, the proof that a Higher Power was needed to counteract the forces of darkness which threaten to overthrow society from its foundations; and in the short and pithy speech he made at Naples, in August last, proclaimed that they only were good citizens on whose banner was inscribed the words, Dio, re, e patria ("God, the King, the Fatherland"). This declaration of his created quite a sensation at the time; but on September 20, in the telegram which the King sends annually from Monza (his summer residence) to Rome, Humbert himself sounded the same religious note, for the first time perhaps since he has ascended the throne.

And lately, our greatest living poet, Carducci, the author of a blasphemous "Ode to Satan," which to many sounded like the revelation of the new religion of rebellion against God, was called upon to deliver a grand oration on the occasion of the opening of the new State Palace of the little Republic of San Marino, and the burden of his speech was that God exists and is the author of all good on earth: "From Him, we must take our starting point in every enterprise, and He alone can bless them. Hatred of a pestiferous and tyrannical superstition, and pride of observers that trusted too much in the victories of external nature, have caused the Latin races to forget God; but no crimes of the priesthood and no arrogance of scientists can exclude God from history. God is the highest vision to which nations raise their eyes in the strength of their youth; He is the sun of sublime minds, and of burning hearts ...Where and when the divine idea shines in its power and majesty, cities are born and flourish; where and when it vacillates and is obscured, cities decay and perish."

THE ALMIGHTY, THE ALL PERFECT,

Granted, the God thus called upon is not the God whose love has manifested itself in Christ, and whom we preach and adore; yet it is a remarkable sign of the times that some of the very men who, for so many years, have openly professed atheism in its most outrageous form, now speak reverently of God, and declare that He alone can cure the ills from which we suffer. This cannot but exert a certain influence on the mind of the Italian people at large. As for us Evangelicals, we can only rejoice in hearing our king and his ablest advisers recognise the Great Ruler of the Universe, and hope that this may lead many of our countrymen to be less opposed to religion than they are at present.

CANON FLEMING, addressing the members of the York Police Force on the advantages of total abstinence, declared that teetotalism was the simplest and cheapest remedy he had ever heard of for drunkenness. The Chief Constable, who was present, announced his intention of signing the pledge, by way of example to the men under him.

IN THE NEW HEBRIDES.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, who, through his book, "Cannibals Won for Christ," has enlisted the interest of so many friends of missions in his work on the island of Tongoa, New Hebrides, has, we are glad to say, at length recovered from the fever, and resumed his much-loved pastoral duties. His wife also has settled down to the work among the islanders, who have "taken" very kindly to her. Mr. Michelsen writes to us:—

Besides the ordinary mission work requiring attention, I found, on arrival, that houses had to be repaired and others built; and as soon as possible six miles of road will have to be made. Tongariki and Epi (islands) must be visited when my new boat, which is being built in Norway, arrives. The almost constant rain has ceased, the influenza is all but a thing of the past, and although a very large number have gone hence, and very many of our young men have left for Queensland, the natives are now gathering fresh courage and looking for brighter days than they had during the influenza plague. The first Sunday we were here I had a congregation of sixty villagers; the Sunday before last there were 127 present at our morning service. The morning school (held five days in the week) is also well attended.

Last Sunday we had a Communion service, and before the hour of beginning every seat was filled. There were about 100 native communicants, besides the resident trader and his wife and ourselves. It was indeed a delight to me again to assemble at the Lord's table with

MY CHILDREN IN THE LORD,

I had intimated that there would be a collection among the church members, so the communicants all came prepared to do something to help on the cause of Christ. The sum of £8 14s. 9d. was found on the plate. On Saturday the chief came up and told me that there were several non-church members who also wished to give something to Jesus, so we left a plate at the door for them, and £1 17s. was added to the above amount.

I have started a Bible class for those who wish to join us in church fellowship. At the first gathering there were 170 in attendance, including people from neighbouring islands who happened to be here. There was power in the meeting. One of the strangers was a chief from Epi, who afterwards expressed a wish to come with his wife and stay for some months on Tongoa, in order to attend this class. Many of the young men who come bring paper and pencil, in order to take notes. It was my constant prayer from the time I left Tongoa until I returned that I might see greater things than those I was enabled to relate when in Britain, and everything seems to lead me to expect that I shall see it.

The village of Selembanga, on the east side of Tongoa, where we lived for several years after we were driven away from our first station, has just been the scene of a rebellion. This is the village of which Manambalea was chief, but according to usage the chieftainship was passed over to a young man whilst Manambalea was still strong and active. Manambalea's influence of course continued to be very considerable, at the same time as the young man's influence was also felt. All the time I have been on the island Usamoli has been

A DRAG ON OUR WORK.

During my absence the Christian life of Selembanga has been ripening very much, whilst Usamoli has not been able fully to tear himself away from his harem. He shifted away from the village and lived on the beach. As the chiefs rule more by example than by direct orders to the people, it is easy to see that such conduct would have a very bad effect. For months and years there had been a great deal of talk about his conduct, until about a fortnight ago the people felt they could bear it no longer. A deputation came over to me, asking what I thought of their proposal to depose their chief. "Well," I said, "as I do not fully know native law and usage, I can give no opinion in the matter except this, that you must not take any step unless you are quite unanimous."

They returned with that reply. The next morning Manambalea ordered the big drum to be sounded, which is the call for the whole village to assemble. He stood up and rehearsed how that many years ago he resigned the chieftainship according to the wishes of the people, in order to make Usamoli chief. He continued, "You followed him for a long time; but now another Chief has come in, and many of us follow Him. I have called you together to-day to ask who is on the Lord's side—who will have Jesus for Chief, and who will have Usamoli?" All declared for Jesus. Usamoli was then sent for, and Manambalea informed him that he was no longer chief, and that to be their Chief. Manambalea then talked to the young man in a most kindly manner, expressing the hope that he too would soon place himself under Jesus, the divine Chief.

Since then everything has gone on quietly in the village. I was over there yesterday, going quite unexpectedly. On arriving about one o'clock I found the people in little companies round the church, under trees, reading their books. The morning service is generally over by ten o'clock, so they must have been there for about three hours. I had a service at four, and had a fine gathering of attentive hearers. I got back to my station again a little after seven, after a walk of six miles there and six back, and very tired.

PERSECUTION IN TURKEY.

Last week we referred to the hindrances thrown in the way of Rev. K. Behesnilian's work in Asia Minor by the Turkish authorities. We extract the following details from a letter written by Mrs. Behesnilian, dated Tarsus, Nov. 1:—

Our plan was to work at Tarsus; so, leaving our old parents at Marash, Mr. Behesnilian, myself and baby, and four pupils of St. Paul's Institute started for Tarsus. After travelling three days we were stopped by policemen, who wanted to look at all our things, then took all of us to the Government House. On the way baby became ill, and the policemen's persecutions made us all very miserable. Under these distressing circumstances we at last reached the palace, and were surrounded by more than thirty soldiers, who opened all our bundles and boxes and every small package to see whether there was a paper or not; even our pockets and baby's clothes were searched. Then they gathered all the papers and books in a box and sealed it, and in that village they did not let us go out of their sight, keeping us four days there. At last we started again with two policemen, and in the evening we reached a village named Yaroorat, where the policemen took Mr. Behesnilian to the Government House, and put him and the students into prison. After this I was not allowed to see Mr. Behesnilian alone.

I forgot to say that we had a passport, thinking that by having this paper we could travel with safety, but to our surprise they paid no attention to it, and when Mr. Behesnilian wished to show his passport to them, they prevented him with bad language. The policeman took them to prison in Adana, and since then I have not seen Mr. Behesnilian. Our friends who were in Adana were afraid to receive us to their house, not knowing about the case, so we settled at the church a few days, but you can imagine how hard for a traveller to stay in that way in a strange city, and to find proper food, clothes, and a comfortable place for sleeping. They said, "The officers will examine your books in a few days and send them to Tarsus." So trusting their words I came to Tarsus. They examined the books and found nothing against the Government, so we waited for Mr. Behesnilian and the students every day, knowing that they were guilty of nothing. Though they might have examined the books very quickly they did not; so for a month they deceived us, saying "We will let them go to-day or to-morrow." By keeping them in prison we understood that they wanted money (a bribe), but we had nothing to pay them. We had no money even for our board.

At last Dr. Christie went to see the Vali; after long converse with each other, the Vali promised to give them their freedom. On that day Dr. Christie returned to Tarsus, and we were very glad: but the Vali turned from his promise, and gave an order to send them back to Marash with three policemen. On that night I went to Adana by carriage to see Mr. Behesnilian, but I could not see him, for they had sent them very early in the morning. I remained at Adana on that day, and learned of all our debts resulting from this imprisonment, and returned with a sad heart to Tarsus (in Turkey a prisoner's friends must provide for his food and other expenses). I don't know what the result will be at Marash. Will they let him come to Tarsus or not? We don't know even for what purpose they have sent them to Marash. I hope you and your friends will not forget us in your prayers. Give my heartiest regards to those Christian friends who are interested in us and other Christian brethren in this land.

MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION.

The great Tabernacle in Newington Causeway, where Mr. C. H. Spurgeon preached for so many years, was filled with a very interesting company one evening last week. The meeting was got up by the Young Christians' Association of the Tabernacle Sunday-school, and they had invited other Sunday-schools, Y.M.C.A.'s, Y.W.C.A.'s, and Christian Endeavour Societies to join them. The response was great, and the huge building was full from top to bottom.

Sir George Williams was to have presided, but an attack of illness prevented, and his place was capably filled by his son, Mr. Howard Williams. Some fitting and hearty words of welcome to speakers and to audience having been expressed by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, an address was given by Mr. F. Marcus Woods, of the China Inland Mission. For half an hour he held the interested attention of his great audience as he pleaded for personal consecration as an essential preliminary to missionary zeal, recounted some of the wonderful successes of the bygone century, and partially depicted the outstanding needs of the great heathen fields. The next address was given by Dr. Harry Guinness, a very weighty and helpful utterance. In answering the question, "What can we do?" he described what is being done by the "Regions Beyond Helpers' Union," as a sample of how other friends of missions could help on the good cause. The members of this Union pledge themselves to study the great harvest fields of the world, to pray continually for the work in hand, to give systematically as God has prospered them and to do all in their power to send out additional workers. Dr. Guinness' remarks were well received, and no doubt the "Helpers' Union" of which he spoke will receive some accessions to its ranks. The address of the secretary is Harley House, Bow, London, E.

The last hour of the meeting was taken up with the exhibition of a series of very effective coloured dissolving views, illustrating the life of Dr. J. G. Paton and his work in New Hebrides. Mr. A. K. Langridge's explanatory lecture was singularly eloquent and impressive. The many adventures and seemingly hairbreadth escapes of the devoted missionary in his early days on Tanna gave scope for graphic and thrilling description, and the later triumphs of the Gospel were a text for jubilant gratitude to God. The lecture was a great missionary treat, the meeting as a whole must result in much increase of the missionary spirit.

The collection was over £30, and was to be divided among several mission agencies.

EVANGELICAL CHURCH, BORDEAUX.

The French Free Evangelical Church in Rue Barenne, Bordeaux, recently celebrated its jubilee. There were some members present who still remember its early days, and sat under the pastorate of M. Alphonse de la Harpe; others whose thoughts went back to the inauguration of the present building. The church is small, but lofty; under it is a large room used for the Sunday-schools and prayer meetings.

Those who remember Madame Pozzi's visits to Great Britain in connection with the Church will be glad to know that the Bible work begun under Mrs. Ranyard's supervision has been kept up, and has been a source of much blessing. It is not now as formerly confined to the town, for Adelaide married a colporteur and now visits other towns. In Bordeaux she continues her house-to-house visiting and prayer-meetings. She is as full of ardour as formerly. In the school the Scriptures are taught. The present pasteur, M. Dubois, is an earnest worker in the temperance cause. He is very anxious to open a coffee-room on the quay, and a great boon I am sure it would prove to sailors of many nations who frequent this important seaport. M. Dubois's address is 37, Rue Grangeneuve, Bordeaux. M. A. Pozzi.

JEWISH NOTES.

RUSSIA.

Mr. T. Meyersohn, writing from Minsk to Rev. John Wilkinson, states that he has recently purchased a house in that town. This is a most important step, as he will now be independent of landlords, most of whom are either Jews or Greek Catholics, and enemies to the Jewish Mission. A Talmudical Jew, who a few years ago received a New Testament, lately called on Mr. Meyersohn, requesting baptism. He reported the encouraging fact that many of the Talmudical students of his town, who had received New Testaments, were studying the Book together, in spite of prohibitions. Mr. Meyersohn adds: "This is by no means a rare occurrence in the history of the Hebrew New Testament distribution, and sooner or later must bring blessing."

The Russian clergyman at Minsk is an earnest Christian and a lover of Israel, and when formerly occupying the position of prison chaplain in that town, he distributed a large number of New Testaments among the Jewish prisoners. He is now assisting Mr. Meyersohn, who has just sent him one hundred copies of the New Testament in Hebrew, Jargon, and Russian for distribution among the Jews of Minsk.

POLAND.

Much opposition has been encountered by Pastor Rosenstein, of Warsaw, in his efforts to evangelise the Jews of that city and of the surrounding district. The opposition has twice taken the form of plots to bring the missionary within the arm of the law, and on one occasion they succeeded in getting him and his wife imprisoned. On another occasion, having been told by a Jew that there were a number of Jewish believers requiring instruction in a certain town, Mr. Rosenstein visited it, only to find he had been deceived. The Jews informed the police that he was distributing prohibited literature, but this time their plans were foiled by the production of the Governor's concession. On his return journey to Warsaw his fellow-passengers violently abused him, and one young man was frank enough to own that they would have made an end of him if there had been no Christians in the carriage. Pastor Rosenstein concludes, "We may be certain that the Lord Himself will arise to save his poor people. May the Lord hasten that day!"

AMERICA.

"The Mission of the Covenant to Israel" is the name of a new mission which has just been founded by the Second Reformed Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia city. Their missionary, Mr. Moses Greenberg, and his wife, are hard at work conducting eight meetings a week, with an attendance of from ten to fifty at each. No disputations are allowed at the close of the meetings, and thus those who are earnestly seeking the light are retained, while the merely contentious are kept away, or, if they come, are compelled to keep silence. There are already two applicants for baptism, both in good situations, which, however, they expect to lose as soon as they have thus publicly confessed their faith in Christ. A dispensary has been opened, at which the services of three doctors are kindly given, while no less than forty young people, who are members of the three Covenanter congregations of Philadelphia, have come forward to help in the work.

Rev. J. C. McFeeters, pastor of the Second Reformed Presbyterian Church, writes:—"We have a congregation here of Scotch-Irish Covenanters of 300 members, and we are becoming inspired with the thought that we are here for this very work.... This work is our great mission now, and I thank the Lord He has turned our minds and hearts to it." In response to an appeal from Mr. McFeeters, a grant of 1000 Hebrew New Testaments, 1000 Judeo-German portions, and some tracts, has been made by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews for this promising work.

YEMENITES AT JERUSALEM.

From the Jewish Missionary Intelligencer we learn that Rev. J. Jamal continues his energetic labours among the Jews of Jerusalem, both Spanish and Yemenite. He writes:—"A Yemenite Jew, who had just come from Yemen, called on me for the purpose of making my acquaintance, for, he said, he had heard about me in Yemen. He stayed with me about an hour. . . . He listened with interest, and asked me if I could give him a book containing in detail the story of Jesus and his religion. I gave him a New Testament in Hebrew, which he at once began to read."

Calling on a Yemenite Jew, Mr. Jamal was delighted to find him reading the New Testament to his wife and children. "It is my best companion on Sabbath days. I go nowhere after synagogue hours, but sit and read it at home."

In the Spanish and Yemenite synagogues of one of the Jerusalem colonies Mr. Jamal states that he has had many opportunities of reading and conversing with the Jews about the one thing needful.

POOR JEWS OF JERUSALEM.

Mr. T. J. Alley, whose work among the poor of Jerusalem has previously been described, writes:—"I recently read in a London paper the statement that the Russian Jews of Jerusalem are ruining the poor Arabs with bad whisky. They have built drinking booths, and are ruining the poor Arabs! The thing struck me with much surprise, as I had seen or heard of nothing of the kind. I at once searched the city in every part, with the outlying colonies and surroundings, inquiring everywhere for 'drinking booths' or other places that might answer to the charge; and was unable to find any such thing, or any person that had ever seen or heard of anything of the kind."

Mr. Alley regards this as a typical instance of misrepresentation on the part of unchristian Jew-haters—calumny against a starving and wretched people. He says: "Come to Jerusalem in winter, and go with me to witness scenes which hide away from sight. Pass from the indescribable horrors of suffering and death to the great Jewish cemetery on the Mount of Olives, and count one hundred or more open graves awaiting the dead, largely from starvation and exposure. If you are a child-lover, stand and look into fourteen little child graves in one place, and separated by only ten-inch spaces, yawning for the little starved ones from their starved mothers' arms, and that but a few yards from the spot where the compassionate Lover of 'little children' beheld the city and wept over it!"

JEWS AT THE EAST END.

The Sunday at Home has begun a series of articles on "Sunday in East London." Its revelation of Jewish life there will be read with great interest both by sociologists and by Christian workers. Great and numerous changes have taken place in Whitechapel within a generation, which are affecting all forms of religious work, and raising new problems for solution. "The list of places of worship which have been given up and devoted to non-religious purposes during the last twenty-five years is a long one. Their activities and ministrations in the district may have taken other forms, but some of them will be sadly missed in a Sunday visit to East London." The old sources of voluntaryism in Whitechapel are greatly diminished. Funds for the parish churches are more difficult to raise, owing to the removal of rich residents, and the disappearance of the middle-class has also deprived the neighbourhood of its best workers. Money help has to be sought from without; only thus can "the truly noble and multifarious work which is carried on at Whitechapel parish church" be maintained.

But it is the swift full stream of Jewish life flowing into the district which is sweeping away the old and bringing in the new; and what the new is to be no one can divine. In Whitechapel and Mile End parishes amounts to 35,000. Lord Rothschild said at a meeting of the Jewish Board of Guardians this year, "We have now a new Poland in the East of London. Our first business is to humanise our Jewish immigrants, and then to Anglicise them." Christians will go a step further, and say, "We must Christianise them."

THE JEWISH POPULATION

That the richer Jews, whatever their own beliefs and practices may be, are anxious to maintain Jewish traditions and practices among the bulk of their nation, is evident from the large number of synagogues built within four years. Within a short distance of each other large synagogues have been built in the New-road, Vine-court, and Greenfield-street; another is now being built in Great Alie-street; smaller synagogues are in Scarborough-street Mansell-street, Commercial-road, and Plummer's-row. There is a project on foot for building, at a cost of £30,000, in the Commercial-road; it is to be called the Hambro' Synagogue, and is to seat 1000 men and 400 women, or twice as many as any existing synagogue.

A NEW AND VERY LARGE SYNAGOGUE

While the life of the Jews, so far as it is visible in Whitechapel thoroughfares on a Sunday, has many apparently pleasing features, it is sad and wretched enough in the off-streets. The sight there is appalling, and can only be paralleled by the Jewish quarter of some Polish or Galician town. "The poorest and densest population of the British Isles is there packed together in a state of INHUMAN, SOLID, AND SODDEN POVERTY."

The population of Whitechapel, which averages 800 to the acre, rises there to 3,000. The practical impossibility of changing the habits of the adult population causes the leaders of London Judaism to make extraordinary efforts for educating and Anglicising the children both on Sundays and week days,

Jewish Sunday Schools are a marked feature of East-end life; and inasmuch as the distinctively Jewish buildings of Whitechapel are unequal to the needs of the population, must necessarily be provided for in some other way.

THE IMMENSE OVERFLOW OF CHILDREN

During the last few years the new buildings of the London School Board have been offered and accepted for the Sunday use of Jewish children; almost all the Board schools in Whitechapel, Spitalfields, Mile End, and Stepney are thus engaged. In point of fact, there is now no Board school in any district of East London where Jews reside in considerable numbers, which is not used on Sunday for this purpose.

The number in attendance is something astonishing. At Old Castle-street it is often a thousand. They receive instruction in Hebrew and in the Scriptures. It is estimated that 20,000 of them are being daily equipped for the industrial market in East London, and that in two or three years they will be launched into life.

It should be noticed as one of the ways in which English life is being influenced by this foreign population, that the museum attached to the Whitechapel Free Library is open on Sunday afternoons as a concession to the enormous proportion of Jewish residents, and is attended by as many as 1600 persons every Sunday. About eighty attend the three Sunday classes at Toynbee Hall in literature, physiology, and botany.

The parish church recognises the claim of the Jews, and holds special services for them on their principal festivals. The prayers and lessons are read in Hebrew and German, and sermons are preached in English and Judæo-German; between 400 and 500 persons are present. The testimony as to the moral condition of this community is most striking. "Drunkenness is almost unknown, temperance societies are unheard of, for the Jew is never intoxicated. The public-houses will be full on Saturday and Sunday night, but not a Jewish face will be seen there. Licentiousness among women is equally rare. Family ties are sacred. Nothing is more remarkable on Sunday than the quiet and orderliness of a great population of alien faith and speech, who, from their point of view, are under no obligation religiously to observe the day, and who are, it is said, less aggressive in the streets than many of their better circumstanced co-residents."

We ask—what do all these things mean for Israel and for England?

LYNCHING.—Most terrible accounts continue to come in from Kentucky. So frequent and awful have been the lynchings that according to The Citizen, of Brooklyn, N.Y., a race outburst may take place at any moment. It is said that secret meetings have been held among the negroes from house to house, and they have become very bold in their utterances and threats. The white citizens in their turn are alarmed, and are sleeping on their arms, ready for any emergency.

A CHRISTIAN HOME FOR YOUNG MEN has been established in the South of London in connection with Rev. F. B. Meyer's church and congregation. It is situated at 37, Clapham-road, near to Kennington Church. The charges for residence are very moderate. It is hoped that a number of Christian young men engaged in business during the day will be thus banded together for mutual help, and for aiding in Christian enterprises during their spare hours in that populous district.

Some London Missions.

THE THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

RAILWAYS have in these days so largely monopolised the travelling that busy men, unless specially concerned in shipping, are apt to forget that London is the greatest port in the world, and that her rivers and docks are frequented by sail from every clime and men of every race. The Thames, that great water highway, teems with all sorts and conditions of men—sailors and officers, passengers and emigrants, bargemen and watermen, dock labourers and mechanics; and many of them are, by virtue of their avocation, isolated from ordinary Gospel privileges. Amongst these river toilers the Thames Church Mission has for fifty years carried on a useful evangelistic service—a service which God has owned in the conversion of unnumbered souls. Its parish, so to speak, extends from Richmond to the Nore, a distance of seventy-two miles, with an average working population of 300,000.

The living agents are fifteen missionaries and colporteurs, earnest men, familiar with seafaring and river life, and apt in personal dealing with the careless and unconverted. Besides, there is the Chaplain, Rev. T. J. Price, stationed at Gravesend, who devotes himself mainly to the passengers and crews of seagoing ships and steamers. These workers are engaged constantly, fog or fine, visiting from vessel to vessel, speaking individually to the men on board, selling Bibles where possible, and holding brief dinner-hour services in the forecastles.

How they are received, I have often had the opportunity of noting, having spent many a day with the T.C.M. on the river. Rarely have I observed any unwillingness to listen to plain words of warning. Moreover, I have met many—from down to humble coal-heavers—who have thankfully confessed that they owe their newness of life to the work and witness of the T.C.M. Incidents, one cannot here begin to give; but the number, even within my personal knowledge, seems endless. On the barges, the river steamers, the piers, in Dutch eelboats, Jersey brigs, trading ships, coal and seagoing steamers, and craft of all kinds, as well as amongst the artisans in the docks I have met many who avow their gratitude, under God, to this Mission, and many of these are now serving Christ in this and other lands. Besides this river patrolling, there are in various docks, and here and there by the riverside, mission-rooms in which good work is done.

Such a mission must commend itself to all interested in sailors, and it ought to have its share of generous support. A burden presses at present on the hearts of those responsible—that is the need of a pension fund for aged workers. One has been forty-eight years constantly at work upon the river, others nearly as long. They cannot keep at this arduous service much longer, and some provision should be made for them. Already £700 has been raised, but more is needed to make the fund effective. Full information as to this interesting work may be had of the secretary, Mr. F. Penfold, R.N., 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.

ASHBURTON HOME FOR GIRLS.

Some years ago, Lady Ashburton was led to consecrate a block of cottages on her property in Globe-road, E., to the service of God among endangered and friendless girls. At great expense the buildings were altered to suit the needs of the work. Under the care of Miss Mary L. Okell, this beautiful Home has prospered greatly, and has done valuable work on behalf of hundreds beset by peculiar perils and sorely in need of loving care and proper training.

There are now in the Home 44 inmates—motherless, fatherless, forsaken, and "awkward" girls—in course of training. Some twenty of these are about fourteen years old, and will soon be going out to domestic service, as so many have already done. Another twenty, from 10 to 14, are being schooled as well as trained, and must remain longer on hand. Then there are in the charming little nursery six dear little mites—the youngest a lovely baby, whose mother is in a home for inebriates. While the care of the babies seems aside from the original idea of the Home, it is found to be good for the girls to have little ones to mind; and, moreover, these little things have been discovered under such circumstances that they could not be refused admission. The earnest Christian influence and love brought to bear on these girls by Miss Okell and her helpers can only be understood by those who have gone into the Home and marked its home-like atmosphere. Much more might be added, but as Lady Ashburton maintains this Home at her own charges she will desire as little as possible said. It has been, I know, the birthplace of many souls; girls taken from and transformed into faithful followers of Jesus. Moreover, and in a wonderful way, Miss Okell has been led to begin classes and meetings for the police of the district, and God has owned this work remarkably in the conversion of some of these. The men are eager to hear, and press to the meetings open to them, searching earnestly the Word of God.

But to this original Globe-road Home others, for which Miss Okell is personally responsible, have been added. In a quiet Home at Barnet there are fourteen girls—of a somewhat superior class, under the loving care of Miss Okell's sister. This was the first offshoot, but there are more. In a providential way a house, formerly used as a Cottage Home, at Hayling, was offered at a moderate rent. As it seemed to be of God, it was taken. It accommodates fourteen girls, while it also serves as a Seaside and Convalescent Home for girls needing a change. Yet further, a lady who had been a missionary in North Africa and compelled by ill-health to return home, had it on her heart to work among little girls at her own charges. So a Nursery Home was opened at Loughton, where there are now eight little ones from Globe-road, being cared for by this sister for Christ's sake.

Thus, in these four Homes, eighty friendless and orphan girls are being loved, mothered, and trained, in addition to very many who, having passed through, are now out in service. While the noble founder maintains the original Home, the others are Miss Okell's care. She will be thankful for any loving fellowship in bearing this burden. Her address is Ashburton Home, Hereford-place, Globe-road, E. PEARL FISHER.

REVIVAL IN DUNLOP.

DURING the last week in October meetings were held each night in the Free Church, Dunlop, connected by ministers of that denomination who have in the past been much owned of God. The interest grew and blessing came. This effort was followed by a week's meeetings in the Established Church, likewise conducted by ministers who also have been greatly used in the work of winning souls.

Increasing interest was shown, and what had originally been intended as purely Congregational "mission weeks," developed into united work—both ministers, with almost the entire Christian community, throwing themselves heartily into the service. God manifestly led the workers to arrange for another week's meetings. The audiences had grown so large that accommodation could not be found in the Free Church for the numbers attending. The addresses were, for the most part, given by the servants of God belonging to both denominations who had taken part in the previous meetings.

God sending blessing to saint and sinner in such an unlimited measure caused arrangements to be made for a continuance of the work. Hitherto the blessing had been chiefly among the young, but at this point there came indications of conversions amongst the middle-aged. People from the surrounding districts are hearing of the movement, and are visiting the meetings. A number of these have professed faith in Christ. It seems as if this revival movement here is going to spread to other places, as did a similar work in this place in 1860.

One marked result has been the greatly intensified desire on the part of God's people to meet for prayer. Many have gathered together, at what would usually be considered most inconvenient hours, to plead with God for blessing. On the last two Sabbaths, at the Y.M.C.A. morning prayer meeting, in which few of late have been taking much interest, there would be fully 100 present (we have only a population of 357 in the village).

The meetings are to be continued for still another week. Prayer is asked that the Spirit's work may deepen and extend. J. W.

"WHAT IS THAT IN THINE HAND?"

(Ex. iv. 2.)

"He touched her hand, and the fever left her, and she rose and ministered unto Him." (Matt. viii. 15, R.V.)

"Take my hands and let them move
At the impulse of Thy Love."—F. R. H.

My hands were filled with many things
That I did precious hold,
As any treasure of a King's,
Silver, or gems, or gold.
THE MASTER came, and touched my hands
(The scars were in his own),
And at his feet my treasures sweet
Fell shattered, one by one.

"I must have empty hands (said He),
Wherewith to work my works through thee."

My hands were stained with marks of toil,
Defiled with dust of earth;
And I my work did oft-times soil,
And render little worth.
THE MASTER came and touched my hands,
And crimson were his own;
But when, amazed, on mine I gazed,
Lo, every stain was gone.

"I must have cleansèd hands (said He),
Wherewith to work my works through thee."

My hands were growing feverish,
And cumbered with much care;
Trembling with haste and eagerness,
Nor folded oft in prayer.
THE MASTER came, and touched my hands,
With healing in his own;
And calm and still to do his will
They grew,—the fever gone.

"I must have quiet hands (said He),
Wherewith to work my works through thee."

My hands were strong in fancied strength,
But not in power divine;
And bold to take up tasks at length
That were not his, but mine.
THE MASTER came, and touched my hands,
And mighty were his own;
But mine since then have powerless been,
Save his are laid thereon.

"And it is only thus (said He),
"That I can work my works through thee."

PRINCESS MARY VILLAGE HOMES.

THE annual report of these Homes at Addlestone, Surrey, founded by Mrs. Meredith in 1871 for the children of criminal parents, and for those in positions of destitution, cruelty, or immoral influences, has been recently published. It thankfully records God's blessing upon this work of saving the victims of hereditary crime. There were 189 girls in the cottages; of these fifty-six engaged in industries, laundry work, plain needlework, dressmaking, and machine knitting, and had earned in the year £523. The cottage system still proves the happiest and most beneficial way of bringing up the children, and fitting them for future usefulness.

The Duchess of Teck and the Duchess of York have again shown the warm interest they ever take in the Homes. The Duchess of York gave £205 out of the surplus of the present given her by the ladies of England, and caused great rejoicing by most kindly sending the children a piece of bride-cake.

Her Majesty's Inspector of Industrial Schools reports favourably: "The children are most carefully provided for. . . . It is evident the children are under careful, kind, and judicious training. . . . The school carries on its most important work with undiminished success, and is very ably administered."

The report appeals for help towards a much-felt want. Some £700 will build the "Princess May Seaside Home," to which invalid girls might be sent. Help is needed to maintain the work in its present efficiency, and at the present time assistance is specially sought to execute the repairs and restoration which now, after twenty-three years, are required in every one of the cottages. Any who will visit the Homes and see for themselves what is being done will be most heartily welcomed. Addlestone is reached from Waterloo by the South-Western Railway. The Homes are a few minutes' walk from the station.

A TRUE STORY.

In a London suburb, some time ago, a heavy storm began to descend, driving unprepared pedestrians into every available place of shelter. One gentleman, too delicate and well dressed to brave the storm, stood under the portico of a house of some pretensions. Presently, the door was opened, and a kindly voice said, "Come in out of the blinding rain, for God's sake! I saw you stand up."

"Thank you, indeed, for such kindness, especially when offered in God's name," said the stranger, entering. He was ushered into a spacious dining-room, when his temporary host said—

"That was merely a form of speech, not to be taken seriously."

"I am sorry," said the other, "for it dissipates that delightful vision of freemasonry in Him which your words conjured up before me."

At this point a youth bounded into the room.

"Oh, father," he said, "I did not know anyone was here. But I can't manage these questions. I wish you would write and say you do not wish me to go in for the Scripture exam. You can, you know. And what is the good of it?"

The father looked half humorously towards the stranger.

"This sort of thing is more in your line than in mine," he said; "could you give my son an opinion in the matter?"

"No," said the other, "I do not think an opinion would do much good. But perhaps I could help you with the questions," he addressed the young student, "while I am partaking of this generous shelter?"

The boy looked shy; then he said, in a manly way—

"Well, I wish you would, please. I don't like funking a thing that nearly all the other fellows manage to do."

The two, so suddenly brought together, set to work. Soon the boy was deep in the subject, and then he said—

"Well, this opens up no end of possibilities! Why, I am not going to be content with just knowing the answers to these questions—I must master the whole surroundings."

His father looked pleased; he thanked the stranger, and said—

"How strange this all seems! Two hours ago I had never seen you; an accident causes us to meet, and here you are coaching my son! You lay me under a great obligation, and if I can serve you in any way——"

"You shall do so," said the stranger, "but, remember, I am more than happy to do this, for God's sake."

"Ah, you have the best of me there!" was the reply.

After a mutual exchange of courtesies the stranger left, with a promise of further help to the boy, and giving his address. Six months later he received a letter from the youth, whom he had seen several times in the interval, telling of his father's desire to see him—he had a communication to make—would the stranger come at once? He went, and found his genial rescuer from the storm in some distress of mind.

"My doctor tells me my days' are numbered—there is my son, he esteems you highly—I shall have to leave him."

"How is it with yourself? Your last letter was cheering."

"How can I thank you or God? On a seeming accident hung all my eternal destiny. God sent you to me. I know no subtle methods of expression; I have no set of doctrines; I know nothing of dogma—but I do know God as my Saviour."

"Then you are well provided for here and hereafter," was the reply.

"Yes; your coming that day in the storm was the beginning of new life to me. Every question of my heart was carried to the Book, and there I found the answer. When my son told me the other day that he wished to become a minister of the Gospel, for that you had shown him Jesus, and he rejoiced in salvation, I was overjoyed. Then I heard my own death-warrant; but I told my doctor it was all right for me, I only feared for my son."

"Fear not," said his friend, "his feet are set upon a rock—his heart is right with God. He is a fine young Christian."

Two months more, and the patient was passing away.

"It is all gloriously bright," he whispered. "Nothing between! I have such confidence in my lovely Saviour—I so weak, He so strong—He calls me out of the storm, now."

And presently he passed away, another testimony to the wonder-working, far-reaching, miraculous, converting power of the mercy, grace, and love of God, "the only wise Saviour."

HOME OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

On Wednesday last week the usual workers' meeting was held at the Home of Industry, and much interest was stirred in a bright little band of some twenty already gathered in the Hackney Home, and being trained for Canada.

An "Occasional Paper," containing the annual record for the year, was placed in the hands of the friends, and many must have rejoiced to find that in these days of strain and pressure our sister has been able to close the year free of debt, although the general donations have fallen £1000 below last year. The emigration work is reported on in encouraging terms: "Financially, Canada has suffered, as every country has, and yet this year our record of applications received has been larger than ever, for both boys and girls. Our spring party was one of the best we ever had, and the truth of this is vouched for, in the fact of our only having two boys left at the end of the first week after their arrival. The party brought out by Miss Macpherson was principally composed of small boys and girls, but, thank God, He is opening up homes for the very smallest of them."

The Home work has been well sustained, and is now in fullest activity. Delightful details are given, in the report, of various members of the widows' sewing class and the mothers' meetings. The colporteur with his Bible barrow has done a grand aggressive work. The nursing among the poor is carried on faithfully by a devoted helper—thoroughly qualified. The work among the young women, young men, and children has been greatly blessed; while such outside efforts as the Railway Gate Keepers' Mission, the Flower Mission, Bird Fair evangelisation, and lodging-house visitation are vigorously maintained. All should obtain and read this "Occasional Paper," as also an interesting booklet by Miss Macpherson on "Crossing the Atlantic."

Dr. R. McKilliam opened the workers' meeting with an address on Unity in view of the Lord's coming, showing how the hope of his return unifies believers and brings them together in harmony and love.

Miss Macpherson then introduced Miss Child, and, while doing so, recalled in a short and interesting talk the time when this sister first visited the public-houses in the East End.

Miss Child gave a graphic account of the work of the Lord under her care at the Welcome Home. She reminded the audience of the gales and shipwrecks lately prevailing, causing such havoc amongst many families. She then referred to the Country Home, one of the latest outcomes, and the good it has done already, illustrating it by the story of a young lad, now on his way to Scotland, who had been there five weeks, partly recovered physically, but, best of all, who had learned the way of salvation. Miss Child also alluded to the monthly text given at the meetings of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew," another branch of the work, which forms a password amongst the members scattered in a great many parts of the world—this month being "He careth for you." Another branch was the "Free Supper" effort, by which numbers of our poor sailors were gathered, and after a hearty meal the Gospel told to them. Next came the Christmas Boat, to the unloading of which several hundred seamen of various nationalities would be invited on Saturday, December 29. Amongst the results of a former distribution was a young man now labouring in connection with the New York Port Society.

ASH, SURREY.—For several years a small band of Christian railway platelayers and working men have borne testimony in the open air in this village in the summer months. In the winter they go from house to house, holding cottage meetings and testifying as opportunity is found. Gospel books, tracts, testaments, or texts will be welcome. Address, Inspector Poate, S.E.R. North Camp Station, Aldershot.

EAST LONDON MISSION WORK.

Berger Hall, Bromley-by-Bow, is the headquarters of the home mission work of the East London Institute, Harley House, Bow-road. It is situated in one of the poorest districts of East London, in which dwell a congested crowd of unskilled dock and general labourers and match factory girls. Like all such districts near the docks, there is always a vast amount of poverty, sickness, and sorrow, chiefly the result of no work. It is really difficult to understand how the poor live. The agencies at work to bring about this result may be classified under four heads.

1. Spiritual.—Gospel meetings, temperance meetings, Bible classes, young men's and young women's Christian societies, open-air meetings, house-to-house visitation, mothers' meetings, Sunday-school, Band of Hope, drift children's meetings, etc. Our Sunday night Gospel meeting is attended by about eight hundred people, all the other meetings are well attended, and there are one thousand children in our Sunday-schools. It is with joy that we record the fact that four members of the Young Men's Christian Society are now in training for the foreign mission field, and one is already at work in Central Africa.

2. Medical.—A large mission, under the superintendence of a qualified practitioner. About one hundred and fifty patients, who are too poor to pay for suitable medical or surgical aid are attended to weekly. During last year five thousand patients were treated. To this is attached a nursing home and maternity department.

3. Educational.—Night school for men, lads, and factory girls held twice weekly.

4. Social.—A soup kitchen fitted up with every modern improvement open daily during the winter, where the poor can obtain a quart of good soup for one penny, a currant pudding for one penny, and a meat pudding for two pence. In special cases of sickness and distress, after careful investigation by our missionary on the spot, meat, grocery, coals, bread and clothing are given.

Christmas is duly celebrated at Berger Hall as elsewhere. Christmas dinners are given to the poor, and on successive occasions we invite our night-school men, lads, and lasses to tea, whilst, if funds will permit, we also hope to entertain our one thousand Sunday-school and drift children, and a certain number of poor and afflicted old people, and thus bring a little Christmas cheer into their dull, monotonous lives.

Winter is upon us again, bringing the usual multiplicity of needs, and providing abundant opportunity for those who can do so to emulate that good man of whom the poet sings, who made "his wealth a fountain of perennial 'alms.'"

UNITED WORK IN SOUTH LONDON.

Last Saturday a number of clergymen and ministers of South London met at Christ Church by invitation of Rev. F. B. Meyer. After conference it was resolved to hold a series of united services in the district in connection with the Week of Prayer at the New Year. The meetings will commence with the Lord's Supper at St. Philip's Church on the Monday afternoon; all Christian believers will be welcomed.

The evening meetings are arranged to be held in some of the large central buildings, such as Bermondsey Town Hall, New Surrey Chapel (Blackfriars-road), Wesleyan Chapel (Lambeth-road), the hall of St. Thomas's Church, etc. All the associated clergy and ministers are purposing to attend each meeting,. so as to manifest the unity of the Body of Christ. A series of Bible readings, conducted by various brethren, will be given in the afternoon in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. The evening services will be partly evangelistic.

We allude in advance to this movement, in the hope that some such exhibition of Christian unity may be arranged in other parts of London, and throughout the country. The initial step seems to be the calling together of all the earnest workers in a district of all Evangelical denominations for conference and prayer. It was a pleasing circumstance in the meeting referred to that the city missionaries of the district were invited to be present; these are taking part in open-air work, and in the distribution throughout the neighbourhood of invitations to attend the united gatherings.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 2.—MATTHEW XXVIII.

The Resurrection (1-10).—Earthquakes usher in a new time in the earth and the heart. Whenever one comes to thee, look out for the angel, and the revelation of Christ. With what ease do God's angels remove the stones that sealed our hopes. The keepers quake, but the women have no cause for fear. To the froward heaven is froward, but meek to the meek. Those that come to seek and learn are sent forth to tell. That morning the whole Church, in which all who believe have part, passed from the power of darkness into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. Let us live on the resurrection side of death. Angels are forgotten when Jesus comes. From his lips "fear not" comes with new meaning, for by his death and resurrection He has removed all cause for fear. Women cannot be out of their sphere when conveying such tidings.

Casting Aside Messiah's Bands (11-15).—It was absurd to make such a statement. How could they know that the disciples had stolen the body if they were asleep? And was it likely that Christ's friends would have taken the trouble to unwind the linen clothes, and leave them on the floor of the sepulchre? Men will believe any lie rather than God's truth, because their hearts are evil.

The King set on God's holy Hill (16 20).—He was exalted by the right hand of God. The mountains of temptation and ascension face each other across Christ's life. On the first all authority is the devil's, on the latter Christ's. By his obedience to death, He wrested the sceptre from the hand of the god of this world. Mark the alls—"All nations, all things, all the days."

MONDAY, DECEMBER 3.—MARK I.

The Forerunner (1-8).—The ploughshare must precede the sower. Men must repent before they can believe the Gospel. The plunge in the river was significant of the resolve to leave the old, and rise to newness of life. Like Paul, John would not be brought under the power of anything. If you would wield power over others, you must exercise it first over yourself. The greatest saints stoop lowest. Souls need something more positive and searching than water. It is a matter for thankfulness that our God is a consuming fire to our sins.

Preparations for Ministry (9-20).—The Holy Ghost had indwelt the Saviour; He must now anoint Him. If He is in thee for character, He must be on thee for service. When we obey even to death, the Spirit descends from the opened heaven. (12) See the High Priest tempted that He may become perfect in sympathy. Adam's regal power over beasts returns to the Second Man. (14) When John is taken, Jesus comes. (16) From these quarries the foundation stones of the Church were hewn (Eph. ii. 20).

A Day in Christ's Life (21-39).—He forsook not the outward ordinances of religion. Uncleanness acknowledges the holiness of Jesus, and is expelled by it. Let Him into thy heart, and unclean devils will depart. (29) In the afternoon Peter is well compensated for the loan of the house and the simple meal. (35) In the evening the whole village draws upon the stored virtue of the Saviour's person. But notwithstanding the heavy strain, He is astir at dawn for prayer, and away on a preaching tour. Oh, restless love that spent itself for men!

The Leper (40-45).—Christ's love and power are commensurate. Gauge the one, you measure the other. He will do as much for us. Let us publish his fame.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 4.—MARK II.

The Fetters of Disease (1-12).—The paralysis was probably the result of sin; else Christ had not preceded the cure by forgiveness. It is thus He deals with the race. First, the question of sin, then of emancipation from all other evil. The man himself must have had faith in Christ, otherwise forgiveness of sins could not have been given him. Would that we were as eager to bring our dear ones into the presence of Christ! He who could exert such power in the physical had equal power in the spiritual and eternal. When Christ says, "Arise and carry thy bed," He supplies the needed power. Claim it. Reckon on Him. Act faith.

The Fetters of Suspicion (13-17).—All the beauty of Christ's character was missed by the religious leaders of his day, because they always bore towards Him a critical and suspicious demeanour. Whatever was fair in Him was distorted by the medium through which it reached the eye of their soul. How attractive is the Sinless One to sinners! How quickly his pure eye can detect an apostle in a publican!

The Fetters of Tradition and Ceremonialism (18-28).—The Ritualist demands the outward, the conventional, the ancient usage of the past. Christ says, "Be natural. Do not blindly follow past generations, because what may have been right for them may have been superseded by the conditions under which you are called to live. If the bridegroom is with you, be merry. If you make a new garment, use new cloth. If you have new wine, let it fashion its own bottle-skins." (23) The needs of man, whether of body or soul, are greater than ceremonial restriction. Ceremonies are the expression of life; where life is wanting, they are meaningless and void. When the outward rite and the real need of man are in antagonism, the outward must give way before the urgency of human need.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 5.—MARK III.

The Withered Hand (1-6).—Through long disuse of powers which God has given, but which we have refrained from exercising, atrophy may have set in; Christ, however, bids us exert them again. As we dare to obey, we shall find ourselves able. Dare to speak, or pray, or work, not at the impulse of your nature, but at his bidding, and you will suddenly find yourself empowered.

The Apostolate (7-19).—On three occasions Christ used the little boat as his pulpit (Mark iv. 1; Luke v. 1). We must be disciples before apostles. As the Father sent the Lord, so the Lord sends us. Our mission is threefold—to bear Him company, to perform his errands, and to cast out devils. What infinite variety in the Apostolic band! The Boanergic group of four; the group of questioners who were sometimes doubters; the group of practical men, whose business capacity was a snare at least to one. If a traitor amid the twelve, who can expect to have his fields free of tares?

The Blasphemy against the Holy Spirit (20-30).—The Pharisees circulated the infamous charge—not that they believed it, but to satisfy the questions being asked on all sides. It was an absurd charge, as Jesus showed. They affirmed what they knew to be untrue; but for selfish reasons they would not confess what they really thought. This is a deadly sin, because it injures the sensitiveness of conscience and produces moral death.

Family Ties (31-35).—The family of Jesus must be taught, though with the utmost delicacy, that they must not attempt to control his public ministry. All who love God and do his will are welcomed into the family circle, and become blood relations of the Son of God.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6.—MARK IV.

The Sower (1-20).—Note the perils of the hearer that you may guard against the waste of the precious seed. There is a grave fear of the effect of light, fanciful, hovering thoughts. There is great fear also of a mere emotional response, the straightway springing up which has no root because the heart is hard. There is also fear lest the cares of the poor, the riches of the wealthy, and the too eager pursuit of other things, may drain away the strength of the soul, so that the Word of God shall be a slender stalk, without an ear or fruit. It is not enough to hear the Word, we must accept it and bear fruit, otherwise the ploughing and sowing and all the operations of nature are in vain. (10) Live up to what you know. Obedience is the key to understanding.

Parables from Common Life (21-34).—How quick the Master was to observe the meaning of natural symbols. To Him all things were unfoldings of eternal mystery, and the ways of men unconsciously mirrored the unseen. Are there bushels in your life? Use them as stands, not as coverings. All secrets come out; beware what you say. All measures come back on us; take care how you mete. (28) The mysterious co-operation of God in nature, and the gradual increments of growth, are analogous to the co-working of the Holy Spirit with every faithful sower of the Word, and the imperceptible stages through which the soul reaches maturity.

The Stilling of the Storm (35-41).—They that bear Christ company must prepare for squalls. He sleeps as man; He speaks as God. Now, rocked as a babe in its cradle; now, Master of wind and wave. Answer this question: "Who is this?" Nature has but one reply. This is the finger of God.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7.—MARK V.

A Legion of Devils (1-20).—Emblem of a sinner, a very Samson in wrong-doing, this man gives encouragement to those who are driven by a masterful passion. Distinguish between the sinner and the sinful spirits that have gotten control of him, and do their will. The demon that torments a man loves mischief, and would rather destroy swine than be idle. It was not Christ who destroyed the animal creation, but the spirit of evil. (15) The fear of further loss impelled the Gadarenes to request Christ's withdrawal. Christ and ill-gotten gain are incompatible. (18) Thou shalt have an eternity of face-to-face communion. Go forth and win others for thy Lord. Dost thou need a subject? Tell them what He has done for thee.

The Appeal of Weakness (21-34).—Christ could wrestle with Samson-demons, but had infinite tenderness to the slightest touch of need. She thought that virtue lay in his robe, and that the blessing could be drawn off, as water from a cistern, mechanically. Hers the mistake of the ritualist, who thinks that efficacy resides in the outward rite. Christ read her meaning, and saw the faith that groped in the dark, and took its hand, and led it into the light. He did not break this bruised reed. That He made her confess, was only his means of strengthening the crushed stem to become a pillar in his temple.

A Child (35-43).—Ill news travels fast. There is no need to fear when it is uttered before the Master's face. You must be in perfect sympathy with Him before you can behold his greatest miracles. A tumult of paid mourners is not an atmosphere in which the still small voice can speak. To all young life there comes from the Master of Life the call to arms.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8.—MARK VI.

The Mission of the Twelve (1-13).—His own believed Him not, but the twelve accounted Him Master. The work of the world is done by those who have nothing, and yet possess all things. When shall we learn that the wealth which conduces to our own blessedness and to man's well-being is that which we receive from fellowship with God. He who serves God faithfully, will find Him a good pay-master. He does not send his faithful ones on distant missions, without arranging each night that they should be entertained and fed.

The Death of the Baptist (14-29).—Better the dungeon with John, than the palace with Herod, for conscience filled the palace with the ghost of the murdered Baptist. A woman brought Herod to that. How careful women should be of the influence they exert over men; How careful men should be of yielding to any but the loftiest influence! This family was eaten with lust, hard by which dwells cruelty. No vice dwells alone. The satyrs always dance together in the ruins of a noble nature.

Christ's Dinner Table (30-44).—He sits as host at the great table of the Church. The meagre resources of his servants yield them the starting point for the multiplication of bread. He bids us go and see how little we have, that we may properly estimate the greatness of his help. The upward look precedes the breaking and giving. There is enough for each, not of bread alone but of fish, and the disciples are rested by fresh ministry, so the Lord recreates us by turning exhausted energies into new channels.

The Walking on the Sea (45-56).—What threatened to engulf becomes the bridge that brings Christ to our side. The contrary wind cannot keep Him away. His footsteps must be stayed if we would have his company. Where he is, storms drop, and the sick are made whole.

IF THE WIFE AND MOTHER, the real home-maker, has learned the blessed lesson of quietness, her life is the one calm, clear, true song, which never falters, and which brings all the other lives, little by little, up to its own gentle key, until at last the life of the home is indeed a sweet song of love.—J. R. Miller, D.D.

GOD FORBID that we should relax a single effort to reclaim a drunkard, but it is far easier, and more hopeful to take hold of the tendril life, and try to train it before it has run to weed: to mould the child for Christ before it has been thrown into the fire of blasphemy and drink and vice, to come out a black cinder.—Canon Fleming.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 9.

CHRIST TEACHING BY PARABLES.—Luke viii. 4-15.

GOLDEN TEXT (verse 11).

THE parable of the Sower, with which this lesson deals, is one of a series of seven (Matt. xiii.), all of which need to be studied. All are connected, and there is significance in the division of the seven into two groups—one of four, spoken to the multitudes, and the other of the three given only to his disciples (see Matt. xiii. 34, 36).

Our Lord's pulpit was a fishing boat upon the Lake of Galilee (Matt. xiii. 2). "It was remarkable," said Rob Roy Macgregor, who addressed the people on shore from this place, "how distinctly every word was heard, even at 300 yards off." The illustrations of his theme were furnished by the surrounding country. "From the edge of the lake the soil rises very rapidly. On such slopes, it easily happens, that the higher portion of a field has only a thin layer of mould; whilst, going down towards the plain, the bed of earth becomes deeper."—Godet. The four different kinds of soil were there—the wayside (5), trodden by the feet of the passer-by, where the seed lay on the surface until devoured by the birds; the rock (6), thinly covered with a layer of earth; the thorns (7), where, though the soil was fertile, the good seed was choked; and the good ground (8), which "is neither hard as the first, nor thin as the second, nor unclean as the third, but soft, deep, and free from other seeds."—Godet.

The parable teaches that the sole reason for failure lies in the soil—that is, in the hearts of the hearers. Not in the sower, who is the Lord Himself, either personally or through his servants. No one sows his seed with deliberate intention of getting no return. Not in the seed, which is the same in every case. The same warnings, facts, invitations, and Gospel promises are proclaimed to all. The Gospel is the "incorruptible seed" (1 Pet. i. 23-25). No one is lost for want of a Gospel fitted to save. But with the hearers, "How do you hear?" is a more solemn question to you than "How does another teach or preach?" (Heb. iv. 1, 2). This gives emphasis to our Lord's warning (8.) There are four kinds of hearers. The four prepositions used denote the various relations of the seed of the soil by (5), on (6), amidst (7), and into (8, R.V.).

The first is a careless, inattentive hearer (12). He is a hearer, so we must look for him in our congregations and Sunday-school classes; but he hears to no profit. The Word does not penetrate, but lies exposed like the seed on the surface of the hard-beaten soil. Worldly influences, evil habits have made the heart hard until the very desire to be saved has gone. A dying man, visited by his minister, said that he had never heard a single sermon. It had been his habit, as soon as the sermon commenced, to review his last week's trade, and to arrange business for the week following. The traffic of such business treads down to the seed; and, unseen, the birds of Satan watch to snatch away the seed.

The second makes a most helpful commencement (13). He hears with a degree of attention, and even receives the word with joy, and begins at once to show some evidences of growth. Already he begins to be numbered among the saved. Parents and teachers think of him as "their joy and crown of rejoicing." But there is a disappointing result. The plant withers as rapidly as it grew. And its withering results from the very influences necessary to its development. What is a plant without sun? And what is a Christian life without temptation? But there was a fatal defect. The soil was not deep enough. The heart had never been broken, therefore the plant had no root. It is not the presence of temptation and difficulty, but the absence of root that explains the failure.

The third are an advance upon the other two (14). The soil is fertile, but it is pre-occupied. In such a hearer there is a measure of sincerity and earnestness. He seeks salvation, but his defect is in not seeking with his whole heart. The new plant does not have all the soil to itself. It can grow thorns, and it can grow wheat; but it cannot grow both together. Neither can man have both this world and the next—mammon and God. "Their heart is divided, now shall they be found faulty." The thorns are of three kinds—cares in the case of the poor; riches in those who are getting on in life; and pleasures in those who love the world. Remember Demas!

The fourth (15) are of good and honest heart—sincere, honest, true, unprejudiced, without guile. See Nathanael (John i. 47); the Bereans (Acts xvii. 11). "Keep it" means hold it fast (R.V.), by meditation, until it becomes a part of himself. "Patience," or perseverance, in spite of obstacles and hindrances. Such were his disciples and the women (1-3). Are we of the number?

For the Young.

TWO LITTLE PREACHERS.

"How can children preach?" I fancy one of my young readers asks on seeing the title to this story. There are lots of ways of preaching, and I am going to tell of two little girls who preached by what they suffered rather than by what they said.

One afternoon in August a lady and gentleman might have been seen in a large ward in one of the London hospitals. It was visiting day, and groups were gathered together by the various bedsides. In one ward a large armchair was occupied by a sweet little girl, about eight years of age. Alice's face was buried in the cushions, and her wish was to shut out every sound. The reason of this was because no relation or friend came to visit her. The home of the suffering child was some distance from London, and her relations were too poor to afford the luxury of a journey in order to see the little patient.

Alice felt sorely her loneliness when others in the ward were enjoying happy meetings with those they loved. In order to keep herself from crying, which caused such pain to her bad eyes, she buried her face in the cushions, and spent the time in talking to Jesus. She knew and dearly loved the "Friend of little children"; and often at night, when unable to sleep, a patient in a bed near could hear the young sufferer repeating hymns and praying for patience to bear the pain bravely. Day by day little Alice preached many lessons to those who were brought into contact with her by her simple childlike faith and love to the Lord Jesus. Although she never had anyone to see her on the visiting days, and keenly felt the contrast between herself and others in the ward who were cheered by loving greetings from relatives and friends, she took this trouble, as well as all her bodily pain, to Jesus, and in this way her own faith was strengthened and she taught a silent lesson to others.

The other instance (also a true one) occurred in another large London hospital. Lizzie was the child of poor hard-working cottagers who lived in a pretty country parish in one of the loveliest counties in England. From quite a young child she had a serious infirmity, which necessitated her undergoing a very severe operation. After much persuasion the parents consented to part with their little sunbeam. The separation was very hard to bear, but the joy of receiving her back in renewed health made up for the sorrow and pain caused by her absence. One of the lady nurses at the hospital felt a special interest in the winsome child, and her suffering days were cheered by visits from kind friends. Lizzie's bright, happy face and merry ways made her quite the pet of the ward. Though often in great pain, those who attended to her, as well as visitors, were struck by her wonderful cheerfulness and the loving spirit she manifested to all around her, so, without knowing it, her life was a daily sermon.

When the time came for her to return home, there was a feeling of general regret amongst all who loved her that her sweet smile would no longer be in the ward to gladden them. May not both old and young readers learn much from these dear children? They shone brightly for Jesus in the midst of great suffering and trial. Though we may not be called to preach, our daily lives should be such as to make us blessings to all around us. Then what opportunities those have to whom God has given health and strength.

Some, perhaps, who read this may never have thought what a sphere of usefulness may be afforded by going on visiting days to cheer the sick and lonely ones in our large hospitals. If this service be done from love to Christ, it will bring the blessing promised in Matthew xxv. 36, "I was sick and ye visited Me." The Master will accept the lowly service as done to Himself, and reward it openly. Some, perhaps, who cannot go themselves may through others send gifts of flowers, fruit, books, and toys to brighten the dark days of many suffering ones. If this short account encourages but one thus to serve the Lord, it will not have been written in vain.

FIGUERAS GOSPEL MISSION.

IN the latest "Letter from Spain" Madame Lopez-Rodriguez gives interesting details of the recent prosecution of Don Alexander for contempt of the dogmas of the Roman Catholic religion. As a fact, Don Alexander had protested against the dogmas, not ridiculed them. In answer to the charge, he prepared, and committed to memory, an elaborate defence, in which he justified his action from Holy Scripture and Christian duty; but as the court was a civil one, not ecclesiastical, he was not allowed to advance his reasons or views. An able advocate represented him, however, and showed that the law allowed such expression of opinion as Don Alexander had used.

In the defence referred to, Don Alexander said: "We Protestants see in the consecrated wafer nothing more than flour kneaded with water, with out leaven. We look upon it as an idol, and in this light contrary to the law of God. We do not adore it, nor can we adore it, nor will we bow down before it, even in spite of the law of the land, the convict's chain, or death. The dominion of the law ends where the dominion of the conscience begins." Don Alexander's defence involved an outlay in legal expenses, of £249, of which only about half has so far been received from friends of Christian liberty in Spain. Madame Lopez-Rodriguez writes:—"As the matter has been so long on hand, some may imagine that all is paid."

We are glad to learn that one result of the prosecution has been the encouragement of independent religious thought in the province of Gerona and beyond. Describing a visit to a fishing village on the Mediterranean, Madame Lopez-Rodriguez says: "Not only was the pastor called upon for medical advice and medicines, but not a few came to him when suffering from toothache. Hearing of a neighbour cured by him, a woman came for relief. The pain was soon removed, and she exclaimed, 'The "praying man" of the village can do nothing. He muttered seven prayers to his saint, and for each prayer tied a knot in a piece of string, which he told me to wear round my neck all night. I did so, and never did I suffer such terrible pain. I shall not believe in praying to saints any more.' We told her of the 'One Mediator,' who is 'touched with the feeling of our infirmities,' and intercedes for us. Such superstition, taught by the Church of Rome, places her on a level with paganism, from which she originated."

The mothers' meeting at Figueras has now an attendance of from forty to fifty, while that at Vilafant has thirty names on the books. They are all the poorest of the poor. Picking olives from dawn to dusk, they only earn 3d. to 7d. a day! "As they cannot therefore afford to lose an afternoon's wages to attend a meeting, we give them 2½d. for knitting or sewing for two hours. Would not some lady who cannot do a similar work help us by undertaking to pay the money for nine months, or even one month? Scraps for making patchwork quilts, and of woollen materials for blankets, would be very acceptable. Entrusted to Messrs. R. MacAndrews and Co., Suffolk House, Laurence Pountney Hill, E.C., they will see it reaches us safely."

The mission schools are growing, there being now 350 children under instruction. Copies of the Letter, also the Defence, may be had from the hon. treasurer of the Mission, Dr. Macwhirter Dunbar, Hedingham House, Clapham Common, S.W.

THE MIND AND HABIT of secret prayer is so absolutely essential to the true Christian life; it so shapes and strengthens, deepens, and enriches the whole of the Christian life, that no lesson a mother can give her child, no life she can lead her child to live, no dowry she can send her child away with, is for one moment to be compared with the habit of prayer; the habit and the practice of secret, meditating, communing, restful, and refreshing prayer.—Alex. Whyte, D.D.

After the Thousand Years.*

II.—MILLENNIAL SHADOWS.

We have already noticed the very remarkable indications given in Scripture as to the mixed character of the Millennium, in which time Satan will be imprisoned, but not finally rendered powerless; in which rebellion will be driven beneath the surface, only to break out at the first opportunity with accumulated force; and in which multitudes will yield nothing more than a "feigned obedience" to the all-powerful Ruler, who, with his associates, the restored people of Israel, will rule the nations with a rod of iron from his throne of power on God's holy hill of Zion (Psa. ii.).

Is this a state of things consistent with Phil. ii. and Eph. i., and, let me add, Rev. xxi. and xxii.? Surely not. In the glorious Age of Ages that lies beyond that last of this world's long series of failures, the will of God will be done on a new earth as it is done in heaven. On that day of glory there shall fall no night; there no tears shall be shed; no death, by fire from heaven or otherwise, shall invade its perfect peace, for death itself must be destroyed; neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away.

On that new earth the heavenly city shall descend, the Bride adorned for her Husband, the ethereal mountain where Israel shall dwell; and the nations shall not go up as the sand of the sea to encompass it with armies, but shall peacefully walk in its light, and bring into it the glory and the honour of all their kings.

This cannot be the Millennial Age, for there shall be "no more curse," nor death. It cannot be Eternity, for the Lamb is still on the throne. The throne is the throne of God and the Lamb. It must therefore of necessity be a period intervening between these two.

The moral character of the Millennium, as well as the political and material conditions of the world in that period, have been generally understood by students of prophecy as presenting an almost perfect state of sinlessness, harmony, and prosperity. It is a task possessing little of attractiveness or satisfaction to seek in the light of Scripture to show that in these respects our notions of the coming dispensation have been exaggerated.

We have looked from our earth-prison, and thought the outside light was heaven. We have paused to listen amid the groaning of creation, and caught sounds of joy and liberty beyond, that seemed to be those of perfect bliss. And this was natural. The heart found rest and soothing in the thought of a universal jubilee, an unruffled sea, an unbroken song of harmony, by contrast with its present gloom, and fondly believed that this was at once to come to pass, yea, that it was "even at the doors." But, in truth, the transition will not be so immediate or so complete. A better dispensation is at hand, no doubt, with vast changes and tremendous blessings in its lap. But the perfect state will not be yet. Let us not allow our displeasure at such a suggestion to turn us away from carefully and submissively searching the Word of God, to see what of good the Lord's second coming will bring to the world, and what it will leave undone, unsettled, and incomplete.

Our object in Bible study is not self-pleasing, much less is it to fortify ourselves in present beliefs, as though no correction or addition were admissible. It is truth, truth only, and at whatever cost. The same passage (Rev. xx.) which fixes the length of the coming Kingdom of Christ on earth at a thousand years, and which describes the arrest of Satan and his imprisonment during that period, reveals also that at its end there will be this great and world-wide revolt against Christ. The language is perfectly clear and most startling: "When the thousand years are finished, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall come forth to DECEIVE the nations which are in the FOUR CORNERS OF THE EARTH, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to THE WAR; the number of whom is as the SAND OF THE SEA. And they went up over the BREADTH OF THE EARTH, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city."

I beg attention to the words in capitals. They indicate, as I read the passage, that the greater portion of mankind, at the end of the thousand years' reign, will be in a condition of spiritual death, and of bondage to sin and Satan, while the saints will be a small body easily encompassed and besieged by the host of the infidel armies. It is evident that the people of Israel, and the City of Jerusalem, beloved of God, are the objects of the attack. The people of Israel will have been all saved (Rom. xi. 26) from the date of the Lord's reappearance, when the sight of Him whom they had pierced will lead to their conversion. Besides the saints of Israel and Jerusalem, there will be found at the outbreak of the war, scattered here and there among the nations, an election of loyal and faithful men, who will not join the great mobilisation, or be numbered in the levies that will form the largest allied army ever yet seen on earth. That the fulness of Israel will lead to the riches of the Gentiles in every material sense, so long as they own Christ's sceptre, we know (Rom. xi. 12). That there will be godly persons found among the sons of the stranger (Isa. lvi. 3-8) we also know. And when, at Satan's summons, men flock to the standard of revolt, in numbers as the sand of the sea, coming up over the breadth of the earth, and from its four corners, there can be no doubt that individuals here and there among the nations will stand aloof, faithful to the end. But the masses, the world's population, will be in open revolt.

By means, therefore, of this short and terrible glimpse of the Millennium's end, a flood of light is cast back upon the moral character of the world during the whole of the thousand years preceding. It is a condition of outward and seeming peace, calm, and contentment; but inwardly the heart of man is what it always has been — enmity against God and against his Christ. Discontent is forced underneath the surface by the rod of iron (Psa. ii. 8, 9). The nations will be Christ's possession, and the uttermost parts of the earth his inheritance, not by conversion, but by coercion, to be "broken in pieces like a potter's vessel," at their first resistance; held down as the "footstool of his feet" throughout that age; and at its end, when in irrepressible and incorrigible hostility they dare once more to lift the rebel hand against Him, to be utterly and finally destroyed by fire from heaven.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSION, WALTHAMSTOW.—The annual meeting was held on 21st inst. at Field House, High-street. Mr. W. E. Whittingham presided, and the fifth year's report showed a total attendance at Shernhall-street of over 13,000, against nearly 7000 in the previous year, and that open-air meetings were held during the summer at Tower Hamlets, whilst the spiritual results were most encouraging.

The Study of Scripture.

BY THE LATE CANON HOARE*

Suppose we meet with a passage which we do not clearly understand; what are we to do? We really desire to know the teaching of the Holy Ghost in his own Word, and how are we to learn it? What should we do when we really desire the teaching of the Spirit? I venture to give a few practical suggestions.

1. Avail yourself of the learning and investigations of other men. Remember that with a limited education you may be very ignorant of the real meanings of the words. Make use, then, of the learning of others, as given in Bible classes, books, and good expositions of trustworthy men. Remember, also, that you are not the first person that has felt the difficulty, but that thousands and tens of thousands have been over exactly the same ground before you. Make use, then, of their investigations, if they are within your reach, and do not think it is necessary for you single-handed to find your own way without assistance through every passage.

2. Collect and compare parallel passages. Very few of these texts stand alone. In most cases there are many others of the same meaning abounding throughout the Scriptures. Make use of your Reference Bible, collect and compare them, and you will find that they throw great light on each other. What is difficult in one is clear in another, so that they all lighten up each other, and Scripture becomes its own expositor.

3. Be sure you study the context, and the whole argument in which the passage stands. It is the cutting and lopping system that is the fruitful source of error. There are certain portions of Scripture, like the Proverbs, full of sententious words in which the connection cannot easily be traced. But this is not the case with the greater part of Scripture. The parts are generally interwoven with each other. They are the links in a chain, and one draws in the other, so that, if we desire to learn the meaning of any particular verse, we must get hold of the thread that runs throughout the passage. It is well, therefore, to take the whole chapter, or, at all events, all the adjacent verses, and read them attentively through again and again, till you have drunk in the whole spirit of the passage; and I believe that it is by such a process, more than by any other, that each text is found to drop into its place, so that difficulties cease to hinder us, and the particular text is explained by the general teaching of the passage in which it stands.

REV. GELSON GREGSON.

Friends in England have followed in prayer the movements of God's servant in his mission first to the Cape and then to India. They will feel deep interest, therefore, in hearing that prayer has been answered, and Mr. Gregson has been much used of God in several places. After the Wellington Convention, he visited Worcester, the home of Rev. Andrew Murray's brother; then Stellenbosch, the seat of learning, where the venerable Dr. Hofmeyr is theological professor, returning to Cape Town for eight days special services. These were held at the large Metropolitan Wesleyan Church.

He left us for East London, Bloemfontein, Johannesburg, and Harrismith and Durban (Natal), whence he sails shortly for India.

REV. S. AND MRS. AITCHISON.

We give this week portraits of two workers who have for some years been engaged in earnest evangelistic endeavours in South Africa. It is neither the gift nor the privilege of all Christians to be pioneers in work for the Master, and to preach the Gospel where it had not before been heard. Certainly no ambition is more praiseworthy, and it is a sincere pleasure to recognise it in those devoted souls who, hesitating to build on another man's foundation, do and dare great things in the name of Christ.

We first heard of Mr. Aitchison in 1871, when, after spending his days in business pursuits, he gave his evenings to work in the Wynds of Glasgow. In the year named he accepted the position of master to the boys in Mr. Quarrier's Orphan and Destitute Children's Emigration Home, then a rather small undertaking. Though not a trained teacher, he very soon showed a talent for the instruction of others, and by quiet firmness and loving sympathy gained a power over street arabs, big and little, that soon brought them under control and discipline. Mr. Aitchison twice crossed the ocean in charge of parties of young emigrants to Canada, and the very useful work which Providence had for the time assigned to him afforded him much spiritual enjoyment.

In course of time, however, Mr. Aitchison felt drawn to foreign mission work, and in preparation therefor he spent a year at the East London Training Institute under Dr. Grattan Guinness. In 1877, under the auspices of the Birmingham Y.M.C.A., he went to Natal, to undertake mission work among the Zulu Kaffirs and Griquas at Ikwezi Lamaci ("Morning Star"), a work which had been founded by Mr. Elbert Clarke. The language having been acquired, Mr. Aitchison invited Miss Hall, to whom he had been engaged while in England, to join him in the joys and cares of life and in Christian endeavour among the heathen. Miss Hall's whole heart was in the work, and she promptly proceeded to Durban, where the two were joined in matrimony. The outcome of sincere personal affection, this union involved important results in the development of the mission. Henceforth domestic example came to the help of the practical counsels that were continually being given to the natives, for the promotion of social comfort and mental, moral, and spiritual advancement.

Mr. Aitchison is gifted and ingenious, and can build and furnish a house, as well as unfold the truths of the Gospel, and set forth the duties of Christian living. Mrs. Aitchison has proved a most devoted help-meet, not only by her interesting and racy correspondence, making known the work and its needs, but by holding classes for women and girls, and keeping a boarding-school for boys, as well as a day school for boys and girls and some adult scholars. Some of the evenings are filled up with choir practice, sewing class for elder women, and recreation.
